[b] (Ind. 1832) In an action of malicious prosecution for causing the plaintiff to be indicted, etc., he may challenge any of the jurors who were on the grand jury that found the indictment.—Rogers v. Lamb, 3 Blackf. 155.

§ 427. —— Effect of discharge before verdict.

[a] (Ala. 1882) Though Code, § 3018, provides that the members of a struck jury must not be challenged for any cause, it was improper to overrule the objection to such jurors that they had been members of a former jury to whom the cause had been submitted and who had disagreed.—Dothard v. Denson, 72 Ala. 541.

[b] (Fla. 1868) A juror who has been regularly sworn and impaneled in a case where no verdict has been rendered on account of a disagreement is not thereby incapacitated from serving as a juror at a second trial of the case, if, in the judgment of the court, it does not appear that he is prejudiced, partial, or biased in respect to the facts submitted to the jury.—Whitner v. Hamlin, 12 Fla. 18.

[c] (Ga. 1889) A juror who was unable to agree with his fellow jurors, causing a mistrial, is incompetent as a juror when the case is again called for trial in the same court.—Scott v. McDonald, 83 Ga. 28, 9 S. E. 770.

[d] (Ga. 1895) The fact that jurors regularly drawn and impaneled had been members of a jury before whom a trial of the accused was formerly begun, which trial, after the introduction of a portion only of the state's evidence, was brought to an end on motion of defendant for a mistrial, afforded no ground for their exclusion.—Cunneen v. State, 96 Ga. 406, 23 S. E. 412.

[e] (Kan. 1878) The fact that one was a juror upon a former, although merely partial, trial of the cause, incapacitates him as a juror.—Weeks v. Medler, 20 Kan. 57.

[f] (Mich. 1891) In a proceeding under Const. art. 15, § 15, which provides that when it is sought to condemn lands in cities and villages for public purposes the jury shall determine the necessity for the condemnation as well as the amount of compensation, the jury disagreed. Afterwards a new proceeding was had, and, unknown to the defeated party, one of the same jurors was impaneled, swearing that he had not formed or expressed an opinion as to the necessity for the condemnation. Held, that the verdict should have been set aside, and a new trial had.—Hester v. Chambers, 84 Mich. 562, 48 N. W. 152.

[g] (Vt. 1839) It is no objection to the competency of a juror that he had been impaneled in the same cause at a former term, and sat and heard the testimony; a verdict being directed by the court.—Atkinson v. Allen, 12 Vt. 619, 36 Am. Dec. 361.

§ 428. Service in similar cause.

Prior service of member of panel in similar cause as ground of challenge to array, see ante, § 362 [c, e, i, t, v].

Province of court and triors, see post, § 594 [yy].

[a] (Ala. 1876) It is cause for challenge that the venireman has sat as juror in a previous cause involving the same question, as this imports he has formed a fixed opinion.—Smith v. State, 55 Ala. 1.

[b] (Ark. 1860) Where the issues and evidence in a case are the same as in a previous case against the same defendant before the same jury, the law presumes the jury to be under a disqualifying bias, from their previous verdict.—Garthwaite v. Tatum, 21 Ark. 336, 76 Am. Dec. 402.

[c] (Cal. 1859) A jury tried a suit for burning a fence by sparks from the defendant's steamer; another case for burning another man's fence on another trip of the same steamer being called, the defendant objected that the same jury was not competent to sit on the second case after deciding the first. Held, that the court could not know, until the evidence was heard, that the facts or the proofs were the same, or similar, in the two cases; that, even if the court knew that they were the same, the same jury could hear both cases.—Algier v. The Maria, 14 Cal. 167.

[d] (Cal. 1861) In a suit in ejectment, it appeared that, in a former suit of forcible entry and detainer, the title to the land in question had been discussed, and one of the jurymen impaneled for the present trial had been on the jury at such former trial, and stated that his mind was made up as to the title; the juror had been previously accepted by both parties, but being now challenged by the plaintiff, it was held, that he was properly excused by the court.—Grady v. Early, 18 Cal. 108.

[e] (Ga. 1895) A juror was not disqualified to serve on the trial of an action against a railroad company, to recover for injuries received in an accident, by the fact that two years before he was a member of a jury which rendered a verdict against the defendant railroad company in an action against it by another person who was injured in the same accident.—Central R. & Banking Co. v. Ogletree, 97 Ga. 325, 22 S. E. 953.

[f] (Ill. 1871) A new trial will be granted where it appears that two of the jurors who sat upon the trial of the case had, at a former term, served upon a jury which found a verdict against defendant, in a similar case against her.—Swarnes v. Sitton, 58 Ill. 155.

[g] (La. 1812) A juror is not incompetent because he has already tried a suit by the same plaintiff against another party to the note sued on.—Nugent v. Trepagnier, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 205.

[h] (N. C. 1803) The fact that a jury decides that a bond is valid does not render the same jury incompetent to try the same question between the same parties on another bond exactly similar in its nature.—Seppard's Ex'rs v. Crook's Ex'rs, 3 N. C. 238.

[i] (N. C. 1864) A challenge to a jury, in an action for fraudulently removing a debtor, on the ground that it is the same jury which tried a case by a different plaintiff against the same defendant for the same act, should have been allowed, as the jurors were under a legal bias.—Baker v. Harris, 60 N. C. 271.

[j] (Pa. 1853) It is a good cause of challenge that one has already acted as a juror in a cause between the same parties, involving the same questions, and determined on the same evidence; but where the second action is submitted on different grounds, he is competent.—Smith's Ex'rs v. Wagenseller, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 491.

[k] (Tenn. 1873) The fact that all the jurors of the panel except two had sat in two of three cases in which the same depositions were to be used entitled the parties to a new panel.—Apperson v. Logwood, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 262.

[l] (Vt. 1881) A case on trial was continued because of the sickness of a juror. Pending the continuance two of the jurors served in the trial of another case, in which a verdict was rendered. An important question in each case was as to the ability of the plaintiffs so to manipulate hernia as to aggravate it, and deceive the attending physician. Held, that the two jurors aforesaid by taking part in the rendition of the verdict in the second case, disqualified themselves from proceeding with the trial of the first case.—Weeks v. Lyndon, 54 Vt. 638.

[a] (U. S. 1829) It is no objection to a juror that he has been one of the jury in another cause against the same defendant, for a different offense.—United States v. Watkins, Fed. Cas. No. 16,649 [3 Cranch, C. C. 441].

[b] (U. S. 1830) Where there are separate trials on a joint indictment, it is no cause of challenge that a juror was sworn on the first trial and found a verdict of guilty, though it is good cause to submit his indifference to triors.—United States v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730 [Baldw. 78].

[c] (Iowa, 1848) Jurors who rendered a verdict against the defendants on an indictment are not competent jurors in an action of trespass against the same defendants, involving the same questions, and in relation to the same subject-matter; nor are they rendered competent by declaring upon their voir dire that they have not formed or expressed an opinion.—Spear v. Spencer, 1 G. Greene, 534.

[d] (Mass. 1862) The fact that jurors have tried and convicted a defendant of a crime does not disqualify them from sitting as jurors in the trial of another indictment against him, for a similar offense, at the same term.—Commonwealth v. Hill, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 591.

[e] (Mo. 1893) A juror is not disqualified to serve on a trial for robbery by the fact that he was a juror on a former prosecution in which defendant was convicted of maiming, the record of which was, without objection, read in evidence on the trial for robbery.—State v. Maloney, 118 Mo. 112, 23 S. W. 1084.

[f] (N. J. 1886) The fact that a juror had served in another case of the state against the same defendant, at the same term, and that he had formed an opinion in that case, is not sufficient to sustain a challenge by the state.—Patterson v. State, 48 N. J. Law (19 Vroom) 381, 4 Atl. 449.

[g] (N. J. 1891) A juror who has sat in a previous trial of defendant for one of a series of embezzlements closely connected with each other cannot sit, if challenged, on the pending trial of another of such series of misdemeanors.—Stephens v. State, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 245, 21 Atl. 1038.

[h] (Tex. 1895) A juror who was on the grand jury which presented a bill charging the defendant with an offense is not disqualified from trying a similar offense against the same defendant.—Johnson v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 115, 29 S. W. 473.

[i] (Tex. 1895) Jurors are not disqualified to try one charged with illegally giving a prescription to buy whisky because they previously sat on a similar case against the same defendant, wherein he was convicted.—West v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 48, 30 S. W. 1069.

[a] (U. S. 1806) A juror who has sat on the trial of a person indicted for the same offense as defendant is not competent.—United States v. Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 16,342b.

[b] (Ala. 1876) That one proposed as a juror in the trial of a person for selling intoxicating liquor to a man of "known intemperate habits" has previously served as a juror on trial of a different person for selling liquor to the same man is a proper ground for challenge.—Smith v. State, 55 Ala. 1.

[c] (Ala. 1895) On trial for betting at a game of cards or dice, jurors who tried another person at the same term of court for gaming at the place at which it was claimed defendant played and bet, and who, in rendering their verdict, passed on the material ingredients of the facts against defendant, are incompetent.—Wickard v. State, 109 Ala. 45, 19 South. 491.

[d] (Iowa, 1863) It is not good cause of challenge to a juror, under Revision 1860, § 4771, that he has served on a trial jury which has convicted another person of a similar offense.—State v. Sheeley, 15 Iowa, 404.

[e] (Mich. 1893) In the absence of a showing of prejudice, the fact that defendant was obliged to go to trial before the jury of the term that had tried and convicted his two accomplices was not error.—People v. Betts, 94 Mich. 642, 54 N. W. 487.

[f] (Mich. 1893) It was error to permit several jurors who had at the same term of court served on the trial of one F. for resisting an officer, and returned a verdict of guilty, to sit as jurors on trial of defendant for an assault on the officer in connection with the arrest.—People v. Troy, 96 Mich. 530, 56 N. W. 102.

[g] (S. C. 1889) Gen. St. § 2261, provides that the court shall, on motion, examine a person called as a juror, and, if it shall appear to the court that he is not indifferent, he shall set him aside. Defendant in a murder trial challenged three jurors who had tried the case of one who had been jointly indicted with defendant for the same offense and convicted. The court, after examination, held them competent. Held, that this was not error.—State v. Williams, 31 S. C. 238, 9 S. E. 853.

[h] (Tex. 1874) It is not a cause of challenge to the array that the same jurors had been impaneled and sworn as a jury on the trial of another defendant and in another case, in which there had been two trials, one of defendant and the other of his codefendant; the whole of such trials comprehending the question of theft of four horses.—Bowman v. State, 41 Tex. 417.

[i] (Tex. 1896) Jurors who tried a person for playing at a game with cards in a public place, and rendered a verdict of guilty, were incompetent to sit on a subsequent trial of another person for playing with the former at the same game, where the evidence on the second trial was the same as that on the first.—Obenchain v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 490, 34 S. W. 278.

[a] (Cal. 1855) The law contemplates that each and every juror who sits in a cause should have a mind entirely free from all bias or prejudice of any kind whatsoever; and if the juror is prejudiced in any manner, he is not a fit or proper person to sit in the box.—People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 347.

[b] (Cal. 1855) Prejudice, as a disqualification for service as juror, is a state of mind which, in the eye of the law, has no degrees.—People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 347.

[c] (Cal. 1860) The question of actual bias is one regarding which no exact rule can be laid down; it being for the triors to decide upon all the facts whether or not, in their discretion, the juror under examination is capable of acting with entire impartiality.—People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128.

[d] (Colo. 1888) Where a juror states that he knows more of the case than he should, and that he has some bias in the case because it interests his friends, he should be excused.—Buddee v. Spangler, 12 Colo. 216, 20 Pac. 760.

[e] (Ill. 1862) The prejudice of a juror against a person not a party to the suit will not disqualify him.—Strawn v. Cogswell, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 457.

[f] (Mass. 1831) Many causes which would not render a witness incompetent, such as kindred, prejudice, interest in the question, though not in the event of the suit, are sufficient to disqualify a juror.—Davis v. Allen, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 466, 22 Am. Dec. 386.

[g] (Nev. 1876) The great purpose of the right to challenge a juror for actual or implied bias is to secure to the defendant and the state a fair and impartial jury.—State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39.

[h] (N. Y. 1857) A juror was challenged for favor. Held, that on the inquiry as to his prejudices, the triors might ascertain, not only his state of mind when he came to court, but also whether anything which had taken place in court had influenced his mind for or against the prisoner.—Thompson v. People, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 467.

[i] (N. Y. 1870) The acknowledgment by a person that he is biased against accused from his knowledge of his bad character renders such person incompetent to sit as a juror in the case.—Allen v. People, 57 Barb. 338, reversed People v. Allen (1870) 43 N. Y. 28.

[j] (Pa. 1883) In an action for damages, it is a good ground for a new trial that one or more of the jurymen had signed a petition taking strong sides for the plaintiff.—Hawker v. Goldsmith, 5 Law T. (N. S.) 122.

[k] (Pa. 1892) The fact that a man signs a petition to the trial judge setting out that the signers are informed as to the testimony produced at the former trial, that they are of opinion that the ends of justice will be satisfied by the entry of a plea of murder in the second degree, and that they therefore petition such plea to be accepted in order to save the expense of a second trial,—the judgment in the first having been reversed on appeal,—is sufficient to disqualify him as a juror on the second trial; and it is not error for the judge to reject him, though not challenged by either the prosecution or the defense.—Commonwealth v. Cleary, 148 Pa. 26, 23 Atl. 1110, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 1.

[l] (S. D. 1892) The word "bias," as used in Comp. Laws, § 5040, in reference to the disqualification of a juror to sit in a case, means such a leaning of the mind or propensity towards an object as does not leave the mind indifferent, but shows that it is under an influence which sways it to one side, and will tend to prevent the juror from deciding the case according to the evidence.—Haugen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 8 S. D. 394, 53 N. W. 769.

[m] (Va. 1850) One who signed a petition to the legislature for the establishment of a ferry is competent to act as a juror on the question of the public convenience of the proposed ferry.—Somerville v. Wimbish, 7 Grat. 205.

Influence on verdict, see post, § 437 [a, e].

[a] (Ga. 1858) Where a juror at the trial of a case declared in court that he had such a prejudice resting on his mind against one of the parties to the case as would, he feared, prevent his doing him justice, it was error for the court, without further examination, to pronounce him competent.—McLaren v. Birdsong, 24 Ga. 265.

[b] (Kan. 1872) An intimate acquaintance with one of the parties in an action does not disqualify a person from serving on a jury in such action.—Moore v. Cass, 10 Kan. 288.

[d] (Mo. 1891) On a trial for seduction on a promise of marriage, one of the jurors, after they had been sworn, and before the introduction of evidence, used brutal language in regard to defendant, showing prejudice. The matter was at once brought to the attention of the court, and the juror's right to sit on the trial challenged, and he did not deny using the words attributed to him. Held, that the overruling of such challenge was ground for a new trial.—State v. Wheeler, 108 Mo. 658, 18 S. W. 924.

[e] (Neb. 1894) A juror who testifies that his acquaintance with one of the parties will interfere with his judgment and finding in the case should be excused.—Omaha St. Ry. Co. v. Craig, 39 Neb. 601, 58 N. W. 209.

[f] (N. C. 1829) General hostility between a juror and a party is good cause of challenge.—Brittain v. Allen, 13 N. C. 120.

[g] (Pa. 1890) Defendant cannot object to the exclusion of a juror, challenged for favor by the commonwealth, where it appears that he had conversed with accused, and exchanged cigars and drinks with him.—Commonwealth v. Mosier, 135 Pa. 221, 19 Atl. 943, 26 Wkly. Notes Cas. 182.

[h] (Wash. 1894) It is proper to exclude jurors who state that they are friends of one of the parties, and would believe his statement when contradicted only by some witness whom they did not know.—Stinson v. Sachs, 8 Wash. 391, 36 Pac. 287.

§ 433. Membership in association or organization.

Extent of examination of juror, see post, § 566 [b, d].

Influence on verdict, see post, § 437 [f].

Where pecuniary interest is involved, see ante, § 409.

[a] (Colo. 1878) Members of an association combined to check a certain crime, as here, larceny of cattle, are not per se incompetent as jurors in a trial of such crime.—Boyle v. People, 4 Colo. 176, 34 Am. Rep. 76.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) The fact that a person called as a petit juror, on the trial of an indictment in which the defendant is charged with stealing a horse, was a member of "an association or organized company for the prosecution of persons, generally, arrested for horse-stealing," will not disqualify the juror.—State v. Wilson, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 407.

[c] (Kan. 1891) The fact that a person is a member of the "Good Templars" society, the object of which is, not the enforcement of the prohibitory liquor law, but the promotion of temperance among its members by moral suasion, does not disqualify such person from serving as a juror in a criminal prosecution for the violation of the prohibitory liquor law.—State v. Estlinbaum, 47 Kan. 291, 27 Pac. 996.

[d] (Kan. 1892) On a prosecution for larceny of a horse the fact that it is shown by the answers of some of the jurors on their voir dire that they are members of an association for the prevention of horse stealing, and to reclaim stolen horses, and bring the offender to justice, does not render them incompetent, where there is nothing in the rules of the association or elsewhere that would require them to prosecute or convict an innocent person, or to convict on less or weaker evidence than is required, or that would affect their duties as jurors.—State v. Flack, 48 Kan. 146, 29 Pac. 571.

[e] (La. 1895) One who, as a member of a posse, expended three days in a search for defendant, is disqualified to serve on the jury to try him.—State v. Defee, 47 La. Ann. 193, 16 South. 734.

[f] (Neb. 1883) It is no ground of objection to a juror that he is a member of a religious denomination (but not of the particular congregation) whose property rights are involved in the issue to be tried.—Barton v. Erickson, 14 Neb. 164, 15 N. W. 206.

[g] (N. Y. 1808) In an action on the case for a libel, for publishing an address adopted at a political meeting, a person present and acting at such meeting cannot be sworn as a juror.—Lewis v. Few, Anth. N. P. 75.

[h] (N. Y. 1834) It is no cause of challenge to a juror that he is a freemason, where one of the parties to the suit is a member of that fraternity, and the other not. Nor does the oath taken by a master mason, or a royal arch mason, on his admission to the fraternity, disqualify him from serving as a juror in such a case.—Purple v. Horton, 13 Wend. 9, 27 Am. Dec. 167.

[i] (Wis. 1888) On a trial for selling intoxicating liquors without a license, the examination of certain jurors as to qualification showed that they had been members of a club, formed for the purpose of obtaining liquor, and which the accused had been active in organizing, or with which he was connected. They swore that they were sensible of no bias, and were accepted. Held, an objection to these jurors on the part of defendant should be overruled.—Boldt v. State, 72 Wis. 7, 38 N. W. 177; Id., 35 N. W. 935.

[a] (U. S. 1821) A juror who has a cause at issue in the circuit court of the District of Columbia, which he expects will be tried at the same term, may be challenged for cause.—In re Claggett, Fed. Cas. No. 2,779 [2 Cranch, C. C. 247].

[b] (Ala. 1893) On the trial of a banker for receiving money on deposit, knowing the bank to be insolvent, one who is prosecuting witness in another like case pending against accused, and who believes him guilty in that, is not a competent juror.—Carr v. State, 104 Ala. 4, 16 South. 150.

[c] (Ga. 1878) That the plaintiff has had against a juror a suit exactly like the one on trial and involving like issues is at most only a cause of challenge to the favor, and not a principal cause of challenge to the juror, in the absence of any showing that such suit against the juror is still pending.—Austin v. Cox, 60 Ga. 520.

[d] (Ill. 1874) The fact that a juror, whether of the regular panel or not, has a suit at law or in equity pending for trial in the same court at the same term, whether the same is actually tried or not at such term, is a good ground of challenge, and it is error to disallow the same.—Plummer v. People, 74 Ill. 361.

[e] (Iowa, 1869) The rejection of persons as jurors on acount of bias, one of whom was plaintiff in a similar suit in the same court, was not erroneous.—May v. Elam, 27 Iowa, 365.

[f] (Mass. 1817) It is a good objection to a juror, in the trial of an action in which the value of betterments is to be ascertained, that he is himself interested in a similar question in another case.—Jeffries v. Randall, 14 Mass. 205.

[g] (Miss. 1859) A juror indicted for the same offense (selling liquor) is partial and incompetent.—McGuire v. State, 37 Miss. 369.

[h] (N. J. 1810) It is ground of challenge to a juror that he is interested in another suit depending upon the same circumstances with the present.—Gardner v. Lanning, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 651.

[i] (N. C. 1886) Under Code, § 1738, providing that persons summoned on special venire shall be freeholders, it is no cause of challenge to a juror that he has a suit pending in court; the statute not disqualifying jurors so summoned for reasons that would disqualify a tales juror.—State v. Starnes, 94 N. C. 973.

[j] (N. C. 1887) Code, § 1728, relating to the qualifications of jurors, which provides that, "if any of the jurors drawn have a suit pending and at issue in the superior court, the scrolls with their names must be returned into partition No. 1 of the jurybox," applies only to civil suits so pending; and the existence of a criminal prosecution for assault against a juror, wherein no plea has been filed, does not render him incompetent to serve in the trial of a cause.—Hodges v. Lassiter, 96 N. C. 351, 2 S. E. 923.

[k] (N. C. 1889) Code, § 1728, providing for withdrawing the names of jurors having a suit pending and at issue, does not disqualify one interested, as a creditor, in a fund for which a receiver has sued.—Vickers v. Leigh, 104 N. C. 248, 10 S. E. 308.

[m] (N. C. 1892) In an action against a corporation, a juror is not disqualified from sitting because he is a surety on the prosecution bond of another plaintiff, or related to him, in an action against the same defendant for a similar cause.—Jenkins v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 110 N. C. 438, 15 S. E. 193.

[n] (Tenn. 1870) Under Code, § 3988, which forbids the appointment of a juror who has a suit pending at the term to which he is nominated, and section 4010, making the fact that a juror has a cause pending for trial at the same term of the court ground for a challenge for cause, a juror who has a cause pending, but not for trial at the term to which he is nominated, may be challenged for cause.—Riley v. Bussell, 48 Tenn. (1 Heisk.) 294.

[o] (Tenn. 1882) Under Code, § 3988, forbidding the appointment as a juror of any person "who has an action pending in the court at the term to which he is nominated," held that the fact that such person has been tried and acquitted at that term does not render him eligible.—Murphy v. State, 77 Tenn. (9 Lea) 373.

§ 435. Bias or prejudice of neighbors of juror.

[a] (Fla. 1882) It was proper in a murder case to refuse to permit defendant's counsel to ask a talesman whether a verdict of acquittal would not create prejudice against the members of the jury finding that verdict, among their friends and neighbors.—Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909.

[b] (Colo. 1889) In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries, a juror upon his voir dire answered that he had some business dealings with the defendant company; that he had received some special commercial rates for traveling, and favors in shipping goods over the road; that he expected to continue business, and ship over the road, and that this fact might influence him, and affect his verdict; if the case should be evenly balanced, he would give the benefit of the doubt to the company. Held, that plaintiff's challenge was properly sustained.—Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Driscoll, 12 Colo. 520, 21 Pac. 708, 13 Am. St. Rep. 243.

[c] (Ill. 1870) A juryman who, on his voir dire, was asked, if the evidence was evenly balanced, which way he would be inclined to find, answered that in such case he would "lean against the defendant." Held, that such juryman was incompetent, and it was error to refuse his challenge by the defendant.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Adler, 56 Ill. 344.

[d] (Mich. 1895) On a prosecution for violation of the local option law, one who testifies, on his examination, that if the proof is equally balanced he would render a verdict of guilty, is incompetent as a juror.—People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556, 65 N. W. 540.

[e] (Mo. 1876) In a suit for damages, the affirmative answer of a juryman to the question, whether, if the evidence was evenly balanced, he might not incline to the side of plaintiff, would not render him incompetent.—Keegan v. Kavanaugh, 62 Mo. 230.

[f] (Neb. 1884) Where a juror testifies on his voir dire, in an action against a city for damages, that his interests as a taxpayer might affect his verdict in an evenly balanced case, he should be rejected.—City of Omaha v. Cane, 15 Neb. 657, 20 N. W. 101.

[a] (Ga. 1885) A juror is competent, although he once had some trivial misunderstanding with the defendant, if he has not affirmed or expressed any opinion as to his guilt or innocence, and has no bias or prejudice for or against him, and is perfectly impartial between him and the prosecution.—Memmler v. State, 75 Ga. 576.

[b] (Ill. 1853) A challenge to a juror is properly allowed where he states on oath that he would be reluctant to render a verdict of guilty even if his judgment was convinced of the prisoner's guilt, but that he might be starved to render it.—Gates v. People, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 433.

[c] (Ill. 1886) Where a juror stated that if he had any sympathy it would be with the "young man that lost his limb," and that he "would have no sympathy for the railroad," yet he did not "know as there was any reason why" he could not "try the case fairly and impartially," and that notwithstanding his sympathy he would not violate his oath, and would "endeavor to do justice between the parties," it was held that he was competent.—Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Bingenheimer, 116 Ill. 226, 4 N. E. 840.

[d] (Mich. 1884) In an action on an insurance policy a challenge of a juror was properly sustained, on the ground that an agent of defendant had on that day been talking to him about an alleged case of incendiarism, and ceased to do so on the approach of plaintiff's counsel, although the juror stated that another fire was under discussion.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 238, 18 N. W. 797.

[e] (Neb. 1886) Unfriendly feeling towards an attorney engaged in a trial by a juror who had made threats of violence against such attorney is not sufficient ground for a challenge of the juror for cause, he being competent in all other respects, when it is shown by his testimony that he would render a fair and impartial verdict, uninfluenced by such feeling.—Hutchinson v. State, 19 Neb. 262, 27 N. W. 113.

[f] (Neb. 1891) The fact that a person belongs to a political organization which has for its object the suppression of the liquor traffic does not disqualify him from acting as a juror in an action against liquor sellers for loss of support caused by the sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband, where he states in his voir dire examination that he can give the same weight to the testimony of a liquor dealer as to that of other men, and that he would not allow the fact that defendants were engaged in the liquor business to influence his verdict.—Scott v. Chope, 33 Neb. 41, 49 N. W. 940.

[h] (N. Y. 1896) A juror on voir dire, after testifying that he would as willingly render a verdict for defendant as for plaintiff, if the evidence warranted it, stated that he might have some reluctance to decide in favor of defendant, because of sympathy. Held, that it was not error to overrule a challenge by defendant for bias.—Laidlaw v. Sage, 2 App. Div. 374, 37 N. Y. Supp. 770.

[i] (Tex. 1889) A proposed juror stated on his voir dire that he was prejudiced in favor of defendant, but that he could find a verdict upon the evidence alone. Held, that the court properly sustained the state's challenge for cause.—Giebel v. State, 28 Tex. App. 151, 12 S. W. 591.

[a] (Ala. 1892) It is not error to excuse a juror on the ground that he was told by plaintiff and a friend of plaintiff that defendant was trying to beat plaintiff out of her money, and that the jury ought to give her a good verdict.—United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Weir, 96 Ala. 396, 11 South. 436.

[b] (Ind. 1863) One who swears that he is a resident of the county, never heard of the case on trial, and knows nothing about it, is a competent juror.—Meyers v. State, 20 Ind. 511.

[c] (Kan. 1864) A person summoned as a juror in a murder case is not incompetent merely because he has heard and remembers a detailed statement of the circumstances of the killing, where he swears he had not formed nor expressed an opinion.—Roy v. State, 2 Kan. 405.

[d] (Mich. 1893) On trial for an offense against the local option law, while the existence of the law is a fact to be proven, the question of the sufficiency of that proof is a matter for the court, and not for the jury, and therefore a juror is not disqualified because he states on his examination that he knows a local option election was held, and knows the result of it was to supersede the general law respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15, 56 N. W. 105.

[e] (Neb. 1883) A juror, in an action to recover damages against a railroad company for setting out fire in plaintiff's timber, stated on his voir dire that he had passed over the burnt district, but knew nothing about the amount of the damage done, nor how the fire was caused, and had formed no opinion as to defendant's liability. Held, that the juror's competency was not affected by the mere fact that he had passed over the burnt district, and that he was properly allowed to sit in the case.—Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Beebe, 14 Neb. 463, 16 N. W. 747.

[f] (N. H. 1845) A juror who has heard much concerning a case is competent provided he has formed no opinion.—State v. Howard, 17 N. H. 171.

[g] (Pa. 1891) Where a defendant, who was on intimate terms with one summoned as a juror, has, after he was summoned as a juror, and shortly before the trial, explained to him the nature of plaintiff's claim, and given his views of the facts, and explained away newspaper articles bearing on the case, such juror should be excluded, though the refusal of the court to sustain plaintiff's challenge to him is not ground for reversal.—Catasauqua Mfg. Co. v. Hopkins, 141 Pa. 30, 21 Atl. 638, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 146.

(W. Va. 1884) State v. Schnelle, 24 W. Va. 767.

[b] (U. S. 1807) The forming and delivering of an opinion that a person indicted for treason entertained the treasonable designs with which he is charged, and that he retained those designs, and was prosecuting them when the act charged in the indictment was alleged to have been committed, is good cause of challenge.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692g.

[c] (U. S. 1830) It is good cause for challenge if a juror does not stand indifferent on account of bias, prejudice, having made up his mind, or expressed an opinion touching the prisoner's guilt or innocence.—United States v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730 [Baldw. 78].

[d] (Ga. 1848) It is a sufficient disqualification of a juror, on a trial for murder, that he was heard to say, before the trial, that "from what he knew he would stretch the prisoner."—Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85.

[dd] (Ill. 1822) An opinion formed, but not expressed, does not disqualify a juror.—Noble v. People, 1 Ill. (Breese) 54.

[e] (N. J. 1856) A juror is not disqualified from serving in a capital case merely by having formed and expressed an opinion on the prisoner's guilt.—State v. Fox, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 566.

[f] (N. Y. 1806) It is a good cause of challenge to a juror that he has previously given his opinion on the question in controversy between the parties.—Blake v. Millspaugh, 1 Johns. 316.

[g] (Tenn. 1853) A juror said on the morning of the trial: "I have formed my opinion as to that case. I believe he ought to be hung." Again: "Damn him, he ought to be hung." Held, on error, that he should have been rejected as incompetent.—Brakefield v. State, 33 Tenn. (1 Sneed) 215.

[h] (Tex. 1888) Rev. St. art. 3079, disqualifies a juror for "a bias or prejudice in favor of or against either of the parties." Art. 3080 provides that "a challenge for cause is an objection made to a particular juror alleging some fact which, under the provisions of the first chapter of this title, disqualifies him to serve as a juror in any case, or in the particular case, or which, in the opinion of the court, renders him an unfit person to sit on the jury. Held, that the language of article 3079 is not to be restricted to mere bias for or against either party, but to the formation of an opinion with respect to the merits of the case as well.—Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Terrell, 69 Tex. 650, 7 S. W. 670.

[d] (U. S. 1800) In a prosecution for seditious libel, the only question which can be put to a juror, challenged for favor, is whether he has ever formed and delivered an opinion upon the charge against the accused; and it is improper to ask whether he has ever formed and delivered an opinion on the book in which the alleged libelous passages occur.—United States v. Callender, Fed. Cas. No. 14,709.

[e] (U. S. 1851) One who, without forming or expressing any opinion as to the matter to be tried, had "formed an opinion that the laws had been outraged," is competent as a juror.—United States v. Hanway, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299 [2 Wall. Jr. 139].

[f] (Cal. 1858) A juror who has formed an opinion adverse to the general land grant under which the plaintiff claims is incompetent.—White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 68.

[g] (Ga. 1857) A juror is not disqualified for having expressed an opinion on a question involved in the litigation.—Royston v. Royston, 21 Ga. 161.

[h] (Ga. 1872) It is no ground of challenge against a juryman that he has formed and expressed an opinion upon some one of the facts necessary to make out the charge against the prisoner. Hence it is not error for the court to say, in the presence of the panel, that the formation and expression of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the principal in a crime does not, of itself, render them incompetent to sit upon the trial of the accessory before the fact.—Loyd v. State, 45 Ga. 57.

[i] (Ill. 1860) A juror who has talked with a witness, and who believed what he heard from the witness, and formed an opinion so far as he heard from him, but formed no opinion as to the prisoner's guilt or innocence, is competent.—Thompson v. People, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 60, 76 Am. Dec. 733.

[j] (Ill. 1873) Since the construction of a written resolution of the directors of an insurance company is a question of law for the court, in an action on a policy, there is no error in overruling a challenge to a juror on the ground that he had formed an opinion as to the construction of such resolution.—Wischover v. German Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 71 Ill. 65.

[k] (Ind. 1867) Where the partnership of the plaintiffs is a material issue, it is error to refuse to allow a person called as juror to be asked whether he has formed or expressed an opinion as to their being partners.—Trout v. Williams, 25 Ind 18.

[l] (Ind. 1885) An opinion formed from conversation with "witnesses of the transactions" absolutely disqualifies a proposed juror in a criminal case; but this applies only to opinions formed from conversations with witnesses to transactions constituting the gravamen of the offense charged, and not to opinions based on conversations with witnesses to some merely incidental or collateral matter connected with the trial.—Walker v. State, 102 Ind. 502, 1 N. E. 856.

[n] (Iowa, 1861) The question proposed to the jurors for the purpose of ascertaining whether they have formed an opinion in the case must relate to the general point of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and not as to whether they have formed an opinion as to a particular line of defense (in this case insanity), which may or may not be set up.—State v. Arnold, 12 Iowa, 479.

[o] (Kan. 1886) A juror is not incompetent in a contested will case because he knew and saw the testator prior to the time of the unsoundness of mind alleged by those attacking the will to exist, though he had an opinion as to the condition of the testator's mind at the time he last saw him.—Delaney v. City of Salina, 34 Kan. 532, 9 Pac. 271.

[p] (La.) Where the extent of punishment is left to the discretion of the jury, the fact that a juror has made up his mind as to the measure of punishment to be awarded, in case of conviction, is a sufficient cause to reject him.—(1844) State v. George, 8 Rob. 535; (1860) Same v. Bill, 15 La. Ann. 114. CONTRA, see (1860) Same v. Bennett, 14 La. Ann. 651.

[q] (Miss. 1879) On the trial of A., who was convicted of arson, B. swore to an alibi in A.'s behalf. On the trial of B. for perjury, a juror was incompetent who said that he had a decided opinion as to the guilt or innocence of A., but not as to that of B.—Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424.

[r] (Mo. 1859) Where a juror, summoned in a trial of a person indicted for stealing cattle alleged to belong to C., stated upon his voir dire that he knew the cattle, that his brother had once owned them and had sold them to K., who had sold them to C., it was held that the juror was competent; the ownership of the cattle not being controverted.—State v. Martin, 28 Mo. 530.

[s] (Nev. 1881) A juror stated that he had an unqualified opinion that there was a deficiency in the accounts of defendant, as county treasurer, but had no opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence. Held, that a challenge to him for implied bias was properly disallowed.—State v. Carrick, 16 Nev. 120.

[t] (N. Y. 1848) In an action against a sheriff for trespass, where the defendant justified under a distress warrant for rent in arrear, issued by A., as landlord, it was held that a person who had formed and expressed an opinion that A. had no right or title to the rent, for which the distress was made, was incompetent to serve as a juror.—Lord v. Brown, 5 Denio, 345.

[u] (N. Y. 1863) Challenge for cause, because the juror had expressed the opinion that the prisoner had killed the person for whose murder he was indicted, was held to have been properly overruled, on the ground that there was no expression of opinion as to the prisoner's guilt or innocence, as he might have killed the man without committing murder.—Lowenberg v. People, 27 N. Y. 336, affirming (1863) 5 Parker, Cr. R. 414.

[v] (Pa. 1893) A juror who, on being sworn to make true answers, said he did not think a man who would commit such an offense as defendant had committed was of sound mind, and it would require evidence to change that opinion, was disqualified, since the law presumed defendant sane until proven insane.—Commonwealth v. Buccieri, 153 Pa. 535, 26 Atl. 228, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. 113.

[w] (Tex. 1880) A juror on the trial of an accomplice is disqualified by an opinion of the guilt of the alleged principal, since the accomplice, under the Code, is the same as accessory before the fact by the common law, and in order to convict the accomplice the state must prove the guilt of his principal.—Arnold v. State, 9 Tex. App. 435.

[x] (Tex. 1893) It is error in a murder case to refuse to permit defendant to ask the jurors whether, from hearsay or otherwise, they have an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a person indicted with defendant, but not yet tried, though the theory of the state is that such person was the instigator of the conspiracy to murder deceased, and defendant was in his employ, and in his company, immediately preceding the homicide.—Peddy v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 547, 21 S. W. 542.

[y] (Va. 1822) On the trial of an indictment, in which the prisoner was charged in some counts with the embezzlement of a check, and in others with the embezzlement of notes and dollars to the same amount, a juror on his voir dire declared that he had formed, and frequently expressed, a decided opinion of the prisoner's guilt, but that he did not know that such opinion applied particularly to the charge laid in the indictment (there being other indictments, for the larceny of other checks and money); that his opinion was a general one that the prisoner was guilty of embezzling checks of the bank; and that it related as much to one check as another. Held, that such juror ought to be excluded.—Lithgow v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 297.

[z] (Wash. 1895) In a prosecution against a city treasurer for using public funds for personal profit, a challenge for actual bias to a juror, testifying that he had formed an opinion that defendant had loaned money, but that he did not know whether it was his own money or not, is properly overruled.—State v. Krug, 12 Wash. 288, 41 Pac. 126.

[b] In order to exclude a juror on the ground of "implied bias," he must, according to the statute, have formed, or expressed, an unqualified opinion. An impression, or an inclination of mind towards a conclusion, is not enough. He must have reached a conclusion upon which he would be willing to act in ordinary matters.

[c] (U. S. 1807) Persons who have deliberately formed and delivered an opinion on the guilt of an accused are disqualified to serve as jurors.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692g.

[d] (Cal. 1856) Where a juror, in a trial for murder, stated on his voir dire that he had expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and that such opinion, when expressed, was without qualification, it was held that he was properly challenged by the prisoner, and should have been rejected.—People v. [g] (Cal. 1865) In order to render a juror in a criminal case incompetent on the ground of implied bias, it must appear that he entertains a fixed and settled conviction of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or that he has expressed such a conviction.—People v. King, 27 Cal. 507, 87 Am. Dec. 95.

[h] (Cal. 1882) The fact that one summoned to serve as a juror on the trial of a criminal case has formed an unqualified opinion is not now a ground of disqualification.—People v. Cochran, 61 Cal. 548.

[i] (Iowa, 1859) In a criminal case, it is good cause of challenge to a petit juror by the state that he had formed an unqualified opinion, and this, whether it be for or against the prisoner. —State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 477.

[j] (La. 1888) The formation of opinion which disqualifies a juror is a fixed, deliberate, and determined one, which will not yield to evidence.—State v. Dorsey, 40 La. Ann. 739, 5 South. 26.

[k] (N. H. 1843) If a juror holds such opinions that he cannot, in a particular case, and upon a certain state of the facts, render a verdict according to the laws of the state, he is not a competent juror in that case.—Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536.

[l] (Pa. 1873) A prejudgment of a cause to disqualify a juror is that condition of mind which has formed a conclusion so irrevocably fixed as not to be liable to be changed, or to be free to persuasion, or to be open to a different conviction, upon the production of testimony or evidence which ought reasonably to produce a different conclusion.—Scott v. Reyer, 5 Leg. Gaz. 73.

[m] (Tex. 1885) A juror is properly rejected if he has talked about the case and has strong opinions on the question of guilt, which he has expressed.—Ward v. State, 19 Tex. App. 664.

[a] The expression of a mere hypothetical opinion, one dependent on the truth of information received, is no legal ground of challenge to a juror.

[b] (Cal. 1860) The expression of an opinion, less decided than an unqualified one, will not, as matter of law, exclude a juror; but it may, by itself, or in connection with other proof, be sufficient to warrant his exclusion by the triors. —People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128.

[c] (Cal. 1872) An unqualified expression of an opinion, even though the opinion itself is of a qualified character, is ground of challenge for implied bias, and when, after proper investigation, doubts, more or less grave, as to the actual state of mind of the juror still remain, the challenge for implied bias should be allowed.—People v. Brotherton, 43 Cal. 530.

[d] (Mont. 1888) On trial for murder, a juror who has said, "If B. is the man who killed O., he is liable to be cinched plenty, and sent over the road," is not for that reason disqualified as having expressed an opinion as to the guilt of defendant.—Territory v. Burgess, 8 Mont. 57, 19 Pac. 558, 1 L. R. A. 808.

[e] (N. Y. 1847) On the trial of a challenge for favor, it is erroneous to instruct the triors, as a matter of law, that an impression or hypothetical opinion adverse to the prisoner, though not conclusive, does not disqualify the juror. —Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216.

[a] The fact that a juror has formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt does not disqualify him where the opinion may be changed by the evidence.
—(Ala. 1882) Beason v. State, 72 Ala. 191;
(Ind. 1879) Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99.

[b] Light impressions which may be fairly supposed to yield to the testimony to be offered, and which leave the mind open to its fair consideration, are no objection to a juror; but those strong and deep impressions which close the mind against the testimony, and combat and resist its force, constitute a sufficient objection.
—(La. 1844) State v. George, 8 Rob. 535;
(Tex. 1875) Black v. State, 42 Tex. 377.

[c] (Cal. 1873) A venireman, under an examination on a challenge for favor, testified that from what he had heard he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused; that it was a "fixed opinion," and would require evidence to remove it; that he still retained that opinion after having heard what purported to be the facts of the case; and that it would require evidence to change it. On cross-examination he said the opinion he had formed depended on the truth or falsity of what he had heard; that, if what he had heard was true he had the opinion stated; but "if it turns out that what I have heard is not true then I will have no opinion in the matter." Held, that the challenge was sustained. The point to be determined as to the qualification of the juror was whether at the time of his examination he had an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and not what might be the state of his mind after hearing the evidence.—People v. Johnston, 46 Cal. 78.

[d] (Ind. 1883) The question whether a juror has an opinion which can only be removed by evidence affords no certain or proper test of his qualifications. The proper test is, can and will the juror render a fair and impartial verdict, upon the evidence, regardless of his preconceived opinion.—Stout v. State, 90 Ind. 1.

[e] (Iowa, 1893) Under Code 1873, § 4405, subd. 11, providing that a juror is disqualified who has such an opinion as would prevent him from rendering a true verdict on the evidence, an opinion does not disqualify a juror, even though some evidence is necessary to remove it. —State v. Field, 89 Iowa, 34, 56 N. W. 276.

[f] (La. 1875) Where a juror states that the opinion he had referred to on his voir dire was not an opinion, but an impression, which would yield to evidence, he was not disqualified.—State v. Hugel, 27 La. Ann. 375.

[g] (La. 1883) Where a juror, on his voir dire, says he has no fixed opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, and no bias or prejudice against him, he is competent, though he may have had an opinion previously, if such opinion will yield to the evidence in the case.—State v. Revells, 35 La. Ann. 302.

[h] (Mich. 1886) Any opinion or impression in a person's mind that requires removal by evidence is sufficiently "positive" to disqualify him, under How. Ann. St. § 9564, from acting as a juror, where life or liberty is involved.—People v. Shufelt, 61 Mich. 237, 28 N. W. 79.

[i] (Miss. 1849) Though no general rules of competency can be fixed, each case depending on its peculiar circumstances, it may be stated generally that a juror is incompetent to sit in a case on which his mind is so far prejudiced as to require evidence to annul the opinions he has formed.—Sam v. State, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 189.

[j] (Mo. 1879) A juror in a criminal trial is not disqualified by the fact that he has an opinion which it will require evidence to remove.—State v. Barton, 71 Mo. 288; Id., 8 Mo. App. 15.

[k] (N. Y. 1888) A proposed juror, on an inquisition de lunatico inquirendo, who confesses that he has formed some opinion on the question, "and that it would require some little evidence to overcome it," is incompetent.—In re Klock, 49 Hun, 450, 3 N. Y. Supp. 478.

[l] (N. Y. 1890) A juror in a civil case who had made up his mind against defendant, and whose opinion against it is so strong as to require evidence to remove it, is incompetent.—Halsted v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 58 N. Y. Super. Ct. 270, 11 N. Y. Supp. 44, distinguishing McKinney v. Long Island R. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 633, 6 N. Y. Supp. 168, affirmed (1890) 119 N. Y. 631, 23 N. E. 1144.

[m] (Tex. 1880) Where a juror in a capital case avowed on his voir dire that he had formed an opinion that the accused was guilty, and, unless he heard something to change it, he intended to act upon it, held, that he was subject to challenge for bias.—Rothschild v. State, 7 Tex. App. 519.

[n] (Tex. 1894) One who, by affidavit, shows that he was prejudiced against defendant in a murder trial, that he believed him guilty, and that he ought to be hung, and that he would so find unless appellant proved his innocence, was disqualified to sit as juror in the cause.—Randle v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 43, 28 S. W. 953.

§ 445. Intent in making utterance or expressing opinion.

[a] (Ga. 1854) A juror is not disqualified by a jesting remark, made just before being sworn, to the effect that if he was on the jury he would hang the prisoner, when in fact he knew neither the offense nor the prisoner and made the remark for the purpose of getting off from the jury.—John v. State, 16 Ga. 200.

[c] (Ga. 1893) Where two witnesses testified that a juror, before the trial, said that if he was taken on the jury he would convict defendant, but the juror, in explanation, testified that all he said was addressed to the prisoner's counsel, and was, "That if the evidence warranted it, he would hang the defendant;" also that he said this without any prejudice whatever against the prisoner, and was rather in hopes that he would be rejected as a juror, there was no error in treating the explanation as sufficient, and in holding the juror competent.—Cornwall v. State, 91 Ga. 277, 18 S. E. 154.

[d] (La. 1877) A mere opinion as to the guilt of an accused, unassociated with any bias or prejudice, does not disqualify a person to serve as a juror.—State v. Lartigue, 29 La. Ann. 642.

[e] (N. H. 1845) An expression of opinion by a juror, prior to his summons, if unexplained, or if shown to have been accompanied with malice, ill-will, interest, or a fixed opinion, becomes a ground for a principal challenge.—State v. Howard, 17 N. H. 171.

[f] (N. J. 1856) To disqualify a juror in a capital case, the declaration of opinion must have been such as to imply malice or ill-will against the prisoner.—State v. Fox, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 566.

[a] (Ga. 1878) A juror is not disqualified in a criminal case by loose remarks made by him in bare jest before he was sworn, which he explained after the trial by affidavit showing himself impartial.—Lovett v. State, 60 Ga. 257.

[b] (La. 1883) One's inconsiderate remark, made just before being summoned as juror, will not avail against his declaration on his voir dire that he has formed no opinion as to the guilt of the accused.—State v. Diskin, 35 La. Ann. 46; Same v. Revella, Id. 302.

[c] (Tex. 1859) A jocular remark, made by a juror drawn on a murder case before the trial, to the effect that "the defendant ought to have been hung 20 years ago," without reference to the particular case, is not necessarily a ground of disqualification.—Monroe v. State, 23 Tex. 210, 76 Am. Dec. 58.

[c] A juror who, upon the facts being submitted to him by the plaintiff, had formed or expressed an opinion as to the liability of the defendant, is not an indifferent juror, and upon a challenge must be excluded.

(N. Y. 1835) Rogers v. Rogers, 14 Wend. 131.

[d] (Ill.) If a juror has made up a decided opinion on the merits of the case either from a personal knowledge of the facts, from the statements of witnesses, from the relations of parties, or either of them, or from rumor, and that opinion is positive and not hypothetical, and such as will probably prevent him from giving an impartial verdict, the challenge should be allowed.—(1841) Smith v. Eames, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 76, 36 Am. Dec. 515; (1852) Neely v. People, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 685.

[e] (Ind. 1893) A proposed juror, who has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a defendant in a criminal case, based on reading an affidavit of a witness to the transaction, and acts constituting the crime charged, is within the reason, if not within the letter, of Cr. Code 1881, § 1793, subd. 2, which renders incompetent jurors who have formed or expressed opinions based "on conversations with witnesses to the transaction, or reading their testimony,

Discretion of court, see ante, § 405 [d].

[a] (Ill. 1882) A person who testified on his voir dire that he had read a newspaper account of the case, but that it made no impression on him and that he had forgotten it, was not disqualified to act as juror.—Gradle v. Hoffman, 105 Ill. 147.

[b] (Ill. 1888) In an action for damages for an accident causing death, it was not error to overrule a challenge of a juror for cause, where he stated that he had heard of the killing at the time, and had heard people talk about it, but had no opinion in the case.—Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Perkins, 125 Ill. 127, 17 N. E. 1.

[c] (Kan. 1895) The fact that one heard detailed statements of occurrences in relation to the commission of the offense charged did not render him incompetent, where he had neither formed nor expressed an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, nor as to any material fact involved.—State v. Bane, 1 Kan. App. 537, 42 Pac. 376.

[d] (Mich. 1888) Where it is evident that the sentiment of the community is unfavorable to respondent it is error to overrule his challenge to a juror who admits that people have been talking in his presence about the facts in the case, and the state of public sentiment in regard to it, though the juror believes that he has not been influenced thereby.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473.

[e] (Mo. 1893) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 4197, declaring it a good cause of challenge to a juror that he has formed or delivered an opinion on the issue or any material fact to be tried, but providing that, if such opinion is founded only on rumor and newspaper reports, and not such as to bias the juror's mind, he may be sworn, jurors who have read in newspapers what "purported" to be the evidence taken at the coroner's inquest, and what "purported to be" defendant's confession of the crime for which he is being tried, are competent.—State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649, 23 S. W. 1066.

[f] (Neb. 1886) It is not error for a trial court to sustain a challenge to a juror who testifies, upon examination as to his competency, that he resided in the neighborhood where one of the parties resided, and had heard a great deal of talk about the case; that he was not free from bias; and that he thought this condition of his mind would influence him in his verdict.—Hutchinson v. State, 19 Neb. 262, 27 N. W. 118.

[g] (Neb. 1895) Where it appeared that a juror had read newspaper accounts of the killing under investigation, it was error not to permit him to answer on the voir dire whether he had formed an opinion as to whether defendant was guilty, or whether murder had been committed.—Basye v. State, 45 Neb. 261, 63 N. W. 811.

§ 450. Formation and expression of opinion derived from rumor in general.

[a] An opinion, formed and expressed by a juror in a criminal case, which is based wholly on rumor, and where there is no bias or prejudice in the mind of the juror, is not a disqualification.

—(Ga. 1872) Westmoreland v. State, 45 Ga. 225;
(La. 1859) State v. Bunger, 14 La. Ann. 461;

[b] It is no objection to the competency of a juror that he has formed or expressed an opinion respecting the guilt of a prisoner, if that opinion be founded on public rumor only.

—(Ind. 1877) Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182;

(Ga. 1858) Thompson v. State, 24 Ga. 297.

[d] (Ala. 1833) Under the statute of 1831, which provides that, if a juror in a capital case has formed and expressed an opinion founded upon rumor, he shall be sworn in chief, it must appear that such opinion was formed upon mere rumor. Where it appears that the opinion was formed upon facts well authenticated by persons in whom the juror had confidence, it is good ground for challenge for cause.—Quesenberry v. State, 3 Stew. & P. 308.

[e] (Ind. 1835) A petit juror in a criminal case testified on his voir dire that he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant from report; that he had heard no witness, as he knew of, speak of the transaction; that he lived 18 miles from the neighborhood of the defendant, and had not been there since the alleged commission of the offense. Held, that this was not sufficient to sustain a challenge for cause.—McGregg v. State, 4 Blackf. 101.

[f] (Mich. 1893) On the trial of an offense against the local option law, a juror who, on his examination, stated that he knew defendant, supposed he ran a saloon, understood from what he heard that he had been running one a certain length of time, and from what he heard supposed that he sold intoxicating liquors there, should have been excluded.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15, 56 N. W. 105.

others, of a general state of indebtedness by one party to the other, without any particular knowledge of the facts himself, is not good cause of challenge.—Irvine v. Lumbermen's Bank, 2 Watts & S. 190.

[h] (Tenn. 1842) Individuals offered as jurors stated that, from rumor and reports in their neighborhood, they had heard that a man had been killed, that the defendant was accused of the murder and had attempted to make his escape, and that upon these facts and circumstances they had formed and expressed an opinion. Held, that they were competent as jurors.—Payne v. State, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 375.

[i] (Tenn. 1850) A juror who has an opinion, formed from public rumor merely, that the accused may or may not be guilty, is not disqualified to sit in a capital case. To be disqualified he must have made up his mind as to the guilt of the accused, either from his own personal knowledge, or from the statements of others professing to know the circumstances.—Moses v. State, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 232.

[j] (Tenn. 1883) A juror upon a capital trial is not incompetent for having said that from what he found out he thought the prisoner would be hanged or imprisoned for life; it not appearing that his statement was based upon evidence that would be introduced at the trial, and, moreover, hearsay and rumor only tending to show that he made the statement.—Johnson v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 47.

[a] (Mo. 1884) A person who has formed an opinion from reading the evidence, as published in the papers, taken before the coroner, is absolutely disqualified from serving as a juror.—State v. Culler, 82 Mo. 623.

[b] (Mo. 1884) A juror in a criminal case, when examined on his voir dire, stated that he had formed an opinion from what he had read of the crime in the newspapers, and that he "would naturally suppose the defendant guilty." Held not sufficient evidence of bias or prejudice to disqualify him as a juror in the case.—State v. Wilson, 85 Mo. 134.

[c] (Ohio, 1873) A juror whose opinion has been formed from reading newspaper reports and the testimony of witnesses at a former trial is incompetent to serve as a juror.—Frazier v. State, 23 Ohio St. 551.

[d] (Ohio, 1882) A juror who admits upon the voir dire that he has formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant in a capital case, such opinion being founded on newspaper accounts, is incompetent to serve as a juror.—McHugh v. State, 38 Ohio St. 153.

[a] An opinion of a juror, not founded on evidence, and which is no more than a mere impression, based on rumor and newspaper statements, does not disqualify him.
—(Ariz. 1886) Territory v. Davis, 10 Pac. 359;
(Mo. 1896) State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92.

[b] (Kan.) Impressions not amounting to opinions, received from newspaper articles or rumor, do not disqualify a juror, and are not cause for challenge, under Gen. St. p. 853, § 205, making it a good cause of challenge that a juror has formed or expressed an opinion on the issue or any material fact to be tried.—(1872) State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 257; (1873) Same v. Crawford, 11 Kan. 32; (1895) Same v. Treadwell, 54 Kan. 507, 38 Pac. 799.

[a] (Fla. 1894) The fact that a venireman had read of the trial of one person for a murder, and had formed an opinion as to that person's guilt or innocence, did not disqualify him as a juror for the trial of other persons for the same murder.—Lambright v. State, 34 Fla. 564, 16 South. 582.

[b] (Kan. 1888) When the only controverted question is defendant's insanity, it is not material error to overrule a challenge for cause to jurors who it is not shown had any opinion on the question of insanity, but who in their voir dire examination admitted that they had a slight and indefinite opinion, obtained from newspapers or from rumor, that defendant had killed his wife, for which he was on trial.—State v. Gould, 40 Kan. 258, 19 Pac. 739.

[c] (Kan. 1893) Defendant claimed that he killed deceased in self-defense. Several jurors stated that they had read and heard of the killing, and thought that defendant did it, but that they had not formed or expressed any opinion as to his guilt. It appeared from the examination that their minds were free from any previously formed opinions on material facts. Held, that no substantial error was committed in retaining such jurors.—State v. Sortor, 52 Kan. 531, 34 Pac. 1036.

[d] (N. Y. 1848) When a person called as a juror testified that he had read the newspaper statements of the occurrence, and that they left no particular impression on his mind as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, but that he believed, as a newspaper statement, that a homicide had been committed, and by the person named, he was held not disqualified to sit in the case.—People v. Hayes, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 582.

Requiring evidence to remove, see post, § 456.

[a] An opinion as to the matters in issue, formed by a juror on mere rumor or uncertain report, and which has not taken firm hold upon the mind, does not disqualify him.
—(Colo. 1875) Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 2 Colo. 565; (Ind. 1860) Bradford v. State, 15 Ind. 347.

[b] (U. S. 1869) A challenge to a juror for principal cause is properly overruled where it appears that the juror, although he has read about one-half of a column in a newspaper concerning the case, has never formed any fixed opinion, or made up his mind, respecting the guilt of the prisoner.—United States v. McHenry, Fed. Cas. No. 15,681 [6 Blatchf. 503].

[c] (Ga. 1861) On a trial for murder, a juror who has formed from hearsay a fixed opinion of the guilt of the accused is incompetent.—Maddox v. State, 32 Ga. 581, 79 Am. Dec. 307.

[d] (Ga. 1894) A juror who, in answer to questions for testing his competency, after receiving from the judge a correct definition of the word "bias" and the phrase "perfectly impartial," testifies that he is perfectly impartial between the state and the accused, is competent if he has neither seen the crime committed, nor heard any part of the evidence delivered on oath, and has no fixed opinion, though he may entertain a floating opinion, founded on rumor, hearsay, or newspaper reports, and may have expressed the same.—Hinkle v. State, 94 Ga. 595, 21 S. E. 595.

[e] (Ill. 1841) If the opinion of a juror be of a light and transient character, such as is usually formed by persons in every community on hearing a current report, and which may be changed by the relation of the next person met with, and which does not show a conviction of the mind and a fixed conclusion thereon, or if it be hypothetical, the challenge ought not to be granted.—Smith v. Eames, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 76, 36 Am. Dec 515.

[f] (Mich. 1865) Where, in a trial for murder, a juror, examined as to his competency, said, "I have formed a partial opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant from rumors heard in the street, but not a positive opinion," it was held that such opinion did not disqualify him.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

[g] (N. C. 1836) If a juror has not definitely made up and expressed his mind on the question at issue, he is not liable to exception, though he has read and heard concerning it.—State v. Benton, 19 N. C. 196.

[h] (Vt. 1881) The formation and expression of an opinion are not alone the test of a juror's competency. If it is only a transitory inclination of the mind, based upon rumor or newspaper report, the truth of which the juror does not inquire into, nor judge, it is not a disqualifying opinion. To work a disqualification there must be an abiding bias of the mind caused by substantial facts, the truth of which the juror believes; an opinion upon the merits of the case based upon the evidence likely to be presented upon the trial.—State v. Meaker, 54 Vt. 112.

Requiring evidence to remove, see post, § 456.

[a] In a criminal prosecution, a juror stated that he had heard what purported to be the facts of the case reported as rumor, not by a witness or person professing to have knowledge thereof; that from this he had formed an opinion, and if the facts turned out the same as he had heard them, his opinion was formed. Held, that he was not disqualified for bias.
—(Cal. 1860) People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142; (1872) Same v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 137;
(Ill. 1870) Leach v. People, 53 Ill. 311;
(Iowa, 1865) State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa, 435;
(Mo. 1881) State v. Farrow, 74 Mo. 531;
(N. J. 1846) State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 196.

[b] A juror was not disqualified by an opinion of the guilt of the accused, formed without consideration from reading an account of it in a newspaper, and dependent upon the correctness of the account, but which is so indefinite as not to create a bias inconsistent with impartiality in trying the case.
—(Conn. 1880) State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89; (N. Y. 1870) People v. Mallon, 3 Lans. 224.

[c] (Ill. 1846) Where, upon a trial for murder, a juror, when first examined, stated that he had formed and expressed an opinion from reports, a part of which he believed, and, when further examined, he stated that the opinion was formed on the hypothesis that the rumors, only a part of which he believed, were true, that in fact he had no opinion whether those rumors were true or false, and that the opinion which he had formed was not of a fixed and definite character, he was held to be competent.—Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 368.

[d] (Ill. 1861) A juror who says that he has formed no opinion of the prisoner's guilt or innocence, but who also says that he believes the statements in the papers that the crime had been committed, and that if the prisoners are the persons named in the papers, he has an opinion as to their guilt, is incompetent to sit as a juror in the case.—Gray v. People, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 344.

[e] (Ky. 1886) The statement by a juryman before trial, that if what he had heard was true the accused ought to be hung, is not sufficient of itself to disqualify him from sitting on the trial.—Fowler v. Commonwealth, 7 Ky. Law Rep. 529.

[f] (Mich. 1886) Where the opinion of a juror as to defendant's guilt is conditional on the truth of "flying reports" not received from any particular person whom the proposed juror can remember, he is competent.—People v. Shufelt, 61 Mich. 237, 28 N. W. 79.

[g] (Mo. 1886) A juror said, just before the trial, that, from what he knew and heard, he had both formed and expressed an opinion, and that he believed the defendant guilty, and would be in favor of sending him up for 10 years. The juror stated that he said that, from what he had heard, he did not believe he could be one of the jurors, because, if the evidence should turn out as he had heard, he thought that defendant should be sent up for 10 years. He also explained that he had talked with no witness about the case, but only with his wife and the affiant; that his wife had informed him of the matter; and that it was to this information that the above conversation referred. Held, that such information was mere rumor, and the juror unprejudiced.—State v. Reed, 89 Mo. 168, 1 S. W. 225.

[h] (N. Y. 1811) A juror, summoned before a justice, said that, "if the reports of the neighbors were correct, the defendant was wrong and the plaintiff was right." Held, that this was not a sufficient objection to his being sworn and impaneled.—Durell v. Mosher, 8 Johns. 445.

[i] (N. Y. 1858) Where, on a trial for murder, a juror who was drawn was challenged by the prisoner for principal cause, on the ground that he had expressed an opinion, and such challenge was traversed, and it appeared by the testimony of the juror that he thought he had an impression as to the prisoner's guilt or innocence; that he rather thought he had formed an opinion; that he presumed he had expressed it, and thought he retained it; that he had formed an opinion, if the newspaper accounts of the transaction, of which he had read only a part, were true, and that so far as he read he gave them credence; that it might or might not require evidence to remove his impression of the prisoner's guilt, and that he had not arrived at any definite opinion, and the court overruled the challenge, and decided the juror to be competent, it was held on review that the decision was correct.—People v. Stout, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 71.

[j] (S. D. 1892) An unqualified opinion or belief, as used in Comp. Laws, § 5040, is such a settled conviction in the mind of the juror, founded on a knowledge of the facts of the case, as would raise a strong presumption of partiality; but a hypothetical opinion, founded on hearsay or information, and unaccompanied with malice or ill will, will not support a challenge for bias.—Haugen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 3 S. D. 394, 53 N. W. 769.

[k] (Tex. 1887) On the voir dire of a juror he said that he heard a person in whom he had confidence make a statement of the case upon hearsay, and that thereupon he (the juror) formed an opinion, provided the statement was true, but had formed no conclusion as to whether or not it was true. Held not a disqualifying conclusion.—Bolding v. State, 23 Tex. App. 172, 4 S. W. 579.

See ante, § 455 [i].

[a] (Cal. 1895) Where a juror stated that he had an opinion as to defendant's innocence, not based on public rumor, and it would require considerable evidence to change it, the court properly sustained a challenge for cause.—People v. Fultz, 109 Cal. 258, 41 Pac. 1040.

[b] (Ind. 1879) A juror impaneled to try a criminal prosecution who states, from the evidence given on a former trial, as reported in a newspaper read by him, he had formed and expressed an opinion on the merits, to change which would require some evidence, but which would readily yield thereto, is not incompetent.—Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99.

[c] (La. 1875) Where a juror declares that he has formed an impression based on newspaper statements, which impression would give way to evidence, there is no cause for challenge.—State v. Coleman, 27 La. Ann. 691.

[d] (Miss. 1831) The formation of hypothetical opinion from rumor only, and which is subject to be changed by the testimony, will not disqualify a juror from sitting in a capital case.—State v. Johnson, 1 Miss. (Walk.) 392.

[e] (Miss. 1859) An opinion formed from rumor, so fixed as to require evidence to remove it, disqualifies a juror.—Alfred v. State, 37 Miss. 296.

[f] (Miss.) That a juror had formed and expressed an opinion in the case from rumor, but such as required no testimony to remove it, is not a disqualification in a capital case.—(1871) Lee v. State, 45 Miss. 114; (1874) Logan v. Same, 50 Miss. 269.

[g] (Pa. 1889) A juror who states that he has an opinion, or a fixed opinion, as to defendant's guilt or innocence, which it would take strong evidence to change, but that it was formed from newspaper reports and the talk of neighbors, and that the evidence he might hear might change it, is not disqualified.—Clark v. Commonwealth, 123 Pa. 555, 16 Atl. 795, 23 Wkly. Notes Cas. 317.

[h] (Pa. 1893) Where, in a murder case, it appears from the examination of a juror on his voir dire that he has the ability and disposition to render a verdict on the evidence alone, he is competent, though it will require evidence to change an impression formed from what he has read.—Commonwealth v. Crossmire, 156 Pa. 304, 27 Atl. 40, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 77.

[i] (Tenn. 1850) A juror in a capital case said he had formed an opinion in regard to the guilt of the defendant from rumor, but that he did not know whether his information was derived from the witnesses, or from any person who knew the facts, nor did he know who the witnesses were, and if proof turned out differently from rumor, he could do justice to the prisoner. The court said that a mere hypothetical opinion, or loose impression, having no foundation to rest on, would not disqualify a person as a juror; that, in testing his competency, the character of the impression made on his mind was of more consequence than the source from which he derived his information; and that, in the present case, the opinion formed by the juror being of so fixed a character that it required evidence to remove that opinion, he was therefore incompetent.—Moses v. State, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 456.

[j] (Utah, 1875) A juror who states that he has formed an unqualified opinion on the merits of a case, which it will require evidence to remove, should be (on challenge) excluded, whether his opinion is founded on rumor, or on fact.—Conway v. Clinton, 1 Utah, 215.

[k] (Va. 1889) A juror who states that he has formed and expressed an opinion as to defendant's guilt; that it was based on newspaper reports and rumor; that the opinion was "right positive;" that it would take evidence to remove it, but that he could give defendant a fair and impartial trial, and, if the evidence was different from what he had heard, he would change his mind,—is incompetent.—Washington v. Commonwealth, 86 Va. 405, 10 S. E. 419.

[a] That a jury has formed an opinion on mere rumor, but never expressed it, is not ground of challenge for cause.

—(Ala. 1841) State v. Morea, 2 Ala. 275;
(Ga. 1847) Hudgins v. State, 2 Ga. (2 Kelly) 173; (1854) Griffin v. Same, 15 Ga. 476.

[b] (U. S. 1851) A person who has come to a conclusion as to the offense charged from reading newspaper accounts, though he has not expressed an opinion, either as to the offense, or that defendant was engaged therein, is incompetent as a juror.—United States v. Hanway, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299 [2 Wall. Jr. 139].

3. FROM EVIDENCE ADDUCED AT TRIAL.

EVIDENCE AT FORMER TRIAL, § 459.
EVIDENCE AT TRIAL OF OTHER CAUSE, § 460.

See ante, § 448.

Prior service as juror, see ante, §§ 423–430.

Reading newspaper reports of evidence, see ante, §§ 449–457.

[a] (Ala. 1838) It is good cause of challenge to a juror that he has formed and expressed an opinion of the innocence or guilt of a prisoner from conversations held with jurors who had been previously charged with the trial of the prisoner.—Ned v. State, 7 Port. 187.

[b] (Fla. 1860) The fact that a person presided as coroner at an inquest does not disqualify him as a juror in the trial of an indictment for the murder of the party on whose body the inquest was held, when he testifies that he has neither expressed, nor formed, any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner.—O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215.

[c] (Fla. 1886) A juror on his voir dire stated that he had formed an opinion on what he had been told of the evidence by one who was at the preliminary hearing, but that his impressions would readily yield to the evidence on the trial. Held, that he was competent.—Denham v. State, 22 Fla. 664.

[d] (Iowa, 1861) It is not good cause of challenge to jurors that they have heard the evidence as to the preliminary question of the sanity of the prisoner tried under Revision 1860, pars. 5015–5019, as such evidence could not conclude their minds on the question of the defendant's mental condition at the time of the commission of the offense.—State v. Arnold, 12 Iowa, 479.

[e] (Kan. 1895) The fact that a juror was in the court room and heard the evidence on a plea in bar did not disqualify him to serve in the main case subsequently tried.—State v. Scott, 1 Kan. App. 748, 42 Pac. 264.

[f] (Tex. 1859) A juror on a trial for murder who on his voir dire stated that he had heard part of the evidence before the examining committee, and had formed a partial opinion which might influence his verdict to some extent, but that he had no fixed opinion to influence his verdict, is not disqualified.—Monroe v. State, 23 Tex. 210, 76 Am. Dec. 58.

[a] (Ga. 1889) The array is not disqualified by the jurors hearing the evidence on oath, without forming or expressing any opinion thereon.—Robinson v. State, 82 Ga. 535, 9 S. E. 528.

[b] (Miss. 1893) A juror was not "impartial," who had heard parts of a former trial of the case, declared that he had a "fixed and definite opinion," and would not say positively that he could try the case as though he had no opinion.—Mabry v. State, 71 Miss. 716, 14 South. 267.

[c] (Mo. 1891) A juror testified on his voir dire that he was on the general panel at a former term, when the same case was first tried, though not on the panel which tried it; that he was present at that trial, and probably formed an opinion then, but did not think he had any opinion now. Held, that the juror was qualified.—Spangler v. Kite, 47 Mo. App. 230.

[d] (Neb. 1886) Under Cr. Code, § 468, it is proper to excuse a person who, on examination, it appears has heard the testimony of a part of the witnesses in a previous trial of the same cause, and has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the party on trial, founded on the testimony heard, which is still retained by him.—Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233, 29 N. W. 911, 57 Am. Rep. 825.

[e] (Tex. 1880) The fact that a petit juror had heard the testimony at the former trial of accused is not cause for challenge; it not appearing that, when impaneled, he had any opinion in the case.—Shields v. State, 8 Tex. App. 427.

[f] (Tex. 1885) The mere fact that a juror heard the evidence on a prior trial of the same case will not disqualify him.—Thompson v. State, 19 Tex. App. 503.

[a] (Ark. 1895) In an action by a passenger against a railroad company to recover the statutory penalty for making an overcharge for carriage between certain stations, the main issue was the distance between those stations. Several jurors stated that they had sat as jurors in several cases tried that term, wherein defendants had been sued for like penalties for overcharges in fares between the same stations, and that they had opinions as to the merits of those cases, and had rendered verdicts upon the facts therein, and it appeared that four of the jury were plaintiffs in actions against defendants, in which the same issues were involved. Held, that under Sand. & H. Dig. § 4257, providing that no person who has formed or expressed an opinion concerning the matter in controversy, which might influence his judgment, shall be a juror, said jurors were disqualified.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 60 Ark. 221, 29 S. W. 762.

[b] (Del. 1854) An opinion formed on evidence given at the trial of another party for the same murder, such as without counteracting testimony the juror says would be conclusive against the prisoner, is a good cause for a challenge.—State v. Anderson, 5 Har. 493.

[c] (Ill. 1838) On the trial of a suit for crim. con. between the defendant and the plaintiff's wife, a juror was proposed who, on being examined, stated that he had heard the testimony against the wife of the plaintiff, who was indicted for adultery with the defendant, and from that testimony had formed an opinion, but had not formed an opinion in this case, not knowing that there was a civil suit then. Held, that he was a competent juror, it not appearing that the crime for which the wife was indicted was committed before or after the commencement of the suit for crim. con.—King v. Dale, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 513.

[d] (Ill. 1878) In a suit on a policy of insurance, where a juror had heard a part of the evidence in a case just tried between the same plaintiff and another insurance company, where the questions involved were similar, held, that the juror was improperly challenged, as, if he had any opinion whatever from what he had heard, it was merely hypothetical, and would not prevent a fair and impartial judgment on the facts as they might be proved on the trial.—Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Ward, 90 Ill. 545.

[e] (Ind. 1880) A juror was disqualified to sit on the trial of B. where he had read the evidence produced at the trial of A., who was accused with B. of having committed the same murder, and had formed and expressed an opinion as to B.'s guilt, which he said he thought he could lay aside, if the evidence at B.'s trial should be materially different.—Brown v. State, 70 Ind. 576.

[f] (Iowa, 1889) The fact that jurors have formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant from reading reports of evidence upon the trial of another defendant for the same offense is not sufficient to show them disqualified under Code 1873, § 4405, subd. 11, where it is not shown that the evidence given at the first trial is that relied on at the second, and it appears that the first defendant was charged with having committed the offense, while the second defendant is charged with being a party thereto through a conspiracy.—State v. Munchrath, 78 Iowa, 268, 43 N. W. 211.

[g] (Iowa, 1896) A juror who heard part of the evidence and of the argument on the trial of one who was jointly indicted with defendant is not disqualified to serve as juror on the trial of defendant, where he says he has no opinion as to the guilt of accused.—State v. Philpot, 97 Iowa, 365, 66 N. W. 730.

[h] (Miss. 1840) That a juror has impressions as to the guilt of the prisoner, derived from hearing the testimony in another case, is not sufficient to disqualify him.—Noe v. State, 5 Miss. (4 How.) 330.

[i] (Neb. 1884) A juror who was one of a jury that had rendered a verdict for defendant in a similar case the day before, when challenged for cause by plaintiff, stated that he knew nothing about the present case, and as yet had no opinion in regard to it, but that, if the facts were exactly the same as in the previous case, he should have the same opinion. Held, he was a competent juror.—Chariton Plow Co. v. Deusch, 16 Neb. 384, 20 N. W. 268.

[j] (N. H. 1843) Where jurors had heard the prisoner tried on another indictment before another jury, and found guilty, and answered, on inquiry, that they had formed an opinion of his guilt on the second indictment, which was pending at the same time, from the evidence which they had heard on the other trial, they were held to be incompetent.—State v. Webster, 13 N. H. 491.

or innocence of defendant, and could give defendant a fair trial, is competent.—Pierson v. State, 21 Tex. App. 14, 17 S. W. 468.

§ 461. Weight and effect of opinion in general.

[a] The fact that a venireman has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of an accused, based on rumor, newspaper reports, or hearsay, does not preclude him from sitting on the jury, where such an opinion will not interfere with his rendering an impartial verdict on the evidence as adduced.

(Pa. 1866) Commonwealth v. Berger, 8 Brewst. 247.

[b] (U. S. 1807) An opinion formed and delivered, not on the full case, but on a point so essential as to go far towards a decision of the whole case, and to have a real influence on the verdict, will disqualify the person as a juror.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692g.

[c] (U. S. 1854) If a juror in a criminal case has formed an opinion that the prisoners are guilty, and entertains that opinion without waiting to hear the testimony, he is incompetent. But if from reading the newspapers, or hearing reports, he has impressions on his mind unfavorable to the prisoners, but has no opinion or prejudice which will prevent him from doing impartial justice when he hears the testimony, he is competent.—Anonymous, Fed. Cas. No. 469.

[d] (Mont. 1880) A juror was incompetent, who, on trial of K. for murder, stated on his voir dire that he had not formed or expressed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and was accepted, but who, after the conviction, testified that he had forgotten a statement made by him before the trial, that K. was guilty and he would hang him, adding that when he was so sworn he had no prejudice against K.—Territory v. Kennedy, 3 Mont. 520.

[e] (N. Y. 1879) Under Laws 1872, c. 475, providing that the formation or expression of an opinion or impression in reference to circumstances, or to the guilt or innocence of a person charged with crime, by a proposed juror, shall not be a sufficient ground of challenge for principal cause to any person otherwise legally qualified, provided the juror declares on oath that he verily believes he could render an impartial verdict according to the evidence submitted to the jury, an opinion not formed upon reading sworn evidence relating to the commission of the offense does not, of itself, render the person incompetent as a juror, where the final testimony establishes the fact that he can impartially hear and determine it without being biased or influenced by his preceding opinion.—Pender v. People, 18 Hun, 560.

[f] (N. Y. 1883) Under Cr. Code, § 376, which re-enacts Laws 1875, c. 475, a juror is competent to act as such on the trial of a capital case, although he has read and talked about it, and has formed an opinion, if his verdict will not be influenced by his opinion.—People v. Cornetti, 92 N. Y. 85.

[g] (Pa.) The inquiry as to a juror's incompetency from previous opinion is whether his opinion is a prejudgment with such fixedness and strength as would probably control his judgment, or has been formed upon the same evidence as will be given on the trial.—(1874) O'Mara v. Commonwealth, 75 Pa. (25 P. F. Smith) 424; (1875) Ortwein v. Same, 76 Pa. (26 P. F. Smith) 414, 18 Am. Rep. 420.

See post, §§ 477 [d], 481 [g].
Extent of examination of juror, see post, § 568 [f].

[a] (Mich. 1865) It is not required that jurors shall come to the investigation of criminal charges with minds entirely unimpressed by what they may have heard in regard to them, or entirely without information concerning them, if they would not be thereby precluded from giving due weight to the presumption of the innocence of the accused.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

[b] (Mich.) A juror is disqualified where his opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence would prevent his giving due weight to the presumption of innocence.—(1878) Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739; (1886) People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277, 27 N. W. 539, 1 Am. St. Rep. 501.

[c] (Neb. 1881) If it be shown by the voir dire examination of a juror that his mind is impressed so thoroughly with the idea of the prisoner's guilt that he cannot presume him to be innocent, and can only admit the "possibility" of his being so, it is good ground for challenge. —Olive v. State, 11 Neb. 1, 7 N. W. 444.

[a] A juror is not ineligible because of having formed or expressed an opinion, if he states that that opinion is not so strong as to prevent his giving a true verdict according to the evidence.

(Tex. 1898) Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 1103.

[b] A juror who, while admitting that he has formed and expressed an opinion, states that his mind is unbiased, and that he can render a verdict on the evidence, is competent.

(Pa. 1872) Commonwealth v. Morrow, 9 Phila. 583; (1873) Same v. Work, 3 Pittsb. R. 493.

[c] It is not cause for a challenge for favor, that the venireman entertains, or even that he admits or has expressed, some mental impression as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, if it is unaccompanied by prejudice, and the venireman swears it will not embarrass him in rendering a true verdict upon the evidence.

(Pa. 1877) Curley v. Commonwealth, 84 Pa. 151.

[d] (U. S. 1878) A petit juror in a criminal case having testified on his voir dire that he had formed an opinion, although not upon evidence produced in court, as to the question of the innocence or guilt of the prisoner, but that he had not expressed it, and did not think that it would influence his verdict, he was challenged by the prisoner for cause, and the challenge was overruled by the court. Held, that the action of the court was not erroneous.—Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244.

[e] (Ala. 1891) Code, § 4331, declares it to be a good ground for challenge by either party in a criminal case that the proposed juror has a fixed opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, which will bias his verdict; and section 4332 declares that this ground of challenge may be proved by the oath of the juror alone. Held, that one who testifies that he has an opinion as to defendant's guilt, but that it will not bias his verdict, is competent. — Hammil v. State, 90 Ala. 577, 8 South. 380.

[f] (Ga. 1888) The fact that a juror who stated on his voir dire that he had no prejudice against defendant, and could render an impartial verdict, was shown to have stated before the trial that he believed defendant guilty, because two juries had found him guilty, is not ground for new trial, as the two statements are not inconsistent.—Blackman v. State, 80 Ga. 785, 7 S. E. 626.

[g] (Ind. 1894) One examined as a juror stated that he thought the filing of the affidavit and information against defendant was some evidence of his guilt, but that, if they were not used in evidence, he would decide the case impartially. Held, that he was a competent juror.—Pemberton v. State, 11 Ind. App. 297, 38 N. E. 1096.

[h] (Iowa, 1862) In an action against the city, a juror stated that he was a city taxpayer and did not believe that it was right for the inhabitants to pay their share of the taxes and get no gas, but that he had no opinion which would disqualify him from rendering a verdict in conformity to the law and the evidence. Held, that a challenge for cause was properly sustained.—Davenport Gaslight & Coke Co. v. City of Davenport, 13 Iowa, 229.

[i] (Iowa, 1887) A juror who admits that he has formed an opinion regarding the guilt of the accused, but says that such opinion will not prevent his rendering a true verdict according to the evidence, is not incompetent, under Code 1873, § 4405, which provides that a person who has "formed or expressed such an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner as would prevent him from rendering a true verdict according to the evidence" may be challenged for cause.—State v. Vatter, 71 Iowa, 557, 32 N. W. 506.

[j] (Iowa, 1887) A juror who states that he has not formed or expressed such an opinion as will prevent him from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence may properly be permitted to serve unless he discloses facts that contradict his statement, and it is not error to overrule a challenge of such juror for cause.—State v. Smith, 73 Iowa, 82, 34 N. W. 597.

[k] (La. 1895) An intimate friend of the deceased, who has formed and expressed an opinion that the accused was guilty of his murder, is incompetent as a juror, although he states on his voir dire that he can, notwithstanding, give the accused a fair trial.—State v. Jackson, 37 La. Ann. 768.

[l] (N. Y. 1876) A person called as a juror in a criminal case who states "that he believed the defendant guilty from what he had heard, but, if the evidence should show him to be innocent, his belief would not bias his verdict, and he would do what was right," is competent as a juror. Rev. Code Ala. § 4180.—Phelps v. People, 6 Hun, 401.

[m] (Ohio, 1857) A juror, challenged for cause, who states on his voir dire that he has formed an opinion as to the commission of the crime and as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and further states that he does not think that the opinion thus formed will influence his verdict, should be set aside as an unsuitable juror —Fouts v. State, 7 Ohio St. 471.

[n] (Vt. 1870) A venireman who admits he has expressed an opinion should be excluded from the jury in a criminal case, on a challenge for cause, notwithstanding he declares he has no opinion at the trial, and can try the case impartially. Merely having formed an opinion does not disqualify, but one who has expressed an opinion, also, is incompetent, and should not be allowed to serve merely because he thinks it will not prevent him from trying the case impartially.—State v. Clark, 42 Vt. 629.

[p] (Va. 1874) The fact that one called as a juror in a murder trial has formed and expressed an opinion from what he has heard of the case, his information not coming from any witness, does not render him incompetent where he testifies that his opinion is not a fixed one, and that he can give the prisoner fair trial without reference to the opinion already expressed.—Little v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. 921.

[q] (W. Va. 1869) An expression of opinion, to disqualify a juror, must be deliberate and decided. Where a juror in a case involving in issue the validity of a will of one Steenrod was alleged to have made to different persons the following statements: "They are going to break the Steenrod will." "It is right to break it." "Mrs. T. [a devisee] informed her father how to make it." "T. drew it himself." "It's no use for T. to sue. He'll get beat,"—and he swore he might possibly have made them, but had formed no opinion, and knew of nothing about the case he could put confidence in, he was held not to be disqualified.—Thompson v. Updegraff, 3 W. Va. 629.

Opinions founded on rumor, see post, § 472.
Reading newspaper accounts, see post, § 476.

[a] Where a juror stated that he had not formed an unqualified opinion, that if what he had heard should be proved upon the trial he had an opinion made up, but that he thought he had no prejudice or bias to prevent him from hearing the evidence, and giving a verdict in accordance with the law and the testimony, he was held to be competent.

—(Iowa, 1859) State v. Sater, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 420; (La. 1880) State v. Desmouchet, 32 La. Ann. 1241.

[b] (Ala. 1884) Under Code, § 4881, one who states on his voir dire that he has a fixed opinion as to the guilt of defendant, which would bias his verdict if the facts prove to be those he had heard, but which he does not think would bias it if those proved were different, and that then he could act on the facts as proved, is incompetent as a juror on a trial for murder.—Jackson v. State, 77 Ala. 18.

[c] (Cal. 1870) Where a juror in a criminal proceeding, upon examination as to his qualification to try the case, states that he has formed a fixed decided opinion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, a subsequent statement by him, on cross-examination, that his opinion is not an unqualified one, and that he could try the case and render a verdict according to the evidence, notwithstanding any previously formed opinion, will not remove his disability as a juror.—People v. Weil, 40 Cal. 268.

[d] (Colo. 1891) Where a juror heard "some of the facts," and formed "a slight opinion" at the time, but afterwards forgot even the facts, and another "heard of the case," and formed a conditional opinion, not, however, on the merits, and each swore on his voir dire that he thought he could try the case fairly and without regard to his previous opinion, it was not error to disallow challenges thereto, inasmuch as such opinions were not "unqualified * * * as to the merits of the action" within Civ. Code, § 182.—Collins v. Burns, 16 Colo. 7, 26 Pac. 145.

[e] (Va. 1823) A venireman who had heard a relation of what the principal witness for the prosecution had sworn to, and had said that if these things were true, he believed the prisoner guilty, but who declared on his voir dire that he felt no prejudice, was open to conviction, and, if the facts did not turn out as they had been represented, that he was ready to change his opinion, was held a good juror, and the prisoner's challenge for cause was overruled.—Sprouce v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 375.

[f] (Va. 1881) On voir dire a juror answered that he had formed a hypothetical opinion, but that he could not now say that he had such an opinion that evidence could not remove it, but that he preferred not to sit as a juror; and that he could give the prisoner a fair trial. Held, that he was incompetent.—Dejarnette v. Commonwealth, 75 Va. 867.

Opinions founded on rumor, see post, § 473.
Reading newspaper reports, see post, § 477.

[a] A juror who states on his voir dire that he has formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence that will require evidence to remove is disqualified, though he also states that he can discard that opinion, and give defendant a fair and impartial trial.

—(Ark. 1885) Polk v. State, 45 Ark. 165; (1892) Vance v. Same, 56 Ark. 402, 19 S. W. 1066;

(Ark. 1881) Casey v. State, 37 Ark. 67;
(Tex. 1888) Livar v. State, 26 Tex. App. 115, 9 S. W. 552.

[b] Where a juror testified on his voir dire that he should go into the jury box with an opinion which it would require conclusive or strong evidence to change, the court abused its discretion in admitting him, though he testified that he believed he could render an impartial verdict.

—(Fla. 1885) Andrews v. State, 21 Fla. 598;
(N. Y. 1893) Doherty v. Lord (City Ct. N. Y.) 5 Misc. Rep. 596, 25 N. Y. Supp. 752, affirmed (Com. Pl. 1894) 8 Misc. Rep. 227, 28 N. Y. Supp. 720;

[c] (Ala. 1889) A juror, on examination on voir dire, stated that he heard the evidence at a previous investigation, and had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, that "evidence would have to be very strong to change it," and that "it would be a hard matter to set aside the evidence he had based his opinion on." Held, that he was not a qualified juror.—King v. State, 89 Ala. 146, 7 South. 750.

[d] (Cal. 1861) A juror stated that, from what he had heard and read about the defendant, he had received an impression that he was a bad man, which it might require evidence to remove, and that he should think him more likely to be guilty of a crime than one of whom he had not heard such things, but that he was not conscious of any bias which would prevent his giving him a fair trial. Held, that he was a competent juror.—People v. Mahoney, 18 Cal. 180.

[e] (Fla. 1893) On a trial for murder, a veniremen stated on his voir dire that he had formed and expressed an opinion in regard to the guilt of the accused, but that this opinion was not of a fixed nature, and that he would be governed by the evidence, though it would take evidence to change his opinion. The defense then challenged him for cause, and thereupon the court asked him if he would be influenced by the opinion he had, or would be guided entirely by the evidence, and he answered that he would be governed by the evidence allowed to go to the jury. Held, that there was no error in overruling the challenge for cause.—English v. State, 31 Fla. 356, 12 South. 689.

[f] (Iowa, 1890) Where a juror states on the voir dire that he has heard one of the parties to the suit make a statement relative to its merits, and that he has formed an opinion which it will take evidence to change, but thinks that he can render a just verdict, it is within the discretion of the court to sustain the challenge of the adverse party, made under Code 1873, § 2772, subd. 9, providing that "when it appears the juror has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion on the merits of the controversy, or shows such a state of mind as will preclude him from rendering a just verdict," he may be challenged for cause.—Sprague v. Atlee, 81 Iowa, 1, 46 N. W. 756.

[g] (Kan. 1893) Where persons called to try a cause hold strong and deep impressions, which amount to opinions, and which are of a fixed and positive character, such as will require evidence to change, they should not be retained as jurors, although they may testify that they believe they can render an impartial verdict.—State v. Snodgrass, 52 Kan. 174, 34 Pac. 750.

[h] (Mich. 1889) The refusal of the court to excuse a juror for cause who stated that it would require considerable evidence to remove the opinion which he had formed as to the merits of the case, but afterwards stated that he could try the case fairly, is not an abuse of its discretion.—Michigan Condensed Milk Co. v. Wilcox, 78 Mich. 431, 44 N. W. 281.

[i] (Miss. 1874) If the mind of a juror is so far prejudiced as to require testimony to annul a preopinion derived from any source or origin; or if the opinion has been engendered from personal knowledge, from hearing the witnesses on a former trial, although the juror may disclaim that it would influence his verdict and claim that he was unbiased, he is an incompetent juror.—Logan v. State, 50 Miss. 269.

[j] (Nev. 1870) Where a juror on examination as to his qualifications said that he had heard something of the matter, and had an impression which it would require testimony to remove, but that he had no bias, and his impression was very vague, and that he had never talked with any one who pretended to know the facts, a challenge for cause was properly overruled.—Estes v. Richardson, 6 Nev. 128.

[k] (N. Y. 1887) A juror who, on his voir dire, states that he knows the parties to the action, and has partially formed an opinion about the controversy, which opinion it would require evidence to remove, but that he believes he could try the case impartially without being biased by his previous impression, is not competent.—Young v. Johnson, 46 Hun, 164, affirmed (1890) 123 N. Y. 226, 25 N. E. 363.

[l] (N. Y. 1892) A juror stating that he had an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, which he would take with him into the jury box, and which it would require evidence to remove, cannot on that account be rejected, as the statute (Cr. Code, § 376, subd. 2), which allows an impartial juror, who may have formed a previous opinion, to act, does not imply that he must lay aside the opinion before acting.—People v. McGonegal, 136 N. Y. 62, 32 N. E. 616.

[m] (Pa. 1874) An opinion formed by a juror in reading evidence given in the former trial of a capital case, "which it would take some evidence to remove," held to disqualify him, although he said it would not influence his judgment if he were sworn as a juror.—Staup v. Commonwealth, 74 Pa. (24 P. F. Smith) 458.

[n] (Pa. 1875) A juror on being asked whether he had formed or expressed an opinion in a case replied that if what he had read was true he thought the prisoner was guilty, but that his opinion would not hinder him from rendering a just verdict according to the evidence. He had read the testimony taken on the hearing before the coroner and formed his opinion from that, and stated that it would take contrary evidence to remove the opinion from his mind. Held, that a challenge for cause was properly overruled.—Myers v. Commonwealth, 79 Pa. (29 P. F. Smith) 308.

[o] (Tex. 1891) A juror upon examination on his voir dire said that he lived eight miles from the house of deceased, and knew him, and that he had met defendant several times; that he had not talked with the witnesses about the case; that he had an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, which evidence would be required to remove; that, if the evidence was as he had heard it, his mind would be unchanged, but that he could render a fair and impartial verdict upon the evidence and instructions, uninfluenced by his present opinion. Held, that he was a competent juror, under Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, subd. 13, which provides that a juror may be challenged for cause when there is "established" in his mind such a conclusion of defendant's guilt or innocence as will influence his verdict.—Suit v. State, 30 Tex. App. 319, 17 S. W. 458.

[p] (Tex. 1894) A juror who testifies on his voir dire that he has formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt, and that evidence will be required to remove it, but that he can try the case without being influenced by such opinion, is competent, within Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, providing that a juror may be challenged for cause where there is "established" in his mind such a conclusion of defendant's guilt or innocence as will influence his verdict.—Shannon v. State (Cr. App.) 26 S. W. 410, following Suit v. Same (1891) 30 Tex. App. 319, 17 S. W. 458.

[q] (Utah, 1895) 2 Comp. Laws 1888, § 5024, disqualifying a juror who has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, does not disqualify a juror testifying on voir dire examination that he had formed an "impression," but not an "opinion," as to defendant's guilt, and that, although it would take evidence to remove it, he could try the case impartially, and would give defendant the benefit of the presumption of innocence.—People v. Thiede, 11 Utah, 241, 39 Pac. 837.

[r] (Wash. 1891) A juror stated that he had talked about the case with 30 or 40 people, including one of the jury who had tried a person indicted jointly with the defendant, and had read newspaper reports of the testimony before the coroner's jury and at the preliminary examination; that his opinion was confirmed, and strong evidence would be required to remove it, but that he would be governed by the law and the evidence, and could lay aside all previous impressions. Held incompetent.—Rose v. State, 2 Wash. St. 310, 26 Pac. 264.

[s] (Wash. 1891) Where a juror in a murder case states that he has formed and expressed an opinion which would require evidence to remove, but that he would try the case on the evidence and the law, he is disqualified on the ground of "actual bias," within Code, § 211, subd. 2.—State v. Coella, 3 Wash. St. 99, 28 Pac. 28.

[t] (Wash. 1895) In a criminal case it is error to overrule a challenge to a juror stating on voir dire examination that he had formed an opinion which it would take evidence to remove, though, in answer to a leading question on cross-examination, he stated that he could give accused an impartial trial.—State v. Rutten, 13 Wash. 203, 43 Pac. 30.

Opinions founded on rumor, see post, § 474.
Reading newspaper reports, see post, § 478.

[a] A juror who on his voir dire says he has formed an opinion, but it would yield to sworn evidence, and he is free from prejudice as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, is competent.

[b] (Fla. 1885) Where a juror says that his opinion was formed from rumor, that it would yield readily to evidence, but that he would rather not have heard what he has heard, if he is to go into the jury box, he is competent.—Andrews v. State, 21 Fla. 598.

[c] (Ind. 1875) It is not a good cause for the challenging of a juror, that he testifies that he has formed and expressed an opinion upon the merits of the cause and the rights of the parties, as the result of a conversation with one of the parties or from rumor, but that the opinion formed will readily yield to the evidence presented on the trial, and that he can hear the evidence and decide the case as impartially as though he had not formed and expressed an opinion.—Scranton v. Stewart, 52 Ind. 68.

[d] (La. 1880) One who stated on his voir dire that he had formed his fixed opinion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the accused, but that said opinion would yield to testimony showing the facts to be different from what he heard, was incompetent.—State v. Ricks, 32 La. Ann. 1098.

[e] (Va. 1841) A person called as a juror who had had a conversation with the prosecutor shortly after the offense was committed, and had formed and expressed a decided opinion that the prisoner was guilty, is not indifferent, and a challenge upon such ground should be sustained, although he stated the opinion he had formed was not such but that it would yield to evidence, that he would try the prisoner's case by the evidence alone, that he had no prejudice against him, and would give him a fair trial.—Armistead v. Commonwealth, 11 Leigh, 657, 37 Am. Dec. 633.

From prior service as juror, see post, § 470.
Reading reports of evidence in newspapers, see post, §§ 475–478.
Requiring evidence to remove, see ante, § 465 [c, n].

[a] A juror who states that he has formed an opinion from evidence he heard at the preliminary trial and the report of the evidence in a local paper, but that he can discard his formed opinion, and render an unbiased verdict, is incompetent.
—(Mo. 1891) State v. Hultz, 106 Mo. 41, 16 S. W. 940;
(Tenn. 1830) Rice v. State, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 432.

[b] In a civil case it is not error to reject a juror testifying that he had formed and expressed an opinion on the case from reading the evidence in former trials, though he also testified that he would not be swayed by such opinions.
—(Ind. 1885) Dugle v. State, 100 Ind. 259;
(N. Y. 1896) Laidlaw v. Sage, 2 App. Div. 374, 37 N. Y. Supp. 770.

[c] (Del. 1854) An impression not founded on evidence does not disqualify a juror, although he has heard part of the evidence given on the trial of another person charged with the same offense, where he thinks it cannot have any bias on his judgment.—State v. Anderson, 5 Har. 493.

[d] (Ind. 1895) Testimony of a juror on voir dire examination that he had read a part of the evidence given on a former trial does not show that his opinion was formed from reading reports of the testimony of "witnesses to the transaction," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1894, § 1862 (Rev. St. 1881, § 1793), rendering a juror incompetent whose opinion has been formed from reading reports of the testimony of such witnesses, though the juror may state that he can render an impartial verdict.—Siberry v. State (Sup.) 39 N. E. 936.

[e] (Pa. 1826) Where a juror had heard the testimony in a former trial, and had made up his mind, it is a good cause of challenge, though he professes to be open to new convictions.—Irvine v. Kean, 14 Serg. & R. 292.

[f] (Tex. 1886) A juror in a criminal case stated on his voir dire that he "had heard a portion of the evidence on the habeas corpus trial, and had then formed an opinion in reference to the guilt or innocence of defendant, but that this opinion, so formed, would not now influence his verdict, and that he could, notwithstanding such former opinion, render an impartial verdict according to the law and the evidence." Held, that the juror was not rendered incompetent by Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, subd. 13, which provides that a juror in a criminal case may be challenged for cause on the ground "that, from hearsay or otherwise, there is established in the mind of the juror such a conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant as will influence him in his action in finding a verdict."—Johnson v. State, 21 Tex. App. 368, 17 S. W. 252.

[g] (Va. 1834) Persons called to serve as jurors in a criminal case, when examined on their voir dire, said that they had heard part of the evidence on a former investigation, and formed some opinion thereon, yet the opinion so formed would in nowise influence their minds as jurors, but that they could act upon the case impartially. Held, that such persons were good and impartial jurors.—Hendrick v. Commonwealth, 5 Leigh, 707.

[h] (Va. 1839) On a trial for murder, a juror stated on his voir dire that he had made up no decided opinion; that he had heard a part of the evidence of one witness and formed an impression, and, if the balance of the testimony should run in that way, that impression would be confirmed; that, as far as the evidence went, he had a decided opinion, if the rest should not run against it; but that he had no prejudice, had not expressed any opinion, and was prepared to decide the case according to the evidence which might be given in, uninfluenced by the portion of evidence he had heard. Held, that the juror was competent.—In re Moran, 9 Leigh, 651.

[i] (Va. 1843) On a murder trial, the fact that the jurors have heard and read evidence in regard to the defendant's guilt and gave their opinions thereon will not render them incompetent, where they state on their voir dire that they would try him according to the evidence, free from any leaning or bias, and decide the case as impartially as if they had previously heard nothing of it.—McCune v. Commonwealth, 2 Rob. 771.

[j] (Va. 1889) Where a juryman states on his examination that he had read the evidence on the trial of the companion of accused when the murder was committed, and had formed an opinion, but not a positive one, and that he could try the case fairly on the evidence, he is competent.—Williams v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 607, 8 S. E. 470.

§ 468. Opinions founded on conversations with parties, witnesses, or persons claiming to know the facts.

Opinions requiring evidence to remove, see ante, § 465 [f, i, o, r].

—— which will yield to evidence, see ante, § 466 [c, e].

Qualified opinion, see ante, § 464 [e].

Source of opinion in general, see ante, § 448.

[a] If the opinion of a juror is based on conversations with witnesses of the crime, he is incompetent, although he may feel confident of being able to render an impartial verdict.

(La. 1893) State v. Covington, 45 La. Ann. 979, 13 South. 266.

[b] (U. S. 1877) A juror in a civil action, who, on his voir dire, expresses an entire willingness, as well as ability, to accept the facts as they shall be developed by the evidence, and return a verdict in accordance with them, is not rendered incompetent by having previously conversed with a person about the case, and received an impression in relation to the facts.—Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 640, 24 L. Ed. 648.

[c] (Cal. 1893) Pen. Code, § 1076, provides that no person shall be disqualified as a juror because he has formed an opinion on the cause, founded on public rumor or common notoriety, if it appear to the court on his oath that he will nevertheless act impartially. Held, that where one's examination simply showed that he had an opinion as to the merits of the case which was based on what parties directly interested had told him regarding the facts, there was nothing to justify the conclusion that his opinion was formed from public rumor or common notoriety, and he was disqualified, though he stated under oath that he could and would give defendant a fair and impartial trial.—People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 227, 34 Pac. 718.

[d] (La. 1815) A juror who declares "he was consulted as a friend in the transaction by defendant's agent, before the suit, and had given his opinion that defendant was entitled to the property in dispute, but, as he had only heard one side of the question, his mind was open to conviction," is incompetent.—Laverty v. Gray, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 617.

[e] (La. 1882) A juror, on his voir dire, the indictment being for murder, stated that his opinion could be removed by testimony, and that his verdict would be rendered according to law and evidence. The judge rejected him, he having talked with one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution, and having assisted in burying the deceased. The judge thought it evident that he was familiar with the facts of the case, and that he wanted to get on the jury. Held, that he was properly rejected.—State v. Barnes, 34 La. Ann. 395.

[f] (Mich. 1896) A juror called in the trial of a defendant for murder by poison, who had talked with a number of persons about the case, and, among others, with a member of the coroner's jury, who stated to him that poison was found in the stomach of the woman charged to have been murdered, which statement he believed, and who, from such conversations, had formed an opinion which it would require evidence to remove, was disqualified to act as a juror, although he believed himself able to render an impartial verdict.—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652, 66 N. W. 562.

[g] (Mo. 1836) On the trial of an indictment, one of the venire stated on the voir dire that "he had formed an opinion from having conversed with the defendant, but that he felt himself then in a state of mind to do justice between the parties." Held, that it was not ground for a new trial that the court ordered him to stand aside.—Stoner v. State, 4 Mo. 368.

[h] (Ohio, 1889) Rev. St. § 7278, provides that, "if a juror has formed * * * an opinion, * * * the court shall thereupon proceed to examine such juror on oath as to the grounds of such opinion; and, if such juror shall say that he believes he can render an impartial verdict notwithstanding such opinions, and if the court is satisfied that such juror will render an impartial verdict on the evidence, may admit him as competent to serve in such case as a juror." Held, that a juror who states on his examination that he has formed an opinion on a matter affecting the guilt of the defendant from having heard the circumstances of the crime related by one who claimed to know them, may nevertheless be competent to sit as a juror if he says on oath that he believes he can render an impartial verdict in the case, and the court is satisfied he can do so.—Goins v. State, 46 Ohio St. 457, 21 N. E. 476.

[i] (Tex. 1895) One who has formed an opinion of the guilt of accused, but states that he can try the case uninfluenced by his opinion, is not incompetent as a juror because he has talked with a witness; it not appearing that he got his opinion from talking with the witness.—Wade v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 170, 32 S. W. 772, 60 Am. St. Rep. 31.

[j] (Va. 1827) A juror who had heard the testimony of a witness in the cause and then formed an opinion upon it, and was doubtful whether he had expressed the opinion or not, though he thought it most probable that he had expressed it, but who declared that, at that time, he had no prejudice against the prisoner or his cause, and could, as he believed, give the prisoner as fair a trial as if he had not heard anything on the subject, was held an impartial juror, and the challenge against him for cause was overruled.—Pollard v. Commonwealth, 5 Rand. 659.

§ 469. Opinions or impressions as to particular matters or issues.

From newspaper reports, see post, § 475 [p].
Requiring evidence to remove, see ante, § 465 [d].

[a] (Ala. 1879) A person is not disqualified as a juror who, on being challenged, stated that from what he had heard he believed the defendant guilty, but did not know that this would bias his judgment; that he had an opinion, formed from rumor, as to the guilt of the prisoner; that he could not help believing what he had heard; that from conversations with the best citizens, in whom he had confidence, he had formed the opinion that the prisoner had killed some one, but none as to whether it was justifiable or not, and that it would require some evidence to remove said opinion, which would not bias his verdict.—Bales v. State, 63 Ala. 30.

[b] (Ga. 1854) When a juror admits that from the general bad character of the prisoner he had an unfavorable opinion of him, but asserts that if the evidence had allowed it he would have acquitted him, this will not suffice to set aside the verdict, when the record gives strong evidence of the prisoner's guilt.—Anderson v. State, 14 Ga. 709.

[c] (Ill. 1893) Where jurors show by their answers that they have fixed opinions as to the guilt of the defendant, and as to most of the facts and circumstances necessarily relied upon for a conviction, in regard to many of which the evidence is conflicting, and that they have a prejudice against a secret society to which the defendant belongs, and which is not shown to be a criminal organization, though it is claimed by the prosecution that the crime of which the defendant is accused was committed by order of such society, they are not competent jurors under Rev. St. c. 78, § 14, even though, after a long cross-examination by the judge, in which the duty of jurors to lay aside their opinions and prejudices is dwelt upon at length, they say that they could render a fair and impartial verdict.—Coughlin v. People, 144 Ill. 140, 33 N. E. 1, 19 L. R. A. 57.

[d] (Ind. 1855) A juror who was called and challenged in a civil suit answered on his voir dire "that he had not formed nor expressed an opinion in the case, nor had he formed or expressed any opinion as to which of the parties should succeed, that his mind was free to decide the case according to the evidence, though he had formed an opinion as to some of the matters in controversy." Held that, in the absence of all further evidence, the challenge should have been overruled, and the juror sworn.—Morgan v. Stevenson, 6 Ind. 169.

[e] (Iowa, 1875) A juror who stated upon his examination that he had not formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, but had in regard to some of the transactions in the case, stating further that he could render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, was held to be competent to serve.—State v. Bryan, 40 Iowa, 379.

[f] (Iowa, 1895) Code 1873, § 4405, provides that a juror who has formed such an opinion as to the guilt of the prisoner as would prevent him from rendering a verdict on the evidence shall be subject to challenge. Held, that a conviction of murder will not be disturbed because a juror had formed the opinion that deceased was "murdered," where he stated that he knew of no reason why he could not render a verdict according to the evidence, and the facts on which his opinion was formed were not disputed.—State v. Weems, 96 Iowa, 426, 65 N. W. 387.

[g] (Mich. 1878) A juror in a murder case who testifies that he has a positive opinion as to whether deceased had been murdered, but has formed none as to the guilt of the accused, and has no bias and believes that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, is not disqualified.—Cargen v. People, 39 Mich. 549.

[b] (Ind. 1892) Rev. St. § 1793, provides that if a person called as a juror state that he has formed or expressed an opinion, and on examination the opinion does not appear to have been founded on conversation with witnesses, or from reading reports of their testimony, or hearing them testify, and the juror states on oath that he can render an impartial verdict, the court, in its discretion, may permit him to serve. On a trial for selling intoxicating liquor to be drunk on the premises, two of the jurors had served the day before on a criminal action against the same defendant, which involved the question as to how defendant used his premises in the matter of the sale and drinking of liquors. The jurors stated on their voir dire that they had formed and expressed an opinion, as the result of that trial, as to how the premises were kept; that such opinion would yield to evidence; that they could try the case as impartially on the evidence and law as if they had not heard the other; that it would not require any more evidence favorable to defendant to enable them to render a verdict in his favor in the present case than if they had not heard the evidence in the former case. Held, that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the jurors to serve.—Howell v. State, 4 Ind. App. 148, 30 N. E. 714.

[c] (S. C. 1891) A juror who states that he served on a jury which convicted one of defendant's confederates in the crime, that in that case he discredited some of the witnesses, and that if they were again examined in the present case he would do likewise, is properly rejected, as not being indifferent between the parties, though he also states that he can find a verdict according to the law and to the evidence.—State v. James, 34 S. C. 49, 12 S. E. 657.

Doubt as to effect of opinion, see post, § 479.

[a] A juror who has formed an opinion from hearsay, but can try the cause impartially, and uninfluenced by his previously formed impressions, is competent.

[c] (Fla. 1894) A juror who states that he had heard what purported to be a detailed statement of the facts of the homicide, and had formed an opinion, but would render a verdict according to the evidence in the case, is competent.—Olive v. State, 34 Fla. 203, 15 South. 925.

[d] (Kan. 1882) One is not competent to serve as a juror on a criminal case, if he has formed and entertains an opinion as to the correctness of which he has no doubt; although he admits that it is founded on rumor, that he has no bias or prejudice against the prisoner, that he should be governed by the evidence, and believes that he could decide impartially.—State v. Miller, 29 Kan. 43.

[e] (La. 1889) On an indictment for murder, a "fixed" opinion as to defendant's guilt will not disqualify a juror where it is the result of rumor, and not of bias or prejudice against the defendant, and he states that he would be governed solely by the evidence in making up his verdict, and that he can render a fair and impartial verdict on the evidence.—State v. Dent, 41 La. Ann. 1082, 7 South. 694.

[f] (Mass. 1858) A juror who states that he has heard of the case upon which he is summoned to sit, but has not heard enough to form any opinion, and is not sensible of any bias or prejudice, is competent to sit on the jury.—Commonwealth v. Thrasher, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 57.

[g] (Miss. 1870) A juror is not disqualified by the fact of his having formed an impression of defendant's guilt entirely from outside sources, and not from having heard the testimony, where he states that it would not require testimony to remove it, and that such impression would not interfere with the free exercise of his judgment.—White v. State, 52 Miss. 216.

[h] (N. C. 1846) On a challenge for cause, the juror stated "that he had formed and expressed an opinion adverse to the prisoner, on rumors which he had heard, but that he had not heard a full statement of the case, and that his mind was not so made up as to prevent the doing of impartial justice to the prisoner." The court found the juror indifferent, and the supreme court refused to revise its decision.—State v. Ellington, 29 N. C. 61.

[i] (S. D. 1892) A juror swore that he had formed an opinion, but that it was based on conversations had with persons who knew nothing about any of the facts in the case; that the conversations were general current talk; and that, notwithstanding his opinion, he could sit as a juror in the case, unprejudiced and unbiased, and render a verdict according to law and evidence. Held the trial court committed no error in permitting the juror to sit.—Haugen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 3 S. D. 394, 53 N. W. 769.

[j] (Va. 1830) A person called as a juror said on his voir dire "that he had expressed an opinion on the circumstances, as he had heard them narrated in the country, but had not heard any of the evidence given on the examination of the prisoner, or conversed with any of the witnesses or parties, and that he did not think his opinion, so formed, would have any influence on his mind in trying the case." The juror was then challenged for cause. Held, that he was indifferent, and that the challenge should be disallowed.—Brown v. Commonwealth, 2 Leigh, 769.

[k] (Va. 1891) Objection to the competency of a juror is properly overruled where he states that he is impartial, and can give the prisoner a fair trial, and that he has no opinion about the case, though he had previously stated that at the time of its commission he heard some talk about it, and might then have had some opinion about it, but did not remember whether he had or not.—Lyles v. Commonwealth, 88 Va. 396, 13 S. E. 802.

Requiring evidence to remove, see post, § 473 [c].

[a] (Ala. 1831) In a capital case, it is not ground of peremptory challenge of a juror that he has formed and expressed an opinion on common report of the guilt of the prisoner, if the juror believes that such opinion would have no influence in the formation of his verdict should the evidence on the trial be different from the report of the facts.—State v. Williams, 3 Stew. 454.

[b] (Iowa, 1885) It cannot be said that a juror has formed an unqualified opinion who states that the opinion which he has formed is based upon hearsay, and not on statements made by any one claiming to have personal knowledge, and that he still thinks that he can render a true verdict.—State v. Ormiston, 66 Iowa, 143, 23 N. W. 370.

[c] (Neb. 1895) Under Cr. Code, § 468, providing that a juror who has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused from reading newspaper statements, or from rumor or hearsay, who shall say on oath that he can render an impartial verdict, is competent to serve, in the court's discretion, where a juror, who had formed a hypothetical opinion, founded solely on rumor and reading of newspapers, stated on oath that his opinion would not interfere with his rendering an impartial verdict, he was not disqualified.—Basye v. State, 45 Neb. 261, 63 N. W. 811.

the prisoner, and had heard no statement of the evidence from any witness or any person who was present; that he had heard the case spoken of in the town, and rumors in regard to its circumstances upon which he had expressed no opinion, though he believed those rumors to be true, and, if they should turn out upon the trial to be true, he had a decided opinion in regard to the case; but he felt no prejudice, and was satisfied he should be able to decide the case upon the evidence which might be given in, uninfluenced by the rumors he had heard; that the opinion he had formed was that, if the prisoner had stabbed the deceased under the circumstances which he had heard, he ought to be punished. Held, that the juror was competent.—Moran v. Commonwealth, 9 Leigh, 651.

[a] An opinion formed from rumor, but existing on the mind at the time, and to which he will stick unless the evidence turns out different from what rumor had reported it to be, is not good cause of challenge by the prisoner, where the juror says he has no prejudice or partiality for or against the prisoner, and he believes he can give him a fair and impartial trial according to the evidence.

[b] (Ark. 1886) Talesmen who testify on their voir dire that they can and will try a cause impartially on the evidence, are competent, though they also testify that they have impressions as to the case which it will require evidence to remove, where such impressions are founded on rumor only.—Sneed v. State, 47 Ark. 180, 1 S. W. 68.

[c] (Cal. 1874) A person is not disqualified as a juror in a cause, because he has formed an opinion from what he has heard concerning the guilt or innocence of the accused which it would require evidence to remove, if the opinion is not an unqualified one, and the juror is willing to give the accused a fair trial.—People v. Brown, 48 Cal. 253.

[d] (La. 1893) One called as a juror is competent who declares that he had formed an opinion from rumor, which would take strong evidence to remove, but that he had no bias, and could render an impartial verdict, according to the law and the evidence, without being in any way influenced by what he had heard or the opinion he had formed.—State v. Frier, 45 La. Ann. 1434, 14 South. 296.

[e] (Miss. 1895) Under Code, § 2355, declaring that any person, otherwise competent, who makes oath that he is impartial, shall be competent, as a juror, though he has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, if he is not prejudiced, a juror who stated that he lived in the immediate neighborhood where the crime was committed, had heard it discussed, and had formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, which was of such a fixed character that it would require evidence to remove it, but that he thought he could try the case fairly according to the evidence, was a competent juror.—Green v. State, 72 Miss. 522, 17 South. 381.

[f] (Mo. 1879) A juror is not disqualified, under Wag. St. p. 1103, § 13, allowing a juror to be sworn, although he has an opinion founded on rumor, etc., where in a trial for murder he states on the voir dire that he has formed and expressed an opinion which would require evidence to remove, but that he has not talked with any witness in the case, and thinks he could decide according to the law and the evidence.—State v. Core, 70 Mo. 491.

[g] (Mo. 1890) A juror who has no fixed and settled opinion, and can try the cause without bias, is not disqualified by an impression from rumor only, though it would take evidence to remove it.—State v. Elkins, 101 Mo. 344, 14 S. W. 116.

[h] (Tex. 1881) Where a juror stated on his voir dire that he had formed an indefinite opinion which it would require evidence to remove, but stated that he never heard the facts stated by any one pretending to know them, and that he had no present conviction, and could render a verdict on the evidence, it does not render him incompetent.—Post v. State, 10 Tex. App. 579.

[i] (Tex. 1886) A juror is qualified, although he has formed an opinion which it will require evidence to remove, if he states that the opinion was formed upon hearsay, which he values little, and that he can render an impartial verdict.—Steagald v. State, 22 Tex. App. 464, 3 S. W. 771.

[a] Where a juror said that he had formed and expressed an opinion from rumor only, but that his mind was free to act upon the testimony, he was held competent.

[b] (Cal. 1851) Having formed and expressed an opinion from report does not disqualify a person to sit as a juror in a criminal case, if he declares he can sit on the jury without bias, that evidence can change his opinion, and that he will be governed by the evidence. Under the Criminal Code a challenge for implied bias can be taken only where the juror has formed and expressed an unqualified opinion or belief that the prisoner is guilty of the offense charged.—People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 379.

[c] (N. C. 1893) When a juror was challenged, and it appears that his opinion, adverse to the accused, was based on rumors only, and he testified that, after hearing the evidence, he could render a fair and impartial verdict, the court's finding that he was impartial will not be disturbed.—State v. See ante, § 467.

Doubt as to effect of opinion, see post, § 479.

[a] An opinion as to the guilt of a defendant in a criminal case, based on newspaper statements, does not disqualify one from acting as a juror, where he testifies that the opinion will not prevent him from acting impartially.

[b] A veniremen who has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of an accused from reading reports of the testimony of witnesses is incompetent to sit in the case, though he swears that, notwithstanding such opinion, he is able to render an impartial verdict on the law and the evidence.

[c] Where an opinion formed or expressed by a juror as to the guilt or innocence of the accused is formed from newspaper accounts only, and not from the testimony of witnesses, and the juror states on his voir dire that he can render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, and the court upon such statement accepts him as a juror, he is not incompetent, under a statute providing that in such case, if the juror makes such statement, and the court is satisfied that he will render an impartial verdict on the evidence, he may be accepted as a juror.

[e] (U. S. 1887) Evidence, or what purports to be evidence, in a criminal case, printed in a newspaper, is "a statement in a public journal," within the meaning of the act of Utah declaring that no person shall be disqualified as a juror by reason of his having formed or expressed an opinion upon the matter or cause to be submitted to him, founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety, provided it appear to the court, upon his declaration under oath or otherwise, that he can and will, notwithstanding such an opinion, act impartially and fairly upon the matters submitted to him.—Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708, affirming People v. Hopt (1886) 4 Utah, 247, 9 Pac. 407.

[f] (Ala. 1888) A juror, in response to the question whether he had a fixed opinion which would bias his verdict, replied, he knew nothing but what he read in the newspapers; that he had an opinion to a certain extent, and "I am afraid I would go into the jury with a biased opinion, but after being sworn as a juror, I could lay that opinion aside, and find a verdict upon the evidence alone, without reference to any opinion I now have." Held, that there was no error in holding the juror competent.—Long v. State, 86 Ala. 36, 5 South. 443.

[g] (Mo. 1896) On a trial for murder, a juror who states on his voir dire that he is in sympathy with defendant, and cannot render a fair and impartial verdict without being influenced by what he has read in newspapers and the opinion he has formed, is incompetent.—State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, 34 S. W. 25.

[h] (Mont. 1892) A juror who does not know defendant, and asserts his impartiality, although he has formed and expressed an opinion on the case from reading the newspapers and from rumor, is competent, under Comp. St. div. 3, § 287, subd. 11, providing that the court may admit a juror as competent, although he has formed or expressed an opinion, if it be founded upon reading newspapers, or on rumor or hearsay, and the juror state on oath that, notwithstanding such opinion, he can render an impartial verdict.—State v. Sheerin, 12 Mont. 539, 31 Pac. 543.

[i] (Neb. 1891) Comp. St. 1889, p. 951, § 6691, which provides that the reading of newspaper statements shall not disqualify a juror in a criminal case, if he states on oath that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, also furnishes the correct rule as to how far the reading of newspaper statements disqualifies jurors in civil cases.—Scott v. Chope, 33 Neb. 41, 49 N. W. 940.

[j] (N. Y. 1878) One who has formed an opinion or impression from reading a report, whether partial or complete, of the testimony against the prisoner on a former trial, however strong his belief and purpose that he will decide the case on the evidence before him, and give an impartial verdict, cannot be readily received as an indifferent and uncommitted juror.—Greenfield v. People, 74 N. Y. 277, 6 Abb. N. C. 1, reversing (1878) 13 Hun, 242.

[k] (N. Y. 1879) On trial of an Italian for murder, a juror, on being challenged, swore that he had read a newspaper account, whence he had formed an opinion of the guilt or innocence, etc.; that, judging from the Italians we have here, he did not think much of them; that he thought he could give full effect to the evidence as though he had no opinion. Held, that the challenge was properly overruled.—Balbo v. People, 19 Hun, 424, affirmed (1880) 80 N. Y. 484.

[l] (N. Y. 1886) Where a juror has read some notice of a crime in the newspapers, but has not formed impressions about it, or a firm opinion, and such opinion or impression as he has he could lay aside, and sit as a juror in this case, and render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, and the prisoner challenges for cause, it is for the court to determine whether he entertains such opinion or impression as would influence his verdict; and when it is apparent that he has no prejudice against the prisoner, and his mind is free to receive the evidence, and decide upon it fairly and impartially, he is qualified to sit.—People v. Otto, 101 N. Y. 690, 5 N. E. 788, affirming (1885) 38 Hun, 97.

[m] (Ohio, 1873) Under Act Feb. 10, 1872, providing that where a person called as a juror in a criminal case is challenged on the ground that he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and if it shall appear that such opinion was formed upon reading what purported to be a report of the testimony of witnesses of the transaction, he is incompetent to serve as a juror, an opinion formed from reading newspaper reports, or upon rumor or hearsay, and not upon conversation with witnesses of the transaction, or reading reports of their testimony, or hearing them testify, does not disqualify a juror where he states on oath that he feels able, notwithstanding such opinion, to render an impartial verdict upon the law and the evidence, and the court is satisfied that the juror is impartial, and will render an impartial verdict.—Frazier v. State, 23 Ohio St. 551.

[n] (Or. 1892) On his voir dire a juror testified that he had an opinion on the matter in controversy which he could disregard, and try the case on the law and the evidence. His opinion was a loose, hesitating one, formed from reading the newspapers and from hearing persons talk about the matter. Held, that the challenge to such juror was properly overruled; Hill's Code, § 187, providing that on the trial of a challenge for actual bias, where the juror has formed an opinion on the merits of the cause, "such opinion shall not of itself be sufficient to sustain the challenge, but the court must be satisfied from all the circumstances that the juror cannot disregard such opinion, and try the issue impartially."—Kumli v. Southern Pac. Co., 21 Or. 505, 28 Pac. 637.

[o] (Or. 1893) Where a juror, on his voir dire, testified that he had no opinion that would affect his judgment after hearing all the testimony, he is not disqualified, under Hill's Code, § 185, subd. 2, as having an actual bias prejudicial to the substantial rights of the party challenging, though he had read a newspaper report of a former trial.—State v. Ingram, 23 Or. 434, 31 Pac. 1049.

[p] (Pa. 1889) On trial of an indictment for murder, a juror is not disqualified on account of an opinion formed from reading newspaper reports of the trial of one convicted as an accomplice of defendant, where such reports did not give all the testimony, and where the juror swears that he can and will render a true verdict on the evidence alone.—Taylor v. Commonwealth, 129 Pa. 534, 18 Atl. 558.

[q] (S. C. 1884) A juror, on his voir dire, stated that he had no bias for, nor prejudice against, defendant; that he stood entirely indifferent, and would be governed by the law and the testimony, and could and would give him a fair trial. Held, that such juror was competent, though he had read newspaper accounts of the alleged crime, and said that any man who commits such a crime should be hanged.—State v. Coleman, 20 S. C. 441.

[r] (Va. 1850) Where a juror, in his examination on the voir dire, testified that he had read the evidence in the newspapers and was satisfied of the guilt of the accused, that he was able to try him impartially, but according to the law and evidence, and to discard his previous opinion, he was permitted to sit on the trial.—Smith v. Commonwealth, 7 Grat. 593.

[a] (Conn. 1846) While the jury were being impaneled for the trial of an indictment for murder, A. was called as a talesman, and, being inquired of whether he had formed any opinion as to the prisoner's guilt, said that soon after the prisoner's arrest he read certain newspaper accounts of what purported to be his confessions; and, upon reading them, he was of opinion that, if those accounts were true, a horrid murder had been committed; but he had formed no opinion as to the truth or falsity of them, and remarked to his family, while reading the accounts, that the case, on the trial, would probably turn out to be a very different affair. He added that he had not any settled opinion upon the subject, and felt that he could render an impartial verdict. Held, that A. was not disqualified by bias to sit as a juror in the cause.—State v. Potter, 18 Conn. 166.

[b] (Conn. 1880) Where a juror had formed an indefinite opinion of the guilt of the accused from reading an account of it in the newspaper, and the opinion was dependent upon the correctness of the account, and he stated that it would not prevent his trying the case impartially, he was not disqualified.—State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89.

[c] (Ill. 1880) A juror is competent who states that from newspaper accounts read, and conversations heard by him, he has formed an opinion which he would retain, if the facts as he has heard them should be established, and that, although he thinks it would take some evidence to remove such opinion, he would be governed by the evidence, and can give the accused a fair and impartial trial, according to the law and the evidence.—Wilson v. People, 94 Ill. 299.

[d] (Ind. 1855) Certain jurors included in the venire at a trial for murder, on examination by the court, stated that they had heard considerable talk about the case and had read the newspaper accounts of it; that they were rather inclined to think, if what they had read was correct, the prisoner was guilty; that they had never talked with any of the witnesses, nor formed, nor expressed, an opinion, had no ill-will against the prisoner, and could give him a fair trial, according to the law and evidence. They were held competent to try the issue.—Rice v. State, 7 Ind. 332.

[e] (Md. 1879) A juror who, on his voir dire, in a murder trial, stated that he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant from reading the newspapers, and from rumor; that he did not know whether such publication and rumor were true or false; that he resided more than 30 miles from the place of the commission of the crime; that he had not conversed with any witness in the case, nor with any person who claimed to have knowledge of the facts of the case, nor with any one who professed to detail to him any portion of the testimony in the former trial; that he had no prejudice or bias for or against the prisoner, and felt confident that he could give him a fair and impartial trial, according to the evidence produced upon the stand by the witnesses,—was a competent juror.—Waters v. State, 51 Md. 430.

[f] (Mo. 1889) A juror, in a prosecution for rape, stated on his voir dire that he did not know the defendant or the prosecutrix, but remembered reading of the case when it occurred, and thought it a hard case, and could not say that he had no opinion, but that his opinion would not prejudice him as a juror. On cross-examination he said that the newspaper report produced an opinion in his mind, which could only be removed by evidence, and that the defendant would have to prove his innocence. On re-examination he said that if the newspaper report were shown to be true he would retain his opinion, but that if the facts were shown to be different he would arrive at a different conclusion. If sworn as a juror, he would be governed only by the evidence, and would pay no attention to what he had read; that his attention would be drawn from the newspaper account; and that he could give defendant a fair trial. Held, construing his whole examination together, he was qualified. It being a question of fact, all doubts should be resolved favorably to the finding of the trial court, and as it did not clearly appear that the juror had such an opinion as to bias his mind, the decision favorable to his competency should be sustained.—State v. Cunningham, 100 Mo. 382, 12 S. W. 376.

[g] (N. Y. 1880) A person is not disqualified as a juror, who, on being challenged, stated that he had formed a decided opinion as to the prisoner's guilt, which it would require evidence to remove, and on his examination by the district attorney testified that his opinion was formed from reading newspaper accounts,—among other things, a statement purporting to be a confession by defendant; that he accepted these accounts as true, because he had read nothing to the contrary; that he believed statements in the newspapers which were not unreasonable, until they were contradicted; that in that sense he had an opinion of defendant's guilt; that his opinion was a contingent one, based upon the supposed truth of the newspaper statements; and that he believed he could decide the case according to the evidence, uninfluenced by what he had read.—Cox v. People, 80 N. Y. 500, affirming (1879) 19 Hun, 430.

[h] (N. Y. 1881) A juror, in a capital case, is not disqualified for having formed an opinion, hypothetical and contingent upon the truth of newspaper statements, if he testifies that the opinion thus formed would not influence his judgment upon the testimony, and that he could render an impartial verdict upon the evidence.—Abbott v. People, 86 N. Y. 460.

[i] (Va. 1879) In a trial upon an indictment for murder, a juror, in his examination on the voir dire, stated that he had read newspaper accounts, and had made up and expressed an opinion, and he did not think he could do the prisoner justice. Upon a question put to him by the court, he said that, if the evidence was different from what he had heard, his opinion would be changed, and that he could come to the trial unprejudiced. Held, that he was incompetent.—Wright v. Commonwealth, 32 Grat. 941.

Qualified or hypothetical opinion, see ante, § 476.

[a] A juror who believes that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence is not disqualified by having read newspaper items from which he has formed an opinion which would require evidence to remove.

[b] A juror is not incompetent in a murder case from having read in newspapers statements merely amounting to rumors, nor from having formed therefrom opinions requiring evidence to remove, if he is able to do impartial justice.

(Tenn. 1885) Spence v. State, 83 Tenn. (15 Lea) 539.

[c] On a trial for murder, one is not disqualified as a juror by the fact that he has read newspaper versions of evidence adduced at a former trial of the case, which he believes would not influence his verdict, although he acknowledges, on his voir dire, that other evidence would be required to change the impression he had received.

—(Mo. 1887) State v. Bryant, 93 Mo. 273, 6 S. W. 102;

[d] (N. Y. 1879) A juror stated that he had formed a decided opinion which would require evidence to remove, and that it would require evidence in the case to prove the prisoner's innocence, and that he would enter the jury box with the assumption that the prisoner was guilty. Upon further examination, he stated that his opinion was based entirely upon what he had read in the newspapers; that the opinion would not prevent him from fairly and impartially rendering a verdict on the evidence in the case, and that he did not have any bias or prejudice against the defendant; that he did not believe all newspaper accounts that he read; and that what he meant to say was that, assuming the truth of what he had read, he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused. Held, that the juror was competent.—Pender v. People, 18 Hun, 560.

[e] (N. Y. 1879) A juror stated on his voir dire that he had formed and expressed an opinion from what he had read of the case; that such opinion was a decided one, but it could be removed by the evidence; that it would require evidence to remove it; that he could render a verdict according to the evidence, without being biased or prejudiced by the opinion he had formed. On a subsequent examination he was asked, "Do you now entertain any such opinion as would influence you at all in rendering your verdict?" to which he answered, "Not at all, by any means." He was then asked whether his opinion would interfere with his passing fairly on the merits of the case if he was sworn as a juror, to which he answered, "Not at all." Held, that the juror was competent.—Pender v. People, 18 Hun, 560.

[f] (N. Y. 1881) A juror on examination stated that he had read of the case in the newspapers and had thereby formed an opinion, which it would require evidence to remove; but that such opinion was the general impression which one naturally derives from newspaper statements, and that he believed he could discard it and render an impartial verdict, without being at all influenced or biased by such opinion. Held, that he was competent.—People v. Court of Oyer & Terminer, 83 N. Y. 436.

[g] (N. Y. 1886) Where a juror, on being challenged, testifies that he has read the newspaper reports about the occurrence on which the indictment is brought, but has formed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner; that his mind is free from any impression in regard thereto, or the charge contained in the indictment, but he is of the opinion, from what he has read, that such occurrence is the result of culpable negligence on the part of some one, and that it will require evidence to remove the impression; or where a juror testifies that, from reading the papers, he has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant which it will require evidence to remove; but in both cases the juror swears that he can nevertheless go into the jury box, and render an impartial decision upon the evidence, without being influenced by the opinion or impression derived from what he has read,—there is no ground for a challenge, and the court may, in its discretion, allow such jurors to try the issue, as they are competent to do so within the letter of the New Code of Criminal Procedure.—People v. Buddenseick, 103 N. Y. 487, 9 N. E. 44, 57 Am. Rep. 766, affirming (1886) 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 230.

[h] (N. Y. 1891) A juror stated on his voir dire that he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant from what he had read in the newspapers, which it would require strong evidence to remove; but he subsequently declared that the opinion or impression which he had would not influence the verdict, and that he would decide the question involved upon the evidence uninfluenced by anything else whatever. Held, that he was competent to serve.—People v. Wah Lee Mon, 59 Hun, 626, 13 N. Y. Supp. 767.

[i] (N. Y. 1891) The fact that a person offered as a juror on a trial for manslaughter has read newspaper accounts of the coroner's inquest, and formed an opinion from such accounts, not knowing that they were derived from the evidence of witnesses under oath, which opinion he states it would take evidence to remove, does not render him incompetent if it also appears that, on the evidence produced, uninfluenced by any opinion thus acquired, he could determine the issues involved.—People v. McGonegal, 62 Hun, 622, 17 N. Y. Supp. 147.

[j] (Ohio, 1891) On a trial for homicide a juror stated on his voir dire that he did not know defendant, and had formed a prejudice or bias against him from newspaper accounts, which it would require evidence to remove, but that he would try to lay aside all former opinions, and that he believed he could do so, and give defendant a fair trial. No other prejudice or feeling against defendant on the part of such juror appeared. Held, the court below, being satisfied that he would render an impartial verdict, properly admitted him as a juror.—McCarthy v. State, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 627.

[k] (Tex. 1893) On his voir dire a juror stated that he had no prejudice against defendant nor had he established in his mind such a conclusion as to his guilt or innocence as would influence his action in finding a verdict, but that he had formed from newspaper accounts an opinion which would require evidence to remove. Held, that the court did not err in overruling a challenge for cause, since Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, subd. 13, as amended March 31, 1885, provides that, if the opinion of a juror appears to be formed from newspaper accounts, etc., and the juror states that he is able, notwithstanding such opinion, to render an impartial verdict, the court, if satisfied that he will render such a verdict, may, in its discretion, admit him as a juror.—Ashton v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 479, 21 S. W. 47.

[l] (Wash. 1894) A juror stated that he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, that he still entertained that opinion, that it would require evidence to remove it, that he could not disregard that opinion until it was removed by evidence, that he could determine the facts with the same impartiality that he could had he heard nothing about it, that he was unbiased, except by the newspaper reports. Held, that a challenge for cause should have been sustained.—State v. Murphy, 9 Wash. 204, 37 Pac. 420.

[m] (W. Va. 1889) A juror who had read in newspapers a report of the evidence given on a former trial, and stated that from that he had formed a decided opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, which it would require stronger evidence than he had read to remove, and who stated that he had no bias against the prisoner, and that he would regard it a duty, as a juror, to discard that opinion, and that he thought he could discard it, and that, while he would as a citizen entertain that opinion, yet as a juror he would not, but would hear and consider the evidence, and render a fair verdict, uninfluenced by such opinion, and whose statements satisfy the court of his fairness, is a competent juror.—State v. Baker, 33 W. Va. 319, 10 S. E. 639.

[n] (Wyo. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 3283, opinions formed by persons summoned as jurors, as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, from newspaper reports and neighborhood rumor, are not cause for challenge, if they swear they can disregard such opinions, and render an impartial verdict, though such jurymen also say it will require proof to remove such opinions.—Carter v. Territory, 3 Wyo. 193, 18 Pac. 750.

[a] (Ind. 1872) The fact that a juror has formed some opinion as to the guilt or innocence of accused from reading newspapers about the time of the homicide is not a sufficient ground for challenge, if such juror states that he has now no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant and has forgotten the circumstances of the case, and that any opinion formed would be controlled by the evidence and the law.—Cluck v. State, 40 Ind. 263.

[b] (Ind. 1883) A juror who states on his voir dire that he had formed an opinion from reading the newspaper reports of a former trial of the same case, but did not recollect whether they contained the evidence, and that his opinion would readily yield to evidence, and that he could render an impartial verdict, is competent, under Rev. St. § 1793, subd. 2, providing that if a person called as a juror state that he has formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, and if on examination it appears that it was founded on reading newspapers, and the juror states that he feels able to render an impartial verdict on the evidence, the court may allow him to serve in the case.—Noe v. State, 92 Ind. 92.

[c] (N. Y. 1859) A juror, on a challenge for favor, swore that he had read part of the newspaper accounts at the time, and had formed an idea with regard to the prisoner's guilt or innocence, that he had no bias either way, that his verdict would not be influenced by his preconceived idea, but would be governed entirely by the evidence produced. He was adjudged competent.—Sanchez v. People, 18 How. Prac. 72, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 535, affirmed (1860) 22 N. Y. 147.

[d] (Pa. 1881) A juror, upon his voir dire in a capital case, admitted that he had formed a deliberate conviction as to the defendant's guilt from what he had read, and that it would require evidence to remove the conviction so formed from his mind. On cross-examination he said that he had only an impression, which would yield to evidence, and that he would act impartially and decide according to the evidence. Held, that he was competent.—Allison v. Commonwealth, 99 Pa. 17.

[e] (Va. 1893) A juror in a trial for murder stated on his voir dire that newspaper accounts of the tragedy had made an impression on his mind, but that it would yield to evidence, and that he could give defendant a fair and impartial trial. Another stated the same thing, and, further, that he would not be willing to act on what he had read, but that it would take evidence to remove his impression. A third juror stated that he had not made up a "decided opinion," but had formed an impression that "would be a right hard thing to get over, but that it would not require sworn statements to remove it." Held, that all these jurors were competent.—Hall v. Commonwealth, 89 Va. 171, 15 S. E. 517.

[f] (Wash. 1894) Where, in a case of manslaughter, a juror states that he knows nothing about the case except what he read in a newspaper, which created a kind of impression on his mind which he "expected" would require evidence to remove, but that he could entirely disregard such impression, and his mind would yield as readily to the evidence as if he had never heard anything about the case, it is not an abuse of discretion to disallow a challenge to such juror.—State v. Gile, 8 Wash. 12, 35 Pac. 417.

[g] (Wis. 1894) One who has formed an opinion from newspaper accounts, but testifies that it would not weigh against testimony submitted, and that he could return a just verdict, as if he had never heard of the case, is a competent juror.—Baker v. State, 88 Wis. 140, 59 N. W. 570.

[a] (Ala. 1874) A juror who states that from what he has heard he did not know whether he could give the defendant or the state justice, but supposed he could, is not one with a "fixed opinion which would bias his verdict," within Rev. Code, § 4180, and is competent as a juror.—Hall v. State, 51 Ala. 9.

[b] (Ga. 1859) Where one of the jurors, on his voir dire, answers to the question, "Is your mind perfectly impartial between the state and the accused?" "I think that I am, as I understand it," and the court then asks if he understands the question, to which he replies, "Yes," there is no objection to the questions or to his serving.—Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287.

[c] (Kan. 1873) Where a technical disqualification is, by statute, ground for principal challenge of a juror, a juror must come within the very terms of the disqualification, or the challenge will be overruled. On a challenge for cause, when the trial judge is in doubt as to the impartiality of a juror, he should give the parties the benefit of the doubt, and excuse the juror.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Munkers, 11 Kan. 223.

[d] (La. 1856) Where a juror admits an opinion, expressed and deliberately formed from hearing a great deal about the case in the presence of the witnesses, and so decided that it cannot be changed by any circumstantial evidence whatever, and which the juror feels to be so strong that he twice states it might bias his mind, though by cross-interrogation, by the state and court, he is gradually led to contradict his first answers as to his bias, he may be challenged for cause.—State v. Bunger, 11 La. Ann. 607.

[e] (Mass. 1830) A juror having said, on the voir dire, that he had formed an opinion from what he had heard, but did not know how much he might be influenced by it, was allowed to be challenged for cause.—Commonwealth v. Knapp, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491.

[f] (Mich. 1895) A juror testified that he had known both parties to the action for a long time, but that he did not know that he had formed any opinion on the merits, though he might have formed some impressions. He answered a question as to whether he could try the case as fairly as if he had not heard of it and formed those impressions, "Possibly not"; and to the question, "You think you could not?" answered, "I presume I could not." Held, that the juror was not legally disqualified.—Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371, 62 N. W. 833.

[g] (Mo. 1887) A proffered juror upon the trial of a criminal case, having stated that he had formed an opinion from what he had read, was asked whether, notwithstanding such opinion, he could give the accused a fair and impartial trial, and replied, "That is very doubtful." Held, that no error was committed in sustaining a challenge by the state to the juror.—State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 5 S. W. 257, 330.

[h] (Mont. 1894) A juror's opinion, expressed before he was called, that defendant was a "tough citizen," would not show that he was prejudiced, in the face of his voir dire testimony that he had no prejudice, and had formed no opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence.—State v. Anderson, 14 Mont. 541, 37 Pac. 1.

[i] (Neb. 1876) A juror challenged for cause, after stating that he had formed and expressed an opinion, added, "I talked pretty loud when I heard of the assault. My opinion is based upon general rumor and newspaper reports. Think I could return a fair and impartial verdict. I think I could now, but I might possibly lean a little the other way." Held incompetent.—Curry v. State, 4 Neb. 545.

[j] (N. Y. 1870) In a capital case a proposed juror stated upon principal challenge that he had read accounts, and formed an opinion as to the prisoner's guilt or innocence, which was unaltered, and which it would require evidence to remove, and that he could not exactly sit indifferently from the facts which he had heard. Afterwards, when cross-examined, he stated that, if sworn, he would try to be governed by the evidence, but would have a little prejudice, and again that he meant by his answer that he had read the evidence given in the newspapers, and, assuming the statements to be true, he had formed an opinion, but that it would not affect his mind in determining the case on evidence. Held, that the acceptance of the juror was error for which a new trial would be granted, as it might be inferred that the juror had formed an opinion of which he had not been able to devest himself; the prisoner being entitled to the benefit of the doubt.—People v. Mallon, 3 Lans. 224.

[k] (N. Y. 1880) A person is not disqualified as a juror who, on trial of B., an Italian, for murder, on being challenged, answered that he had formed a positive and clearly marked opinion as to the guilt or innocence of B.; that the Italians were "a race he was not particularly fond of, and did not think much of, judging from those we have here"; that all he remembered of the newspaper account was that a man killed his wife; that he was not conscious of having any impressions that would prevent his acting impartially in the case, the record stating that the court, "from observation of the appearance of the juror, his age, intelligence, his manner on the stand, and his answers, found that he was impartial and unprejudiced."—Balbo v. People, 80 N. Y. 484, affirming (1879) 19 Hun, 424.

or impression in reference to the guilt or innocence of the defendant is still disqualified to sit as a juror on the trial of a criminal action, unless he declares on oath, substantially, that he believes such opinion or impression will not influence his verdict, and that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence. It is not sufficient for him to declare that he supposes he can determine the case according to the evidence, or that his opinion ought not to influence his verdict.—People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115.

[m] (N. Y. 1885) Merely having formed and expressed an opinion does not disqualify one from serving as a juror, if he declares on oath that he believes that he can render an impartial verdict on the evidence, nor need he declare that he knows that he can.—People v. Willett, 36 Hun, 500.

[n] (N. Y. 1888) A juror who states on his preliminary examination that he has an opinion in the case, founded on the testimony given on a former trial, which amounts to a conviction, and whose declaration that he could render an impartial verdict is qualified by a doubt, is not within Code Cr. Proc. § 376, providing that an existing opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused shall not disqualify a juror if he declare on oath his belief that such opinion will not influence his verdict, and the court is satisfied of that fact.—People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, 18 N. E. 156, 1 L. R. A. 273, affirming (1888) 21 Abb. N. C. 417, 6 N. Y. Cr. R. 1, reversing (Sup. 1888) 1 N. Y. Supp. 155.

[o] (N. Y. 1890) A juror challenged by the defense said: "I have formed an opinion. I don't know as I have an opinion now particularly. What I heard said created an impression on my mind, and I have that impression now. It would require evidence to remove that impression. I think I could sit and try this case fairly and impartially * * * without being biased by my previously formed opinion, but it would take evidence to remove the opinion formed." Held, sufficient to warrant a finding that he had formed and entertained an opinion.—Young v. Johnson, 123 N. Y. 226, 25 N. E. 363, affirming (1887) 46 Hun, 164.

[p] (N. Y. 1892) Under Cr. Code, § 376, subd. 2, requiring a juror who has formed or expressed an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused to state on oath that he can, notwithstanding such opinion, render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, such statement must be certain, unequivocal, and absolutely free from doubt.—People v. McGonegal, 136 N. Y. 62, 32 N. E. 616.

[q] (N. Y. 1893) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 376, prescribing what shall be causes of challenge to jurors, and providing that the previous expression or formation of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant is not ground of challenge for actual bias to a person otherwise legally qualified, if he declare on oath that he "believes" such opinion will not influence his verdict, it is sufficient for a juror to swear that he "thinks" such opinion will not influence such verdict; the words "think" and "believe" being substantially equivalent.—People v. Martell, 138 N. Y. 595, 33 N. E. 838.

[r] (N. Y. 1896) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 376, subd. 2, providing that an opinion as to guilt or innocence of defendant is not ground of challenge to a person, if he declare, on oath, that he believes such opinion will not influence his verdict, the acceptance of a juror cannot be held erroneous, merely because he made some answers apparently inconsistent with his belief, as finally declared, that his opinion would not influence his verdict.—People v. McLaughlin, 2 App. Div. 419, 37 N. Y. Supp. 1005.

[s] (Pa. 1875) Where, on examination of a talesman, he designates his "opinions" as "conclusions," he was not thereby incompetent.—Ortwein v. Commonwealth, 76 Pa. (26 P. F. Smith) 414, 18 Am. Rep. 420.

[t] (Pa. 1888) A juror admitted that he had formed an impression from what he had read, but it was not what he would call a fixed opinion. Held, that the question as to what he meant by the impression, "whether it was the same thing as an opinion," was properly overruled, and that the juror was competent.—Hall v. Commonwealth, 12 Atl. 163.

[u] (S. C. 1895) Where a juror states that he has formed an opinion, and that, while he does not think it would prevent him from rendering an impartial verdict, yet he would prefer not to act as a juror, it is not error to reject him.—Sims v. Jones, 43 S. C. 91, 20 S. E. 905.

[v] (Tenn. 1853) The mere fact that a person has an opinion, "has made up his mind," as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, does not render him an incompetent juryman; but where his opinion is formed on his own knowledge of the facts, or a statement of them by the witnesses, or by others professing to know the circumstances, or is entertained, but from the examination it is left doubtful whether it is so formed, or not, he is disqualified.—Alfred v. State, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 581.

[w] (Tex. 1896) A juror who, from having heard the evidence in a former trial, is unable to say positively that he could try the cause just as if he had never heard of it, is incompetent.—Long Mfg. Co. v. Gray (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 32.

[x] (Va. 1845) Hasty expressions of a juror, who swears that he has formed no opinion of the guilt of the prisoner, and feels no prejudice against her, do not render him incompetent.—Commonwealth v. Hailstock, 2 Grat. 564.

[y] (W. Va. 1884) Where a juror has entertained an opinion of the prisoner's guilt, and on his voir dire hesitates in saying whether that opinion would influence his verdict, he is incompetent.—State v. Schnelle, 24 W. Va. 767.

Extent of examination of juror, see post, § 568 [l, q, s].

Influence on verdict, see post, §§ 492-496.

Where evidence is evenly balanced, see post, § 436 [a].

[b] (U. S. 1880) A juror is not rendered incompetent, on the trial of an indictment for running a lottery, by the fact that he has a prejudice against the lottery business or those who are engaged in it, or that he is disposed in his mind to put an end to the traffic in lottery tickets, or that he is in favor of active measures for the suppression of such business.—United States v. Noelke (C. C.) 1 Fed. 426.

[c] (U. S. 1881) Prejudice against a person engaged in an illegal business, arising solely from the fact that he was engaged in such business, does not disqualify a juror from sitting upon the trial of such person for the exercise of such unlawful calling.—United States v. Borger (C. C.) 7 Fed. 193.

[d] (Cal. 1887) In the trial of an action for treble rent and restitution of premises, after the jury was complete, one of the jurors, being informed of the nature of the action, declared himself hostile to all landlords, whereupon the court dismissed him. Held, a proper exercise of discretion, since the juror evinced actual bias.—Lawlor v. Linforth, 72 Cal. 205, 13 Pac. 496.

[e] (Fla. 1891) Where the party on trial for murder belongs to the negro race, it is error to refuse the putting of the question to the jurors on the voir dire: "Could you give the defendant, who is a negro, as fair and impartial a trial as you could a white man, and give him the same advantage and protection as you could a white man, upon the same evidence?" such question being pertinent to test fully the existence of bias or prejudice.—Pinder v. State, 27 Fla. 370, 8 South. 837, 26 Am. St. Rep. 75.

[f] (Ill. 1871) The action was for damages for disease alleged to have been communicated to the plaintiff's cattle, by Texas cattle driven near plaintiff's farm by defendant, and was brought under an act (St. 1867) declaring the owner of Texas cattle liable for disease communicated by them, and which was founded on the theory that such cattle, though not individually diseased, may communicate disease to other cattle. Held, that the question whether disease could be so communicated was one of the issues in the cause, and that a venireman who testified he believed it could be was incompetent to serve, against defendant's objection.—Davis v. Walker, 60 Ill. 452.

[g] (Ill. 1879) In an action against a foreign insurance agent to recover the premium tax, a juror answered that he had "an opinion upon the question of the right of a foreign insurance company to do business in this state on the same terms and conditions as home companies." Held, that this was not conclusive against his competency as a juror.—Hughes v. City of Cairo, 92 Ill. 339.

[h] (Kan. 1896) In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries, a juror admitted that it would require a continual effort to deal with the railroad company in the same way that he would with an individual, and that, perhaps, he could not consider the case in an impartial way. Held incompetent.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Chance, 57 Kan. 40, 45 Pac. 60.

[i] (La. 1882) A juror cannot be asked, upon his voir dire, in a slander suit, whether he has any bias or prejudice against such suits, as, if so, it does not disqualify him.—Young v. Bridges, 34 La. Ann. 333.

[j] (Me. 1876) On trial of a civil action founded on a charge for which the same defendant has been prosecuted criminally, it is ground for challenge of a juror that he has expressed a belief that the defendant has been sufficiently punished for the offense, and has signed a petition for his pardon.—Asbury Life Ins. Co. v. Warren, 66 Me. 523.

[k] (Md. 1870) The mere forming or expressing of an opinion that a judge of election ought to receive, without further question, the votes of all persons who are duly registered, does not disqualify the person, who formed and expressed such opinion, from acting as juror in an action for damages against a judge of election for not receiving the vote of a citizen who was duly registered.—Elbin v. Wilson, 33 Md. 135.

[l] (Mich. 1860) A person who holds an opinion that milldams generally in that part of the country are nuisances, and that all he is acquainted with are such, is not a competent juror for the trial of an indictment for nuisance in keeping up a milldam, though he states that he is not much acquainted with the dam in question, and has not formed or expressed any opinion regarding it.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

[m] (Mo. 1845) In a suit for freedom, it is a good objection to a juror that he would feel bound in conscience to find for the plaintiff, although the law and the evidence should be against him; and, in such a case, the court should allow a juror to be questioned to that point.—Chouteau v. Pierre, 9 Mo. 3.

[n] (N. Y. 1893) On a murder trial, where the killing was done by defendant with a pistol which he had been in the habit of carrying, a juror on his voir dire stated that he had a great prejudice against defendant because he carried a pistol, and that there were many cases where persons had pistols when assaulted, when, if they had none, there would have been no murder nor any great bodily harm. He was not asked to declare on oath that he believed such prejudice would not influence his verdict, and that he could render an impartial verdict according to the evidence.—Held, that it was error to overrule a challenge for actual bias.—People v. Larubia, 69 Hun, 197, 23 N. Y. Supp. 579.

[o] (Tex. 1891) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, subd. 12, which provides that a juror who "has a bias or prejudice in favor of or against the defendant" may be challenged for cause, a juror is incompetent when he states on his voir dire that the fact of defendant being a woman and a mother would prevent him from rendering a verdict according to the law and evidence.—Withers v. State, 30 Tex. App. 383, 17 S. W. 936.

[p] (Wis. 1891) In an action for damages for shooting plaintiff while he was giving defendant a charivari, it is improper to ask jurors on their voir dire whether they are prejudiced in regard to charivari parties, since the fact that a juror is prejudiced against unlawful and riotous assemblies does not incapacitate him.—Higgins v. Minaghan, 78 Wis. 602, 47 N. W. 941, 23 Am. St. Rep. 428, 11 L. R. A. 138.

Influence on verdict, see post, § 492 [a, g, h].

(Mo. 1884) State v. Burns, 85 Mo. 47.

[b] (U. S. 1851) A person who has expressed an unfavorable opinion against persons who have engaged in the transaction constituting the offense charged, but has not formed or expressed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, is a competent juror.—United States v. Hanway, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299 [2 Wall. Jr. 139].

[c] (Cal. 1860) A person is not disqualified as a juror by reason of his having been connected with the police department of San Francisco, and having thereby acquired an opinion generally unfavorable to parties accused of crime.—People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128.

[d] (Ga. 1859) It is no ground for exception that a jury, impaneled to try a prisoner indicted for murder, heard the judge charge the grand jury that "almost all the homicides committed in the county could be traced to carrying concealed weapons, and that it was high time that a stop should be put to such offenses," and complimented them on their vigilance.—Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287.

[e] (Ga. 1866) A juror was not incompetent where he stated that he was not satisfied that he was impartial, that he had partiality in his mind, that he did not personally know the prisoner or the facts of the case, and that he was prejudiced because of the offense.—Parker v. State, 34 Ga. 262.

[f] (Ill. 1887) A prejudice against socialists, communists, and anarchists is nothing more than a prejudice against crime, which would not force a jury to prejudge an innocent and honest man, and would not, therefore, disqualify a juror, in the trial of an indictment for a conspiracy of an anarchical nature.—Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

[g] (Kan. 1895) One who had heard the case talked about, and who asserted that, in order to be acquitted, defendant should prove himself innocent, and that he had such an abhorrence of the offense charged that he should convict unless the evidence satisfied him that defendant was innocent, though he also stated that he had formed no opinion, was incompetent.—State v. Vogan, 56 Kan. 61, 42 Pac. 352.

[h] (Miss. 1847) A person, on being tendered as a juror to a prisoner and accepted by him, stated voluntarily that he had conscientious scruples against finding a man guilty of murder, and could not conscientiously take the oath, and the court discharged him without challenge by either party. Held, that he was rightly discharged.—Lewis v. State, 17 Miss. (9 Smedes & M.) 115.

In case of evenly-balanced testimony, see post, § 436 [d].

Weight and effect of evidence, see post, § 488.

[a] (U. S. 1895) On the trial of a saloon keeper for murder a juror is not disqualified by the fact that he has a prejudice against the business of saloon keeping, the matter at issue having no reference to such business.—Thiede v. Utah Territory, 159 U. S. 510, 16 Sup. Ct. 62, 40 L. Ed. 237.

[b] (Ill. 1874) In a suit against a manufacturer of lager beer, by a wife, for selling beer to her husband, a juror stated, under oath, that he thought the business of manufacturing and selling beer was a perfect nuisance, that it was a very low business, that no man should be allowed to engage in it, that he had no sympathy at all for a man engaged in it, that it was a curse to the community, and that he would do all in his power, except raising mobs, to break down places for the manufacture and sale of beer, held, that he was incompetent, on account of his prejudices.—Albrecht v. Walker, 73 Ill. 69.

[c] (Ill. 1876) That a person has a prejudice against liquor sellers does not necessarily disqualify him from sitting as juror on the trial of an action under the civil damage law.—Robinson v. Randall, 82 Ill. 521.

[d] (Ind. 1877) Where, on appeal to the circuit court of an application for license to sell intoxicating liquors, a juror, on being examined as to his competency to serve, answers that he is "opposed to granting license to any person, under any circumstances," a challenge to him for cause should be sustained.—Keiser v. Lines, 57 Ind. 431.

[e] (Ind. 1882) One who believes that only an immoral man would sell liquor is incompetent to serve as a juror upon an application for a license.—Chandler v. Ruebelt, 83 Ind. 139.

[f] (Ind. 1884) A juror who stated that he would not as readily believe a man who was engaged in the business of selling liquor as one who was not is not incompetent to try defendant for selling liquor without a license; it not appearing that he had any personal aversion to defendant, or that the latter was engaged in the "business" of liquor selling.—Shields v. State, 95 Ind. 299.

[g] (Ind. 1886) The mere fact that a man may be opposed to the policy of permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors, and may have some prejudice against those engaged in their sale, does not necessarily disqualify him from serving as a juror on the trial of a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors.—Stoots v. State, 108 Ind. 415, 9 N. E. 380.

[h] (Ind. 1894) In a prosecution for selling liquor to a minor, a juror is not rendered incompetent by answering in the affirmative the question: "Do you believe that a man engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors under a license is a moral man?"—Pemberton v. State, 11 Ind. App. 297, 38 N. E. 1096.

[i] (Iowa, 1882) A juror called on trial for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors stated that he was opposed to saloon keeping, and to the law regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, "but as long as it stands as it now is I am not prejudiced against a man for selling beer or wine." Held a competent juror.—State v. Nelson, 58 Iowa, 208, 12 N. W. 253.

[j] (Ky. 1895) A wholesale liquor dealer is not disqualified to act as a juror in an action by a wife for the sale of liquor to her husband.—Owen v. Kamer, 29 S. W. 437.

[k] (Mich. 1888) In an action for damages for sale of liquor to plaintiff's minor son, a juror may be properly asked whether he is in favor of stringent prohibitory laws, or is prejudiced against the sale of liquor.—Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285, 40 N. W. 727.

[l] (Mich. 1893) On the trial of an offense against the local option law, a juror is not disqualified by reason of the fact that he states on his examination that he voted for the law, or that he is in favor of it and its enforcement, or is in favor of prohibition.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15, 56 N. W. 105.

[m] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against the proprietor of a saloon for assault and battery, it is improper to ask the jury if any of them "have a prejudice against a man who sells drinks by the glass," as such prejudice would not disqualify a juror.—Fortune v. Trainor, 65 Hun, 619, 19 N. Y. Supp. 598.

[n] (Tex. 1884) On the trial of a suit for the violation of a liquor dealer's bond, it is no cause of challenge to a juror that he has a bias in favor of or a prejudice against the business of selling liquor by retail.—Grady v. Rogan, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 263.

[a] (Mass. 1834) On the trial of an indictment for burglary and arson in destroying a Roman Catholic convent, which was burned down by a great number of persons, it was held that, if a juror thought such destruction was not a crime, he would entertain a prejudice in the cause.—Commonwealth v. Buzzell, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 153.

[b] (Utah, 1875) A person who has conscientious scruples against indicting a person for the crime of polygamy is wholly incompetent to sit upon a petit jury.—United States v. Reynolds, 1 Utah, 226.

[c] (Utah, 1877) A juror, in a prosecution for bigamy, who is a member of the Mormon Church, and, as such, believes that polygamy is a direct command from God, and thus above the laws of man, is disqualified.—United States v. Miles, 2 Utah, 19, affirmed Miles v. United States (1880) 103 U. S. 304, 26 L. Ed. 481.

§ 484. Questions of law and particular statutes.

Extent of examination of juror, see post, § 568 [m].

Influence on verdict, see post, § 492 [e].

[a] (U. S. 1851) Where a person, upon being called as a juror, states that he has made up his mind as to the subject of treason, but not as to the guilt of the prisoner, it appearing that the definition of "treason" has not been perfectly settled by judicial decision, the court will recommend his withdrawal.—United States v. Hanway, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299 [2 Wall. Jr. 139].

[b] (Conn. 1788) An opinion formed and declared upon a general principle of law does not disqualify a juror to sit in a cause in which that principle applies.—Pettis v. Warren, Kirby, 426.

[c] (Mass. 1847) A person called as a juror on the trial of an indictment, who, on examination on oath according to the provision of Rev. St. c. 95, § 27, answers that he has formed and expressed an opinion that the statute on which the defendant is indicted is in force and was constitutionally enacted, is not thereby shown not to stand indifferent in the cause.—Commonwealth v. Abbott, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 120.

[d] (Mass. 1856) The judge presiding at a criminal trial may exclude from the panel jurors who state, in answer to his questions, that they have formed and hold such an opinion of the unconstitutionality of the statute on which the prosecution is founded, and that, if persisted in, they cannot convict the defendant, whatever the evidence may be.—Commonwealth v. Austin, 73 Mass. (7 Gray) 51.

[e] (N. Y. 1869) It is no objection to the competency of a juror that he believes the law, under which the proceeding is instituted, to be a good law.—McNall v. McClure, 1 Lans. 32.

Influence on verdict, see post, §§ 492 [d], 494.

[a] Statements by a juror that in his opinion the defense of insanity should be carefully scrutinized, and that he was opposed to feigned defenses of that kind, though he was not prejudiced against those which were genuine, do not disqualify him.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE, § 487.
EVIDENCE OF PARTICULAR CLASSES OF PERSONS, § 488.

In case of evenly balanced evidence, see ante, § 436.

Influence on verdict, see post, § 495.

Where moved by bias, see ante, § 432 [h].

[a] It is a good ground of challenge to the favor, in an action upon a life policy, that a juror holds the opinion that the fact that a man has committed suicide is conclusive proof that he was insane at the time he committed the act.

—(U. S. 1872) Hiatt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 6,449a [2 Dill. 572];
(Pa. 1874) Boileau v. Life Ins. Co., 9 Phila. 218;
(Tex. 1880) Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. 160.

[b] (Mass. 1855) A person indicted is not entitled to have the jury asked, before they are impaneled, whether they have formed or expressed an opinion as to the credibility of a witness, whose testimony is to be relied on in support of this indictment, and who testified, and whose credibility was in question, in another case before them, nor can the defendant be allowed to prove, on the trial of this indictment, that the jury have declared that they would believe this witness.—Commonwealth v. Porter, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 423.

[c] (N. Y. 1880) In an action on a policy of insurance upon the life of one who committed suicide, a juror's having said that he should consider the fact that a man had committed suicide to be some evidence of insanity, was not a ground of challenge.—Hagadorn v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Hun, 249.

[d] (Wash. 1896) In examination of the jury in a criminal case, defendant's counsel is not entitled to question a juror as to how he would regard the testimony of the defendant should he go on the stand as a witness.—State v. Everitt, 14 Wash. 574, 45 Pac. 150.

Examination of juror by court, see post, § 570 [f].

Right of defendant to challenge, see post, § 554 [c].

[a] A challenge to a juror is properly allowed where he states on oath that no degree of circumstantial evidence will induce him to render a verdict of guilty against the prisoner, who is charged with a capital offense.

(Mo. 1896) State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, 34 S. W. 25.

[d] (Ala. 1876) On trial of any indictment, whether for felony (Rev. Code, § 4182) or for misdemeanor, it is cause of challenge that a juror declares he would not convict on circumstantial evidence, however strong.—Smith v. State, 55 Ala. 1.

[e] (Ala.) Under the Code, making a juror subject to challenge who "has a fixed opinion against capital punishment, or thinks that a conviction should not be had on circumstantial evidence," a juror who stated on his voir dire that he was not opposed to a conviction on circumstantial evidence, but that he was opposed to punishing capitally on such evidence, was subject to challenge.—(1883) Jackson v. State, 74 Ala. 26; (1884) Garrett v. Same, 76 Ala. 18; (1886) Tatum v. Same, 82 Ala. 5, 2 South. 531; (1891) Griffin v. Same, 90 Ala. 596, 8 South. 670.

[f] (Cal. 1880) A challenge by the prosecution to a juror who, on his examination at a trial for murder, answered that he would not convict on circumstantial evidence, was properly sustained.—People v. Ah Chung, 54 Cal. 398.

[g] (La. 1881) In answer to a question by the district attorney, a juror said that he had some prejudice against convicting on circumstantial evidence. Held not sufficient to sustain a challenge for cause.—State v. Shields, 33 La. Ann. 991.

[h] (La.) The state has the right to have rejected, as jurors, persons who declare that under no circumstances would they render a verdict of guilty, based solely upon circumstantial evidence.—(1893) State v. Frier, 45 La. Ann. 1434, 14 South. 296; (1894) Same v. Barker, 46 La. Ann. 798, 15 South. 98.

[i] (Miss. 1882) Jurors who will not convict of murder with the death penalty on circumstantial evidence may be rejected in a case depending on direct testimony, as in any other case.—Coleman v. State, 59 Miss. 484.

[j] (N. Y. 1892) A juror, examined as to his qualifications, who, to questions as to his views of circumstantial evidence, says that it must be precise and exact, and such that there would be no doubt whatever in his mind, and states that if the court instructed him in a certain way with respect to the weight and effect, under certain circumstances, to be given to circumstantial evidence, he would still follow his own views, is incompetent.—People v. Fanshawe, 65 Hun, 77, 19 N. Y. Supp. 865, 8 N. Y. Cr. R. 326.

[a] (Cal. 1880) In impaneling a jury to try a criminal case, in which the defendant is a Chinaman, a juror is properly asked whether, other things being equal, he would credit the testimony of a Chinaman as soon as that of a white man.—People v. Car Soy, 57 Cal. 102.

[b] (Ill. 1876) Where a juror declares that he will give less weight to one's testimony on account of his being in the liquor business, he is disqualified from sitting in a suit against a party engaged in the liquor business, under the civil damage law.—Robinson v. Randall, 82 Ill. 521.

[c] (Ind. 1886) Where a juror states that he would not give the testimony of one engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors as much weight or credit as if he were engaged in some other business, he is prima facie incompetent to serve as a juror in such cause.—Stoots v. State, 108 Ind. 415, 9 N. E. 380.

[d] (Mass. 1893) On a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, a juror is not incompetent because he answers in the affirmative a question whether he would have any prejudice against a person accused of such crime, and against whom some evidence had been introduced, which would prevent his giving to the testimony of accused the same weight as he would give to one accused of any other offense, and against whom some evidence had been offered.—Commonwealth v. Poisson, 157 Mass. 510, 32 N. E. 906.

[e] (Mich. 1888) A juror who entertains a prejudice against a liquor seller to such an extent that he cannot give his testimony the same credit that he would that of a person not engaged in such business is not a competent juror against a liquor seller sued for damages for the death of a person caused by an intoxicated person.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122, 40 N. W. 192, 1 L. R. A. 708.

[f] (N. Y. 1888) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 376, defining, as a ground for challenging a juror, the existence of a state of mind on his part which satisfies the court that he cannot try the issue without prejudice to the party challenging, it is not error to permit the prosecutor, after stating to jurors that certain persons had turned state's evidence, and it was supposed would testify that they were engaged with defendant in the transaction for which he was indicted, to ask the jurors if they were so prejudiced against such persons as to prevent them from giving their testimony its lawful weight.—People v. O'Neil, 48 Hun, 36, affirmed (1888) 109 N. Y. 251, 16 N. E. 68.

[g] (N. Y. 1893) A proposed juror who states that his prejudice against informers is very strong, and who speaks hesitatingly as to whether he would believe such testimony, even if corroborated by other witnesses, is properly excluded where the testimony of an informer is a part of the evidence relied on by the prosecution.—People v. Mahoney, 73 Hun, 601, 26 N. Y. Supp. 257.

[h] (Utah, 1895) In a prosecution of a saloon keeper for murder, a juror, testifying on voir dire examination that the fact that a person is a saloon keeper would influence him as to his credibility, is competent.—People v. Thiede, 11 Utah, 241, 39 Pac. 837.

[i] (Vt. 1888) It is not error to allow counsel for the state to ask jurors whether they would disregard the testimony of an accomplice.—State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 14 Atl. 178.

3. PUNISHMENT PRESCRIBED FOR OFFENSE.

STATUTORY PROVISIONS, § 490.
CAPITAL PUNISHMENT, § 491.

Extent of punishment of accused, see ante, § 440 [p].

Infringement of right to trial by jury, see ante, § 228 [h, w].

Extent of examination of juror, see post, § 568 [k].

[a] (Ala. 1856) That a juror has a fixed opinion against penitentiary punishment is good challenge for cause by the state.—Stalls v. State, 28 Ala. 25.

[b] (Kan. 1895) A conviction would not be reversed because the court retained on the jury, over defendant's objection, one who believed the punishment fixed by law too severe for the offense charged.—State v. Vogan, 56 Kan. 61, 42 Pac. 352.

[a] (Ga. 1855) The act authorizing jurors to be questioned on the subject of entertaining scruples as to capital punishment was intended to apply to all trials taking place after its passage, without regard to the time of the commission of the offense.—Mercer v. State, 17 Ga. 146.

[b] (Neb. 1894) Cr. Code, making conscientious scruples of a juror against capital punishment ground of challenge for cause in prosecutions for murder, was not repealed by the amendment of 1893, conferring on the jury discretion to fix the punishment for murder in the first degree at imprisonment for life, instead of the death penalty.—Hill v. State, 42 Neb. 503, 60 N. W. 916.

Conviction on circumstantial evidence, see ante, § 487.

Discharge by court pending trial, see post, § 536.

(Miss. 1881) Spain v. State, 59 Miss. 19.

[c] (U. S. 1892) On the trial of defendant for a crime punishable by death, where the jury is to find the punishment, jurors who state on their voir dire that they have "conscientious scruples in regard to the infliction of the death penalty for crime" may be challenged for cause by the government.—Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429, reversing United States v. Logan (C. C. 1891) 45 Fed. 872.

[d] (U. S. 1824) It is good cause of challenge, in a capital case, that the juror is a Quaker, and has conscientious scruples as to the lawfulness of taking away human life for any offense. —United States v. Ware, Fed. Cas. No. 16,641 [2 Cranch, C. C. 477].

[e] (Ark. 1894) On trial of an indictment for being an accessory before the fact to a murder in the first degree, the prosecuting attorney may examine the jurymen on their voir dire in order to exclude such as may have conscientious scruples against returning a verdict of guilty when the law and evidence justify such verdict, since the indictment charges a capital offense.—Jones v. State, 58 Ark. 390, 24 S. W. 1073.

[f] (Cal. 1852) By the laws, the crime of grand larceny is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison or death, in the discretion of the jury; and, by the same laws, a man is declared incompetent to sit as a juror, on the trial of an indictment for a crime "punishable with death," who entertains such conscientious opinions as would preclude his finding the defendant guilty. On the trial of an indictment for grand larceny, one summoned as a juror was asked, by the counsel for the state, whether he had any conscientious scruples against the infliction of capital punishment. He replied that he would hang a man for murder, but not for stealing. The court below decided that he was incompetent; and this court confirmed the decision of the court below.—People v. Tanner, 2 Cal. 257.

[g] (Cal. 1857) That a juror is "opposed to capital punishment on principle" does not imply that he has a conscientious opinion which would preclude him from finding a prisoner guilty in a capital case.—People v. Stewart, 7 Cal. 140.

[h] (Cal. 1884) Code Civ. Proc. § 1074, providing that, "if the offense charged be punishable with death," a person entertaining conscientious scruples as to capital punishment should not be allowed to serve as a juror, applies to a trial for murder, though that is not necessarily punishable with death.—People v. Majors, 65 Cal. 138, 3 Pac. 597, 52 Am. Rep. 295.

[i] (Ga. 1892) Where a juror on his voir dire answered that he was opposed to capital punishment in cases of extreme youth, and by consent of counsel for accused was put on the court as a trior, and then stated that he was not opposed to capital punishment, the court did not err in setting him aside for cause; the juror finally explaining that he was conscientiously opposed to such punishment, though it might be shown that the accused was over the age of 14.—Bell v. State, 91 Ga. 15, 16 S. E. 207.

[j] (La. 1845) Where, on a trial for murder, a juror answers, on his voir dire, that he has conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilty in any case involving life, he may, on principles of common law, independently of any statutory enactment, be set aside for cause.—State v. Kennedy, 8 Rob. 590.

[k] (Miss. 1881) It was proper to discharge a special venireman, in a murder case, who testified that he had conscientious scruples on the subject of capital punishment.—Smith v. State, 58 Miss. 867.

[l] (Neb.) If a juror, upon a trial for a capital offense, on his voir dire examination, answers that his convictions are such as would preclude him from returning a verdict of guilty, where the punishment would be death, whether upon direct or merely circumstantial evidence, it is good ground of challenge for cause on the part of the state.—(1879) St. Louis v. State, 8 Neb. 405, 1 N. W. 371; (1885) Bradshaw v. State, 17 Neb. 147, 22 N. W. 361.

[m] (N. Y.) A juror who has conscientious scruples against the death penalty is disqualified from sitting in a case of murder, even though he is not a member of any religious denomination having such scruples.—(1835) People v. Damon, 13 Wend. 351; (1845) Same v. Jones, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 112.

[n] (N. Y. 1849) A mere hostility to capital punishment will not exempt a juror from service, but he must possess conscientious scruples against rendering a verdict of guilty where capital punishment would follow, which must be derived from a membership in some religious denomination.—People v. Donaldson, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 78.

[o] (Va. 1886) A venireman is properly discharged in a murder case if he has expressed opinions repugnant to inflicting capital punishment.—Cluverius v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 787.

[a] (U. S. 1896) On a trial for libel a juror stated that he had no prejudice against newspapers, though he thought papers published articles which they should not; that his first impression would be against newspapers, on a charge of libel; that he had no doubt of his ability to be impartial; that his feeling would affect his deliberation as to whether defendant had exercised fair care in publishing the article in question, but he did not mean that he would assume the newspaper had not exercised due care. Held competent.—Press Pub. Co. v. McDonald, 73 Fed. 440, 19 C. C. A. 516, 38 U. S. App. 557.

[b] (U. S. 1851) One who has formed an opinion as to the crime, which may be removed by instructions of the court, is competent as a juror.—United States v. Hanway, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299 [2 Wall. Jr. 139].

[c] (Ill. 1871) Where, in a suit against an insurance company, a juror, on his examination, stated that he had a prejudice against all insurance companies, that it was founded on the fact that he could not comprehend their proceedings, but that it would not affect his verdict, held, it was error to disallow a challenge for cause, as he did not stand indifferent between the parties.—Winnesheik Ins. Co. v. Schueller, 60 Ill. 465.

[d] (La. 1890) On an indictment for murder, the fact that a juror states that he thinks one ought to be sent to the penitentiary for killing another in self-defense will not disqualify him, where he further states that, if instructed by the court to acquit in case defendant killed deceased in self-defense, he would do so.—State v. Ford, 42 La. Ann. 255, 7 South. 696.

[f] (N. Y. 1879) On trial of an Italian for murder, a juror, who stated on his voir dire that from what he knew of Italians in his community he did not think much of them, but that he could give defendant a fair trial, was a competent juror.—Balbo v. People, 19 Hun, 424, affirmed (1880) 80 N. Y. 484; Cox v. People, 19 Hun, 430.

[g] (N. Y. 1892) Where a juror states that he has a strong prejudice against a person charged with the crime in question, but has no prejudice against defendant apart from the crime, and knows nothing of the case in question, such prejudice will not necessarily disqualify him, but presents only a question of fact, as to his competency.—People v. McGonegal, 136 N. Y. 62, 32 N. E. 616.

[h] (S. C. 1883) A juror stated on his voir dire that he had expressed an opinion that "any man who commits such a crime should be hanged," and "that a man committing so shocking a crime as this was reported to be did not deserve a trial by jury." Held, that it was not an abuse of discretion to permit the juror to serve, where he stated that he had neither formed nor expressed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner at the bar.—State v. Coleman, 20 S. C. 441.

Estoppel to assert competency, see post, § 503 [ww].

[a] (Ill. 1875) It is not ground of challenge, on the trial of one indicted for keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath day, that a juror has a bias or feeling against persons engaged in the business of saloon keeping and a prejudice against the selling of liquors, when he states that such feeling and prejudice would not influence his judgment, and that his feeling and prejudice was against the business, and not against the persons engaged in it, and that he would do the defendant justice.—Kroer v. People, 78 Ill. 294.

[b] (Ill. 1885) On a prosecution for selling liquors without a license, a juror is not rendered incompetent by his mere disapproval of the liquor business, either with or without a license; but he should be excluded if he is so prejudiced against such business and persons engaged therein, or against any other crime or misdemeanor, that he cannot give the accused a fair and impartial trial.—Carrow v. People, 113 Ill. 550.

[c] (Ind.) A juror who states that he believes a licensed liquor dealer cannot be a moral man, and is not engaged in a legitimate business, is disqualified to sit on the trial of a prosecution against a licensed liquor dealer for violating the liquor law, although the juror also states that he believes he can give him a fair and impartial trial.—(1879) Swigart v. State, 67 Ind. 287; (1880) Elliott v. State, 73 Ind. 10.

[d] (Ind. 1890) A person who states that he has a prejudice against the sale of intoxicating liquors, and would think that a man engaged in such business would be of bad moral character, but that the fact that a witness was in such business would have no effect on his opinion of the witness' credibility, that he had not formed or expressed any opinion in the case, that he could give defendant an impartial trial, and that he had no opinion as to the facts,—is a competent juror in a trial for selling liquor to a drunkard.—Dolan v. State, 122 Ind. 141, 23 N. E. 761.

[e] (Ind. 1894) A juror who states that his prejudice is strong against saloons, or that, in his opinion, to engage in the sale of liquor is an evidence of immorality, is incompetent to serve in proceedings to compel the granting of a license, even though he may also be of the opinion that he could lay his prejudice aside, and give a verdict according to the law and the evidence.—Fletcher v. Crist, 139 Ind. 121, 38 N. E. 472.

[f] (Mich. 1888) In an action under the civil damage law for selling liquor to plaintiff's minor son, one who testifies that he believes that "a minor is as able to buy a glass of beer or whisky as a man 40 years old," and that he does not think it is a good law, and is not in favor of it; or one who testifies that he is not exactly in favor of enforcing the law, but thinks "they should go according to law if it was a minor,"—is incompetent as a juror, though he states that he thinks he can render a verdict in accordance with the law and evidence.—Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285, 40 N. W. 727.

[g] (Mich. 1893) In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday, a juror testified on his voir dire that he had always been "down on liquor selling"; that, when sitting as a juror in a case where a liquor seller was interested as defendant or a witness, he had a prejudice against such person, and that, in the case of respondent, he could not say that such prejudice would be entirely removed. To the court he said that he would not be prejudiced against a liquor dealer by reason of his business; but he was prompted by the prosecuting attorney, who stated that it was his understanding that the juror was prejudiced, not against the person, but against the business. Held, that a challenge for cause to the juror should have been allowed.—People v. Wheeler, 96 Mich. 1, 55 N. W. 371.

[h] (N. Y. 1891) The fact that a proposed juror, in an action under the civil damage act (Laws 1873, c. 646), is prejudiced against the business of selling intoxicating liquors, does not disqualify him, where he further states on his voir dire that he is not prejudiced against defendant, and that he could give an impartial verdict, according to the evidence, irrespective of what he thought of the business.—De Puy v. Quinn, 61 Hun, 237, 16 N. Y. Supp. 708.

[a] (Cal. 1895) A prejudice against the defense of insanity in criminal cases does not disqualify a juror, where no such defense is made or contemplated.—People v. Collins, 105 Cal. 504, 39 Pac. 16.

[b] (Mo. 1893) The aversion of a juror, in a murder case, to a plea of insanity, does not disqualify him, where the trial court is satisfied from the juror's answers that he will give defendant a fair and impartial trial.—State v. Welsor, 117 Mo. 570, 21 S. W. 443.

[c] (N. Y. 1886) Jurors admitted that they had a prejudice against the defense of insanity, which would remain with them, but that they felt that they would be guided and controlled by the evidence, notwithstanding the prejudice. Held, that they were not disqualified, since no sufficient existing bias was shown.—People v. Carpenter, 38 Hun, 490, affirmed (1886) 102 N. Y. 238, 6 N. E. 584.

[d] (Pa. 1888) On a trial for murder, where the defense of insanity was interposed, two of the jurors admitted on their voir dire that they had a prejudice against that defense, one stating that he believed it to be constantly used where there is no occasion for it; the other, that he never thought it ought to be a plea for murder. Each declared that he could go into the jury box and try the case according to the evidence, and be governed by the evidence under the law. Held, that they were competent.—Hall v. Commonwealth, 12 Atl. 163.

[a] (Ill. 1881) A juror in a civil case, after stating that if the evidence should be evenly balanced he would find for plaintiff, stated that he had formed no opinion, was not biased, and knew no reason why he could not sit impartially and decide the case according to the evidence. Held, that it was proper to overrule a challenge for cause.—Richmond v. Roberts, 98 Ill. 472.

[b] (La. 1890) On an indictment for murder the fact that a juror states that he would not give the prisoner the benefit of a reasonable doubt, but would convict if there was a preponderance of evidence for the state, will not disqualify him where he further states that if instructed by the court to give the accused the benefit of a reasonable doubt he would do so.—State v. Ford, 42 La. Ann. 255, 7 South. 696.

[c] (Mo. 1886) Where, on the trial of an action for damages against a railroad, a juror, challenged for cause, answers to a question whether, if, in his opinion, when he heard the evidence, it were equally balanced, he would find against the defendant, that he would so find, but, in answer to further questions by the court, answers that he has not formed or expressed any opinion as to the rights of the parties, and that he has no prejudice against defendant, and will determine the cause according to the evidence, and instructions of the court, the court is justified in disallowing, in its discretion, the challenge of such juror for cause.—Montgomery v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 90 Mo. 446, 2 S. W. 409.

[d] (N. Y. 1887) A juror who, on his voir dire, states that his life was saved by a physician, who is expected to testify as an expert in the action, and that he has such confidence in the physician's opinion that he would give it more weight than that of any other doctor, in case of a difference between them, is incompetent, though he states that he would try to render an impartial verdict, and believes he could do so.—Lewke v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co., 46 Hun, 283.

[a] A juror who states that he has conscientious scruples against the death penalty is directly within the inhibition of the statute thereon, and his competency is not restored by his avowal that he would render a verdict of guilty if the evidence required it.
—(N. Y. 1867) O'Brien v. People, 48 Barb. 274, 3 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 368, affirmed (1867) 36 N. Y. 276.

(Colo. 1880) Stratton v. People, 5 Colo. 276.

[b] (Ark. 1855) Under Dig. c. 52, § 158, providing that "persons whose opinions are such as to preclude them from finding any defendant guilty of any offense punishable with death shall not be allowed or compelled to serve as jurors on the trial of an indictment for any offense punishable with death," where jurors stated on their voir dire that they were opposed to capital punishment, it was error to discharge them as incompetent and refuse to permit the defendant to ask them whether their opinions would preclude them from finding the defendant guilty of an offense punishable with death.—Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 568.

[c] (Ind. 1855) A juror, included in the venire at a trial for murder, being examined by the court at the impaneling, said that he was opposed to punishing a man with death, and could not find a verdict that a man should suffer death, but that, when the law and evidence warranted a verdict of guilty, he could find that the accused be imprisoned for life. Held, that the juror was incompetent.—Driskill v. State, 7 Ind. 338.

[d] (Mass. 1850) One who is opposed to capital punishment, and fears that his opinion may influence others of the jury, is, notwithstanding, competent to be sworn as a juror, if he believes he can give an unbiased verdict.—Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

[e] (Miss. 1856) Conscientious scruples in regard to capital punishment, but which would not prevent a juror from finding a true verdict according to the evidence, are no disqualification to his serving in a capital case; and, since no better means exist for learning what influence such scruples will have than the declarations of the juror, if he declare on his examination that he has conscientious scruples upon the subject of capital punishment, and that it would be against his conscience to render a verdict by which a party would be subjected to the punishment of death, but that he thinks he could do justice between the state and the accused, he will be competent.—Williams v. State, 32 Miss. 389, 66 Am. Dec. 615.

[f] (Mo. 1895) Jurors stating that they had conscientious scruples against the infliction of the death penalty, and that they would not render a verdict of guilty knowing that the penalty would be death, were properly excused, though they did not say that their opinion would preclude such a verdict.—State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28.

[g] (N. Y. 1864) Where a person called as juror in a capital case, on being challenged, testified that he had conscientious scruples as to the propriety of the death penalty in any case, and on cross-examination stated that if he was sworn to render a verdict according to the evidence he would respect his oath and do so, but that he would not feel willing to be a juror on the case, he is properly excluded.—Walters v. People, 6 Parker, Cr. R. 15, affirmed Walter v. Same (1865) 32 N. Y. 147.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) Code Cr. Proc. § 377, provides that in capital cases a person entertaining such conscientious opinions in regard to capital punishment "as would preclude his finding the defendant guilty shall neither be permitted nor compelled to se e as a juror." Held, that the court properly excluded persons, each of whom said that his scruples were such as would render him "extremely reluctant to find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree," though they modified their position slightly on further examination.—People v. Carolin, 115 N. Y. 658, 21 N. E. 1059.

OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS, § 500.
REQUIRING JURORS TO STAND ASIDE, § 501.
WITHDRAWAL OF ACCEPTANCE OR CHALLENGE OF JUROR, § 502.

[a] (U. S. 1851) Whether the act of July 20, 1840 (5 Stat. 394), applies only to the mode of selecting the jury, that is, by ballot, lot, or otherwise, as prescribed by the state laws, and does not affect the questions involved in the right of challenging the jurors called, whether peremptorily or for cause, quære.—United States v. Douglass, Fed. Cas. No. 14,989 [2 Blatchf. 207].

[b] (Ala. 1842) The alteration of the law relative to challenges of jurors, enlarging the privilege of the prisoner, applies to the trial of one offending before the alteration.—Lore v. State, 4 Ala. 173.

[c] (N. Y. 1873) Laws 1872, c. 745, providing that a juror's opinion in reference to the circumstances of the case, or the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, is not a sufficient ground of challenge for principal cause, if he can render an impartial verdict, and the court is satisfied that his opinion will not influence his verdict, is applicable on the trial of an offense charged to have been perpetrated prior to its passage.—Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492.

§ 498. Order of challenges on different grounds.

Peremptory challenges, see post, § 625.

[a] (Kan. 1891) All challenges to the array upon the ground that the jury was not selected, drawn, or summoned according to law must precede those made to the poll for favor, undue influence, or prejudice.—State v. Wright, 45 Kan. 136, 25 Pac. 631; Same v. Eigle, 45 Kan. 138, 25 Pac. 632.

[b] (N. Y. 1892) By Cr. Code, § 385, "challenges to an individual juror must be taken first by the people and then by the defendant." By section 386, "challenges of either party must be taken (1) to the panel; (2) to an individual juror for a general disqualification; (3) to an individual juror for implied bias; (4) to an individual juror for actual bias; (5) peremptory." Held, that under these sections challenges must first be made by the people, and then by the defendant, in the order named, and the people cannot be required to go through all their challenges before the defendant makes a challenge upon any ground, though in practice all the challenges for cause may be grouped.—People v. McGonegal, 62 Hun, 622, 17 N. Y. Supp. 147, affirmed (1892) 136 N. Y. 62, 32 N. E. 616.

[c] (N. D. 1890) Under Code Cr. Proc. §§ 322–324, providing that challenges to an individual juror must be taken when he appears, and before he is sworn, it is proper to require all challenges to individual jurors to be exhausted as each juror appears.—Territory v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 30, 44 N. W. 1003.

[d] (Ohio, 1831) A person on trial, entitled to peremptorily challenge jurors, may first challenge for cause, and reserve his peremptory challenge.—Hooker v. State, 4 Ohio (4 Ham.) 348.

§ 499. Order of parties in making challenges.

Peremptory challenges, see post, § 625.

[a] (U. S. 1877) In presenting jurors for challenge, the government must first exercise its right, and then the defense.—United States v. Butler, Fed. Cas. No. 14,700 [1 Hughes, 457].

[b] (Ind. 1831) Challenges to petit jurors are first made by the prisoner, and afterwards by the prosecuting attorney.—Jones v. State, 2 Blackf. 475.

[c] (Iowa, 1864) Under section 4780 of the Revision of 1860, the prosecution, in forming the jury, in a criminal case, should complete its challenges before the defendant commences to exercise his right of challenge.—State v. Bowers, 17 Iowa, 46.

[d] (La. 1850) The state should first exercise the right of challenge, whether for cause or peremptorily, and cannot do so after the prisoner has accepted the juror.—State v. Cummings, 5 La. Ann. 330; State v. Florez, Id. 429.

[f] (Minn. 1878) Under Gen. St. 1866, c. 116, §§ 10, 32, providing that, in criminal cases, all challenges to an individual juror shall be taken when he appears, and before he is sworn, first by the defendant and then by the state, each party to exhaust all his challenges before the other begins, a defendant cannot reserve his challenges until 12 jurymen have been called and placed in the box, but must make and exhaust all his challenges to each juror as he is called, in the order prescribed, and before he is sworn.—State v. Armington, 25 Minn. 29.

[a] (Fla. 1889) When a person interested objects to a juror being excused, he should make his objection before the juror is excused, and it is too late to object after the juror is excused.—Ellis v. State, 25 Fla. 702, 6 South. 768.

[b] (N. C. 1879) Objection to the right of the state to challenge for cause must be taken before verdict.—State v. Boon, 80 N. C. 461.

§ 501. Requiring jurors to stand aside.

Necessity of exhausting jurors stood aside after exhaustion of rest of panel, see ante, § 353.

[a] A juror objected to by the state may properly be required to stand aside until the panel is exhausted.

—(Pa. 1860) Warren v. Commonwealth, 37 Pa. (1 Wright) 45;

(S. C. 1880) State v. Stephens, 13 S. C. 285.

[b] On the trial of a prosecution for felony, the commonwealth may "stand aside" jurors, without assigning cause, until the panel be exhausted.

(S. C. 1879) State v. McNinch, 12 S. C. 89.

[c] (U. S. 1851) Whether a qualified peremptory challenge in a criminal case—that is, a right to set aside a juror without challenging him for principal cause or to the favor, and to have him finally excluded from the jury unless the panel is exhausted by the challenges of the prisoner—exists in favor of the government in the courts of the United States, quære. —United States v. Douglass, Fed. Cas. No. 14,989 [2 Blatchf. 207].

[d] (U. S. 1877) As the government is allowed the right of peremptory challenge, it cannot ask a juror to stand aside until the panel is exhausted, before challenging for cause, or peremptorily.—United States v. Butler, Fed. Cas. No. 14,700 [1 Hughes, 457].

[e] (Fla. 1893) On a prosecution for murder, after four jurors had been accepted by the state and the accused, and the regular and a special venire had been exhausted, the state objected to the last juror sworn from the special venire on the ground that he was present at the inquest held by the coroner, and heard the evidence given there, and that this fact was not known when the juror was accepted. Without passing on this objection, on motion of the state attorney, the judge ordered that the juror be taken from the jury box, and that his name be placed at the foot of the list of a third venire of jurors summoned against the objection of the accused. The jury was completed from the list before reaching this juror, and after the accused had exhausted all his peremptory challenges. Held, that it was error for the judge, without passing on the objections raised to the juror, to stand him aside, and proceed to organize the jury.—Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 291, 12 South. 681.

[f] (Ga. 1846) The practice in England, under St. 33 Edw. I., of passing jurymen in criminal cases, until the whole panel is exhausted, and a jury not made, before the crown can be called upon to show cause, is not authorized, since the adoption of the Penal Code.—Sealy v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 213; Reynolds v. Same, Id. 222.

[g] (N. C. 1844) Where one of the venire, upon being called, was challenged by the state, and directed to retire until the panel was gone through with, and was not afterwards recalled, the prisoner making no motion to that effect, and it being known that the juror was a witness for the prisoner, it was held that this was no ground for a venire de novo on the part of the prisoner.—State v. Lytle, 27 N. C. 58.

[h] (N. C. 1845) Where the state challenges for cause, the panel may be gone through with before trying the question.—State v. Craton, 28 N. C. 164.

[i] (N. C. 1859) The prisoner has no right to postpone showing cause of challenge to a juror, and to have him stand aside, until the panel is finished; this being entirely the privilege of the state.—State v. Bone, 52 N. C. 121.

[j] (N. C. 1887) The extent to which the state will be permitted to stand aside jurors without assigning present cause of challenge being mostly discretionary with the trial judge, the latter should not commit himself by answering a question from the state's solicitor as to how many such jurors the state will be permitted to stand aside; but the mere fact that the judge did answer the question does not constitute error.—State v. Sloan, 97 N. C. 499, 2 S. E. 666.

[k] (Pa. 1853) On the trial of an indictment for felony, a juror may, at the request of the prosecuting officer, be directed to stand aside, but shall be again called when the panel is exhausted, when he may be challenged for cause.—Jewell v. Commonwealth, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 94.

[l] (Pa. 1869) After a juror has been called, and handed over to the defendant, the state cannot stand him aside.—Commonwealth v. Twitchell, 1 Brewst. 551.

[m] (Pa. 1872) The commonwealth can stand aside a juror in a capital case, after he has been sworn on his voir dire, and challenged for cause by the commonwealth, and had been examined as to his competency to sit in the case.—Commonwealth v. Mayland, 29 Leg. Int. 150.

[n] (Pa. 1873) It is the practice of the federal courts, and of such of the states as have not superseded in this respect the common law by statutes, to allow the government to stand aside jurors without assigning cause of challenge. At common law the government has no peremptory challenges, but, unlike the defendant, it is not required to show cause until after the panel is exhausted, having the power of setting aside individual jurors till that period.—Commonwealth v. Keenan (Quart. Sess.) 30 Leg. Int. 416, 10 Phila. 194.

[o] (Pa. 1873) While in prosecutions for felony and misdemeanors the commonwealth is allowed at common law, there being no legislation on the subject, to stand aside jurors, without assigning cause, until the panel is exhausted, if the jury box be not filled, the set aside jurors will be severally called, and, unless adequate cause be shown against them, they will be chosen.—Commonwealth v. Keenan (Quart. Sess.) 30 Leg. Int. 416, 10 Phila. 194.

[q] (Pa.) The commonwealth has the right, upon the trial of misdemeanors and felonies, capital and not capital, to stand aside jurors, without assigning cause, until the entire panel has been called.—(1882) Haines v. Commonwealth, 100 Pa. 317; (1882) Smith v. Same, Id. 324; (1888) Commonwealth v. Fry (Quart. Sess.) 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 75.

[r] (Pa. 1886) The right of the commonwealth to stand jurors aside, as derived from the common law, was not abrogated by Act 1834, which provided that in drawing a jury some disinterested person, by direction of the court, should draw 12 names from the jury box, one after another, "and if any of the jurors whose names shall be so drawn shall not appear, or shall be challenged and set aside," further names shall be drawn until a jury of 12 is obtained, nor by Act June 23, 1885, amendatory thereof, which provides that in drawing a jury 20 names shall be drawn, "and if any of the persons whose names shall be drawn shall not appear, or shall be challenged and set aside for cause," further names shall be drawn until 20 names are secured, from which number each party shall strike 4.—Commonwealth v. Todd, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 416.

[s] (Pa.) The right of the commonwealth to "stand aside" jurors may be exercised on trials for both felonies and misdemeanors, and applies equally to jurors brought in on a special venire; and this rule is not changed by Cr. Proc. Act 1860, § 37, which allows peremptory challenges to the commonwealth.—(1889) Rudy v. Commonwealth, 128 Pa. 500, 18 Atl. 344, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. 502; (1891) Commonwealth v. O'Brien, 140 Pa. 555, 21 Atl. 385.

[t] (S. C.) The state has no right to challenge peremptorily, but may challenge for cause; and the cause need not be shown until the prisoner has gone through with his challenges.—(1805) State v. Stalmaker, 2 Brev. 1; (1820) State v. Barrontine, 2 Nott & McC. 553.

[u] (S. C. 1896) Under Rev. Civ. St. 1893, § 2403, providing that, if it appears to the court that a juror is not indifferent in a cause, he shall be placed aside, it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to order a juror to stand aside, without presenting him to the defendant, where the juror states on his voir dire that he is related to the defendant, is not sure he could be impartial, and asks to be excused. —State v. Murphy, 48 S. C. 1, 25 S. E. 43.

As waiver of defects, see post, § 521.
Peremptory challenges, see post, § 629.

[a] (Ala. 1889) The state may revoke an acceptance of a juror before the defendant has accepted him, and before the impaneling of the jury is completed, or the trial commenced.—Daniels v. State, 88 Ala. 220, 7 South. 337.

[b] (Fla. 1860) Defendant in a capital case may retract his acceptance of a juror at any time before they are sworn in chief.—O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215.

[c] (Minn. 1876) Where a challenge to a juror is made and admitted he is excused, and the challenge cannot thereafter be withdrawn.—State v. Lautenschlager, 22 Minn. 514.

[d] (N. Y. 1880) The prisoner, having challenged the array, may withdraw the challenge, and, by so doing, waive the irregularity.—Rierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524, affirming (1879) 18 Hun, 239.

[a] It is the prisoner's duty to know when the court meets, and to apply, if in custody at the time, to be brought into court for the purpose of challenging; and, if he fails to do so, he waives his privilege of excepting to the panel or to any member.
—(Cal. 1861) People v. Romero, 18 Cal. 89;

[b] (Colo. 1896) A challenge to the array of jurors on the ground that they were summoned by the sheriff, and not by the coroner, as previously ordered, was properly overruled, where defendant's attorney expressly admitted that the jurors were personally unobjectionable, and were not illegally summoned save in the respect specified.—Boykin v. People, 22 Colo. 496, 45 Pac. 419.

[c] (Ga. 1849) The owner or manager of a slave charged with a capital offense, when acting as the counsel of his slave on the trial, can lawfully waive the number of jurors required by the statute to be impaneled for the trial of such slave, and consent to take the first 12 on the jury list.—Alfred v. State, 6 Ga. 483.

[d] (Ga. 1850) Where a juror, called in a capital felony, has answered negatively all the questions propounded to him, by St. 1843, and been found competent by triors, who were not especially sworn as triors, but who had been sworn in chief, and was accepted by the prisoner, and sworn in chief, and the court, discovering the irregularity, to cure it, causes the juror again to be put upon the prisoner, who objected on the ground that he was already sworn in chief, and was thereby understood by the presiding judge to insist on the juror's sitting in the cause, it was held that nothing had transpired in relation to such juror to constitute a good cause of challenge, and that, if there had, the prisoner had waived it.—Malone v. State, 8 Ga. 408.

[e] (Ga. 1859) A prisoner may waive a trial, and still more any lesser right or privilege, and therefore, if he consent that the jury be taken from the grand jury list, that consent binds him. —Sarah v. State, 28 Ga. 576.

[f] (Ga. 1884) Where 11 jurors had been procured out of a panel of 48, and defendant's counsel answered in response to a question by the court that they were willing to take a panel of 12 from those remaining on the list, and selected the remaining juror from that list, any error was waived.—Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 269.

[g] (Ind. 1861) Where, after the return of the verdict, it was discovered that one of the jurors had been a member of the grand jury which found the indictment, it was held that the defendant was not chargeable with negligence in not sooner discovering the fact.—Rice v. State, 16 Ind. 298.

[h] (Ind. 1891) Where a counsel made a full examination of a juror, and there was no indication that his eyesight was defective, the fact that during the trial such juror, coming in late, stumbled, and in reply to a question by the court stated that his eyesight was poor, cannot charge defendant with notice of that fact, when such incident was not observed by his counsel.—Rhodes v. State, 128 Ind. 189, 27 N. E. 866, 25 Am. St. Rep. 429.

[i] (Ind. 1892) Rev. St. 1881, § 1396, provides that, where for any cause no jury shall be in attendance, the court may, if necessary, summon a jury from the bystanders. Held, that where a party waives a jury trial and consents to the discharge of the regular panel, but afterwards demands a jury, he cannot question the court's right to summon a jury from the bystanders.—Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Trapp, 4 Ind. App. 69, 30 N. E. 812.

[j] (Kan. 1876) Where a juror, upon his voir dire, testifies that he has no knowledge of the case, the fact that there has been a previous trial of the cause does not, in the absence of any suspicion on his part of the truth of the juror's testimony, place any obligation upon the party challenging him to examine the record of such previous trial to ascertain whether the juror did serve upon such trial, nor is he ordinarily chargeable with gross negligence or laches in forgetting the fact of such service.—Lane v. Scoville, 16 Kan. 402.

[k] (Ky. 1881) One who fails to move to set aside an indictment waives any error in the summoning or formation of a grand or petit jury.—Haggard v. Commonwealth, 79 Ky. 366.

[m] (La. 1859) After the jury list had been called over in the presence of the accused and his counsel, and five jurors had been sworn, and four peremptory challenges had been made by the prisoner, his counsel moved for a continuance, on the ground that various jurors in the list were not in attendance, nor within the jurisdiction of the court, and were not liable to jury service, and that some of them had been excused previous to the list being served on the prisoner. Held, that the accused must be considered as having waived any objection he might have had to the panel.—State v. Lindsey, 14 La. Ann. 42.

[n] (Mich. 1890) Where defendant challenges the array on the ground that the court, in sustaining his challenge to the array in another case at the same term, discharged, not only those jurors who had been impaneled in the case, but all who had been summoned for the term, he cannot object to the court's refusal to sustain his challenge, on the ground that the second array was improperly drawn.—Robinson v. Mulder, 81 Mich. 75, 45 N. W. 505.

[o] (Minn. 1890) The trial of an action terminated in a disagreement and discharge of the jury. On plaintiff's motion for a retrial at the same term, the court ordered that the cause stand continued, unless the plaintiff should consent to try it to a "struck jury." Plaintiff consented in writing, participated in the selection of such a jury, and tried his case. Held, that he could not question the regularity of the order, after verdict.—Bennet v. Syndicate Ins. Co., 43 Minn. 45, 44 N. W. 794.

[p] (Mo. 1880) The right in a criminal case to have 12 more jurors summoned than the number of challenges allowed is a statutory provision, and is waived if not claimed before conviction.—State v. Robertson, 71 Mo. 446.

[r] (Mo. 1894) There being in attendance 28 qualified members of the regular panel, the other 19 were supplied on the judge's list (Act April 1, 1891, § 6); defendant's counsel stating that he had no objection to any one of the panel. Four, on their voir dire, had said they were over age. The court allowed the defense 64 hours, instead of 48, to make its challenges, and the state offered to challenge at once. Before court met, the state's attorney handed defendant the state's challenges, but defendant, as not having had these before, moved for 48 hours more, which the court granted. Thereafter defendant moved to quash the panel for the age of 3 of the jurors, and was compelled by the court to include the fourth. These were discharged, and their places filled (under section 6), defendant stating that he had no objections to the new 4, nor to any of the 47, of whom he was then given a full list with the state's challenges, and allowed 48 hours more. Thereafter he moved to quash the panel, on grounds unsupported by the record, and, being overruled, refused to challenge, and the first 12 named were called. Rev. St. 1889, § 4205. Held, that any error there might have been was waived.—State v. Clark, 121 Mo. 500, 26 S. W. 562.

[t] (N. Y. 1813) Where defendant expressly assented to the summoning of the jury by a constable who acts as advocate for the plaintiff in a justice's court, he cannot afterwards challenge the array on such ground.—Watkins v. Weaver, 10 Johns. 107.

[u] (N. Y. 1830) Where an accused party waives his right to object to a juror, against whom good cause of challenge existed on his part, it was held that the public prosecutor could not insist upon having the juror excluded, under an agreement that all should be considered as challenged by both parties.—People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122.

[v] (N. Y. 1855) An objection to an order of court, made after the jury have been impaneled and sworn, and directing that some of the jurors be withdrawn and others substituted, not insisted on at the time such change is made, is not open.—Cook v. Ritter, 4 E. D. Smith, 253.

[w] (N. Y. 1889) Where a case is tried by 10 jurors by consent, it is a waiver of any objection to the exclusion of a juror by the court on its own motion.—Corbett v. City of Troy, 53 Hun, 228, 6 N. Y. Supp. 381.

[ww] (N. Y. 1891) In an action under the civil damage act, a person who was prejudiced against the sale of liquor was permitted to serve on the jury after stating that he was not prejudiced against defendant, and that he would give an impartial verdict. Held, that plaintiff is not estopped to insist on the competency of such juror by the fact that she had procured a ruling by the court that a juror was disqualified if he was prejudiced against the civil damage act.—De Puy v. Quinn, 61 Hun, 237, 16 N. Y. Supp. 708.

[x] (Ohio, 1871) A plaintiff consenting to the continuance of a juror who, on a previous trial of the cause, found against the plaintiff, will not, after the second verdict, be heard to complain of his retention on the panel.—Williams v. True, 1 Cin. R. 321.

[xx] (Pa. 1794) A defendant, knowing that a certain juror was plaintiff's brother-in-law, and yet refusing to accept plaintiff's offer to waive the juror, if defendant would consent to have some other juror in the room sworn, and go on with the trial, is not entitled to a new trial, on the ground of such relationship.—Spong v. Lesher, 1 Yeates, 326.

[yy] (Tex. 1885) If a juror is excused in his absence because of the sheriff's suggestion that he is postmaster, and defendant fails to apply for an attachment in order to test the bona fides of the excuse, he cannot afterwards complain. —Kennedy v. State, 19 Tex. App. 618.

[z] (Tex. 1895) It is no ground for reversal that one of the jurors, accepted by defendant and by the state, was omitted in the call for the jury, and that another juror served in the case, where defendant did not, upon discovering the mistake, ask that such juror be impaneled, and the last one be set aside.—Granger v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 671.

[zz] (Va. 1848) Where the prisoner objected to a juror, on the ground that the sheriff summoned 56 persons, when he was ordered to summon 48, and the court sustained the objection, set aside the whole return, and directed another venire facias, it was held that the prisoner had no right to complain of such direction.—In re Epes, 5 Grat. 676.

Time to object to panel or array, see post, § 544.

To exhaust peremptory challenges, see post, § 520.

Grounds for new trial in civil cases, see "New Trial," II. (D).

[a] An objection to a juror which is good cause of challenge must be made in time, or it will be considered as waived, and will not vitiate the trial.

[b] A failure by a party to a civil action to object to the competency of a juror, when he has notice of his condition or qualifications, operates as a conclusive waiver.

(Va. 1895) Barnes v. Commonwealth, 92 Va. 794, 23 S. E. 784.

[d] (Ga. 1869) Objections to the qualifications of a juror cannot be raised after verdict, though the party objecting was ignorant of the facts. —Gormley v. Laramore, 40 Ga. 253.

[e] (Ga. 1891) When facts, and a witness by whom they can be proved, showing the incompetency of a juror, become known to counsel for the accused after the jury are sworn, but before any further step in the trial has been taken, the question of the juror's competency must then be raised. Counsel cannot remain silent and urge the juror's incompetency as a ground for setting the verdict aside.—Lampkin v. State, 87 Ga. 516, 13 S. E. 523.

[f] (Iowa, 1860) Failure of a defendant in a criminal action to object to a juror, on the ground of incompetency, is not cured by verdict.—State v. Groome, 10 Iowa, 308.

[g] (Me. 1880) An objection to a juror, which, if seasonably made, would have been valid, will not avail after verdict without proof affirmatively that the objection was unknown to the party making it, or his attorney, at or before the trial.—State v. Bowden, 71 Me. 89.

[h] (Mass. 1873) In the absence of proof that an objection to the competency of a juror was unknown to the objecting party and his attorney until after the juror was sworn, such objection is not available after verdict.—Russell v. Quinn, 114 Mass. 103.

[i] (Mich. 1873) In civil cases the proper time to make the necessary inquiries into the qualifications of jurors is before the trial, and not afterwards; and, if not made, then the objection will be deemed to have been waived.—Johr v. People, 26 Mich. 427.

[j] (Minn. 1873) A defendant in a criminal proceeding cannot, after verdict, take objections to a juror for reasons existing before the trial, and which might have been available on a challenge for cause had he been aware of the fact upon which the objection is based.—State v. Thomas, 19 Minn. 484 (Gil. 418).

[k] (N. H. 1860) Where alleged causes of exception to a juror appear from the venire and return, and the juror sits in the case without objection, it is too late to make objection for such reasons, after verdict.—Pittsfield v. Barnstead, 40 N. H. 477.

[l] (N. Y. 1855) An omission to challenge is a waiver of all objection to a juror, although there was no appearance.—Clark v. Van Vranken, 20 Barb. 278.

[m] (N. C. 1823) Where any irregularity in forming a jury is silently acquiesced in at the time by the prisoner, he waives his right to except, after conviction.—State v. Ward, 9 N. C. 443.

[n] (Ohio, 1850) When a party discovers the incompetency of a juror before the verdict, but makes no objection until after the verdict, he waives the objection.—Lowe v. McCorkle, 1 Ohio Dec. 352.

[o] (Va. 1895) The failure to take exception to a juror, on the ground of his incompetency, before verdict, is fatal, where it appears that the prisoner knew the facts of the incompetency prior to the trial.—Gray v. Commonwealth, 92 Va. 772, 22 S. E. 858.

§ 505. —— Residence and citizenship.

[a] The objection to a juror, on the ground of alienage, comes too late, if made in the first instance after verdict.

(S. C. 1798) State v. Quarrel, 2 Bay, 150, 1 Am. Dec. 637.

[c] (Me. 1859) Where a town, after issuance of a venire in its county, was annexed to another county, a party to an action in the old county, if he fails to challenge a juror summoned on the venire, who is a resident of the town, on the ground that he is not a resident of the trial county, will be deemed to have waived the objection.—Inhabitants of Mt. Desert v. Inhabitants of Cranberry Isles, 46 Me. 411.

[d] (N. M. 1873) Any objection to the fact that some of the jurors are nonresidents, if known to the defendant in a criminal case at the time of impaneling the jury, and not made at that time, will be deemed waived, and cannot be insisted upon after verdict.—Territory v. Abeita, 1 N. M. 545.

[e] (W. Va.) An objection that one of the jurors in a civil cause was not a resident of the county one year before the trial comes too late after judgment, especially if the objecting party had ready means of ascertainment thereof before the juror was sworn.—(1877) Zickefoose v. Kuykendall, 12 W. Va. 23; (1878) Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 158, 31 Am. Rep. 757.

[f] (Wis. 1856) Under Rev. St. c. 97, § 1, providing that all persons who are citizens of the United States and qualified electors of this state shall be liable to be drawn as jurors, an objection that a juror was not a citizen of the United States may be taken after verdict; such disqualification not being known to the parties until after trial.—Schumaker v. State, 5 Wis. 324.

[g] (Wis. 1868) Alienage is purely a legal disqualification of a petit juror, and an objection based thereon comes too late after verdict, in a criminal cause not capital.—State v. Vogel, 22 Wis. 471.

[h] (Wis. 1882) An objection to a juror on the ground that he was not a citizen of the United States, and understood the English language imperfectly, is waived when not taken until after verdict.—Bonneville v. State, 53 Wis. 680, 11 N. W. 427.

[b] (Cal. 1872) Where, in a criminal case, a juror, whose name is on the poll tax list only, is sworn, and the defendant receives such juror without objection, he cannot be heard, after the verdict is rendered, to object that the juror was incompetent thereby.—People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 29.

[c] (Kan. 1882) The objection that a juror was not an elector must be raised before verdict, even in a capital case; it not being an absolute disqualification, but only ground of challenge.—State v. Jackson, 27 Kan. 581, 41 Am. Rep. 424.

[d] (La. 1869) The objection that one of the jurors was not a registered voter comes too late if not made until after verdict.—State v. McLean, 21 La. Ann. 546.

[e] (Miss. 1861) The fact that one of the jury was not a householder or freeholder does not vitiate the verdict. Objection to a juror on that ground comes too late after verdict, even in a capital case, where the juror, on his examination by the judge, under a mistake, answered that he was a householder or freeholder.—Frank v. State, 39 Miss. 705.

[f] (Vt. 1801) If a juror, qualified as a freeholder at the time his name was put into the town box, afterwards devest himself of the freehold, this must be objected on challenge, and will not prevail after verdict.—Orcutt v. Carpenter, 1 Tyler 250, 4 Am. Dec. 722.

[g] (Va. 1880) The objection to a juror that he was incompetent, not having paid his capitation tax of the previous year, comes too late after verdict.—Poindexter v. Commonwealth, 33 Grat. 766.

—(Ky. 1895) Combs v. Commonwealth, 97 Ky. 24, 29 S. W. 734;

(La. 1891) State v. Garig, 43 La. Ann. 365, 8 South. 934.

[c] (Ill. 1857) Where defendant in a criminal trial fails to object to a juror whom he knows to be over 60 years of age, he cannot make this matter of exception after verdict.—Davis v. People, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 74.

[d] (Mass. 1876) Although an infant is disqualified from serving as a juror, yet, if his name is on the list of jurors returned and impaneled, his serving as juror does not entitle a party against whom a verdict has been rendered to have the verdict set aside, even where he is ignorant of the fact of minority until after the verdict.—Wassum v. Feeney, 121 Mass. 93, 23 Am. Rep. 258.

[e] (Miss. 1859) Under Rev. Code, p. 497, art. 126, the objection that a juror over 60 is incompetent is waived, unless made at the trial, whether the party then actually knew the fact or not.—Williams v. State, 37 Miss. 407.

[f] (N. J. 1819) Under St. 1797 which provides that jurors returned for the trial of issues shall be between the ages of 21 and 65, and that a want of such qualification shall be good ground of challenge, provided the challenge be taken before the juror is sworn, it is not a ground for reversing a judgment that one of the jurors before whom the cause was tried was above the age of 65; it not appearing that any objection was made to him at the trial, either by challenge or otherwise.—Sutton v. Petty, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 504.

[g] (N. M. 1894) Disqualification of two jurors, for over age, will not vitiate the verdict, if not objected to during the trial, unless defendant can show that injury has resulted to him by such condition.—United States v. Folsom, 7 N. M. 532, 38 Pac. 70.

[h] (N. Y. 1845) Though an objection to the juror's age, if taken in time, would have been a good one, yet after verdict it is too late to interpose the objection.—Seacord v. Burling, 1 How. Prac. 175.

[a] (Ill. 1844) While the fact that a juror is security for costs in the suit is a good cause for challenge, the defect is waived by failure to object at the proper time.—Bradshaw v. Hubbard, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 390.

[b] (La. 1844) A party who does not appear and challenge a juror cannot, for his interest, object to the verdict. Still less can a mere guardian of property attached collaterally question the verdict on such ground.—Cressap v. Winchester, 6 Rob. 458.

[c] (Mass. 1830) If a party knows of any prejudice entertained by a juror, and makes no exception when the jury is impaneled, however good his cause of challenge then is, it must be deemed to be waived.—Fox v. Hazelton, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 275.

§ 509. —— Relationship and business connection.

[a] (Ga. 1880) An objection that a juror was a son of a first cousin of one of the parties comes too late if first raised after verdict.—Moody v. Griffin, 65 Ga. 304.

[b] (Me. 1830) An objection after verdict, that a juror is related to a party in the cause comes too late.—McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 307.

[c] (Me. 1889) Rev. St. c. 82, § 88, provides that if a party knows any objection to a juror in season to propose it before trial, and omits to do so, he shall not afterwards make it, unless by leave of court for special reasons. The morning after the evidence had been submitted to the jury, defendant's principal witness and cousin came to the room of one of defendant's attorneys, and told him that he thought the foreman of the jury was akin to the plaintiff; that he was not sure, but would find out, when he went home that day, and telegraph the attorney. The latter testified that he put no confidence in the information. Held, that he had reasonable notice, and should have objected before verdict.—Brown v. Reed, 81 Me. 158, 16 Atl. 504.

[d] (N. Y. 1819) An objection to a juror, on account of his relationship to the parties, was held to be made too late after the trial, where he was not challenged at the trial and there appeared to be no unfairness in it.—Eggleston v. Smiley, 17 Johns. 133.

§ 510. —— Prior service as juror.

[a] The objection that a juror was a member of the grand jury which found the indictment is waived, where the prisoner, with knowledge of that fact, accepts him without objection.

—(Ind. 1861) Rice v. State, 16 Ind. 298;
(La. 1885) State v. Jackson, 37 La. Ann. 897.

[b] (N. J. 1890) An objection to a juror on the ground that he served on a former inquisition as to the lunacy, at that time, of the same person, is waived where no actual bias or misconduct is imputed to him, and the same attorney who represented the alleged lunatic on her former trial fails to object, and proceeds with the trial after the fact has appeared.—In re Lindsley, 46 N. J. Eq. (1 Dick.) 358, 19 Atl. 726.

[c] (Ohio, 1870) The objection that, contrary to Cr. Code, §§ 134, 135, prescribing grounds of challenge, a petit juror was also one of the grand jurors that found the indictment, comes too late in the first instance after verdict, even though the fact was unknown to the defendant or to his counsel.—Beck v. State, 20 Ohio St. 228.

[a] (Ark. 1883) Objections to a juror because of an expressed opinion cannot be made after verdict, unless it appears that he had imposed himself on the panel by concealment or prevarication.—Casat v. State, 40 Ark. 511.

[b] (Me. 1871) An objection that the opposite party had conversed with the jurors on his case before the trial comes too late after verdict.—Hussey v. Allen, 59 Me. 269.

[c] (Neb. 1879) Where a party to a suit, being informed by a juror before the case was submitted that he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the merits of the case, fails to call the attention of the court to the matter or to challenge the juror, he will not, after verdict, be allowed to object on the ground that the juror had formed and expressed an opinion.—Tower v. Densmore, 8 Neb. 384, 1 N. W. 315.

—(La. 1880) State v. Beasley, 32 La. Ann. 1162;
(Mass. 1861) Tripp v. Bristol County Com'rs, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 556;
(Mo. 1875) State v. Jones, 61 Mo. 232;
(N. Y. 1827) Cole v. Perry, 6 Cow. 584; (1890) Bergman v. Wolff (Super. Buff.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 591;
(Va. 1893) Short v. Commonwealth, 90 Va. 96, 17 S. E. 786;
(Wyo. 1887) Haines v. Territory, 3 Wyo. 167, 13 Pac. 8.

[b] (Ala. 1887) Under Act Feb. 21, 1887, providing for the selection and organization of juries in Montgomery county (Sess. Acts 1886-87, pp. 190-197), the presiding judge has a discretionary power, in drawing talesmen after the original venire has been exhausted, to relieve from attendance any person drawn who resides more than two miles from the court house; and this being done in open court, presumptively in the presence of defendant's counsel, he cannot complain that they were not "specially informed" as to the names of the persons so excused, when it does not appear that they could not hear the names when called, or asked to be informed as to the names, or proposed to take issue as to the residence of those excused.—Steele v. State, 83 Ala. 20, 3 South. 547.

[c] (Ga. 1859) An objection that the panel is not full, if not taken at the proper time by challenge to the array, is waived.—Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287.

[d] (Ga. 1860) The statute requires that a panel of petit jurors shall be drawn for each week of the term of the superior court. Held that, where the same jurors who served during the first week voluntarily serve during a second week, the statement by defendant's counsel during the second week that he is ready for trial whenever it suited the convenience of the court, and his omission to challenge the array, constituted a waiver of an objection to the panel, taken for the first time on motion in arrest of judgment.—McAfee v. State, 31 Ga. 411.

[e] (Ga. 1895) Where a tales juror was discharged at the instance of the solicitor general, on the ground that his name did not appear on the jury list of the county, and another was summoned in his place, defendant could not complain that his name in fact appeared on the jury list, where such list was accessible to his counsel, who did not object to the discharge.—Hardison v. State, 95 Ga. 337, 22 S. E. 681.

[f] (Ill. 1879) An irregularity in filling the regular panel of jurors, where some of the jurors drawn and summoned do not respond, by directing others to be summoned by the sheriff, instead of having the panel filled by the clerk from the jury box, is waived by failing to challenge the array and proceeding to draw a trial jury from the regular panel as thus organized.—Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142.

[g] (Iowa, 1849) Where a jury was selected by the sheriff after a prisoner made affidavit that the sheriff was prejudiced against him, but the jury was not objected to, the irregularity was waived.—Harriman v. State, 2 G. Greene, 270.

[h] (Mass. 1809) Where the jury was summoned by a constable, instead of the sheriff or his deputy, but the parties were present when the jury was impaneled, and no challenge was made on account of the summons, the objection did not prevail.—Commonwealth v. Court of Session of Norfolk County, 5 Mass. 435.

[i] (Mass. 1839) Where, at the trial of an action against an insurance company, it appeared that the sheriff, who had returned a talesman to serve on the jury, was a stockholder in such company, and this circumstance was known to the junior counsel for the plaintiff soon after the trial began, but no objection was made till after the trial had proceeded for some time, held, that this was a waiver of any exception to the competency of such juror.—Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271.

[j] (Mass. 1843) A verdict will not be set aside, upon motion of the losing party, merely on the ground that some of the jurors were irregularly selected, although he did not know of such irregularity before the verdict was returned.—Page v. Inhabitants of Danvers, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 326.

[k] (Mass. 1863) An objection to the competency of jurors on a sheriff's jury, on the ground that they were not regularly certified or summoned, will be deemed to have been waived unless taken at the trial.—Fowler v. Middlesex County Com'rs, 88 Mass. (6 Allen) 92.

[l] (Minn. 1858) In the absence of fraud or collusion in the selection of a jury, an objection to the array, or to a single juror, is too late after the verdict, unless it is shown that the party objecting was prejudiced by the irregularity.—Steele v. Malony, 1 Minn. 347 (Gil. 257).

[m] (Minn. 1885) Irregularity in a direction by a justice of the peace to the sheriff to make a list of jurors in a criminal case is waived, if not objected to at the time.—State v. Nerbovig, 33 Minn. 480, 24 N. W. 321.

[n] (Mo. 1827) Where the court, during the impaneling of a jury in a murder case, excused a member of the panel because of his wife's illness, and defendant did not object until after the discharge, and failed to request that the vacancy be filled and that he have two days after service of the full list of the panel, the error, if any, was waived.—King v. State, 1 Mo. 717.

[o] (Mo. 1888) The court may fill the panel by calling two jurors from the regular venire to take the place of two unavoidably absent, who were on neither challenge list, defendant having declined to challenge the two thus called, and having waived his statutory right to additional time to make further challenges.—State v. Gilmore, 95 Mo. 554, 8 S. W. 359, 912.

[p] (Mo. 1888) The excusing of a qualified juror from serving without legal reason, there being no pretension that the jurors who tried the case were not qualified, was waived by failure to object thereto.—State v. Jackson, 96 Mo. 200, 9 S. W. 624.

[q] (Neb. 1879) Where objection to the mode of summoning the jury is not raised by challenge or plea in abatement, it is waived.—Brown v. State, 9 Neb. 157, 2 N. W. 378.

[r] (Neb. 1889) Where the court sustained a challenge to the array, and ordered the sheriff to summon "from the body of the county good and lawful men," the fact that the sheriff summoned the same persons as composed the challenged jury was waived by failure to challenge or object.—Burrell v. State, 25 Neb. 581, 41 N. W. 390.

[s] (N. H. 1859) During the period between the passage of the act of division by which two towns were constituted out of one and the organization of the new towns, the old officers acted, jurors were drawn who attended court, and the acting town clerk seasonably made return of his doings upon the venire to the court. Held, that an objection for that cause to a juror thus drawn, if not made until after verdict, must be considered as having been waived, because not seasonably made.—Bodge v. Foss, 39 N. H. 406.

[t] (N. J. 1806) While the statutory qualifications of jurors should be stated in a venire in a justice's court, yet a failure so to do cannot be objected to after verdict and judgment, where no challenge was made to any juror at the trial.—Bartow v. Murry, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 97.

[v] (N. J. 1862) If no challenge to an array is made because the clerk has discharged so many of the jurors, who wish to be excused, that enough are not left to make a full jury, and the deficiency is supplied by summoning talesmen, though exception is taken to this mode of procedure, the verdict will not be set aside for illegality in impaneling the jury.—Smith v. Clayton, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 357.

[w] (N. Y. 1855) Parties may waive an objection to an order making a venire for a second jury returnable at a different time than that prescribed by 2 Rev. St. p. 245, § 111, where, immediately after the disagreement of the first jury and their discharge, there was no objection made to a proposal of the justice to make such an order.—Fiero v. Reynolds, 20 Barb. 275.

[x] (Pa. 1804) Though defendant and the sheriff by whom the jury trying the case were returned are the same person, plaintiff waives the defect by failing to challenge the array.—Legaux v. Wells, 4 Yeates, 43.

[y] (Pa. 1816) Under St. Feb. 21, 1814, providing that no verdict should be set aside, nor any judgment reversed or sentence stayed, for any defect or error in the precept or in the venire, or in drawing, summoning, or returning any jury panel or juror, but that a trial or pleading guilty or the general issue should be a waiver of all errors and defects in or relative to the precept, venire, or drawing, summoning, or return of jurors, it is not error, after trial on the merits, that the sheriff's name was not on the return of the precept and writs of venire facias.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 2 Serg. & R. 300.

[z] (Utah, 1893) On the day set for a trial defendant requested a postponement for 10 days, as his counsel was absent, which was given; the court remarking that he would issue a special venire if the regular jury were discharged by that day. To this the defendant made no objection at the time, and, the regular jury having been in the meanwhile discharged, a special jury was summoned for the adjourned day. Held, that defendant was estopped to object to such jury, it appearing that the jury was unobjectionable, and the proceedings on the part of the court were fair.—Bennett v. Tintic Iron Co., 9 Utah, 291, 34 Pac. 61.

(N. Y. 1858) People v. Stout, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 71; (1858) Stout v. People, Id. 132; (1868) Voorhees v. Dorr, 51 Barb. 580;

(Tenn. 1853) Isham v. State, 33 Tenn. (1 Sneed) 111.

[b] A party may object to the examination of a juror without oath as to his competency; but, if he permits the question to be put to the juror and answered by him without requiring him to be sworn, he waives the objection.

—(Ind. 1851) Trullinger v. Webb, 3 Ind. 198;

(Mo. 1896) Preston v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 132 Mo. 111, 33 S. W. 783;

(Pa. 1880) Zell v. Commonwealth, 94 Pa. 258.

[c] When a defendant in a criminal action omits to object to any irregularity in impaneling the jury at the time, he is deemed to have waived his objection.

—(U. S. 1895) Turner v. United States, 66 Fed. 280, 13 C. C. A. 436, 30 U. S. App. 90;

(Ala. 1895) Howard v. State, 108 Ala. 571, 18 South. 813;

(Cal. 1864) People v. Coffman, 24 Cal. 230;

(N. C. 1879) State v. Boon, 80 N. C. 461.

[d] (Ark. 1891) Where no demand that the jurors be drawn from a jury box is made, and no objection made at the time to the manner in which they were drawn, objection that they were not so drawn is waived.—Wells v. State, 16 S. W. 577.

[e] (Cal. 1858) The objection that one of the jurors' names was not in the venire returned by the sheriff is taken too late after the verdict is given.—Thrall v. Smiley, 9 Cal. 529.

[f] (Cal. 1894) In a criminal case the bailiff selected from the persons present, and placed in the jury box, 12 men, who had been regularly returned to serve as jurors. The clerk obtained from each man his name, wrote it on a sheet of paper, returned to his place, and called the names. The jurors were then sworn to answer as to their qualifications. Held that, though such mode of impaneling the jury was reversible error, defendant waived the error by failure to object thereto.—People v. Johnson, 104 Cal. 418, 38 Pac. 91.

[g] (Ga. 1855) On a trial for murder, the name "Ogilvie" appeared on the list of jurors handed to prisoner's counsel, instead of "Olive," which was the right name, and the error was not discovered until the name of the juror was called in the progress of forming the jury, when the prisoner's list was corrected by order of the court, the juror put upon the prisoner, and challenged by him. Held that, if the prisoner were deprived of any right thereby, it should have been then objected to.—Pressley v. State, 19 Ga. 192.

[h] (Ga. 1879) An objection that the name of a juror was not in the box or on the list cannot be raised after verdict.—Osgood v. State, 63 Ga. 791.

[i] (Ga. 1892) Though the formality of putting the panel upon the accused be not expressly waived, if, without informing the court that he declines to waive it, he acquiesces in the omission, and takes part in the selection of particular jurors from the panel, raising no question touching the failure to put the panel upon him until after the full traverse jury has been selected and sworn, and the evidence in behalf of the state introduced, he will be deemed to have waived the formality.—Vaughn v. State, 88 Ga. 731, 16 S. E. 64.

[j] (La. 1876) Accused cannot avail himself of the pretended illegality of the drawing of the array in a different case. He should himself have objected at the proper time, and not acquiesced in the drawing of the jury.—State v. Courtney, 28 La. Ann. 794.

[k] (La. 1885) An accused who, after three jurors have been impaneled, objects for the first time that the list has not been called in regular order, cannot complain, where the names were thereafter called in regular order.—State v. Washington, 37 La. Ann. 828.

[m] (Mo. 1895) An objection that an improper question was asked of the entire panel on their voir dire comes too late for the first time on appeal.—State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28.

[n] (N. H. 1853) Where, after verdict, the exception is taken that only one selectman was present at the drawing of a juror who sat in the trial, the verdict will not be set aside, though it appear such was the fact.—Wilcox v. School Dist. No. 1 in Lempster, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 303.

[o] (N. Y. 1866) During the impaneling of a jury, after a challenge to a juror had been overruled, the prisoner's counsel was informed by the court that the juror who was challenged should stand aside and not sit, if he desired it, and that the number of the prisoner's peremptory challenges should not be lessened thereby, and the prisoner chose to stand mute, though told by the court that his conduct would be construed to be a consent to the juror's sitting. Held, that an objection to the juror was waived.—Gardiner v. People, 6 Parker, Cr. R. 155.

[p] (N. D. 1890) The clerk in calling the names of jurors did not obtain the names from any jury box, and did not use either a jury box or ballots, but called off the names of those who served as jurors from a list of names before him. The irregularity was discovered by counsel of accused while it was going on, but he made no objection until after verdict. Held, that the irregularity was waived.—Territory v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 30, 44 N. W. 1003.

[q] (Or. 1887) Where a defendant asked certain questions of a juror which the court struck out as improper, defendant should have challenged the juror for cause, specifying his grounds for challenge, and, failing to do so, he waived the defect.—Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 313, 16 Pac. 33.

[r] (Pa. 1850) Where a person is called as a juror whose name is not in the venire, and a party suffers him to remain on the jury without objection, and takes his chance of a verdict, it is a waiver of the objection.—Burton v. Ehrlich, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 236.

[s] (S. C. 1886) On the trial of a colored woman for murder, the presiding judge, in examining the jurors on their voir dire, propounded to colored jurors questions as to "relationship," etc., to prisoner, as provided by Gen. St. § 2261, but omitted such questions when a white juror was called. Held, that the circuit judge is trior of challenges, and, as the law does not prescribe the questions to be propounded, but only indicates the points on which the judge is to be satisfied, if counsel were not satisfied with the interrogatories, they should object at the time.—State v. Nance, 25 S. C. 168.

[t] (Tex. 1868) Where the appellants made no objection before the trial because the jurors were not questioned as to their qualifications under the statute, the defect was waived.—Tweedy v. Briggs, 31 Tex. 74.

[u] (Tex. 1884) Where, in a criminal case, the clerk failed to draw the names of the jury from the box and enter them on two slips of paper at the trial, as required by Code Cr. Proc. arts. 645, 646, but, prior to the announcement of ready for trial, had prepared the lists for the parties, defendant's failure to object at the time was a waiver of the irregularity.—McMahon v. State, 17 Tex. App. 321.

—(Ga. 1857) Candler v. Hammond, 23 Ga. 493;
(Ill. 1863) Edwards v. Edwards, 31 Ill. 474;
(Ind. 1836) Lindley v. Kindall, 4 Blackf. 189;
(W. Va. 1890) State v. Ice, 34 W. Va. 244, 12 S. E. 695.

—(Fla. 1891) Jacksonville, T. & K. W. Ry. Co. v. Neff, 28 Fla. 373, 9 South. 653;
(Ill. 1820) Cornelius v. Boucher, 1 Ill. (Breese) 32;
(Tenn. 1858) Looper v. Bell, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 373;
(Tex. 1884) Freiberg v. Lowe, 61 Tex. 436.

[c] A verdict in a civil action is not void or irregular, merely because the trial proceeded to verdict without the jury being sworn, where neither party requested that they be sworn.

—(Ill. 1896) McDonald v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co., 161 Ill. 124, 43 N. E. 783;
(N. Y. 1885) Jenkins v. City of Hudson, 16 Abb. N. C. 137.

[d] (Ind. 1890) When defendant proceeds with the trial without making objection to the fact that the jury were sworn before he was arraigned, he waives any informality in the manner or time of swearing the jury.—Dolan v. State, 122 Ind. 141, 23 N. E. 761.

[e] (Iowa, 1866) Objection cannot be taken that the jury were not sworn to try the issue created by an amended answer, where the court was not asked to have the jury resworn.—Arnold v. Arnold, 20 Iowa, 273.

[f] (Kan. 1886) Where a party desires to avail himself of irregularity in administering the oath to the jury, the attention of the court should be called to it at the time the oath is taken. A party cannot sit silently by, and take the chances of acquittal, and subsequently, when convicted, make objections to irregularity in the form of the oath.—State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. 318.

[g] (Ky. 1857) The appellate court will not reverse a decision of a jury and judgment of the court in a will case, because the jury were not sworn to say how much of the paper produced was the will of the testator. If the oath of the jury required them to decide upon the validity of the whole will, such objection should have been made at the swearing of the jury.—Thompson v. Blackwell, 56 Ky. (17 B. Mon.) 609.

[h] (Mo. 1884) Where, in an action by a married woman for personal injuries, her husband is joined as a nominal plaintiff by amendment, a failure to reswear the jury is waived, if the defendants proceeded to trial without objection on that account.—Merrill v. City of St. Louis, 83 Mo. 244, 53 Am. Rep. 576, affirming (1882) 12 Mo. App. 466.

[i] (N. Y. 1857) A juror arrived at the court house after the panel had been called and sworn for the term, and consequently sat as a juror without having been sworn at all, and without objection on the part of the defendants. Held that, the defendants not having shown themselves prejudiced by the irregularity, they could not take advantage of it to have the verdict against them set aside.—Hardenburgh v. Crary, 15 How. Prac. 307.

[j] (N. D. 1890) In a criminal trial, where the jurors are called and sworn singly, and without calling 12 jurors into the box, and, after the completion of the panel, the jury are sworn collectively, and no exception is taken to the second swearing, there is no error.—Territory v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 30, 44 N. W. 1003.

[k] (Tex. 1875) The rule adopted in criminal cases, requiring the statutory form of the oath to be administered to the jury, does not obtain in civil cases; and it is too late, after verdict and judgment, to object to the formality of the oath administered.—Clements v. Crawford, 42 Tex. 601.

§ 515. Failure to examine juror.

[a] Where a party in a civil case accepted a juror without examination as to his qualifications, he waives objection on account of want of qualifications discovered afterwards.

—(Iowa, 1885) Faville v. Shehan, 68 Iowa, 241, 26 N. W. 131;
(Neb. 1888) Everton v. Esgate, 24 Neb. 235, 38 N. W. 794;
(Ohio, 1858) Hull v. Albro, 2 Disn. 147;
(1872) Kenrick v. Reppard, 23 Ohio St. 333.

[b] It cannot be objected that a juror was prejudiced, if he was not examined under oath.—(Ind. 1854) Alexander v. Dunn, 5 Ind. 122; (Iowa, 1864) State v. Funck, 17 Iowa, 365.

[c] (Ala. 1875) A defendant, who has neither made inquiry, nor requested the court to make inquiry, relative to certain qualifications of petit jurors, until after the jury is completed, cannot then raise the objection that the court has failed to ascertain that the jurors possess the statutory qualifications.—James v. State, 53 Ala. 380.

[d] (Ark. 1889) An objection to the prejudice of a juror is too late after verdict, where the party has failed to examine him on the voir dire, and was not misled or deceived in reference thereto.—Brown v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 52 Ark. 120, 12 S. W. 203.

[e] (Cal. 1894) Counsel appointed for defense on the day of trial, who knew that defendant had been examined on the claim of insanity, but not that the cause was alleged to be excessive drinking, being denied a continuance, proceeded to the examination of, and accepted, six jurors, not having examined them as to their views on the plea of insanity caused by excessive drinking as a defense, and the court then adjourned for four days. After the resumption of the trial, he failed to show cause, or call to the attention of the court his desire, to further question or challenge the six jurors. Held, that his action was a waiver of defendant's right so to do.—People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 335, 38 Pac. 945.

[f] (Colo. 1894) Objection to a juror on the ground of alienage is waived by failure to examine him as to that point on his voir dire.—Brown v. People, 20 Colo. 161, 36 Pac. 1040.

[g] (Ga. 1855) Where a juror on examination stated that he resided in the city, but that he had not resided there for six months, and the state's counsel challenged him for cause, and the challenge was sustained, it was held that the silence of the opposing counsel at the time was an acquiescence in the construction put by the court on the answer; and especially since he made no effort to show such juror to have been competent.—Boyd v. State, 17 Ga. 194.

[h] (Ill. 1892) That a juror, on his examination, did not clearly state that he was acquainted with one of the parties, is waived, as it is the attorney's duty to procure a clear answer when the question is asked.—Wolff Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, 46 Ill. App. 381.

[i] (Ind. 1873) A party, accepting a juror without interrogating him in reference to whether he is a householder or freeholder of the county, thereby waives the right to object to the competency of the juror on such grounds.—Estep v. Waterous, 45 Ind. 140.

[j] (Ind. 1874) On the trial of a criminal cause, the defendant, as well as the state, by failing to interrogate the jury as to their being householders or freeholders, or to take other steps to ascertain their competency in that respect before accepting them and before they are sworn to try the cause, waives objection on the ground of the want of such qualifications, and the defendant, as well as the state, will be bound by the verdict of such jury, though one or more of them may not be householders or freeholders.—Kingen v. State, 46 Ind. 132.

[k] (Ind. 1877) Where, in a criminal cause, the defendant accepts a juror without questioning him as to his qualifications, he cannot afterwards object that the juror was neither a freeholder nor householder.—Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182.

[l] (Ind. 1894) Where it is not shown that defendant was engaged in selling liquor under a license, he cannot complain of a ruling on the competency of a juror, based on his opinion of the morality of those so engaged.—Pemberton v. State, 11 Ind. App. 297, 38 N. E. 1096.

[m] (Iowa, 1885) Where a party in a civil action accepts a juror without examination as to his qualifications, he cannot, without showing fraud or concealment, object thereafter that the juror was a nonresident.—Faville v. Shehan, 68 Iowa, 241, 26 N. W. 131.

[n] (Mass. 1817) Where a party neglects to take an objection to a juror because he is interested in a similar question, and to put the juror on his voir dire, the exception comes too late after trial.—Jefferies v. Randall, 14 Mass. 205.

[o] (Mich. 1850) If a party or his counsel interpose a challenge for favor, or raise any other preliminary question involving an inquiry, and then neglects or refuses to move the trial or examination thereof, he thereby waives such challenge or question.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. (Man.) 451.

[p] (Mich. 1873) In all civil causes the proper time to make the necessary inquiries into the qualifications of jurors is before the trial, and not afterwards, and, if not made then, the objections will be deemed to have been waived.—Johr v. People, 26 Mich. 427.

[q] (Mich. 1885) It cannot be urged after trial and conviction that one of the jurors was not a freeholder or resident of the county, when his answers on examination were sufficient to suggest a probability that he was disqualified.—People v. Lange, 56 Mich. 550, 23 N. W. 217.

[r] (Miss. 1876) The fact that the trial judge in a criminal case does not examine the jurors as to their prescribed qualifications does not render the jury illegal, or entitle defendant to have their verdict set aside, where defendant accepts the jury and makes no objection to them.—Skinner v. State, 53 Miss. 399.

[s] (Mo. 1879) Counsel took an exception to the refusal of the court to allow him to ask the jury on their voir dire as to their prejudice against corporations. The court then stated to the jury that, if any of them had a prejudice against corporations, counsel desired them to leave the box, and, upon no reply being made, the jury were sworn in without objection. Held, that the point was waived.—Lœffler v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 7 Mo. App. 185.

[t] (Mo. 1893) The fact that a juror may have been heard to express an opinion in a criminal case of defendant's guilt does not show that there was error in allowing him to sit, where, for anything that appears, defendant may have known of such opinion.—State v. Phillips, 117 Mo. 389, 22 S. W. 1079.

[u] (N. C. 1881) On a trial for murder, a juror, in reply to the question whether he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, stated that he had, and the prisoner challenged him for cause. Thereupon the court suggested to prisoner's counsel to ask the juror whether the opinion expressed was that the prisoner was guilty, which counsel declined to do, and the challenge was disallowed. Held, no error.—State v. Efler, 85 N. C. 585.

[v] (Ohio, 1874) Act April 26, 1873, § 11, requires the court to ask whether any of the jury have served as talesmen within the preceding year. The court asked this question, and no response was made. Neither party interposed a challenge, and the jury proceeded to verdict. Held, that this amounted to a waiver of the right to object on the ground that some of the jury had so served within the past year.—Woodward v. Stein, 5 Ohio Dec. 171.

[w] (Ohio, 1876) Failure of a party to make any inquiry of a juror as to his competency at the time he is impaneled is a waiver of all objections to the competency of such juror that could have been ascertained by such inquiry, except such as the court is required to ascertain of its own motion.—Watts v. Ruth, 30 Ohio St. 32.

[x] (Ohio, 1883) An objection to the competency of a juror on the ground that he could neither understand nor speak English is waived, unless such juror is examined and challenged.—Dokes v. Soards, 8 Ohio Dec. 621, 9 Wkly. Law Bul. 76.

[xx] (Ohio, 1885) A juror stated on his voir dire that he had both formed an expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant, but further stated that he believed that he could, notwithstanding such opinion, render a fair and impartial verdict upon the evidence in the case. Held, that the defendant waived any disqualification of the juror by reason of his having formed and expressed an opinion by his failure to further examine the juror.—Schmeider v. State, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 420, 1 O. C. D. 565.

[y] (S. C. 1891) Under the statute, which provides that "on motion of either party" the court shall examine a juror as to whether he is related to either party, an omission to so examine him cannot be assigned as error when no motion therefor is made.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

[yy] (Tex. 1886) A venireman in a criminal case, who stated, as a reason why he thought he was disqualified, that he was one of defendant's compurgators on an application for a change of venue, was held competent by the court, and was accepted by the state. The venireman then objected that, if he served on the jury, he would be blamed if defendant should be acquitted, whereupon the court excused him. Defendant excepted, and the venireman was recalled at the instance of the state's attorney and tendered to defendant. When asked if he would have the venireman sworn as a juror, defendant's counsel replied, "Defendant stands mute." The venireman was then discharged. Held, that defendant could not complain.—Pierson v. State, 21 Tex. App. 14, 17 S. W. 468.

[z] (Utah, 1885) Where a juror does not reply to an interrogation made to the entire jury generally as to whether they have an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, failure to elicit, on the examination of such juror on his voir dire, that he served on the grand jury which indicted defendant, and to challenge him on that ground, is a waiver of the objection.—People v. Lewis, 4 Utah, 42, 5 Pac. 543.

[zz] (Wash. 1859) On a trial for murder, a failure on the part of the defendant to ascertain the qualifications of a juror, by putting him upon his oath prior to being impaneled, is a waiver of any objections on that ground.—Clarke v. Territory, 1 Wash. T. 82.

[a] (Ala. 1847) When a jury has been irregularly impaneled to try whether a slave was the property of an administrator in his own right, or assets of the estate, and a verdict was returned against the administrator, ascertaining the value of the slave, his consent that a judgment should be entered in the form in which the finding of the jury was expressed is not a waiver of the irregularity, but a mere agreement that the court may, in conformity to the verdict, declare that the slave was assets of the estate, and the value such as the jury had assessed.—Reynolds' Adm'rs v. Reynolds' Distributees, 11 Ala. 1023.

[b] (Cal. 1895) After much evidence was taken, a juror was improperly, and against defendant's objection, discharged by the court, because he stated that he did not believe the statements of certain witnesses, and defendant afterwards consented to proceed with the remaining 11 jurors, instead of commencing the trial anew. Held, that defendant did not thereby waive his objection to the discharge of the juror.—Mahoney v. San Francisco & S. M. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 471, 42 Pac. 968.

[d] (Mich. 1844) By going to trial a party waives objection to the sufficiency of the oath administered to the jury.—The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 Doug. 306.

[f] (Mo. 1876) Where a party to an action against a municipal corporation has objected at the proper time to jurors on the ground that they are taxpaying inhabitants of the corporation, and has saved an exception to the action of the court in admitting them, he does not then waive his objection to the panel by proceeding with the trial.—Fulweiler v. City of St. Louis, 61 Mo. 479.

[g] (Mont. 1885) One who consents to a trial by the court waives his right to object to any defect in making up the jury.—Wykoff v. Loeber, 5 Mont. 535, 6 Pac. 363.

[h] (N. Y. 1806) If the objection to a juror on the ground of opinion formed or expressed be overruled, and the party goes to trial on the merits, he does not thereby waive the objection, nor is he precluded from taking advantage of it in error.—Blake v. Millspaugh, 1 Johns. 316.

[i] (N. Y. 1848) Where a defendant appears on the trial of a cause, and consents that it be tried with five jurors only, and introduces evidence on his part, he cannot afterwards object that the venire was issued without any issue having been joined in the cause.—Keeler v. Delavan, 4 Barb. 317.

[j] (Pa. 1839) Under Act Feb. 21, 1814, pleading the general issue and going to trial is a waiver of any error or defect in drawing, summoning, or returning juries; but, quære, is it a waiver, if the defendant refuse to plead at all, and the court direct the plea of "not guilty" to be entered for him, under the provisions of section 3 of the act of September 23, 1791.—Commonwealth v. Chauncey, 2 Ashm. 90.

[k] (Pa. 1839) Under section 5 of the act of September 23, 1791, where a prisoner, on being arraigned, stands mute, and the plea of not guilty is entered for him, and the trial proceeds, and he by his counsel cross-examines the witnesses for the commonwealth, and calls and examines witnesses in his defense, and there is a verdict and judgment, the case comes within the act of February 21, 1814, and no error can afterwards be assigned appertaining to the precept, venire, drawing, summoning, and returning of jurors, etc.—Dyott v. Commonwealth, 5 Whart. 67.

[m] (Pa. 1890) The proper practice at a criminal trial is to swear the juror prior to his examination on his voir dire, and if the prisoner requests it to be done, and is refused, it is error; yet when he voluntarily examines the juror without his being sworn, and without objection or exception, he cannot take advantage of it after a trial upon the merits, even though the case be a capital one.—Commonwealth v. Ware, 137 Pa. 465, 20 Atl. 806, 26 Wkly. Notes Cas. 462.

[n] (Pa. 1895) Under Act Feb. 21, 1814, providing that pleading the general issue shall be a waiver of all errors and defects in or relating and appertaining to the drawing of jurors, defendant, after pleading not guilty, cannot complain of irregularities in drawing the jury, which occurred prior to the plea, though he did not know of them, as he might have.—Commonwealth v. Freeman, 166 Pa. 332, 31 Atl. 115.

[o] (W. Va. 1893) When either party demands a jury, it is error for a justice, without consent of parties, to issue a venire facias before the summons to commence the suit has been served and returned and the time fixed for the appearance of defendant has arrived; but where defendant appears and has the case continued, and the jury thus summoned is adjourned to the time set for trial, he will be held to have waived such irregularity in the writ of venire facias, if it appear that he was not injured thereby.—Greer v. Wilson, 38 W. Va. 100, 18 S. E. 380.

[a] (Cal. 1856) A juror in a capital case, on his examination on his voir dire by the defendant, stated that he had formed and expressed an unqualified opinion, etc. The defendant passed him to the prosecution for examination, on which the juror stated that his opinion was formed by reading the newspapers. The prosecution accepted the juror, but the defendant requested leave to question him further for cause, which was denied, but a peremptory challenge allowed. Held not to be error.—People v. Stonecifer, 6 Cal. 405.

[b] (Ga. 1877) After a juror has been put upon a prisoner, but before he is sworn to try the case, the court may allow the solicitor general to ask him whether he has been naturalized, the solicitor having just been informed that the juror had not been naturalized; and, on ascertaining that he has not been naturalized, the court may set him down for cause.—Johnson v. State, 58 Ga. 491.

[c] (Ga. 1882) Objection that the name of one of the jurors has been incorrectly written on the list comes too late after the full panel answering their names have been put upon the prisoner.—Moon v. State, 68 Ga. 687.

[d] (N. C. 1879) A juror who stated upon his voir dire that he had expressed an opinion that the prisoner was not guilty could properly be challenged by the state after he had been passed to the prisoner and while he was under examination by the latter.—State v. Jones, 80 N. C. 415.

[e] (N. C. 1886) The court, in its discretion, may permit a juror to be challenged by the state for cause after he has been tendered to the defendant and before the jury is impaneled.—State v. Green, 95 N. C. 611.

[f] (Pa. 1854) The mere passing of a juror over to the court or the other party is not an absolute waiver of the right to challenge, if good cause be shown afterwards.—McFadden v. Commonwealth, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 12, 62 Am. Dec. 308.

[g] (S. C. 1883) Plaintiff announced that she had no challenges to make. Two jurors were afterwards challenged by defendant. Held, that plaintiff could not afterwards claim the right of challenge.—Ward v. Charleston City Ry. Co., 19 S. C. 521, 45 Am. Rep. 749.

Peremptory challenges, see post, § 522 [h, k, u].

[a] (U. S. 1870) Where defendant accepts a juror with knowledge that he has had a conversation with a third person about the case, he cannot afterwards object to a verdict on that account.—United States v. Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 16,341 [1 Sawy. 277].

[b] (Ala. 1876) The rule observed in capital felonies, that a juror, once accepted, cannot afterwards be set aside without consent of prisoner for any cause existing when he was sworn, although not then known, cannot be applied to trials for felony not capital or misdemeanor.—Smith v. State, 55 Ala. 1.

[c] (Ala. 1881) Where, at the time of a juror's acceptance, his disqualification to serve was not known, or was concealed without lack of diligence to discover it, he may be challenged for cause at any time before he is sworn.—Roberts v. State, 68 Ala. 515.

[d] (Cal. 1856) A party who accepts a juror, knowing him to be disqualified, is estopped from afterwards availing himself of such disqualification.—People v. Stonecifer, 6 Cal. 405.

[f] (Mich. 1874) The rejection on a challenge of a talesman as a juror, against the objection of the opposite party, will not be considered as error, whether the cause of challenge be valid or not, where, after other talesmen were summoned and other challenges made by the parties respectively, 12 jurors were obtained with whom both parties announced themselves contented.—Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 308.

[g] (Mo. 1891) After the opening statement for the prosecution, the court stated in the hearing of the jury that he had been informed of serious illness in the family of one of the jurors, and asked if both sides would consent to his discharge. Both sides consenting, the juror was excused, but shortly afterwards defendant's counsel announced his intention to "save the point," whereupon the judge called counsel for both sides together, and stated to them privately that, unless defendant's counsel consented to excusing such juror, he would be recalled and the trial proceeded with. Thereupon defendant's counsel stated he would consent, and would not raise the point, and another juror was called, and, being accepted by both sides, the whole jury was sworn again and the trial proceeded. Held, that while it would have been preferable for the judge to have informed counsel privately of the illness in the juror's family, yet the defendant could not complain that he was forced to excuse the juror, or retain him and thereby risk his displeasure, since defendant, by failing to except at the time of the private conference between the court and counsel, waived his right to raise the point later.—State v. Thornton, 108 Mo. 640, 18 S. W. 841.

[h] (Neb. 1892) By waiving all objections to the jury, after they had been called into the box, and also his peremptory challenges, a party waives his challenge to the array.—Weeping Water Electric Light Co. v. Haldeman, 35 Neb. 139, 52 N. W. 892.

[i] (N. Y. 1857) Where a justice of the peace overruled a challenge to a juror as a tenant of a party, and the decision was duly excepted to, it was held that a subsequent reply in the negative by the party excepting to a question by the justice as to whether he had any objection to the jurors as they stood was no waiver of the challenge.—Hathaway v. Helmer, 25 Barb. 29.

[j] (N. C. 1868) Where a prisoner has already accepted as jurors three colored persons, he cannot challenge a fourth juror on the ground of his color.—State v. Holmes, 63 N. C. 18.

[k] (S. C. 1887) Where the defense accepted a juror, it is too late, after verdict, to object that he was not summoned on the regular venire, but, being in court when his name was called, answered and was placed on the jury.—State v. Anderson, 26 S. C. 599, 2 S. E. 699.

§ 519. Effect of exercise of challenges.

[a] Where the challenge of a juror for bias was improperly overruled, an exception to the overruling is good, though the juror was afterwards excluded peremptorily, as the due number of peremptory challenges was thereby lessened.

[b] Where defendant peremptorily challenges a juror, after having excepted to a ruling of the court in not excluding him, as disqualified, he is presumed to waive the exception, and is not injured if he has sufficient peremptory challenges to subsequently exclude him and all other objectionable jurors.

[f] (Ala. 1890) The fact that a party peremptorily challenges the stricken jurors thus recalled against his objection to complete the jury, is not a waiver of his right to a new struck jury.—Birmingham Union St. R. Co. v. Ralph, 92 Ala. 273, 9 South. 222.

[g] (Ark. 1853) If a party challenges a juror peremptorily, when he is not obliged to do so, he waives his exception, and cannot avail himself on error of the exception thus abandoned; and this, although he may exhaust his right of peremptory challenges.—Stewart v. State, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 720.

[h] (Fla. 1889) Error in refusing to allow witnesses to be called to show that a venire man had expressed an opinion as to defendant's guilt was cured where, before defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges, the state withdrew its tender of said juror, and challenged him peremptorily.—Ellis v. State, 25 Fla. 702, 6 South. 768.

[i] (Ga. 1855) It is unnecessary for the court above to notice any overruled objections to jurors who have been challenged and passed for other cause.—McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497.

[j] (Ind. 1887) A party is not estopped from complaining of the error of the court in allowing the opposite party, over his objection, to peremptorily challenge struck jurors, by thereafter challenging jurors, himself.—May v. Hoover, 112 Ind. 455, 14 N. E. 472.

[k] (Iowa, 1855) At a term where there was no jury a party claimed one. The court ordered 12 bystanders to be returned. The party objected to that unusual method. They were so returned, and he challenged some for cause. Held, that they were a good jury.—Suttle v. Batie, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 141.

[l] (La. 1891) In case a prisoner's objection to a juror for cause is overruled, and he subsequently peremptorily challenges him, and it does not appear that he was thereby necessitated to accept on the panel persons inimical to his interest, he fails to discover injury entitling him to relief.—State v. Garig, 43 La. Ann. 365, 8 South. 934.

[m] (Miss. 1882) Where a juror in a capital case, absent by leave of court, is brought back and tendered to defendant, who challenges him peremptorily, no ground for complaint exists.—Coleman v. State, 59 Miss. 484.

[n] (Mo. 1894) A challenge based on the disqualification by age of four of the panel, though in form to the array, is in fact to the polls, and waives further challenge to the array.—State v. Clark, 121 Mo. 500, 26 S. W. 562.

[o] (Mo. 1896) Where the court appointed an elisor to summon a jury because of the sheriff's disqualification, but called as jurors the regular panel theretofore summoned by the sheriff, defendant's objection to the jurors, after the regular panel had qualified, on the ground that they were not summoned by the elisor, was a challenge to the array, and not one to the polls, which would operate as a waiver of defects in the array.—State v. Weeden, 133 Mo. 70, 34 S. W. 473.

[p] (N. J. 1833) A juror cannot be challenged a second time for matter that might have been given in evidence on the trial of the first challenge, and which, if so proved, would have sustained that challenge; but it is otherwise as to matter constituting a different challenge and triable by a different forum.—Mann v. Glover, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 195.

[q] (N. Y. 1820) A peremptory challenge, made by the prisoner to the polls, is no waiver of his right to object to the want of the venire.—People v. McKay, 18 Johns. 212.

[r] (N. Y. 1849) After a challenge for principal cause has been tried, a challenge to the favor cannot be made.—People v. Donaldson, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 78.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) Where a challenge to a juror by the prisoner for principal cause has been overruled, the same juror may be challenged to the favor.—Carnal v. People, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 272.

[t] (N. Y. 1851) After a juror has been challenged, and the triors have pronounced him indifferent, and he is then challenged peremptorily, the prisoner cannot avail himself of exceptions taken to the admission of improper evidence before the triors.—People v. Knickerbocker, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 302.

[u] (Or. 1887) In a suit against a county for damages defendant challenged one of the jurors because he was a taxpayer in the county. The court overruled the challenge, and defendant then challenged peremptorily. Held, that it was a sufficient ground of challenge for implied bias by either party; but the defendant, by his peremptory challenge, waived his challenge for cause.—Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 313, 16 Pac. 33.

[a] An accused cannot complain because of the overruling of a challenge to a juror for cause, where he did not thereupon peremptorily challenge the juror, and his peremptory challenges were not exhausted.

(N. Y. 1845) People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281.

[b] (Ill. 1872) Error in accepting a juror whose name was not drawn by lot was waived by failure to exhaust peremptory challenges.—St. Louis & S. E. Ry. Co. v. Lux, 63 Ill. 523.

[c] (Iowa, 1896) Defendant cannot complain that a challenge for cause was improperly refused, where he afterwards waives a peremptory challenge by which the objectionable juror might have been excused.—State v. Yetzer, 97 Iowa, 423, 66 N. W. 737.

[d] (La. 1885) Where several defendants are jointly put on trial, an error of the court in disallowing a challenge of one for cause is not ground for reversing the verdict, although his peremptory challenges may be thereby exhausted, provided a satisfactory jury is obtained without exhausting the combined peremptory challenges of all the accused.—State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 443.

[e] (Mich. 1892) The exclusion of a juror because he is more than 60 years old will not be deemed prejudicial to a party, where there still remains a sufficient number of jurors on the panel to form a jury, to whom no objection is taken, and the party's peremptory challenges are not exhausted.—Luebe v. Thorpe, 94 Mich. 268, 54 N. W. 41.

[f] (Miss. 1889) Where, on summoning a special venire in a murder trial, the name of one of the jury is omitted from the list furnished the prisoner by inadvertence, and the person whose name is left off is set aside by the court, and a jury selected from the balance, without the prisoner exhausting his peremptory challenges, no injury is done of which the prisoner can complain.—Shubert v. State, 66 Miss. 446, 6 South. 238.

[h] (Mont. 1892) On a murder trial, the court, under an erroneous construction of a statute, which defendant's attorney did not try to correct, excused a number of the jurors, but at the same sitting discovered the error, and revoked the ruling before it had been reduced to writing and recorded by the clerk. Four of those so excused were ordered by the court back to the jury box, and to this defendant objected, in that they were excused without being cautioned not to speak concerning the case, and that, after being excused, they could not serve as jurors. When questioned by the court they denied having talked with any one of the case after being excused. The court offered defendant six additional peremptory challenges, and the prosecution waived all not exhausted, but defendant refused to challenge further. Held, that the excusal of the jurors was an irregularity which was cured by the subsequent action of the court, and did not vitiate the verdict.—State v. Linebarger, 12 Mont. 292, 30 Pac. 140.

[i] (N. Y. 1831) In a murder trial, after 11 jurors had been accepted, it was discovered that the box was empty, and that the name of one member of the panel had accidentally not been placed in the box. The name was placed in the box by order of the court, and, being drawn out, the juror was not peremptorily challenged by defendant, who had still three peremptory challenges remaining. Held, that the failure to place the name in the box was not such irregularity as to necessitate setting aside the verdict, since defendant could not have been injured thereby.—People v. Ransom, 7 Wend. 417.

[j] (N. Y. 1868) A juror who states on his preliminary examination that he has an opinion in the case, founded on the testimony given on a former trial, which amounts to a conviction, and whose declaration that he could render an impartial verdict is qualified by a doubt, is not within Code Cr. Proc. § 376, providing that an existing opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused shall not disqualify a juror, if he declare on oath his belief that such opinion will not influence his verdict, and the court is satisfied of that fact; and a refusal to set him aside is not cured by the fact that, at the time the jury was sworn, defendant had unused peremptory challenges.—People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, 18 N. E. 156, reversing (1888) 48 Hun, 620, 1 N. Y. Supp. 155.

[k] (N. C. 1892) Where a jury in a criminal case is obtained from the regular panel and special venire without exhausting defendant's peremptory challenges, he cannot object that the special venire was improperly granted.—State v. Brogden, 111 N. C. 656, 16 S. E. 170.

[m] (S. C. 1882) It is no objection that the required number of persons were not in attendance as jurors, if the defendant, being aware of the deficiency, did not object, and a jury was obtained from those present without the defendant exhausting his right of peremptory challenge.—State v. Clyburn, 16 S. C. 375.

[n] (S. C. 1887) Where the judge, thinking the regular panel exhausted, ordered other names to be drawn from the box, and after drawing one of them it was discovered that one of the regular panel had not been called, whereupon the judge revoked the order for the additional names and caused the name so omitted from the regular panel to be presented to defendant, an objection to the action of the judge is not tenable where the jury was completed without exhausting defendant's peremptory challenges.—State v. Anderson, 26 S. C. 599, 2 S. E. 699.

[o] (S. C. 1892) The fact that, after the drawing of a jury in a murder trial had commenced, the court allowed the clerk to place six accidentally omitted names in the hat, is not reversible error, where the drawing is completed without exhausting defendant's peremptory challenges. State v. Jackson, 32 S. C. 27, 10 S. E. 769, followed.—State v. Campbell, 35 S. C. 28, 14 S. E. 292.

[p] (S. D. 1896) After swearing the jury in a criminal case, the court adjourned until the next morning, when one of such jurors did not appear. Another juror was selected, defendant being given three additional peremptory challenges, none of which were used. Held, that a conviction would not be set aside.—State v. La Croix, 8 S. D. 369, 66 N. W. 944.

[q] (Tex. 1882) A juror, examined on his voir dire, did not disclose the existence of any opinion disqualifying him from serving. He was, however, challenged for cause by the state, and the court, over defendant's objection, sustained the challenge. Held, that defendant was entitled to a new trial, and that it was immaterial that, at the time such juror was rejected, defendant had not exhausted his peremptory challenges.—Wade v. State, 12 Tex. App. 358.

[r] (Tex. 1889) Under Rev. St. art. 3010, disqualifying a juror who has served for six days within a certain time, it was error to dismiss a juror who had served five days only, on a challenge by the state for incompetency, though defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges.—Monk v. State, 27 Tex. App. 450, 11 S. W. 460.

[s] (Tex. 1890) Error in overruling a motion to quash a special venire for discrepancies between it and the copy served on defendant was waived by failure to exhaust peremptory challenges.—Scott v. State, 29 Tex. App. 217, 15 S. W. 814.

[a] (Minn. 1860) Where, in a trial of an indictment for murder, a challenge for actual bias is interposed on the part of the state, and then withdrawn, it may be renewed at any time before the jury is complete.—State v. Dumphey, 4 Minn. 438 (Gil. 340).

[b] (N. Y. 1879) An omission of the clerk to bring into court the box containing the names of the jurors who had already served, as required by Code, § 1059, is waived by the prisoner's withdrawing his challenge made on such ground, although sustained.—Pierson v. People, 18 Hun, 239.

Time for exercising challenges, see post, §§ 619–623.

[a] A party is not, by a waiver of peremptory challenge in the first instance, estopped from challenging a juror after the opposite party has challenged one.
—(Iowa, 1867) Fountain v. West, 23 Iowa, 9, 92 Am. Dec. 405;
(Pa. 1842) Kennedy v. Dale, 4 Watts & S. 176.
(Pa. 1821) Patton v. Ash, 7 Serg. & R. 116.

[b] (Ala. 1872) The allowance of a challenge of a juror, before the jury is completed, to a party who has not exhausted his challenges, is not error, notwithstanding the party has hastily expressed himself satisfied with the juror challenged.—Adams v. Olive, 48 Ala. 551.

[c] (Ala. 1874) In a criminal case, the prisoner's right to challenge a juror peremptorily, if not waived, is not lost until the juror is sworn, or until the oath is tendered to him; and a waiver of the right will not be implied, especially in a case of felony, because the prisoner, after twelve jurors had been drawn and had taken their seats in the jury box, and the places of two who were challenged had been filled, being asked by the court "if he was now satisfied," replied, "I have nothing to say at present," and did not object to any of them until after some had been sworn, when he challenged one of the others, who was rising to take the oath.—Drake v. State, 51 Ala. 30.

[d] (Cal. 1895) The parties alternately exercised their peremptory challenges, and when the panel was filled, on being asked if he was satisfied with the jury, plaintiff stated that he waived his right to challenge for the present, and defendant then waived any challenge. Held, that plaintiff was not afterwards entitled to a peremptory challenge.—Vance v. Richardson, 110 Cal. 414, 42 Pac. 909.

[e] (Del. 1849) The right of striking jurors, though waived as to one challenge by passing the panel, may be used, after the other party has exercised his right, as well on two jurors of the original panel as on two of those newly drawn.—How v. Chesapeake & D. Canal Co., 5 Har. 245.

[f] (Ill. 1887) Under Rev. St. c. 78, § 21, which provides that on the impaneling of a jury the jurors shall be "passed on and accepted in panels of four," a party who has accepted a panel cannot thereafter challenge any member thereof, though the jury has not yet been sworn.—Mayers v. Smith, 25 Ill. App. 67, affirmed (1887) 121 Ill. 442, 13 N. E. 216.

jects to him, observing that he had been inadvertently accepted, and both counsel then challenge him peremptorily, the challenge should be allowed.—Clarke v. Goode, 29 Ky. (6 J. J. Marsh.) 637.

[h] (La.) The state does not waive the right to peremptorily challenge a juror after he has been examined and turned over to the defense.—(1887) State v. Durr, 39 La. Ann. 751, 2 South. 546; (1896) Same v. Wren, 48 La. Ann. 803, 19 South. 745.

[i] (Minn. 1889) The defendant in a criminal trial, who waives his right to challenge a juror peremptorily when the juror is called as prescribed by statute, has not the right to do so after the panel is completed, although the jury has not been sworn.—State v. Scott, 41 Minn. 365, 43 N. W. 62.

[j] (Neb. 1895) Believing that the state was entitled to eight peremptory challenges, the challenging proceeded by the state challenging once, and the defense then twice. After the state exhausted five, and defendant ten, challenges, it was discovered that the state was originally entitled to but six challenges. Held, that it was not error for the court, in order to give the state the last challenge, to hold, after notifying defendant in advance, that by waiving his eleventh challenge he waived his remaining five.—Gravely v. State, 45 Neb. 878, 64 N. W. 452.

[k] (N. Y. 1885) Accepting a juror after the court has ruled that peremptory challenges must be made before the juror takes his seat in the box is not a waiver of the right to peremptorily challenge him before he is sworn.—People v. Carpenter, 16 Abb. N. C. 128.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) After 12 jurors had taken their seats, but before they were sworn, plaintiff's attorney examined them, and stated that he was content with the jury "as then constituted." The defendant then peremptorily challenged two jurors, whose places were supplied. Held, that plaintiff's attorney had not waived his right to then challenge peremptorily one of the original panel.—Dorman v. Broadway R. Co. (City Ct. Brook.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 769.

[m] (Ohio, 1891) Where defendant was entitled to 16 peremptory challenges, and his fifteenth challenge was overruled, and his counsel announced that the next person called as a juror was satisfactory to defendant, and that he was satisfied with the jury as constituted, error in overruling the challenge was without prejudice, since, if the challenge had been sustained, defendant, having but one challenge left, would not have found it necessary to use it; the next juror called being acceptable to him.—McCarthy v. State, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 627.

[o] (Pa. 1839) Where a jury is called to try an issue, and the list of jurors is handed to the counsel for the plaintiff, who declines striking any names therefrom, and hands it over to the counsel for the defendant, who strikes off one of the persons named, the plaintiff's right to challenge is confined to the juror last called, and he cannot object to any of the jurors whose names were on the list at the time it was first handed to him.—Hotz v. Hotz, 2 Ashm. 245.

[q] (Pa. 1861) The commonwealth is not compelled to exercise her right of challenge in the order of calling the jury, so that, if the challenges to the first four called are waived, she cannot afterwards challenge, but is entitled to four peremptory challenges out of all the jurors that may be called at any time before the panel is full; and passing by individual jurors, and permitting them to be challenged by the prisoner, or sworn, is no waiver of the right.—Hartzell v. Commonwealth, 40 Pa. (4 Wright) 462.

[r] (Pa. 1863) Where the allowance of a peremptory challenge to the plaintiff was not excepted to by the defendant, but only the refusal of the court to allow him to peremptorily challenge a new juror after his challenges had been exhausted, the error in allowing such additional challenge was waived.—Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. (9 Wright) 444.

[s] (Pa. 1868) On trial for a misdemeanor, if the commonwealth has waived the right to challenge the first four called, and the defendant has exhausted his challenges, the commonwealth cannot challenge.—Commonwealth v. Frazier, 2 Brewst. 490.

[t] (Pa. 1870) Under Act March 29, 1860, providing that "the plaintiff and defendant shall each have four peremptory challenges," after the parties had alternately exercised their right to challenge three times, and plaintiff declined to challenge again, but defendant challenged the fourth time, the plaintiff was entitled to resume and exercise his right to a fourth challenge, since the statute grants the right of challenge unconditionally and provides no method for its exercise.—Zug v. Printers' Paper Mill, 1 Lanc. Bar, No. 50, p. 1.

[u] (Tex. 1870) In a criminal case it is not error to allow the district attorney to challenge a juror after the panel has been accepted.—Hubotter v. State, 32 Tex. 479.

[v] (Wis. 1883) Where a party who has waived one of his challenges to a jury, under Rev. St. § 2851, by declining to challenge in his turn, afterwards undertakes to exercise the right, and the other party makes no objection at the time, the objection also is to be deemed waived.—Gilchrist v. Brande, 58 Wis. 184, 15 N. W. 817.

Effect of exercise of peremptory challenges, see ante, § 519 [f, j].

[a] (Ga. 1879) Any right to have a special jury taken from the grand jury is waived by selecting without objection a jury from the petit juries.—Milledgeville Mfg. Co. v. Etheridge, 63 Ga. 568.

[b] (Ga. 1891) After a jury has been stricken, it is not error to refuse to allow a restriking because counsel for one of the parties simply states in his place that he had by oversight left on the jury a man who, for reasons alleged, would, in his opinion, be partial and prejudiced against his client; it not appearing that, even if these things were true, any diligence was shown to ascertain the same, or that they might not easily have been known by proper and timely inquiry.—Central R. & Banking Co. v. Kent, 87 Ga. 402, 13 S. E. 502.

[c] (Ind. 1894) A party who demands a struck jury, and then joins in striking it, cannot object to the persons selected simply on the ground that the selection of the list from which the striking was done was improperly made by the clerk, instead of by the jury commissioner.—Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Stein, 140 Ind. 61, 39 N. E. 246.

[b] (U. S. 1820) Before a jury is made up, incompetent jurors who have been summoned may be discharged, and others summoned in their places.—United States v. Dickinson, Fed. Cas. No. 14,957a [Hemp. 1].

[c] (Ark. 1878) The court may, of its own motion, excuse a juror who has been found incompetent after his acceptance by the parties.—Robinson v. State, 33 Ark. 180.

[d] (La. 1894) Where a juror, after examination, was accepted by the state and defendant, and then informed the court of a disqualification in regard to which he had not been questioned, there was no error in discharging him.—State v. West, 46 La. Ann. 1009, 15 South. 418.

[e] (Mich. 1871) Comp. Laws, § 4392, providing that the first 12 persons whose names are drawn and who are approved as indifferent between the parties shall be sworn as the jury to try the cause, does not deprive the court of the power to set aside a juror whose examination satisfies the court that he is not unbiased, though neither party challenge him.—Atlas Min. Co. v. Johnston, 23 Mich. 36.

[f] (Mich. 1890) The court has no right, of its own motion, to discharge a juror with whom both sides are satisfied, without satisfactory cause, and against the protest of a party.—Welch v. Tribune Pub. Co., 83 Mich. 661, 47 N. W. 562, 21 Am. St. Rep. 629, 11 L. R. A. 233.

[g] (Nev. 1876) The court may, without a challenge from either party, upon good cause shown, discharge a juror at any time before he is sworn.—State v. Larkin, 11 Nev. 314.

[h] (N. Y. 1818) A justice has no right, of his own mere motion, without any exception being taken by either party, to challenge the panel of jurors and issue a new venire.—Cross v. Moulton, 15 Johns. 469.

[i] (Tex. 1883) If defendant and state's attorney waive an objection to jurors for bias, the judge is without authority to reject the jurors upon his own motion.—Greer v. State, 14 Tex. App. 179.

[j] (Va. 1892) Code 1887, § 3156, provides that no irregularity in drawing, summoning, returning, or impaneling of jurors shall be sufficient to set aside a verdict, unless the party objecting was injured by such irregularity. Section 3152 gives the court authority to discharge persons summoned as jurors. Held, that there was no such irregularity for a judge in trial court, in the exercise of his discretion, and for cause shown, to reject a man drawn as a juror.—Burch v. Hylton, 89 Va. 441, 16 S. E. 342.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Notwithstanding the enumerated causes of challenge in the Penal Code, the court may, in its discretion, reject such as are unfit or improper persons to sit upon the jury, and may excuse those from serving who, for reasons personal to themselves, ought to be exempt from serving on the jury. So, also, the court may reject any juror who admits himself open to any of the enumerated challenges for cause, without putting him on the prisoner.—State v. Marshall, 8 Ala. 302.

[b] (Iowa, 1866) In an action in which a city is a party, the court has the discretion to reject from the jury taxpayers of such city.—Dively v. City of Cedar Falls, 21 Iowa, 565.

[c] (Kan. 1884) Where counsel, even in a capital case, agree that the court shall name the persons to be summoned to attend as jurors, and that no person shall be named residing in certain townships, and by mistake one is named who resides therein, the court did not err in setting him aside, although such juror on his examination did not appear personally disqualified.—State v. McKinney, 3 Pac. 356.

[d] (Mass. 1855) It is within the discretion of the presiding judge to allow a juror who resides in the same town with the defendant to leave the panel before the commencement of the trial.—Commonwealth v. Hayden, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 18.

[e] (Mich. 1886) When a juror, after his selection, but before the completion of the panel, has exhibited such reckless disregard of his duty as to make it evident that he is unfit to serve, the judge may properly exclude him from the panel.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277, 27 N. W. 539.

[f] (Miss. 1883) It is proper in a criminal case to excuse from service jurors who are already serving on the grand or petit juries; the petit jury being at the time engaged in consultation upon a felony case.—Guice v. State, 60 Miss. 714.

[g] (Miss. 1884) It is discretionary with the trial court in a criminal case to set aside a juror who acknowledges that "he had a sympathy for the boys" on trial.—Smith v. State, 61 Miss. 754.

[h] (Miss. 1884) The court may properly order that the box be purged of the fraudulent names, and the drawing then proceed, upon its appearing during the drawing of a special venire that certain names were fraudulently placed in the box.—Smith v. State, 61 Miss. 754.

[i] (N. Y. 1894) It is in the discretion of the court to exclude a juror on the ground of general incompetency, and because the situation of his business was such that his attention would be distracted.—People v. Spiegel, 75 Hun, 161, 26 N. Y. Supp. 1041, affirmed (1894) 143 N. Y. 107, 38 N. E. 284.

[j] (Pa. 1892) The fact that a man signs a petition to the trial judge, setting out that the signers are informed as to the testimony produced at the former trial, that they are of opinion that the ends of justice will be satisfied by the entry of a plea of murder in the second degree, and that they therefore petition such plea to be accepted in order to save the expense of a second trial,—the judgment in the first having been reversed on appeal,—is sufficient to disqualify him as a juror on the second trial, and it is not error for the judge to reject him, though not challenged by either the prosecution or the defense.—Commonwealth v. Cleary, 148 Pa. 26, 23 Atl. 1110, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 1.

[k] (Tenn. 1859) The court has the power, in a criminal case, before the jurors are sworn, to discharge one of the number upon his persistent refusal to take the oath.—Isaac v. State, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 458.

[l] (Tenn. 1884) The court may discharge a juror for a cause other than one of those expressly specified in the law.—Boyd v. State, 82 Tenn. (14 Lea) 161.

[m] (Tex. 1857) A special venire having been summoned to try a murder case, the judge permitted a jury to be taken therefrom to try another case, and while such jury were out called the murder case for trial, but failed to obtain a full jury from the remainder of the special venire. Thereupon the judge called the other jury into court, swore the several members, who were accepted by the state and defense, and interrogated them as to whether they were on such other jury and had agreed on their verdict, and, on their replying that they were not agreed, discharged them for cause, and sent them back to consider their verdict. Held, that the action of the court was improper, since the court should not excuse a juror as a means of curing its previous improper action in derogation of the prisoner's rights, but that the jury should have been discharged from considering the other case when their services were needed in the murder case, or the murder case should have been postponed till the verdict in the other case was rendered.—Bates v. State, 19 Tex. 122.

[n] (Va. 1853) The court cannot of its own motion, where no challenge is made, without good and sufficient cause, set aside a juror, except for mental or physical disability.—Montague v. Commonwealth, 10 Grat. 767.

[o] (Va. 1853) On a trial for a felony, the court may, without the suggestion of either party, but on its own motion, examine upon oath all who may have been summoned to serve upon the jury touching any disability created by statute, such as infancy or want of freehold or property qualifications; and upon any such disability being thus made to appear, or if it be shown that any one so summoned has been convicted of perjury, such court may lawfully, and should, set aside any such juror of its own action, though neither party objects.—Montague v. Commonwealth, 10 Grat. 767.

—(N. Y. 1894) People v. Spiegal, 75 Hun, 161, 26 N. Y. Supp. 1041, affirmed (1894) 143 N. Y. 107, 38 N. E. 284;

[b] (Ala. 1888) By Code 1886, § 4335, "the court may excuse from service any person summoned as a juror, if he is disqualified or exempt, or for any other reasonable or proper cause, to be determined by the court," and by section 4325 it is made the imperative duty of the court, before administering the oath, to ascertain that the juror possesses the qualifications required by law. Held, that the court had power to excuse one summoned who could not understand the English language sufficiently to qualify him as a juror.—Long v. State, 86 Ala. 36, 5 South. 443.

[c] (Cal. 1867) The proviso of the act which excepts certain counties from the provisions requiring the jurors to understand the language in which the proceedings of the courts are carried on does not deprive a court in one of those counties of the power of excusing jurors who are ignorant of the language.—People v. Arceo, 32 Cal. 40.

[d] (Colo. 1889) It is proper to excuse from the jury a person who is not a citizen of the United States, and who has never declared his intention to become such.—Babcock v. People, 13 Colo. 515, 22 Pac. 817.

[e] (La. 1877) The judge is authorized, on his own motion, to strike a juror from a regular panel, if satisfied that the juror is morally unfit to return a just verdict.—State v. Lartigue, 29 La. Ann. 642.

[f] (Minn. 1882) One called as a juror, and appearing on examination not to have sufficient knowledge of the English language to perform intelligently the duties of a juror, may be excluded by the court on the ground of general disqualification, though there is no challenge for that cause.—State v. Ring, 29 Minn. 78, 11 N. W. 233.

[g] (Tenn. 1848) Where the court decided that a certain juror was competent and he was thereupon accepted by both sides, but not sworn, the question whether he was of age being then raised for the first time by his own statement that he was not, the court properly directed him to stand aside.—Hines v. State, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 597.

[h] (Wis. 1882) The proceedings on a trial being required by Rev. St. § 2578, to be in English, it is within the power of the court to exclude a juror because of his want of knowledge of the English language, though the same is not mentioned in the statute as a ground of challenge.—Sutton v. Fox, 55 Wis. 581, 13 N. W. 477, 42 Am. Rep. 744.

[a] (Idaho, 1888) Where a juror states that he has an opinion in favor of defendant, but that he can act on the evidence and law of the case, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, discharge him.—United States v. Alexander, 2 Idaho, 354, 17 Pac. 746.

[b] (Miss. 1856) It is the duty of the court in a criminal trial to see that the jury is composed of men above all exception. If, on examination, a juror is found to have formed an opinion as to the issue to be passed upon, he may be set aside before either party have had the opportunity to challenge him.—Marsh v. State, 30 Miss. 627.

[c] (Tex. 1880) If the juror answers that a conclusion in his mind as to the guilt or innocence of defendant will not influence his verdict, and the court, on further examination, is not satisfied of his impartiality, he must be discharged, whether challenged or not.—Stagner v. State, 9 Tex. App. 440.

[d] (Tex. 1884) Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, declares that where, on a trial for murder, a juror states under oath that there is an established conclusion as to defendant's guilt or innocence that would influence his verdict, "he shall be discharged." Held that, when a juror thus answers, he should be set aside, whether challenged or not.—Spear v. State, 16 Tex. App. 98.

§ 528. —— Personal opinions and conscientious scruples.

[a] A juror who, after having been accepted by both parties, though not yet sworn, voluntarily states he has conscientious scruples against the infliction of capital punishment, may be rejected by the court.
—(La. 1856) State v. Reeves, 11 La. Ann. 685;

[b] (U. S. 1820) It is no ground of exception that jurors were set aside because they were Quakers, and as such opposed to the infliction of capital punishment, without objection being made by either party, and on their mere statement that they were such.—United States v. Cornell, Fed. Cas. No. 14,868 [2 Mason, 91].

[c] (Ala. 1856) If a juror is accepted by the state, and afterwards by the prisoner, the state's right of challenge is lost, and cannot be again revived, and the court cannot order a juror to stand aside who announces that he has conscientious scruples against capital or penitentiary punishment.—Stalls v. State, 28 Ala. 25.

[d] (Ala. 1861) There is no duty imposed upon the court ex mero motu to set aside a juror on the ground that he has a fixed opinion against capital or penitentiary punishment.—Murphy v. State, 37 Ala. 142.

[e] (Ala. 1867) Under Pen. Code, § 630, the court may, against the objection of the defendant, discharge a juror on account of his opinions on the subject of capital punishment, although it is not obligatory on the court so to act ex mero motu.—Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 325.

[f] (Tex. 1893) Under Pen. Code 1879, art. 609, which provides that the punishment for murder in the first degree shall be death or imprisonment for life, it is the duty of the court to see that a jury is organized which will be willing to assess either penalty, as the facts and circumstances should warrant; and it may, on its own motion, excuse jurors who, on their voir dire, state that they have conscientious scruples against the infliction of the death penalty.—Gonzales v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 508, 21 S. W. 253.

[a] (Cal. 1890) It was proper for the court to discharge those members of a panel who had served on a jury which tried a prior murder case at the same term, where their verdict in that case was so entirely against the evidence as to make it evident that they were unworthy to serve on a subsequent murder case.—People v. Murray, 85 Cal. 350, 24 Pac. 666.

[b] (Nev. 1865) On a trial for murder, the court may excuse a juror where he does not remember whether he was on the grand jury that found the indictment, and the court cannot find the record which would give information as to whether he was on such jury.—State v. Kelly, 1 Nev. 224.

[a] The court, on its own motion, may challenge and set aside a juror for intoxication.
—(Ga. 1859) Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287;
(Miss. 1883) Guice v. State, 60 Miss. 714;
(N. Y. 1823) Bullard v. Spoor, 2 Cow. 430.

[b] (Ga. 1856) The court may excuse a juror for deafness without the prisoner's consent.—Jesse v. State, 20 Ga. 156.

[c] (Ga. 1891) Where, on the trial of a felony, after several of the jury have been selected, but not sworn in chief, one of them becomes sick, it is not error to excuse him.—Ozburn v. State, 87 Ga. 173, 13 S. E. 247.

[d] (La. 1895) The court can excuse a juror, before he has been sworn in a criminal case, on account of his health.—State v. Madison, 47 La. Ann. 30, 16 South. 566.

[e] (Va. 1853) On a trial for felony the court without the suggestion of either party, but by its own motion, may excuse or set aside a juror who is competent in all other respects, but who, from disease, domestic affliction, loss of hearing, or other like cause, is disabled physically from performing the duties of a juror.—Montague v. Commonwealth, 10 Grat. 767.

[a] (La. 1894) The fact that the wife of a juror, selected for the trial of the cause, was a second cousin of the accused, justified the court in discharging him from the jury before completion of the panel.—State v. Hobgood, 46 La. Ann. 855, 15 South. 406.

[b] (S. C. 1891) It is within the discretion of the trial judge to reject a juror because his father and the grandfather of the accused were brothers.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

Effect of discharge, see post, §§ 635, 637.

[a] (U. S. 1823) After the jury is sworn in a capital case, and the cause has been opened, the court cannot, without the prisoner's consent, discharge a juror at his own request.—United States v. Randall, Fed. Cas. No. 16,117 [2 Cranch, C. C. 412].

[b] (Ill. 1843) A court has a discretion, on discovering that a juror has been inadvertently sworn who cannot render a legal verdict, to discharge him.—Thomas v. Leonard, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 556.

[c] (N. Y. 1835) A juror, who is discovered to be incompetent to serve after he has been sworn and taken his seat, may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, be set aside by the court at any time before evidence is given; and this may be done in a capital case, and as well for cause existing before as after the juror was sworn.—People v. Damon, 13 Wend. 351.

[d] (N. Y. 1886) A request to discharge a juror, made after he has been accepted and sworn, but before evidence has been given in a criminal case, is within the discretion of the trial judge.—People v. Beckwith, 103 N. Y.

360, 8 N. E. 662, affirming (1886) 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 335.

[e] (S. C. 1837) A presiding judge may excuse and discharge a juryman on his own application; but, after the parties announce themselves ready for trial before a particular jury, the judge cannot discharge one of that jury, at the instance of one party and contrary to the consent of the other, unless the ground of challenge be legally and properly sustained.—Greer v. Norvill, 3 Hill, 262.

[f] (Tex. 1883) After a juror has been sworn and impaneled in a felony case, the court has no power to excuse him without consent of defendant.—Sterling v. State, 15 Tex. App. 249.

[a] (U. S. 1829) After a juror is sworn, he cannot be challenged, except for a cause subsequently arising; and the court cannot discharge him without consent of the party, although he should state to the court matters which would be proper evidence on a challenge for favor.—United States v. Watkins, Fed. Cas. No. 16,649 [3 Cranch, C. C. 441].

[b] (Ala. 1831) After a juror is accepted and sworn, the court cannot discharge him from the panel, without the consent of the prisoner, for any cause in esse at the time he was sworn, although the cause may have been discovered after he was impaneled.—State v. Williams, 3 Stew. 454.

[c] (Ga. 1851) It is error to discharge one of the jurors impaneled to try a criminal case, on the ground that he had absented himself from the court house without leave, without giving defendant an opportunity to explain the absence and show that the juror did not thereby become disqualified.—Standley v. State, 10 Ga. 82.

[d] (Ill. 1888) It was proper for the court to interpose and withdraw jurors who had been accepted and sworn when it appeared that they were unfit to sit in the case.—Ochs v. People, 25 Ill. App. 379, affirmed (1888) 124 Ill. 399, 16 N. E. 662.

[e] (La 1884) The belief of the judge, apparently well founded, that the jurors already sworn were illegally drawn, justified him in discharging such jurors and in reassigning the case for another day.—State v. Lawson, 36 La. Ann. 275.

[f] (Miss. 1859) At any time before evidence is given to the jury, the court may, of its own motion, remove a juror incompetent from partiality.—McGuire v. State, 37 Miss. 369.

[g] (Nev. 1881) Courts are legally authorized to discharge a juror or a jury, after the jury has been sworn to try the case, whenever from any cause such a necessity exists as to make it apparent that the ends of justice would otherwise be defeated.—State v. Pritchard, 16 Nev. 101.

[a] (Ind. 1878) The court discharged the jury until a specified day of the term, against the objection of the defendant in a criminal case, the trial of which was pending, and also excused three of the jurors, who had expressed an opinion that the defendant was guilty, from returning on that day. When the case was called the defendant demanded to be tried by the full regular panel, and the court offered to send for the three jurors who had been excused, if the defendant requested it. Held, that the action of the court in excusing the jurors was a fair exercise of discretion.—Watson v. State, 63 Ind. 548.

[b] (S. C. 1835) A juror is properly excused before the introduction of evidence, on his own motion, where he states that he has formed an opinion, though the parties had not objected to him as a juror.—Rice v. Sims, 3 Hill, 5.

[c] (S. C. 1876) Where it becomes known, after a jury has been impaneled, that one of the jurors has expressed an opinion in relation to the case, it is not the duty of the court to set aside the juror, where the prisoner declines to make a motion to that effect.—State v. Coleman, 8 S. C. (8 Rich.) 237.

[d] (S. C. 1894) When, after the jury has been sworn in a criminal case, a juror states to the court that he has heard his brother-in-law talk about the case, and has formed and expressed an opinion, the court is not obliged to let the trial proceed with said juror, and, if it do so, there is error.—State v. Cason, 41 S. C. 531, 19 S. E. 918.

[a] (Fla. 1876) If, after the jury is sworn and before testimony is taken, it is discovered that one of the jurors is a foreigner who has taken no steps toward naturalization, the court should discharge him and supply his place with a competent person.—Keech v. State, 15 Fla. 591.

[b] (Mich. 1886) An alien not being qualified to sit on a jury, it is not improper for the court, upon discovering one on the panel after its completion, but before further proceedings in the case, to order such person to stand aside, and another juror to be drawn in his stead, giving permission to the defendant to challenge the other 11 jurors, either peremptorily or for cause.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277, 27 N. W. 539.

[a] (La. 1882) When a juror, after his examination on his voir dire, has been accepted by the prisoner and sworn, the court may yet discharge him upon discovering from the statement and further examination of said juror that he is opposed to capital punishment.—State v. Diskin, 34 La. Ann. 919, 44 Am. Rep. 448.

[b] (Nev. 1896) After a jury has been sworn, and evidence admitted, in a capital case, the court may excuse a juror against defendant's objection on proof that he is opposed to capital punishment, such fact having come to the knowledge of the prosecution during the trial.—State v. Vaughan, 23 Nev. 103, 43 Pac. 193.

[a] (Ky. 1873) Under Cr. Code, § 211, authorizing challenge where a juror was a member of the grand jury that found the indictment, where accused accepts the juror and protests against his discharge by the court after the jury was sworn, the court's action in discharging him and selecting another was error.—O'Brian v. Commonwealth, 72 Ky. (9 Bush) 333.

[b] (Miss. 1876) Where the jury were impaneled and sworn to try a case of murder, and the indictment was being read to the jury, and one of the jurors arose in his place and stated that it then occurred to him for the first time that he was a member of the grand jury who found the bill of indictment, held, that it was competent and within the discretion of the court to direct the juror to stand aside, and substitute another in his stead, and have the whole jury resworn.—Jefferson v. State, 52 Miss. 767.

[a] (Ala. 1889) Sickness of a juror's wife, of such a nature that, in the opinion of her physician, her life depends on her husband's presence, and the knowledge of which incapacitates the juror from performing his duties as such, warrants his discharge, even after the jury has been sworn, especially as Code, § 4453, authorizes the court to discharge a juror on account of his illness, or for any other cause which in the opinion of the court renders it necessary, and such discharge does not operate as an acquittal of defendant.—Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 87, 7 South. 302.

[b] (Ala. 1893) It is not error to excuse a juror, after he has been selected and sworn, because of sickness.—Webb v. State, 100 Ala. 47, 14 South. 865.

[c] (Ala. 1894) After the jury is completed, but before the indictment is read to them, if a juror states that he is sick, and cannot proceed with the trial, the court may excuse him.—Yarbrough v. State, 105 Ala. 43, 16 South. 758.

[d] (Ark. 1894) It was not error to refuse to discharge the jury on account of sickness of one of their members, when the jury were called into court, and told that they would be discharged if the juror who was ill could no longer remain, and that such juror replied that he was about well, and not inconvenienced by remaining.—Johnson v. State, 60 Ark. 45, 28 S. W. 792.

[e] (Ill. 1876) Where one of the jurors is taken ill after a trial has begun, the court may order his discharge.—City of Shawneetown v. Mason, 82 Ill. 337, 25 Am. Dec. 321.

[f] (La. 1887) When, immediately after the swearing of the complete jury, and before any further proceeding is taken, one of the jurors is incapacitated by illness from serving, the judge may excuse him.—State v. Moncla, 39 La. Ann. 868, 2 South. 814.

[g] (La. 1896) If, before the jury has been completely impaneled, one of the jurors, who has been accepted and sworn, is taken ill and cannot serve, it is no ground of complaint that the court should have excused him.—State v. Johnson, 48 La. Ann. 437, 19 South. 476.

[h] (Tenn. 1845) Where a juror in a criminal case becomes physically or mentally unable to proceed with the trial of a case, the court may in its discretion discharge such juror.—State v. Curtis, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 601.

[i] (Tenn. 1845) The court may discharge a juror, in case of felony, after he has been sworn, on the ground of physical inability, without the consent of the prisoner.—Fletcher v. State, 25 Tenn. (6 Humph.) 249.

[j] (Tenn. 1859) Where the court before the completion of the jury excused two jurors selected for the trial of the case, one on the ground of intoxication, and the other for the reason that his wife was very ill, both sides consenting thereto, no error was committed.—Nolen v. State, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 520.

[k] (Tex. 1878) Under Const. art. 5, § 13, giving the remainder, after jurors not exceeding three have been disabled, the power to render the verdict, it is within the discretion of the court to discharge a juror on account of his sickness.—Ray v. State, 4 Tex. App. 450.

[l] (Tex. 1882) Const. art. 5, § 13, provides that "when, pending the trial of any case, one or more jurors * * * may die or be disabled from sitting, the remainder of the jury shall have the power to render the verdict." Held, that mental distress caused by the news that his child is sick does not "disable" a juror within the meaning of such section.—Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Waller, 56 Tex. 331.

[m] (W. Va. 1888) Where, after most of the evidence had been heard in a felony case, a juror was told that his son had just died, and the court certified that it "appeared to the satisfaction of the court that the juror, by reason of his affliction, was unable to discharge his duties as a juror," he was properly discharged.—State v. Davis, 31 W. Va. 390, 7 S. E. 24.

[a] (Ala. 1893) Where a struck jury is demanded by a party to an action, the court may of its own motion examine the jurors from which the struck jury is to be impaneled, as to their qualifications, and excuse those who are for any reason disqualified; it being entirely proper for it to ascertain if any were disqualified before the parties were required to strike from the list such as were deemed objectionable.—Steed v. Knowles, 97 Ala. 573, 12 South. 75, following Dothard v. Denson (1882) 72 Ala. 541, and Davis v. Hunter (1844) 7 Ala. 135.

[b] (Ala. 1893) The statute provided that for the trial of a capital felony the court should order the sheriff to summon not less than 50, nor more than 100, persons, including the regular jurors for the week, the court to inquire into and pass on the qualifications of all who appeared in response; the names of all whom it might hold competent to be listed, and the defense to strike 2, and the prosecution 1, till 12 remained, who were to be sworn as the jury. Held, that the court had no power, ex mero motu, to discharge a person because he had been summoned by a wrong Christian name, and such error would be presumed prejudicial.—Sullivan v. State, 102 Ala. 135, 15 South. 264, 48 Am. St. Rep. 22.

[a] (Ga. 1883) A person over 60 years of age not being a qualified juror (Code, § 4681), the court, at the request of such juror, may excuse him against defendant's objection, even though defendant used peremptory challenges to secure such person as a juror.—Doyal v. State, 70 Ga. 134.

[b] (Kan.) It is not a substantial error for the district court to discharge a juror during the time the jury are being impaneled, although the juror be discharged for an insufficient reason, where an unexceptionable jury is afterwards obtained, and where the party complaining has not exhausted his peremptory challenges.—(1874) Stout v. Hyatt, 13 Kan. 232; (1879) Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Franklin, 23 Kan. 74.

[c] (Mass. 1885) In an action against a city, the direction by the court to the jury that any residents or taxpayers of defendant city must leave their seats does not deprive plaintiff of the statutory right (Pub. St. c. 170, § 35) to have the jurors examined on oath and challenged.—Daniels v. City of Lowell, 139 Mass. 56, 29 N. E. 222.

[d] (Mich. 1887) Where a juror did not appear to be very conversant with the English language, held, that the judge might of his own motion excuse a disqualified juror, although the plaintiff objecting had exhausted all his peremptory challenges.—O'Neil v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 67 Mich. 560, 35 N. W. 162.

[e] (Tenn. 1857) In a capital case, a juror, after taking his seat in the box, stated to the court that he remembered having formed and expressed an opinion as to the prisoner's guilt. The court asked the counsel for the prisoner what they proposed to do with reference to the juror. They replied, that "they had nothing to say." The court discharged the juror, allowing the prisoner the same number of challenges as if the juror had been challenged for cause. Held, that the court erred in discharging the juror, on the ground that his incompetency did not sufficiently appear.—Norfleet v. State, 36 Tenn. (4 Sneed) 340.

§ 541. Nature and right in general.

[a] (Ga. 1859) If the panel be not full, on the impaneling, the prisoner must challenge the array.—Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287.

[b] (Ill. 1889) A challenge to the array must be based upon objection to all the jurors composing the panel, and taken in apt time.—Clears v. Stanley, 34 Ill. App. 338.

[c] (Ind. 1884) Objections to the manner of drawing the jury cannot be made by a motion venire de novo.—Doolittle v. State, 93 Ind. 272.

[d] (Iowa, 1855) Whether a challenge to the array of petit jurors will lie in a civil case, quære.—Suttle v. Batie, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 141.

[e] (Iowa, 1875) There is no provision in Code, § 4398, providing for challenges to the jury, for a challenge to the "array."—State v. Davis, 41 Iowa, 311.

[f] (Iowa, 1882) Of the 15 jurors drawn for the term only 12 appeared, and one of those was excused by the court, and a bystander was put on the jury by direction of the court. Held, that whatever the duty imposed on the court by Code 1873, § 232, to secure the attendance of a sufficient number of drawn jurors by an additional drawing, defendant should have challenged the talesmen as they were called, and not the panel, to take advantage of such conduct.—Buford v. McGetchie, 60 Iowa, 298, 14 N. W. 790.

[g] (Miss. 1851) Under Hutch. Code, p. 888, art. 10, § 1, the circuit courts, except in capital cases, have no authority to entertain a challenge to the array, or to quash a venire facias, for any cause whatsoever.—Baker v. State, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 243.

[h] (N. C. 1864) An action on the case for fraudulently removing a debtor was tried, and a verdict was found for the defendant. In an action against the same defendant by another plaintiff for the same act of removing, the jury which had tried the former action was tendered and challenged by the plaintiff. Held, that this was a challenge to the polls, and not to the array.—Baker v. Harris, 60 N. C. 271.

[i] (N. C. 1869) If a prisoner wishes to take advantage of an objection to the manner of summoning a petit jury and special venire, he must do so by challenging the array.—State v. Douglass, 63 N. C. 500.

[j] (Ohio, 1867) Objection to the manner of selecting and constituting a jury cannot be made by plea in abatement. It must be by challenge.—Huling v. State, 17 Ohio St. 583.

[k] (Tex. 1887) There can be no challenge to the array of jurors selected by the jury commissioners.—Williams v. State, 24 Tex. App. 32, 5 S. W. 658.

[a] (La. 1884) Acts 1879, No. 44, requiring a challenge to the array to be made on the first day of the term, supersedes all previous acts on the same subject-matter, whether special or general.—State v. Coudier, 36 La. Ann. 291.

Specific defects as grounds for challenge to array, see ante, §§ 265–390.

[a] A challenge to the array must be based upon some irregularity affecting the whole panel.—(U. S. 1895) Turner v. United States, 66 Fed. 280, 13 C. C. A. 436, 30 U. S. App. 90;

(W. Va. 1882) State v. Cartright, 20 W. Va. 32;

(Wis. 1857) Conkey v. Northern Bank, 6 Wis. 447.

[b] (Cal. 1874) When the panel is formed from persons whose names are not drawn as jurors, a challenge to the venire is in effect a challenge to the panel; and in such case there is but one ground for challenge, which is that the officer who summoned the jurors was biased.—People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 174.

[c] (Cal. 1894) Under Pen. Code, § 1064, providing that when the panel is formed from persons not named as jurors a challenge may be taken to the panel on account of bias of the officer summoning them, a challenge to a panel summoned by special venire will not lie on the ground, that the panel were nonresidents of the county.—People v. Wallace, 101 Cal. 281, 35 Pac. 862.

[d] (La. 1824) It is not ground of challenge to the array that the panel is larger than is required by law, but the objection should be taken by challenge to the individuals drawn in excess of the legal number.—Ramos v. Bringier, 2 Mart. (N. S.) 193; Debuys v. Mollere, Id. 625.

[e] (La. 1894) In the absence of fraud or wrong committed in the drawing or summoning of the general venire of jurors to the injury of defendant, a motion to quash the venire cannot prevail; that being the provision of Acts 1877, No. 44, § 10.—State v. Saintes, 46 La. Ann. 547, 15 South. 160.

[f] (Miss. 1870) A venire facias can be quashed only for some misconduct of the sheriff, or for some manifest error in selecting, drawing, or summoning the jurors otherwise than as provided by law.—Durrah v. State, 44 Miss. 789.

[g] (N. Y. 1855) Any irregularity in summoning the jury is ground of challenge to the array.—City of New York v. Mason, 1 Abb. Prac. 344.

[h] (N. C. 1886) A challenge to the array can only be taken when there is partiality or misconduct in the sheriff, or some irregularity in making out the list.—State v. Speaks, 94 N. C. 865.

[i] (Tex. 1880) A challenge to the array of petit jurors lies only upon the grounds and in the manner prescribed in Cr. Code, arts. 623–626.—Woodard v. State, 9 Tex. App. 412.

[j] (Tex. 1884) Under Rev. St. art. 3074, a challenge to the array of jurors can only be entertained upon the ground that the officer who summoned them acted corruptly, and willfully summoned jurors known to be prejudiced against the party challenging or biased in favor of the adverse party.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Jessee, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 406.

[a] A challenge to the array or motion to quash the venire comes too late after the jury has been sworn.

(Pa. 1839) Commonwealth v. Sallager, 4 Pa. Law J. 511.

[b] (U. S. 1876) An objection that persons summoned as "bystanders" were not then present in court should be taken as ground of challenge to the array, before the polls are drawn.—United States v. Loughery, Fed. Cas. No. 15,631 [13 Blatchf. 267].

[c] (Ala. 1840) If a cause be tried by a jury summoned by order of the court from the bystanders, the irregularity, if any, is waived, unless excepted to at the trial.—Crawford v. Creagh, 1 Ala. 592.

[d] (Ala. 1893) A motion to quash the venire before the cause has been submitted to the jury, and before defendant has been called on to announce whether he is ready for trial, is made in proper time.—Peters v. State, 100 Ala. 10, 14 South. 896.

[e] (Cal. 1893) In a criminal case, an objection that the judge ordering the drawing of the panel was disqualified should be raised by challenging the panel, and cannot be raised for the first time after verdict.—People v. Ah Lee Doon, 31 Pac. 933.

[f] (Ga. 1873) In a criminal cause, after a jury has been made up, it is no good ground to quash or set aside the panel that there is upon it one incompetent juryman, or that during the making up of the jury persons were put upon the prisoner as proposed jurymen whose names were not on the legal jury list.—Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598.

[g] (Ga. 1879) An objection that the sheriff, who selected and summoned the tales jurors necessary to complete the panel, was plaintiff in a like case pending against the same defendant and by same complainant, involving the same property, came too late after verdict.—Daniel v. Frost, 62 Ga. 697.

[h] (Ga. 1882) After verdict, a party cannot object that a special jury was stricken from the panel of traverse jurors.—Maddox v. Cunningham, 68 Ga. 431, 45 Am. Rep. 500.

[j] (Ind. 1860) It appeared that the sheriff asked the persons summoned whether they had any conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilty in a capital case. Held, that the proceeding was improper, but that, as it did not appear that from the answers given him he rejected any person otherwise competent, or that he acted from corrupt motives, or that the defendant was injured thereby, the objection, first made after verdict, should be overruled.—Joy v. State, 14 Ind. 139.

[k] (Ind. 1894) Where a party does not object to the panel when the jury comes into the jury box to try the case, he cannot afterwards object to the manner of selecting the jury, though he previously moved to reject the jurors selected.—Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Stein, 140 Ind. 61, 39 N. E. 246.

[l] (Iowa, 1880) Code 1873, § 4391, provides that "when the indictment is called for trial, and before drawing the jury, either party may require the names of all the jurors in the panel to be called, and an attachment may issue against those who are absent; but the court may, in its discretion, wait or not for the return of the attachment." Held that, where some of the petit jurors were absent, and a jury was called from those who appeared, it was too late for defendant to challenge the array on the ground that it was not made up from all who were summoned to appear.—State v. Miller, 53 Iowa, 84, 4 N. W. 838.

[o] (La. 1889) Acts 1877, No. 44, provides that all objections to the manner of drawing juries, or to any defect or irregularity that can be pleaded against any array or venire, must be urged on the first day of the term. Held, that a motion to set aside a venire on the ground that the clerk had not been qualified as a jury commissioner before he assisted in the drawing thereof, not made on the first day of the term, nor made until nearly one year after the finding of the indictment, came too late, no exceptional circumstances being shown.—State v. Ashworth, 41 La. Ann. 683, 6 South. 556.

[p] (La. 1889) Objections to the qualifications of a jury commissioner cannot be taken after verdict, notwithstanding the affidavit of defendant that he did not know of the disqualification of such commissioner until after trial and verdict.—State v. Tisdale, 41 La. Ann. 338, 6 South. 579.

[q] (La.) When the indictment has been presented at a previous term, the objections to the venire must be urged on the first day of the subsequent term, unless it is shown that the facts on which the objections are based were not known by defendant until after the commencement of the term.—(1892) State v. Curtis, 44 La. Ann. 320, 10 South. 784; (1894) Same v. Labauve, 46 La. Ann. 548, 15 South. 172.

[r] (Minn. 1858) In the absence of fraud or collusion in the selection of a jury, where it is not shown that the party objecting was prejudiced by the irregularity, an objection to the array, or to a single juror, made after verdict, is too late.—Steele v. Malony, 1 Minn. 347 (Gil. 257).

[s] (Miss. 1851) In civil cases, it is too late, after verdict, to object to the jury that have sat in the trial of a case after they have rendered their verdict, because they have not been regularly summoned on the venire, or as talesmen from the bystanders, or because the venire facias had not been regularly drawn from the box.—Shotwell v. Hamblin, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 156, 55 Am. Dec. 83.

[t] (Mo. 1890) After verdict, it was discovered that the prevailing party was a member of the county court that selected the panel from which the jury in the case was drawn. Held, that an objection thereto should have been made by challenge to the array before trial, and came too late after verdict, notwithstanding the objector's want of knowledge of the fact until after verdict, unless substantial injustice be done by such ruling.—Boteler v. Roy, 40 Mo. App. 234.

[u] (Neb. 1892) Where the clerk of the court and deputy sheriff are interested in the result of the action, and hence in drawing the jury and talesmen, objection to their acting must be made before the trial is ended.—Leavitt v. Sizer, 35 Neb. 80, 52 N. W. 832.

[uu] (N. J. 1889) Where no objection was made until the case was called for trial, it is not good cause for challenge to the array that one of the jurors struck for the trial was dead, another an exempt fireman, and another not regularly summoned, there being no allegation that there was design or collusion for the purpose of affecting the trial, or that the defendants were prejudiced, since the statute gives ample protection for such defects or omissions by an award of tales to fill the panel.—Smith v. Smith, 52 N. J. Law (23 Vroom) 207, 19 Atl. 255.

[v] (N. Y. 1855) Although a justice of the district court has no power to issue a venire to summon a jury, yet, if a jury so drawn is not challenged on such ground until after it has been impaneled and sworn, the objection is waived.—City of New York v. Mason, 4 E. D. Smith, 142.

[vv] (Pa. 1853) Under Act Feb. 21, 1814, providing that going to trial on the merits shall be a waiver of any errors or defects in the precept or venire, or the drawing, summoning, and returning of jurors, it is too late, after verdict, to object to mistakes in the process as to the names of members of the panel or of the jurors who rendered the verdict.—Jewell v. Commonwealth, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 94.

[w] (Pa. 1894) Though Act April 10, 1867, regulating the drawing of juries, provides that the oath of the jury commissioners shall be the one required of the sheriff and county commissioners under Act 1834, § 87, the fact that the oath by the commissioners was merely to faithfully fill the jury wheel, in performance of their official duties, is not ground for reversal, where appellant knew of the irregularity at the time of the application for a continuance, but did not file his motion to quash the array until four months later, when the case was called for trial.—Klemmer v. Mt. Penn Gravity R. Co., 163 Pa. 521, 30 Atl. 274, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 142.

[ww] (Tenn. 1891) Where the judge, in the absence of defendant, ordered a special venire to be summoned, the error, if any, was waived by defendant's failure to object when the successor of the judge, in defendant's presence, adjourned the trial and directed the members of the special venire to attend on the adjourned day.—Hannum v. State, 90 Tenn. 647, 18 S. W. 269.

[x] (Va. 1885) The omission to direct a new venire facias, as required by Code 1860, c. 208, in a case of felony, when required, is an error apparent on the record, which is not waived by failure of defendant to object thereto before the jury is sworn.—Hall v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 555.

[xx] (Va. 1890) Under Code, § 3156, which provides that no irregularity in any writ of venire facias shall avail to set aside a verdict unless the objecting party was injured thereby, or unless he objected before the jury was sworn, it is no ground for arresting judgment that the list accompanying a writ of venire contained more than the statutory number of names, or that it purported to be "for trial of felonies" generally, instead of some particular felony, where no objection to the writ was made before the jury was sworn; but the action of the court in ordering an additional number of persons to complete the panel without a second writ is good ground for arresting judgment, though the objection was not raised before, since the statute does not obviate the need of a venire.—Vawter v. Commonwealth, 87 Va. 245, 12 S. E. 339.

[y] (Va. 1891) A venire facias should be quashed for irregularity on its face, though it has been exhausted by the answer of the venire. —Muscoe v. Commonwealth, 87 Va. 460, 12 S. E. 790.

[yy] (Va. 1891) Code, § 3156, provides that in civil cases no irregularity in any writ of venire facias shall be sufficient to set aside a verdict unless the party making the objection was injured thereby, or unless the objection was made before the swearing of the jury. By Act Jan. 18, 1888, this provision is made to apply to felony cases. Held, that this does not apply where the record fails to show any venire in a felony case, and the omission of the writ is a fatal error.—Lewis v. Commonwealth, 12 S. E. 1050.

[zz] (Va. 1894) Code 1887, § 3156, requiring objections to a writ of venire facias in civil cases to be made before the swearing of the jury, and extended to criminal cases by Act Jan. 18, 1888, only cures irregularities in the venire facias, leaving untouched felony cases in which there is no venire at all.—Myers v. Commonwealth, 90 Va. 785, 20 S. E. 152.

[b] (La. 1891) As the statute provides that no defect or irregularity in the drawing or summoning of the jury shall be sufficient cause to challenge the venire if it shall not appear that some fraud has been practiced, or some great wrong committed, that would work a great or irreparable injury, a motion to quash an indictment on a challenge to the general venire, based on alleged irregularities in the manner of drawing and summoning the jurors, is demurrable if it alleges neither fraud, wrong, nor injury.—State v. Simmons, 43 La. Ann. 991, 10 South. 382.

[c] (Mass. 1824) Where the jury to assess damages caused by laying out a turnpike road was summoned and impaneled by a deputy sheriff, and it was objected verbally on behalf of the turnpike, before the jury was impaneled, and afterwards at the court of sessions, that another deputy of the same sheriff was a member of the corporation, and that therefore, pursuant to St. 1802, c. 135, § 1, the jury should be summoned and impaneled by a coroner, and the sessions nevertheless accepted their verdict, it was held that the proceedings in relation to such verdict might be quashed on certiorari.—Barre Turnpike Corp. v. Appleton, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 430.

[d] (Nev. 1885) Since, under Comp. Laws, § 1968, the court must decide on an objection to a jury for implied bias, and triors must be appointed if the objection is for actual bias, a challenge, on the ground "that the deputy sheriff who summoned 40 of said jurors was biased against defendant," is insufficient, for failure to state whether actual or implied bias is charged.—State v. Gray, 19 Nev. 212, 8 Pac. 456.

[e] (N. J. 1896) An objection that the jury list was not struck from the jury book of the sheriff, "as required by law," is too general, and will not avail on error.—Fowler v. State, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 423, 34 Atl. 682.

[f] (Tex. 1877) Where on a trial for murder, defendant's exceptions to two supplementary venires issued in consequence of the exhaustion of the original venire, on the ground that they were not summoned according to law, were overruled, and his bill of exceptions failed to show wherein the law was disregarded, it will be presumed that the court below conformed to the provisions of the law.—Swofford v. State, 3 Tex. App. 76.

[g] (Tex. 1896) That the names of 26 jurors were drawn, instead of 24, as required by statute, cannot be taken advantage of by a general objection to the manner of organizing the jury. The objection should be taken specifically.—Jones v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 433, 35 S. W. 975.

[h] (Wis. 1857) A challenge to the array must be certain and specific.—Conkey v. Northern Bank, 6 Wis. 447.

[a] (Idaho, 1887) Under the criminal practice, an exception to the challenge to the panel admits the facts stated therein.—People v. Armstrong, 2 Idaho, 275, 13 Pac. 342.

§ 547. Affidavits and other evidence.

[a] (Cal. 1895) Where a deputy sheriff, who has summoned jurors on a special venire, is challenged for bias under Pen. Code, § 1064, and declares on his examination that he has no bias or prejudice against the defendant, he may be asked by the court whether, if he were sworn as a juror, he could and would give defendant a fair trial.—People v. Ryan, 108 Cal. 581, 41 Pac. 451.

[b] (La. 1889) The testimony of the clerk as to the neglect of the jury commissioner in taking from the venire box the names of disqualified, absent, and dead jurors, does not contradict or vary the venire previously drawn.—State v. Nockum, 41 La. Ann. 689, 6 South. 729; Same v. Riley, 41 La. Ann. 693, 6 South. 730.

[c] (Minn.) On challenge to the panel of petit jurors, testimony of the clerk of the district court that a list of petit jurors was properly drawn, and that the certificate to the contrary is erroneous, is admissible under Gen. St. 1866, c. 116, § 9, allowing officers charged with the drawing of the panel to testify as to its regularity.—(1868) State v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341 (Gil. 315); (1889) Same v. Brecht, 41 Minn. 50, 42 N. W. 602.

[d] (Mo. 1894) On challenge to the array, the court properly refused to admit evidence to contradict its own records in the case.—State v. Clark, 121 Mo. 500, 26 S. W. 562.

[e] (Neb. 1880) Where it appears from the affidavit on motion to quash that one M. W. H. was summoned as a juror at the preceding term, and also a person of the same name at the present term, and there is no allegation that they are the same person, the affidavit is insufficient.—Clark v. Saline County, 9 Neb. 516, 4 N. W. 246.

[f] (Neb. 1892) A motion to quash the panel of jurors because not drawn in proportion to the number of electors of the several precincts of a county, verified by plaintiff's attorney upon mere "belief," was insufficient to justify the court in quashing the panel under the Code.—Weeping Water Electric Light Co. v. Haldeman, 35 Neb. 139, 52 N. W. 892.

[g] (Tex. 1896) A party wishing to challenge the array of jurors must make a motion "in writing, setting forth distinctly the grounds of such challenge," supported by his own affidavit or that of some credible person, as prescribed by Code Cr. Proc. art. 626.—Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 618.

[a] (Fla. 1893) Where the county commissioners selected 248 names, instead of from 290 to 310, as provided by Laws 1891, c. 4015, to constitute a list from which grand and petit jurors were to be drawn, the presumption is, in the absence of any showing that they abused the discretionary powers conferred upon them by the statute, that they performed their duty.—English v. State, 31 Fla. 356, 12 South. 689.

[b] (Ill. 1882) Rev. St. 1874, p. 631, c. 78, § 8, provides in what manner jurors shall be selected and summoned for the term of the circuit court. Id. p. 342, c. 37, § 110, provides that, unless the court shall otherwise order, the jury for the law term of the county court shall be drawn and summoned in the same manner as juries are drawn and summoned for the circuit court, and also provides that, when a jury is not summoned in such manner, the court may, on the first day of each term, call all the cases for trial on the docket to ascertain what cases are to be tried by jury, and, if a jury shall be demanded in any case, the judge shall order a venire for 12 jurors, unless the parties consent to a less number, and the sheriff shall then summon such jurors from the body of the county, and the court may retain such jury to try all jury cases for trial at such term. Held that, where a jury in a county court was not drawn as provided by chapter 78, § 8, it would be presumed that it was drawn as provided by chapter 37, § 110, in order to support the judgment.—Barr v. People, 106 Ill. 110.

[c] (Ill. 1887) Where the circuit court orders the clerk to issue a special venire to the sheriff for a given number of jurors, it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the contingency provided by Rev. St. c. 78, § 12, existed, which authorizes the action of the court.—People v. Board of Sup'rs, 23 Ill. App. 386.

[d] (Ill. 1888) Under Rev. St. c. 78, § 12, providing that if, at the opening of a term of court, the panel of petit jurors shall not be full, the clerk shall repair to the office of the county clerk, and draw more jurors, till the panel be filled, and that if, before that time, a jury is needed, the court shall direct the sheriff to summon, etc., where the court orders the clerk to issue a special venire to the sheriff for a given number of jurors, no proof to the contrary being shown, it will be presumed that the clerk repaired to the office of the county clerk, and drew the jurors.—People v. Board of Sup'rs, 125 Ill. 334, 17 N. E. 802.

[e] (Mich. 1887) In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the officers charged with the drawing and summoning of jurors have faithfully and correctly performed their duty in the premises.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466, 35 N. W. 72.

[f] (Minn. 1868) On challenge to the panel of petit jurors it appeared that the list was drawn at a regular meeting of the board of commissioners in January, 1867. Held, that it would be presumed that such list was legally drawn at the annual meeting of the board in January, as required by law.—State v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341 (Gil. 315).

[g] (Mo. 1886) Where it does not appear that regular jurors were not engaged in the trial of other causes, an additional panel, ordered for the trial of a particular case, will be presumed to have been properly drawn.—State v. Gleason, 88 Mo. 582.

[h] (N. Y. 1890) It is improper for the justice to instruct the constable that the parties to an action were farmers, and wanted a farmer's jury, and that he was not to summon jurors from the village; but, in the absence of anything to the contrary, it will be assumed that the constable did his duty, and summoned a jury without reference to any particular class of men.—Gibbons v. Van Alstyne, 56 Hun, 639, 9 N. Y. Supp. 156.

[i] (Pa. 1831) It is not necessary that it should appear on the return of the precept directed to the sheriff, commanding him to summon a jury, that the jury have been drawn according to law, but it will be presumed that the sheriff, who returns his writ executed, has proceeded legally, until the contrary is shown.—Commonwealth v. Green, 1 Ashm. 289.

[j] (S. C. 1892) Under Gen. St. § 2257, providing that, in case of an irregularity in drawing a jury, it shall be lawful for the resident circuit judge "to issue his order to the board of jury commissioners * * * to proceed to draw jurors," where the commissioners are served with a copy of such an order, and draw jurors as required therein, they are presumed to have acted under the order, and the drawing is valid, though previous to the drawing they were also served with a writ of venire facias, requiring such drawing to be made.—State v. Toland, 36 S. C. 515, 15 S. E. 599; Same v. Dearing, Id.

[k] (Tex. 1882) Rev. St. art. 3027, provides that the county court shall, at the January and July terms in each year, appoint three jury commissioners. Article 3022 provides that if, from any cause, commissioners should not be selected or should fail to act, or the panels be set aside or the list lost or destroyed, the court shall proceed to supply jurors, and may appoint commissioners for the purpose. Held that, where the record showed an appointment of commissioners by the county court at the May term, it would be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that ground existed for the exercise of discretionary power conferred by section 3022.—O'Bryan v. State, 12 Tex. App. 118.

[l] (Tex. 1889) Rev. St. art. 3032, requires that the district court shall, at each term, appoint jury commissioners, who shall select jurors to serve during the several weeks of the succeeding term, and that the said commissioners shall certify the several lists of names to be the lists drawn by them for the said several weeks, which lists shall be sealed in separate envelopes, indorsed, "Lists of Petit Jurors for the ——— Week of the ——— Term of the ——— Court of ——— County." Defendant's motion to quash the special venire was based upon the fact that the several lists were headed "Lists of Jurors for the April Term," instead of, properly, the May term. The bill of exceptions did not show, nor did it otherwise appear, that the envelopes inclosing said lists were not properly indorsed. Held that, as the statute does not require the "headings of the lists" to be indorsed in like manner as the envelopes, the presumption obtained in favor of the proper return of the lists.—Giebel v. State, 28 Tex. App. 151, 12 S. W. 591.

[m] (Va. 1888) Where a judge certified that he was incompetent, by reason of connection, to try a case, but furnished a list of names and issued a venire facias for a jury, which was quashed by the trial judge, who issued a new venire, using the same names, it will be presumed that he used due discretion in selecting the names.—Waller v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 492, 5 S. E. 364.

[a] (U. S. 1800) The fact that a partial juror has been returned is no reason for inferring partiality in the sheriff, so as to furnish ground for challenge to the array.—United States v. Callender, Fed. Cas. No. 14,709.

[b] (Ala. 1846) Under the Code a challenge to the array or a plea in abatement to the panel invokes the inquiry only whether the jury has been selected in the mode directed, and on such issue the certificate of the board is conclusive.—State v. Brooks, 9 Ala. 9.

[d] (Ark. 1888) The fact that the sheriff, who held defendant in custody on charge of assault, made the affidavit on which defendant was held for murder on the death of the person assaulted, is not sufficient evidence of the sheriff's bias to sustain a challenge to the array of talesmen summoned by him.—Mabry v. State, 50 Ark. 492, 8 S. W. 823.

[e] (Ill. 1866) The simple fact that a sheriff excused without authority a portion of a regular panel of jurors is not sufficient of itself to warrant the conclusion that he acted corruptly, or that the parties were prejudiced by his action.—Ayers v. Metcalf, 39 Ill. 307.

[f] (Mo. 1895) Where a party to an action makes affidavit that the sheriff is prejudiced against him, and asks for an order that the coroner summon the jury, the trial court is not conclusively bound by such affidavit.—H. T. Simon Gregory Dry Goods Co. v. McMahan, 61 Mo. App. 499, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 730.

[g] (Neb. 1880) Though the failure of the county commissioners to select jurors from the several precincts in the county in proportion to the number of persons therein competent to serve on grand and petit juries, as required by statute, is good cause for challenge to the array, yet, where the affidavit filed on the motion to quash fails to state the whole number of persons competent to serve on grand and petit juries in the several precincts of the county, it is not sufficient to justify the court in setting aside the panel.—Clark v. Board of Com'rs of Saline County, 9 Neb. 516, 4 N. W. 246.

[h] (Ohio, 1880) That the prosecuting attorney handed the bailiff, a personal enemy, a list of names from which to select talesmen, saying that they were all good business men, and that he was afraid the other side might set up the jury on him, and that when accused's counsel heard of it, and knew that two men on the list had been placed on the jury, he insisted on proceeding to trial, does not show collusion of the prosecuting attorney with accused, justifying discharging the jury, within Rev. St. § 7313, authorizing the court to discharge the jury, without prejudice to the prosecution, for "accident or calamity."—State v. Hoffman, 5 Wkly. Law Bul. 875.

[a] (U. S. 1800) Principal challenges to the array, or the whole jury at once, are always for partiality in the sheriff, and not in the jurors, and such challenges are to be determined by the court, whereas challenges for favor, in the particular jurors, are to be determined by triors sworn by the court.—United States v. Callender, Fed. Cas. No. 14,709.

[b] (Ill. 1888) Where the court erroneously sustained an oral demurrer to a challenge to the array, but afterwards allowed the state's attorney to file a nunc pro tunc demurrer and answer thereto, which answer, if true, was sufficient to sustain the overruling of the challenge, and offered to allow defendants to reply to the answer and offer evidence, the error was cured; and it is no objection that defendant had already used a peremptory challenge upon this array, which the court did not offer to restore, since, if the challenge to the array had been sustained, the necessary effect would be to restore the peremptory challenge used.—McDonald v. People, 25 Ill. App. 350, reversed (1888) 126 Ill. 150, 18 N. E. 817, 9 Am. St. Rep. 547.

[c] (Iowa, 1880) The court may direct in what form evidence shall be presented upon the trial of a challenge to a panel of jurors.—State v. Linde, 54 Iowa, 139, 6 N. W. 168.

[d] (Kan. 1886) Where 26 persons are summoned as petit jurors, and it is affirmatively shown on the part of the defendant that 2 or 3 of the panel are not eligible, the court can purge the jury without sustaining a challenge to the array.—State v. Whisner, 35 Kan. 271, 10 Pac. 852.

[e] (La. 1879) After the judge has set aside, in one case, a whole venire drawn for that term, he cannot afterwards, during that term, in another case, hold such a venire to be good.—State v. Revells, 31 La. Ann. 387; Same v. Smith, Id. 406.

[f] (Mass. 1878) In the New England states, challenges to the array are usually tried by the court.—Commonwealth v. Walsh, 124 Mass. 32.

[g] (Mass. 1880) If a challenge to the array is made without legal ground, the fact that it is overruled without replication filed affords no ground of exception.—Provident Inst. for Sav. v. Burnham, 128 Mass. 458.

[h] (Mich. 1890) Defendant challenged the array, which challenge the court sustained, and discharged the panel. Held, that he is estopped in another suit to allege that the court acted erroneously in discharging all the jurors, as the objection went to all of them.—Robinson v. Mulder, 81 Mich. 75, 45 N. W. 505.

[i] (Minn. 1889) The challenge will be presumed to have been tried and determined on legal and sufficient evidence.—State v. Brecht, 41 Minn. 50, 42 N. W. 602.

[j] (Nev. 1885) Failure of a party challenging a jury panel to ask for triors to settle the issue of bias, and submission of evidence to the court, is a waiver of the examination by triors, and the decision of the court is not reviewable.—State v. Gray, 19 Nev. 212, 8 Pac. 456.

[k] (N. J. 1795) Where the array is challenged, the triors are to be appointed by the court from the panel, unless there are special objections, when persons not on the panel may be appointed.—Lee v. Evaul, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 283.

[l] (N. Y. 1891) The record in a criminal case, after stating that defendant challenged the array on the ground that the officer who summoned the jury was disqualified by reason of a certain interest in the proceeding, continued as follows: "People object. No testimony offered to sustain challenge. Challenge overruled." Held, that it appeared from such record entry, not that there was an exception to the sufficiency of the facts alleged as a ground of challenge (Code Cr. Proc. § 364), but that such facts were denied, as provided by Code Cr. Proc. § 366, and, no evidence being offered, the challenge was properly overruled.—People v. Wilber, 61 Hun, 620, 15 N. Y. Supp. 435.

[m] (N. C. 1868) A successful challenge to the array of the original panel does not necessarily affect the competency of the special venire.—State v. Owen, 61 N. C. 425.

[n] (S. C. 1891) On the call of a case for murder defendant challenged the array of both petit and grand juries, and his challenges were overruled, and a continuance had. At the next term the case was called before a different circuit judge, and the challenges were again presented. The judge stated that "as the same questions had been presented for the consideration" of his colleague, who "had ruled upon them, he would not disturb the ruling." Held, that this was not a ruling that the judge was bound by the previous ruling, but merely that he would not disturb it.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

[o] (Va. 1887) A motion was made to quash the venire facias, because the jury was composed of colored men. The court, in overruling the motion, assigned as a reason that the prisoner and prosecutrix were colored, and the jury was composed of intelligent men qualified to serve as jurors. Held, that the reason assigned by the judge for refusing to quash the writ is not proof that it controlled the judge in ordering them to be summoned, and the motion was properly overruled.—Coleman v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 1, 3 S. E. 873.

[b] (Ind. 1860) Though 2 Rev. St. c. 372, § 84, provides that, when the jurors are called, each may be examined on oath by either party as to whether he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and upon such examination, and other questions put by leave, the court may determine upon the competency of the juror, and any juror is incompetent who has formed or expressed an opinion of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, it is not a positive declaration of the legislative will as to the competency of jurors, and the parties must avail themselves of the right to challenge jurors for cause under the provisions of the act.—Bradford v. State, 15 Ind. 347.

[c] (Mich. 1865) By Comp. Laws, § 4400, the distinction between challenges for cause and to the favor is practically abolished, all being classed under the head of challenges for cause and tried in the same manner, and, the facts upon which a challenge is based being undisputed, the decision is upon a question of law and is open to exception.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

[d] (N. H. 1845) The fact that all challenges are decided by the court does not do away with the distinction between challenges for cause and for favor.—State v. Howard, 17 N. H. 171.

[e] (N. J. 1794) A juror has no right to challenge himself.—Bickham v. Bissant, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 220.

[f] (N. C. 1872) Competency of a juror for a capital case who is opposed to capital punishment should be tried by a challenge for favor, not by a challenge for cause.—State v. Mercer, 67 N. C. 266.

[g] (Or. 1880) An objection that a juror is drawn from a particular panel is a challenge to the panel, and not to his qualifications.—State v. Dale, 8 Or. 229.

[a] (Ga. 1846) The right to challenge a juror propter affectum is not taken away by St. 1843, prescribing the oath to be administered to jurors in criminal cases, but only prescribes the manner of doing it.—Robinson v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 563.

[b] (N. Y. 1876) The challenge of a juror for favor is not affected by Laws 1872, c. 475, providing that a present impression concerning the guilt or innocence of the accused, or the expression of such an opinion, shall not, in the cases therein specified, be a sufficient ground of challenge for principal cause.—Thomas v. People, 67 N. Y. 218.

[a] (Ala. 1844) Clay's Dig. p. 457, § 38, provides that in civil cases the court shall, on motion of either party, examine on oath any person who is called as a juror therein, to ascertain whether the juror stands indifferent in the cause. Section 52 provides that in all cases sounding in damages merely, or where the amount in controversy shall exceed $100, either party at his election shall be furnished with a list of 24 jurors in attendance on such court, from which a jury shall be obtained by the parties alternately striking one from the list until 12 shall be stricken off, the plaintiff commencing, and the jury thus obtained shall not be further challenged for any cause. Held, that the 24 jurors mentioned in section 52 must be subject to no good cause of challenge at the time the striking the jury begins, and therefore a party was entitled to challenge members of the panel of 24 for cause before exercising his right to strike the jury.—Davis v. Hunter, 7 Ala. 135.

[b] (Ga. 1885) On the trial of a forcible entry and detainer suit in a justice's court, a party is entitled to purge the jury on their voir dire to show partiality.—Holton v. Hendley, 75 Ga. 847.

[c] (Ill. 1888) A juror who, when called, answers that he has an opinion as to which one of the parties ought to succeed in the case, is not impartial, and either party can challenge him for cause.—Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Perkins, 125 Ill. 127, 17 N. E. 1.

[d] (Md. 1834) Though Acts 1797, c. 87, § 9, gives to the parties the privilege of striking from a list of 20 jurors 8 of the jurors against whom no cause of challenge could be established, the full panel of 20 jurors must be beyond the reach of challenge, either for principal cause or for favor, and therefore the parties have the right to challenge the jurors for cause before exercising their right of striking the jury.—Lee v. Peter, 6 Gill & J. 447.

[a] (U. S. 1807) The prosecution may challenge a juror for cause.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,693.

[b] (Ala. 1861) Under the statutes the state may challenge for cause a juror who has a fixed opinion against penitentiary punishments, but the prisoner cannot complain if the right is not exercised.—Murphy v. State, 37 Ala. 142.

[c] (Ala. 1885) The right of the state, under Code, § 4883, to challenge for cause a juror in a case punishable by death, or imprisonment in the penitentiary, who states that he believes a conviction should not be had on circumstantial evidence, is not extended to defendant, nor can he complain of its waiver by the state.—Harrison v. State, 79 Ala. 29.

[d] (Ga. 1873) The provisions of Rev. Code, § 4588, providing the mode of proceeding, if a juror is by newly-discovered evidence found to be incompetent, after the jury is made up and before the trial, apply as well to a case where the state objects to a juror as to an objection by a prisoner.—Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598.

[e] (Ga. 1887) On indictment for murder, the court stenographer, whose duty it was to examine the jurors on their voir dire, put a juror upon the defendant, who accepted, before the state's attorney had signified his acceptance. Held, that it was no part of the duty of the reporter to accept for the state, and that the juror might be challenged by the state's attorney.—West v. State, 79 Ga. 773, 4 S. E. 325.

for cause as free persons.—State v. George, 8 Rob. 535.

[g] (La. 1871) Where a juror does not understand the language in which the proceedings are conducted, the state, as well as the accused, may challenge him for cause.—State v. Push, 23 La. Ann. 14.

[h] (N. Y. 1847) On the preliminary trial of a prisoner's insanity, before the trial of the indictment against him, he may challenge for cause.—Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216.

[i] (Pa. 1853) On the trial of indictments for murder, the commonwealth may challenge for cause.—Jewell v. Commonwealth, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 94.

[j] (Tex. 1885) The state, as well as the defendant, is entitled to jurors who are without bias.—Pierson v. State, 18 Tex. App. 524.

[k] (Va. 1851) Error in the exclusion of a juror on challenge of the state is not a ground of exception by the prisoner.—In re Clore, 8 Grat. 606.

[l] (Va. 1853) The decision of the court, allowing a challenge on the part of the commonwealth or disallowing a challenge on the part of the accused, is matter of exception on the part of the accused, whether it be a principal challenge or a challenge to the favor.—Montague v. Commonwealth, 10 Grat. 767.

[b] (Tex. 1877) Act Aug. 1, 1876, § 26, provides that certain disqualifications of jurors "shall be a good cause for challenge." Held, that such section does not attempt to define all matters of disqualification, and the parties to an action may urge any other matters which would render a juror unfitted to sit in a case.—Lester v. State, 2 Tex. App. 432.

[c] (Utah, 1886) A challenge for implied bias will be disregarded, unless one or more of the grounds mentioned in Laws Utah 1878, par. 242, are specified.—People v. Hopt, 4 Utah, 247, 9 Pac. 407.

[a] (U. S. 1884) By the practice of the federal court each juror is examined, as he is called, touching his statutory qualifications, upon oath, and, if he answers satisfactorily, he is accepted for the term; but the jury is tendered to the parties in each case as it is successively called for trial, and they must then challenge for cause that a juror is disqualified, or the objection will not be entertained after verdict, although the defect was wholly unknown to the parties at the time the jury was sworn.—Brewer v. Jacobs (C. C.) 22 Fed. 217.

[b] (Ala. 1856) If a juror is accepted by the state and afterwards by the prisoner, the state's right of challenge on the ground that the juror has conscientious scruples against capital or penitentiary punishment is lost, and cannot be again revived.—Stalls v. State, 28 Ala. 25.

[c] (Ala. 1877) A peremptory challenge is too late, when interposed after defendant and his counsel have expressed satisfaction with the jury as organized; but a challenge for cause may be interposed, upon its being satisfactorily shown that the cause in fact existed, but was not sooner discovered nor improperly withheld.—Sparks v. State, 59 Ala. 82.

[d] (Cal. 1860) In this state, the common practice is to examine a juror on his voir dire in order to ascertain the grounds for a specific challenge; and this challenge should be made immediately after the preliminary examination is closed, so that the issue on the sufficiency of the juror can be then tried.—People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128.

[e] (Ga. 1859) The objection that a juror is too old may be made after the statutory questions have been put, at least where no injury results to the state therefrom.—Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287.

[f] (Ga. 1869) Objections to a juryman, propter defectum, must be made before trial.—Gormley v. Laramore, 40 Ga. 253.

[g] (Idaho, 1885) Under Cr. Prac. Act, §§ 318–353, regulating the impaneling of juries, defendant may be required to exercise his challenges for cause as each juror appears, and before another is called.—People v. Kuok Wah Choi, 2 Idaho, 85, 6 Pac. 112.

[h] (Ill. 1838) Objection to a juror for alienage should be taken at the time of impaneling the jury.—Guykowski v. People, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 476.

[i] (Ill. 1887) Under Rev. St. c. 78, § 21, providing "that the jury shall be passed upon and accepted in panels of four by the parties, commencing with the plaintiff," the state, in a trial for murder, is not called upon to tender the defendants a second panel before the defendants tender it back four.—Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

[j] (Ind. 1859) An objection to the competency of a juror must be made before the trial, if known, or it will be waived.—Lafayette Plank Road Co. v. New Albany & S. R. Co., 13 Ind. 90, 74 Am. Dec. 246.

[k] (La. 1845) An objection to a juror for want of residence should be made when he is offered to be sworn.—State v. Kennedy, 8 Rob. 590.

[l] (La. 1894) If, before a trial commences, it is discovered that one of the jurors is incompetent because of relationship to defendant, he may be set aside, and the panel completed, though he had been accepted by both the prosecution and defendant.—State v. Hill, 46 La. Ann. 736, 15 South. 145.

[m] (Me. 1880) When an objection to a juryman is known to the party or his counsel when the jury is being impaneled, it must be taken then, or it will be deemed waived.—State v. Bowden, 71 Me. 89.

[n] (Md. 1849) Either party may challenge a juror for cause, before he is sworn, whether he has or has not exercised his statutory right of striking four names peremptorily from the panel.—Edelen v. Gough, 8 Gill, 87.

[o] (Mass. 1850) Where a jury is completed from the bystanders, if such persons are not qualified and liable to be drawn as jurors, objection must be taken before they are placed upon the panel.—Commonwealth v. Gee, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 174.

[p] (Mich. 1878) Challenges for cause can be made by either side until the jury is sworn.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

[q] (Miss. 1838) The qualifications of a juror may be questioned at the trial, but not afterwards in another court.—Cody v. State, 4 Miss. (3 How.) 27.

[s] (N. C. 1859) Where, in the trial of a capital case, the scrolls had not the Christian name written in full, but only the initials, no objection being made when the scrolls were put in the hat, it was held that this formed no ground of challenge to the juror.—State v. Simmons, 51 N. C. 309.

[t] (Tex. 1877) Objections to a juror for want of qualifications mentioned in section 1 of the act of August, 1876, should be urged while the jury is being impaneled.—Lester v. State, 2 Tex. App. 432.

[u] (Tex. 1889) An objection to a juror for disqualification, if discovered during the trial, must be then brought to the notice of the court, or it will be waived.—Blanton v. Mayes, 72 Tex. 417, 10 S. W. 452.

[v] (Tex. 1895) An objection to a juror must be made when he is impaneled.—Hannaman v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 538.

[w] (Vt. 1866) A respondent in a criminal case is not obliged to exhaust his peremptory challenges before challenging for cause.—State v. Fuller, 39 Vt. 74.

[a] (Ala. 1844) The court may permit a party to challenge a juror for cause at any time before the case is submitted to the jury, although they may have been selected and sworn.—Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189.

[b] (Ark. 1853) The circuit court have the discretion to determine, as a matter of practice, upon the proper time for a party to raise an objection to the competency of a juror.—Funkhouser v. Pogue, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 295.

[c] (N. C. 1872) The court has discretionary power to allow the state in a criminal prosecution to challenge a juror for cause after the jurors are sworn and before they are impaneled.—State v. Adair, 66 N. C. 298.

[d] (Va. 1841) After a juryman has been elected and sworn, the court may, in its discretion, allow the prisoner to challenge him for cause and strike him from the panel.—Tocel v. Commonwealth, 11 Leigh, 714.

(Ga. 1880) Wesley v. State, 65 Ga. 731.

[d] (U. S. 1835) An objection that one of the petit jurors had been summoned and had served on the jury of the next preceding term, made under Acts Md. 1797, c. 87, § 3, which provides "that no person shall be summoned as a juror by any sheriff or coroner of this state to two general or county courts successively," is too late after the jurors are sworn.—United States v. Peaco, Fed. Cas. No. 16,018 [4 Cranch, C. C. 601].

[e] (Ala. 1841) When a juror has once been sworn in chief, he cannot be challenged or set aside from the jury for any cause which existed at the time of his being put on the prisoner.—State v. Morea, 2 Ala. 275.

[f] (Ga. 1855) After a juror has been sworn, an objection that he has not resided in the county for six months is too late, even though the disqualification was unknown to the prisoner or his counsel.—Epps v. State, 19 Ga. 102.

[g] (Ga. 1892) After all the evidence for the state has been heard by the jury on a trial for felony, it is not lawful to change the constitution of the jury by discharging one of its members as incompetent because he was on the grand jury that found the bill, and substituting in his place a fresh juror, and then proceeding with the trial anew, where defendant does not consent to such substitution, but insists that a mistrial be declared, since Code, § 4681, provides that objections to a juror, discovered after he is held competent, may be made "at any time before the prosecuting counsel submits to the jury any of the evidence in the case," and by section 4685 newly-discovered evidence as to incompetency is allowed "at any time before any of the evidence on the main issue is submitted."—Simmons v. State, 88 Ga. 272, 14 S. E. 613.

[h] (Ga. 1893) In trials for misdemeanors, challenges for cause must be made before the juror is sworn, unless the cause of the challenge be unknown till afterwards.—Schnell v. State, 92 Ga. 459, 17 S. E. 966.

[i] (Ky. 1895) An objection that one of the jury was incompetent, because not 21 years of age, cannot be taken after the jury is sworn.—Combs v. Commonwealth, 97 Ky. 24, 29 S. W. 734.

[j] (La. 1812) An objection that a juror has already tried a suit by the same plaintiff against another party to the note sued on comes too late after the trial has commenced.—Nugent v. Trepagnier, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 205.

[k] (La. 1859) Where a juror can be challenged for cause, the right must be exercised before the juror is sworn, and a verdict cures the defect.—State v. Bunger, 14 La. Ann. 461.

[l] (Mass. 1830) It is too late to inquire into the impartiality of a juror in a criminal case after the jury is impaneled.—Commonwealth v. Knapp, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534.

[m] (Mass. 1830) Objections to jurors may be made any time before the jury is impaneled, and even after it is sworn.—Commonwealth v. Twombly, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 480, note.

[n] (Mo. 1893) Act April 1, 1891, relating to juries in counties having a city of more than 50,000, in section 8 provides that certain persons shall not be permitted to serve as jurors. Held, that such section must be read with Rev. St. 1889, § 6061, forbidding exceptions to a juror on account of his citizenship, etc., "or other legal disabilities," after the jury is sworn.—Pitt v. Bishop, 53 Mo. App. 600.

[o] (Nev. 1881) Under Cr. Prac. Act, § 334, whenever it appears, from the examination of a juror on his voir dire, that he is disqualified, the challenge must be interposed before he is sworn; but the provisions of said section have no application to a case where the disqualification or incompetency of a juror is not, without any fault of the challenging party, discovered until after the jury is completed.—State v. Pritchard, 16 Nev. 101.

[p] (N. Y. 1845) A juror may, after he is sworn, be challenged by the prosecution for a cause arising after the oath has been taken.—People v. Bodine, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 36.

[q] (Pa. 1812) If a party learns, before verdict, that one of the jury had declared that he had made up his mind against him before he was impaneled, the party must object at once, without waiting for the verdict.—McCorkle v. Binns, 5 Bin. 340, 6 Am. Dec. 420.

[r] (Pa. 1853) A juror cannot be challenged for cause after the ceremony of administering the oath is begun; but he may at any time previously.—McFadden v. Commonwealth, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 12, 62 Am. Dec. 308.

[s] (Tenn. 1829) A cause of challenge existing before the juror is sworn is waived, unless taken before then.—McClure v. State, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 206.

[t] (Tenn. 1835) If the objection to a juror trying the issue in a criminal case, that he was one of the grand jury who found the indictment, is not made before he is sworn, it is waived.—Gillespie v. State, 16 Tenn. (8 Yerg.) 507, 29 Am. Dec. 137.

[u] (Tenn. 1874) An objection to a juror on the ground that he is not a freeholder or a householder in a county where the trial takes place must be made before the jury is sworn, though the prisoner is ignorant of the disqualification.—Draper v. State, 63 Tenn. (4 Baxt.) 246.

[v] (Tex. 1895) After the jury had been sworn in a criminal case, defendant discovered in the box a juror whom he had previously challenged, and thereupon asked the court to stand him aside. Held, that defendant showed want of diligence in making the discovery.—Munson v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 498, 31 S. W. 387.

[w] (Va. 1855) Where one of the grand jury which found the indictment is a member of the jury which is to try the prisoner for the felony, the prisoner, if he is guilty of no laches in making the discovery, may object to the juror at any time before the evidence is introduced; and it seems, also, the court may discharge him at any time before the verdict is rendered. The propriety of examining the juror, or taking his statements, on his voir dire, is, to say the least, doubtful.—Dilworth v. Commonwealth, 12 Grat. 689, 65 Am. Dec. 264.

3. MAKING AND TRAVERSE OF CHALLENGES.

FORM AND SUFFICIENCY, § 559.
TRAVERSE OR DENIAL, § 560.

Withdrawal of acceptance or challenge, see ante, § 502.

—(Iowa, 1883) Bonney v. Cocke, 61 Iowa, 303, 16 N. W. 139; (1895) Davis v. Anchor Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 96 Iowa, 70, 64 N. W. 687;
(Mo. 1896) State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92;
(N. Y. 1847) Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216;
(Wash. 1893) State v. Biles, 6 Wash. 186, 33 Pac. 347.

[b] (U. S. 1892) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 231, providing that the point of exception to a juror must be particularly stated, it is not sufficient to challenge for cause without stating the particular reasons for such challenge.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Rauh, 49 Fed. 696, 1 C. C. A. 416, 7 U. S. App. 84.

[c] (U. S. 1830) On a challenge for favor, without cause assigned, it will not be submitted to triors.—United States v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730 [Baldw. 78].

[d] (Cal. 1859) Under Prac. Act, § 162, the special ground of challenge relied on must be stated in making the challenge.—Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

[e] (Cal.) A challenge to a juror for implied bias must specify the grounds of the challenge.—(1860) People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128; (1869) Same v. Hardin, 37 Cal. 258; (1874) Same v. Buckley, 49 Cal. 241.

[f] (Cal. 1871) Under Cr. Prac. Act, § 347, the challenge of a juror in a criminal case must specify the particular ground of challenge. If for bias, it must state what kind of bias, and the particular cause from which such bias is to be inferred.—People v. Renfrow, 41 Cal. 37.

[g] (Cal. 1874) A challenge to a juror for implied bias should refer to the particular subdivision of the section of the Penal Code which gives the cause of challenge for implied bias.—People v. Cotta, 49 Cal. 166.

[h] (Iowa, 1889) Under Code 1873, § 4405, requiring a challenge of a juror for cause to distinctly specify the facts constituting such cause, a challenge for cause which does not show with reasonable certainty the ground upon which it is based is insufficient.—State v. Munchrath, 78 Iowa, 268, 43 N. W. 211.

[i] (Me. 1857) Challenges of jurors for cause must distinctly state the ground of challenge, and this must be entered on the record.—State v. Knight, 43 Me. 11.

[j] (Md. 1881) A talesman stated on his voir dire that he had not formed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused; that his sympathies were with him, but his prejudices against him; and he did not think himself an impartial juror. Defendant, without asking that the juror be further interrogated, objected to his being sworn; but, the objection being overruled, he peremptorily challenged the juror. The impaneling of the jury then proceeded, and, after defendant had exhausted his 20 peremptory challenges, another talesman was called, who had been drawn in an earlier stage of the proceeding, but who did not appear to be sworn until after defendant had exhausted his challenges. This latter talesman was sworn against defendant's objection. It did not appear that defendant offered to challenge this last juror, or that he would have challenged him if his peremptory challenges had not been exhausted. The objection made was not to the particular juror, but to the panel as made up. Held not error to overrule such objection.—Johns v. State, 55 Md. 350.

[k] (Mo. 1895) A general objection to the whole panel of jurors, on the ground of their disqualification, in proceedings to condemn land for street purposes, is insufficient as an objection to a particular juror because of his having been a member of the council when the ordinance for the proposed boulevard was passed. —In re Independence Ave. Boulevard, 128 Mo. 272, 30 S. W. 773; Appeal of Smart, Id.

[l] (Neb. 1877) A record which shows that the prisoner objected to a juror "because he had formed and expressed an opinion," but does not say in terms it was an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, is insufficient.—Fillion v. State, 5 Neb. 351.

[m] (Nev. 1870) The grounds of challenge to jurors for cause being pointed out by statute, a party desiring to have such challenge tried must specify the ground or grounds on which he bases it.—Estes v. Richardson, 6 Nev. 128.

[n] (Nev. 1895) Under Gen. St. § 4222, providing that, in a challenge for implied bias, "one or more of the causes stated in section 340 must be alleged," a challenge simply for "implied bias" is insufficient.—State v. Vaughan, 22 Nev. 285, 39 Pac. 733.

[o] (N. J. 1811) A challenge for relationship must state what the relationship is and to whom.—Stevenson v. Stiles, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 740.

[p] (N. J. 1833) A challenge must be in such terms that the court can see whether it is for principal cause or to the favor, and so determine by what forum it shall be tried, and whether the facts, if true, support the challenge. --Mann v. Glover, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 195.

[q] (N. J. 1890) The challenge of a juror "for cause" is insufficient, unless it be stated whether it is for principal cause or to the favor, and set forth the facts on which it rests.—Drake v. State, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 23, 20 Atl. 747.

[r] (N. Y. 1818) If the plaintiff has any objections to any of the jurors summoned on a writ of inquiry, he must make them openly; and if he state them privately to the sheriff, who thereupon discharges a juror, the inquisition will be set aside.—Butler v. Kelsey, 15 Johns. 177.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) When a juror is challenged "to the favor," no other cause need be assigned than the words of the challenge import.—Carnal v. People, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 272.

[t] (N. Y. 1858) In all challenges for principal cause and for favor, the matter of fact upon which the challenge is founded must be specified when the challenge is interposed, or the court should disregard it.—People v. Stout, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 71.

[u] (N. Y. 1863) The prosecution challenged a juror for favor, on the ground that he was not indifferent between the people and the prisoner. The prisoner's counsel demurred to the challenge, and assigned for cause that the challenge did not specify any sufficient ground in law, and the district attorney joined in the demurrer. Held, that the demurrer was not sustainable, and was properly overruled.—Lowenberg v. People, 5 Parker, Cr. R. 414.

[v] (N. Y. 1893) Code Cr. Proc. § 380, provides that a challenge for actual bias must allege the cause. Held, that where a juror had been examined for actual bias by the people, and, when their challenge was withdrawn, defendant cross-examined as though the challenge had been renewed, and at the end of the examination submitted the challenge for cause, the court properly passed on the challenge, though the statute was not strictly complied with.—People v. Larubia, 69 Hun, 197, 23 N. Y. Supp. 579, judgment affirmed (1893) 140 N. Y. 87, 35 N. E. 412.

[w] (N. C. 1872) Where the presiding judge, on a criminal trial, announced that no challenges for cause would be allowed, held, that this ruling might be reviewed without an exception showing that the defendant named a particular juror and assigned a special cause of challenge in his case.—State v. Fulton, 66 N. C. 632.

[x] (Tex. 1890) The objection that an incompetent juror was impaneled and sat on the jury after defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges, is not sufficient to raise the question of the juror's competency, where no reason is stated why the juror is objectionable to defendant, or why he was not fair and impartial.—Rippey v. State, 29 Tex. App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

[yy] (Utah, 1895) 2 Comp. Laws 1888, § 5022, enumerates different causes for challenge to a juror for implied bias. Section 5024 provides that in challenges for implied bias one or more of the causes must be charged. Held, that in challenging for implied bias a challenge that "defendant challenges for cause" is properly denied, as being too general.—People v. Thiede, 11 Utah, 241, 39 Pac. 837.

[z] (Va. 1853) As no challenge of a juror is allowed to the commonwealth, except for cause, when such challenge is made, the cause thereof should be shown to be a good and legal one.—Montague v. Commonwealth, 10 Grat. 767.

[zz] (Wis. 1854) When a challenge for principal cause is interposed, the grounds of challenge should be reduced to writing, that the opposite party may demur; and, the facts being admitted, the issue is to the court.—Schoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823.

[a] (Cal. 1886) A challenge to a juror on the ground that he is not a resident of the county where the trial of a criminal case is had, is a general challenge for cause, and no exception to the action of the court in disallowing such a challenge is permitted by statute.—People v. Fong Ah Sing, 70 Cal. 8, 11 Pac 323.

[b] (Cal. 1890) Pen. Code, § 1170, giving defendant, on trial of an indictment, the right to take exception to a decision of the court in disallowing a challenge to a juror for implied bias, or in admitting or rejecting testimony on the trial of a challenge for actual bias, etc., does not authorize an exception to a decision disallowing a challenge for actual bias.—People v. Boling, 83 Cal. 380, 23 Pac. 421.

§ 561. Right to examine juror in general.

Right to trial of challenge, see post, § 586.

To require oath of loyalty, see ante, § 264 [c].

[a] (U. S. 1892) To base error upon the court's ruling that a juror need not answer as to his prejudice against corporations, it must appear that the party making the challenge was thereby prevented from ascertaining whether the juror had such prejudice as would interfere with his conclusions in arriving at a verdict.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Rauh, 49 Fed. 696, 1 C. C. A. 416, 7 U. S. App. 84.

[b] (Del. 1877) Where the defendant in a criminal trial has waived the right to ask one summoned to sit on the jury whether he has formed or expressed any opinion as to the guilt of the defendant, the state has no right to put the question.—State v. Rhodes, 1 Houst. Cr. Cas. 476.

[c] (Minn. 1861) Where a challenge for bias is made and admitted by the other side, it is not error to refuse to allow the challenging party to examine the juror.—Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 319 (Gil. 224).

[d] (Miss. 1856) A person, after having been examined by the court, pronounced competent, and turned over to the representative of the state, may be further examined as to his competency; and, if he be found incompetent upon such examination, the district attorney may challenge him for cause.—Williams v. State, 32 Miss. 389, 66 Am. Dec. 615.

[e] (N. Y. 1819) Where jurors in a justice's court are challenged on the ground that they are not freeholders, the fact may be tried by an examination of the jurors themselves under oath.—Ogden v. Parks, 16 Johns. 180.

[f] (S. C. 1889) It is error for the court to excuse a juror on the ground of prejudice, without first making the examination called for by Gen. St. § 2261, requiring the judge, on motion, to examine the persons called as jurors.—State v. Williams, 31 S. C. 238, 9 S. E. 853.

Examination before interposition of challenge, see post, § 575 [i].

Limiting time for examination, see post, § 574 [c].

Statutory interrogatories, see post, § 569.

[a] (U. S. 1895) The trial court has a large discretion in conducting the voir dire examination of jurors, and an abuse of discretion is not shown merely because the court states in the bill of exceptions that it would have allowed a certain question if its attention had been called to it at the time, where the court nevertheless refused a new trial.—Connors v. United States, 158 U. S. 408, 15 Sup. Ct. 951, 39 L. Ed. 1033.

[b] (Cal. 1893) On the examination of a juror on his voir dire it is in the discretion of the court to ask him leading questions, and allow counsel to do so, which discretion, however, must not be abused.—People v. Ah Lee Doon, 31 Pac. 933.

[c] (Ill. 1891) It is within the discretion of the court to permit counsel to ask the jurors upon their voir dire whether they know a certain lawyer, who, though not appearing as an attorney of record, is believed by the counsel to be interested in the case.—O'Hare v. Chicago, M. & N. R. Co., 139 Ill. 151, 28 N. E. 923.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) The mode of interrogating jurors, in order to test their competency, is within the discretion of the court.—State v. Wilson, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 407.

[e] (Minn. 1894) A trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow questions preliminary to a challenge to be put to a witness called as a juror in a criminal case, though at that time defendant had exhausted all her peremptory challenges.—State v. Smith, 56 Minn. 78, 57 N. W. 325.

[f] (Mo. 1887) A discretion is vested in the trial judge to curtail the examination of jurors as to opinions which have already been sufficiently developed.—State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 5 S. W. 257, 330.

and was fully interrogated by defendant's counsel. After defendant in person had interrogated the venireman at length, his questions became irrelevant, and the court directed him to confer with his attorney as to other questions. The venireman was peremptorily challenged, but by so doing defendant did not exhaust such challenges. Held, that the discretion of the court was not abused, nor defendant's rights infringed, under such circumstances.—Shaw v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 155, 22 S. W. 588.

Effect of examination by court, see post, § 570 [d].

[a] (Ala. 1879) After a party has been declared a competent juror in a criminal case, the defendant cannot ask him, for the purpose of ascertaining a ground of challenge for cause, whether he was born in the United States, or had ever been duly naturalized, or whether he had been a freeholder or householder for the last 12 months, or owned any interest in any lands.—Bales v. State, 63 Ala. 30.

[b] (Ala. 1890) Where a juror has been examined, found competent, and accepted by the state, defendant cannot, as a matter of right, examine him for the purpose of a peremptory challenge, if he thinks best.—Lundy v. State, 91 Ala. 100, 9 South. 189.

[c] (Cal. 1863) In impaneling a jury, each party has a right to ask questions of a juror to show, not only that there exist proper grounds for a challenge for cause, but to elicit facts, to enable the party to decide whether or not he will make a peremptory challenge.—Watson v. Whitney, 23 Cal. 375.

[d] (Cal. 1882) Where a juror is challenged for actual bias, and states that he has formed a qualified opinion, he cannot be asked whether he believes defendant to be guilty or innocent, for the purpose of laying a foundation for a peremptory challenge.—People v. Hamilton, 62 Cal. 377.

[e] (Ill. 1872) A party, in determining the right peremptorily to challenge a juror in a civil case, may ask him, if, upon hearing the testimony, he should find it evenly balanced, which way he would be inclined to decide the case.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Buttolf, 66 Ill. 347.

[f] (Ill. 1873) On the trial of one indicted for selling intoxicating liquor to a person in the habit of getting drunk, the court sustained an objection to the following questions, asked the jurors by the defendant: "(1) Are you a member of a temperance society? (2) Are you connected with any society or league organized for the purpose of prosecuting a certain class of people under what is called the new temperance law of the state, or have you ever contributed any funds for such a purpose?" Held, that the court erred in refusing the questions, as they were clearly proper to enable the defendant to exercise his right of peremptory challenge.—Lavin v. People, 69 Ill. 303.

[g] (Ill. 1891) It is reversible error to refuse the defendant's counsel permission to examine the jurors on their voir dire for the purpose of deciding upon the advisability of exercising his right of peremptory challenge.—Donovan v. People, 139 Ill. 412, 28 N. E. 964.

[h] (Ill. 1893) On the examination of a jury, a party may inquire if the attorneys for the opposite party are in the employ of any of the jury, for the purpose of enabling him to exercise his peremptory challenges.—City of Vandalia v. Seibert, 47 Ill. App. 477.

[i] (Iowa, 1894) The state may examine a person summoned as a juror on a trial for murder in the first degree, concerning prejudice against the death penalty, for the purpose of a peremptory challenge, though the jury are required to fix the punishment at either death or imprisonment for life, in a verdict of guilty.—State v. Dooley, 89 Iowa, 584, 57 N. W. 414.

[j] (Iowa, 1894) On a trial for murder the county attorney may, for the purpose of peremptory challenge, examine a juror as to his preconceived opinions on capital punishment.—State v. Foster, 91 Iowa, 164, 59 N. W. 8.

[k] (Mich. 1884) To enable a party to decide whom to peremptorily challenge, he may ask a juror on his voir dire examination how he would incline should the evidence be evenly balanced.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 238, 18 N. W. 797.

[l] (Mich. 1888) It is permissible to ask a juror which party he would favor, if the testimony were evenly balanced, so as to ascertain his bias for the purpose of peremptory challenges.—Township of Otsego Lake v. Kirsten, 72 Mich. 1, 40 N. W. 26.

[m] (Mich. 1896) Defendant has a right to question jurors on the subject of their prejudices against the defense of limitations, as a means to determine whether or not to exercise the right of peremptory challenge.—Towl v. Bradley, 108 Mich. 409, 66 N. W. 347.

[n] (Mo. 1884) A juror on his voir dire can be asked, not only questions to show his incompetency, but such as will enable counsel to judiciously exercise the right of peremptory challenge.—State v. Mann, 83 Mo. 589.

[o] (Mo. 1887) After a panel of jurors had been qualified and duly cautioned, defendant was, on motion, allowed 48 hours to make his peremptory challenges. On the day of the trial, four days thereafter, defendant's counsel requested a re-examination of the panel to ascertain whether any of them had become disqualified by having in the meantime read certain newspapers prejudicial to defendant. Held, that in the absence of evidence that the jury had disregarded the court's admonition, and read the newspapers, the motion was properly denied, especially as it did not appear that said newspapers contained anything prejudicial to defendant.—State v. Rose, 92 Mo. 201, 4 S. W. 733.

[p] (Or. 1896) On the separate trial of a defendant jointly indicted for murder, on the theory that he was an accessory before the fact, his codefendant having been convicted, it is error to refuse to permit him to interrogate jurors as to their opinion of his codefendant's guilt, so as to enable him to intelligently use his peremptory challenges.—State v. Steeves, 29 Or. 85, 43 Pac. 947.

[q] (Vt. 1828) A juror may be asked by the prisoner whether he has formed an opinion, in order to a decision as to a peremptory challenge.—State v. Godfrey, Brayt. 170.

[b] (Fla. 1896) On the examination of the jurors on their voir dire, the judge, expressly naming each one of the prisoners' counsel, asked of each juror if said counsel or any one had talked with him about the case, or spoken to, or had any conversation of any kind whatever with him relative to the case. Held, that the question tended to prejudice the defendants' case, from the pointedness of its aim at their defending counsel.—Hubbard v. State, 37 Fla. 156, 20 South. 235.

[c] (Ill. 1894) On voir dire examination of jurors, counsel have no right to ask them what they would do if instructed in a certain way, or on a certain state of proof.—Fish v. Glass, 54 Ill. App. 655.

[d] (Ind. 1885) It is not legitimate for counsel to put to a proposed juror such questions as, "You would not guess the defendant into the penitentiary, or to hanging her, would you?" or, "What, if anything, have you read of the case?" or, "You would not convict the defendant of the charge against her to please or displease anybody, would you?"—Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491.

[a] (Ala. 1895) Under Code, § 4332, providing that the question whether a juror has any interest in the conviction or acquittal of the accused, or had given any assurance that he would acquit or convict, is not required to be proved by the oath of the party summoned as a juror, but by other testimony only, it was not error for the court to fail to examine the juror on his voir dire as to his interest, or whether he had given such assurance.—Bridges v. State, 110 Ala. 15, 20 South. 348.

[b] (Mass. 1887) On trial of a complaint for selling intoxicating liquors, it is incompetent to ask a juryman on his voir dire, under Pub. St. c. 170, § 35, whether he is a member of the Law and Order League, or any association having for its object the enforcement of the laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, or whether he contributes money to any such association; it not being otherwise shown that such association had anything to do with the prosecution of defendant.—Commonwealth v. Burroughs, 145 Mass. 242, 13 N. E. 884.

Arising from personal opinions or conscientious scruples, see post, § 568.

Propounding questions suggested by parties, see post, § 571 [c].

Sufficiency of answers, see post, § 582 [d].

[a] A juror may be asked, on examination as to his qualifications, which way he would decide in case the evidence was equally balanced.

(Mo. 1876) Keegan v. Kavanaugh, 62 Mo. 230.

[b] (U. S. 1895) It was not error to refuse to permit a juror to be asked if he had ever belonged to the Committee of One Hundred, where there was nothing to show any such connection between that committee and the prosecution as would disqualify a member of the committee from sitting as a juror.—Connors v. United States, 158 U. S. 408, 15 Sup. Ct. 951, 39 L. Ed. 1033.

[c] (Ala. 1844) After a juror states that he is not sensible of any bias or prejudice in the case, it is not erroneous to refuse a further examination of the juror.—Davis v. Hunter, 7 Ala. 135.

[d] (Cal. 1855) A juror, being challenged for bias, was examined before triors, and the following questions were propounded: "(1) Are you a member of a secret and mysterious order known as and called 'Know-Nothings,' which has imposed on you an oath or obligation, beside which an oath administered to you in a court of justice, if in conflict with that oath or obligation, would be by you disregarded? (2) Are you a member of any secret association, political or otherwise, by your oaths or obligations to which any prejudice exists in your mind against Catholic foreigners? (3) Do you belong to any secret political society, known as, and called by the people at large in the United States, 'Know-Nothings'? and, if so, are you bound by an oath or other obligation not to give a prisoner of foreign birth in a court of justice a fair and impartial trial? (4) Have you at any time taken an oath or other obligation of such a character that it has caused a prejudice in your mind against foreigners? (5) Are you under any obligation not to extend the same rights, privileges, protection, and support to men of foreign birth as to native-born American citizens? (6) Have you any prejudice whatever against foreigners?" Held, that the court erred in refusing to allow the questions to be asked.—People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 347.

[e] (Cal. 1855) Prejudice, being a state of mind more frequently founded in passion than in reason, may exist with or without cause; and to ask a person whether he is prejudiced or not against a party, and, if the answer is affirmative, whether that prejudice is of such a character as would lead him to deny the party a fair trial, is not only the simplest method of ascertaining the state of his mind, but is probably the only sure method of fathoming his thoughts and feelings.—People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 347.

[f] (Ga. 1853) Upon the challenge of a juror to the favor, the triors may examine the juror on his voir dire as to the leaning of his affections, or whether he had given his opinion beforehand, and ask all other questions which may enable them to test his impartiality, provided they do not interrogate him as to facts which tend to his infamy or disgrace.—Copenhaven v. State, 14 Ga. 22.

[g] (Miss. 1884) Jurors cannot be asked by defendant whether, in a previous case, they had not reluctantly rendered a verdict against the same defendant under the instructions of the court.—Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. v. Bolls, 62 Miss. 50.

[h] (Miss. 1894) Where, on the separate trial of a defendant who had been indicted with another for murder, the jurors were pronounced competent by the court, accepted by the state, and presented to defendant, it was error not to permit defendant to question each juror as to his state of mind regarding defendant's codefendant, and the effect or probable effect of that state of mind upon the verdict.—Hale v. State, 72 Miss. 140, 16 South. 387.

[i] (N. J. 1856) Since the act of April 5, 1855 (Nix. Dig. p. 888, § 4), a juror himself may be examined on the question of his disqualification by reason of malice or ill will against the prisoner; that statute having altered the common-law rule that a juror shall not be examined as to any disqualification tending to his own disgrace.—State v. Fox, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 566.

[j] (N. Y. 1887) It is proper to inquire as to the state of mind of a juror in reference to the case or either party, to ascertain whether he has actual bias or not.—People v. O'Neil, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 1.

[k] (N. C. 1864) Jurors ought not to be asked, either on oath or otherwise, whether their minds are in such a state that they can try a case fairly and impartially. Their answers cannot affect the question of their competency, but it is an improper practice to ask them.—Baker v. Harris, 60 N. C. 271.

[c] (U. S. 1851) The prosecution have no right to ask a juror whether he has so made up his mind on facts that it could not be altered in the course of a trial; there being no obligation on the prisoner to take upon him the burden of changing the juror's mind to the extent that, even if this question were answered negatively, he might have to do it to procure an acquittal.—United States v. Hanway, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299 [2 Wall. Jr. 139].

[d] (Ark. 1857) If a juror, on his examination in a capital case, should state that he had formed an opinion on rumor, he may be asked if such opinion was such as to bias his mind; and, if he should state that he had conversed with persons about the case, he may be asked if such persons professed to have any personal knowledge of the matter.—Meyer v. State, 19 Ark. 156.

[e] (Cal. 1866) The examination of the competency of jurors in a capital case should not be confined to the question whether they could try the case, and render a verdict under the law as declared by the court and upon the evidence adduced, without regard to any previously formed opinions.—People v. Woods, 29 Cal. 635.

[f] (Cal. 1887) Where a proposed juror, who was challenged for actual bias, stated on his examination that he had formed an opinion on the subject of defendant's guilt which it would require evidence to remove, but that he could give the defendant a fair trial, held, that the exclusion of questions asked by defendant's counsel, evidently designed to bring out the character and force of the opinion, was error.—People v. Brown, 72 Cal. 390, 14 Pac. 90.

[g] (Ga. 1859) A juror having answered, "Yes," to the question "Have you formed and expressed an opinion?" it is not error for the court to refuse to ask, further, what is the ground of that opinion. The first answer clearly disqualifies him, no matter what the second might be.—Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382.

[h] (Ill. 1841) Where a juror has heard rumors as to the questions involved in a cause, a full examination, if deemed necessary, should be allowed to ascertain the state of his mind.—Smith v. Eames, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 76, 36 Am. Dec. 515.

[i] (Ind. 1837) A juror may be asked on the voir dire, in a civil as well as a criminal case, whether he has formed or expressed an opinion on the merits of the cause.—Maize v. Sewell, 4 Blackf. 447.

[j] (Ind. 1885) It is not proper for counsel to ask one summoned as a juror, "When you have an opinion on any subject, does it take much evidence to remove it?"—Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491.

[k] (La. 1859) On the examination of a juror on his voir dire the question was asked him, "In case the defendant is found guilty of murder, have you made up your mind as to what degree of punishment ought to be inflicted upon him?" Held, that the question was not properly put, and that the district judge did not err in refusing to allow it to be answered.—State v. Bennett, 14 La. Ann. 651; Same v. Ward, Id. 673.

[l] (La. 1883) It was not error for the state, after interrogating a juror as to whether he had formed or expressed an opinion, to ask if he had not talked about the case with H., who was not a witness or in any way connected with the case.—State v. Brown, 35 La. Ann. 340.

[n] (Miss. 1860) Where the issue to be tried under an indictment for murder is on the special plea of the accused relying upon a former acquittal, it is not proper, in interrogating a person summoned as a juror as to his competency, to ask him whether he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused of the crime charged in the indictment. His examination should extend only to his bias or prejudice in respect to the issue to be submitted to him, and to his personal bias, animosity, and good or ill will to the prisoner.—Josephine v. State, 39 Miss. 613.

[o] (Neb. 1889) The sole object of the preliminary examination of proposed jurors in a criminal prosecution upon their voir dire being to ascertain whether they have formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and whether they are prejudiced for or against him, it is not error in the trial court to refuse to permit the counsel to examine a juror as to what certain remarks of his of and concerning the accused tended to show, or whether such juror would believe the testimony of all witnesses equally alike, etc.—Gandy v. State, 27 Neb. 707, 43 N. W. 747, 44 N. W. 108.

[p] (N. Y. 1845) A juror challenged for favor, who is examined before the triors, may be asked whether he ever thought the prisoner guilty, or what impressions statements which he had heard or read respecting the evidence had made upon his mind.—People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281.

[q] (N. Y. 1848) A juror who stated, on his challenge to the favor, that he had formed no opinion and had no impressions as to the guilt of the prisoner, but that it had been, and still was, his impression that the general character of the prisoner was bad, was asked whether he would disregard what he had seen and read out of court, and render his verdict upon the evidence. On objection, it was held that the question, though inartificially put, was a proper one.—Lohman v. People, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 379, 49 Am. Dec. 340, affirmed People v. Lohman (1848) 2 Barb. 216.

[r] (N. Y. 1851) Where a juror was challenged to the favor, and examined to prove a bias from what he had read or heard, he may be asked whether, in his opinion, after what he had read or heard, he could render an impartial verdict.—People v. Knickerbocker, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 302.

[s] (Pa. 1805) Before the jurors are sworn, the court will not ask if they have prejudged the cause, but will admonish them to disclose if they are not indifferent to either party.—Respublica v. Dennie, 4 Yeates, 267, 2 Am. Dec. 402.

[t] (S. C.) 3 Bl. Comm. p. 364, which is fundamental law in this state with respect to the examination and qualification of jurors, provides that "a juror may be examined on oath of voir dire with regard to such causes of challenges as are not to his dishonor or discredit, but not with regard to any crime or anything which tends to his disgrace or disadvantage." Held, that to ask a juror whether or not he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused in a criminal prosecution is an attempt to elicit information which tends to his dishonor, disgrace, and disrepute, in that it assumes that a man will prejudge a fellow citizen on whose trial he is to sit; and therefore a defendant in a criminal prosecution has no right to examine a juror on his voir dire as to any opinion he may have formed or expressed as to the prisoner's guilt.—(1813) State v. Baldwin, 3 Brev. 309, 1 Const. Rep. 289; (1830) State v. Sims, 2 Bailey, 29; (1831) State v. Crank, Id. 66, 23 Am. Dec. 117.

[u] (Tenn. 1883) No inquiry as to whether a juror, notwithstanding his opinion, will be governed solely by the evidence in the case, is permissible, where his opinion renders him clearly incompetent.—Conatser v. State, 80 Tenn. (12 Lea) 436.

[v] (Tex. 1880) The injunction in Cr. Code, art. 636, that if a juror, on the voir dire, answers that in his opinion his conclusion as to the prisoner's guilt will influence his verdict, he "shall be discharged," is imperative. He cannot be further examined.—Stagner v. State, 9 Tex. App. 440.

[w] (Tex. 1894) When the jurors had qualified by saying that they had no prejudice against the defendant, it was not error to exclude the question, "Have you, from hearsay or otherwise, so prejudged the defendant that you think him such a person as would be likely to commit the offense?"—Messic v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 626.

[x] (Tex. 1894) Under Willson's Cr. St. § 2281 (Acts 1885, p. 90), providing that if the juror, when asked if the opinion he has formed will influence his verdict, answers in the affirmative, he shall be discharged; if in the negative, he shall be questioned as to how his opinion was formed, and if he swears that he can render an impartial verdict the court may accept him,—it is only where the juror answers in the negative that he can be further questioned.—Shannon v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 5, 28 S. W. 540.

[y] (Tex. 1894) It was error, in a trial for murder, not to allow defendant to ask a juror, before trial, if he believed him guilty and that he ought to be hung, when another juror had answered such questions in the affirmative.—Randle v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 43, 28 S. W. 953.

[z] (Va. 1842) Where a juror, in answer to a question touching his competency, says that he has formed no opinion, nor come to any conclusion, on the case, the prisoner's counsel is not thereby precluded from questioning him still further as to whether he has not conversed much about the case.—Heath v. Commonwealth, 1 Rob. 735.

[zz] (Wis. 1854) When a juror is challenged to the favor, he may be interrogated in order to show the state of his mind, and may be asked whether he has read reports or listened to stories of the matters forming the subject of the issue.—Schoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823.

[a] (Cal. 1888) Under Pen. Code, § 1074, providing for challenges for implied bias in a trial for murder, when the court is satisfied that a juror entertains conscientious scruples against conviction when the penalty is death, it is the court's duty to excuse him, and it is not error to refuse to allow further examination by defendant.—People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161.

[b] (Fla. 1893) In testing the qualification of jurors on the voir dire it is not proper to ask a proposed juror as to the comparative credence that he would or could give to persons belonging to different races, who may or may not be witnesses.—Jenkins v. State, 31 Fla. 196, 12 South. 677.

[c] (Ga. 1892) Where a juror on his voir dire answered that he was opposed to capital punishment in cases of extreme youth, and by consent of counsel for accused was put on the court as a trior, and then stated that he was not opposed to capital punishment, the court did not err in allowing counsel for the state to interrogate him further.—Bell v. State, 91 Ga. 15, 16 S. E. 207.

[d] (Ill. 1890) In an action against a carrier of passengers for injuries to a passenger traveling on a pass, counsel for plaintiff may ask a juror whether the fact that plaintiff was traveling on a pass would influence his judgment or verdict, though the declaration alleges that he was traveling on a pass.—Jacksonville S. E. Ry. Co. v. Southworth, 32 Ill. App. 307, affirmed (1890) 135 Ill. 250, 25 N. E. 1093.

[e] (Ind. 1886) Where a juror states that he would not give the testimony of one engaged in sale of intoxicating liquors as much weight or credit as if he were engaged in some other business, the trial court, in the exercise of sound discretion, should permit him to be questioned on that subject.—Stoots v. State, 108 Ind. 415, 9 N. E. 380.

[f] (Iowa, 1896) On the examination of a juror to ascertain whether he was subject to a challenge for cause, it was not error to sus-tain an objection to the question, "Would the fact that a man had been indicted raise in your mind any presumption of guilt?"—State v. Cleary, 97 Iowa, 413, 66 N. W. 724.

[g] (Ky. 1892) It was not error for the state to ask jurors if they would inflict the death penalty if the evidence warranted it, after they had stated that they had no conscientious scruples in the matter.—Jones v. Commonwealth, 19 S. W. 844.

[h] (La. 1859) In a capital case, it is competent for the state to show the disqualification of a juror by interrogating the juror himself as to any conscientious scruples he may have against inflicting the punishment of death.—State v. Mullen, 14 La. Ann. 570.

[i] (La. 1892) On the trial of a negro for a criminal offense, questions asked a juror on his voir dire as to his opinion on the race problem, his belief in the superiority of the white race, and whether he thinks that negroes should be tried by white jurors, are irrelevant, and his answers to such questions cannot affect his qualifications as a juror.—State v. Casey, 44 La. Ann. 969, 11 South. 583.

[j] (Mass. 1834) A juror may be asked if he had formed an opinion as to the general guilt or innocence of all concerned in the burglary and arson of a Roman Catholic church, for the purpose of showing his religious prejudices.—Commonwealth v. Buzzell, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 163.

[k] (Mass. 1834) A juror, returned to try an indictment, is not to be asked whether he thinks the crime set forth ought not to be punishable by law, or ought to receive a different punishment from that which the law prescribes.—Commonwealth v. Buzzell, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 153.

[m] (Mass. 1847) After a person called as juror on trial of an indictment has stated, on examination according to the provisions of Rev. St. c. 95, § 27, that he has formed and expressed an opinion that the statute on which the defendant is indicted is in force, and was constitutionally enacted, the court will not allow him to be asked whether he can give due weight to and be fairly influenced by the arguments of the defendant's counsel against the opinion so formed and expressed.—Commonwealth v. Abbott, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 120.

[n] (Minn. 1890) On trial for receiving stolen property, a person was called as a juror who knew that the accused was the keeper of a brothel. Juror answered upon his voir dire that his knowledge of defendant's occupation had not prejudiced him against her, and that he was absolutely impartial as to the pending charge. Defendant's counsel then asked whether, if on the trial, her business should be shown, and the evidence in the case was such as to leave in the juror's mind a reasonable doubt as to her guilt, he would be able to give her the benefit of such doubt. Held, that the question was properly ruled out.—State v. Frelinghuysen, 43 Minn. 265, 45 N. W. 432.

[o] (Miss. 1877) On a trial for murder, it is error to refuse to comply with the request of the accused further to examine two members of the special venire touching their conscientious scruples, after each had answered that he "would not like for a man to be hung."—Smith v. State, 55 Miss. 410.

[p] (Neb. 1895) It was proper, in impaneling a jury, to ask a juror whether the fact that defendant was accused of murder would have any weight with him, and whether he could give the same credit to the testimony of defendant, should defendant testify, that he could give to the testimony of other witnesses under the same circumstances.—Basye v. State, 45 Neb. 261, 63 N. W. 811.

[q] (N. C. 1870) On the trial of a challenge to the favor, the juror may be questioned as to the existence of any prejudice, bias, partiality, or sentiment tending to prevent him from giving an impartial verdict. It is not improper to ask a white man, drawn as a juror, whether he believes he can do equal justice between the state and a colored man; the defendant being one.—State v. McAfee, 64 N. C. 339.

[r] (S. C. 1893) On a trial for murder, where a juror states on his voir dire that he is opposed to capital punishment, there is no error in excluding him on the challenge of the state without presenting him to defendant.—State v. McIntosh, 39 S. C. 97, 17 S. E. 446.

[s] (Tex. 1877) In the trial of a white man for the murder of a negro, the court below, over the objection of the accused, allowed the state's attorney to ask the petit jurors on their voir dire "if they could, upon the same evidence, return the same verdict against a white man for killing a negro as for killing another white man." Held, that the question was a proper one for the purpose of enabling the prosecution to satisfy itself that the jurors were free from a disqualifying bias or prejudice.—Lester v. State, 2 Tex. App. 432.

[t] (Wash. 1896) Since it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury that, in case an accused fails or refuses to testify as a witness in his own behalf, no inference of guilt shall arise against him, it was not error to refuse to permit a juror to be interrogated as to whether the fact of defendant's being charged with larceny would prejudice such juror against defendant's testimony, should he go on the stand in his own behalf.—State v. Everitt, 14 Wash. 574, 45 Pac. 150.

As infringement of right to trial by jury, see ante, § 231.

[a] (Ala. 1893) The court need not allow defendant to examine jurors pronounced competent on the voir dire, to show a cause of challenge not brought to light by the statutory interrogations.—Carr v. State, 104 Ala. 4, 16 South. 150; Id., 104 Ala. 43, 16 South. 155.

[b] (Ga. 1846) The act of 1843, prescribing certain questions to be propounded to jurors to test their competency for the trial of capital offenses, is not applicable to cases which arose previous to its passage.—Reynolds v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 222.

[c] (Ga. 1847) The questions to be propounded to jurors in capital cases are prescribed by statute, and it is improper to put any other to a juror in order to test his competency.—Williams v. State, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 453.

[d] (Ga. 1850) When a juror is put upon triors, it is not proper for counsel to ask him any other questions than those propounded by the act of 1843.—Bishop v. State, 9 Ga. 121.

[e] (Ga. 1857) The court may vary the statute questions for examination on the voir dire, so as to enable the jury to understand them.—King v. State, 21 Ga. 220.

[f] (Ga.) The only questions to be propounded to the juror on trial as to his competency are those prescribed by the statute of 1856.—(1857)

Pines v. State, 21 Ga. 227; (1861) Monday v. State, 32 Ga. 672, 79 Am. Dec. 314.

[g] (Ga.) After a proposed juror has answered the statutory questions satisfactorily, and has been pronounced competent, the party objecting to him must produce evidence of the untruthfulness of his answers, and it is not legal or competent to propound questions to the juror himself to show his incompetency; but, after the introduction of such testimony, it is within the province of the court to hear the juror or examine him as to his explanations in the premises.—(1871) Nesbit v. State, 43 Ga. 238; (1876) Carter v. State, 56 Ga. 463.

[h] (Ga. 1888) The court is not confined to the statutory questions provided by Code 1882, § 4682, to be asked a juror put upon his voir dire, but may further question him to test his understanding, and explain to him the meaning of the statutory questions.—Fogarty v. State, 80 Ga. 450, 5 S. E. 782.

[i] (Mass. 1850) The examination of jurors, further than is provided for by Rev. St. c. 95, § 27, with a view to ascertain whether they stand indifferent in the cause, is a matter wholly within the discretion of the judge, both as to putting additional questions and the manner of putting them, whether by the judge or the party.—Commonwealth v. Gee, 59 Mass. (6 Cush.) 174.

[j] (Mass. 1893) Under Pub. St. c. 170, § 35, Gen. St. c. 132, § 29, and Rev. St. c. 95, § 27, the examination of jurors as to interest or bias in the cause, beyond the inquiries expressly provided for, was left to the discretion of the judge, and this is not changed by Acts 1887, c. 149, giving the parties power to make the examination "under the direction of the court"; and in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors it is no ground for exception that the court refused to ask a juror if he would have any prejudice or bias against a person accused of such a crime, and against whom some evidence had been offered tending to prove the offense, that would prevent his giving the testimony of the accused the same weight as he would give to any other person accused of an offense, and against whom some evidence had been offered.—Commonwealth v. Poisson, 157 Mass. 510, 32 N. E. 906.

[k] (Mass. 1893) Where, on motion of defendant in a criminal case, the court puts the usual questions to the jurors, a refusal to permit a general examination by counsel is proper, in the absence of any showing why they should have been further questioned.—Commonwealth v. Thompson, 159 Mass. 56, 33 N. E. 1111.

[l] (N. H. 1843) It is the duty of the court to impanel for the trial of each case a competent and impartial jury, and in the execution of this duty the court may propound to the jurors returned other interrogatories than those which they are required to put by the statute.—Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536.

[m] (S. C. 1882) Gen. St. 1872, p. 523, provides that "the court shall, on motion of either party in suit, examine on oath any person who is called as a juror therein, to know whether he is related to either party, or has any interest in the cause, or has expressed or formed any opinion, or is sensible of any bias or prejudice therein, and the party objecting to the juror may introduce any other competent evidence in support of the objection." Held that, where a juror had answered the statutory questions in the negative, it was proper for the court to ask him whether he was in the employ of the defendant, though such question was not a statutory one, since the question would properly come within the phrase "any other competent evidence," within the meaning of the statute.—Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 18 S. C. 262, 44 Am. Rep. 573.

Re-examination by parties, see post, § 572 [d].

[a] (U. S. 1822) In suits for freedom the court will not question the jurors, as they are called up to be sworn, as to their prejudices or prepossessions in favor of freedom, but leave the parties to their challenges.—Matilda v. Mason, Fed. Cas. No. 9,280 [2 Cranch, C. C. 343], reversed Mason v. Matilda (1827) 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 590, 6 L. Ed. 738.

[b] (Fla. 1895) The court may itself assume an exclusive examination of venire men on their voir dire, though the better practice is to allow counsel to do so.—Jones v. State, 35 Fla. 289, 17 South. 284.

[c] (Ga. 1857) After the solicitor general has asked the statute questions in a capital case, the court may repeat them to insure their being understood, although a different answer be elicited.—Mitchell v. State, 22 Ga. 211, 68 Am. Dec. 493.

[d] (Miss. 1891) There is nothing prejudicial to a defendant in the court's examining jurors on their voir dire as to their competency, allowing counsel to suggest questions, but not permitting them directly to interrogate on the subject, turning them over, however, to counsel, after being satisfied as to their competency, to question with a view to peremptory challenge.—Story v. State, 68 Miss. 609, 10 South. 47.

[e] (N. H. 1845) Upon the impaneling of a jury, the court may inquire of the jurors whether they entertain any opinions which will prevent them from discharging their duties in pursuance with the laws.—State v. Howard, 17 N. H. 171.

[f] (N. Y. 1893) A juror, examined as to his qualifications, who, to questions as to his views of circumstantial evidence, says that it must be precise and exact, and such that there would be no doubt whatever in his mind, and states that if the court instructed him in a certain way with respect to the weight and effect, under certain circumstances, to be given to the circumstantial evidence, he would still follow his own views, is incompetent; and, though the method of the court in examining such juror as to his qualifications may be improper, such fact can form no basis for an exception to the ruling of the court in excluding such juror.—People v. Fanshawe, 137 N. Y. 68, 32 N. E. 1102, affirming (1892) 65 Hun, 77, 19 N. Y. Supp. 865.

[g] (Ohio, 1889) Where a juror testifies that he has formed an opinion concerning the case, and a further examination concerning such opinion and as to whether he believes he can render an impartial verdict is conducted by counsel in the presence of the court, such examination constitutes a compliance with Rev. St. § 7278, providing that, if a juror has expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused, the court shall examine him on oath as to the grounds of such opinion, and if the juror shall say, and the court believes, that he can render an impartial verdict notwithstanding such opinion, he may be admitted as a juror; and hence the court's refusal to sustain a challenge for cause against such juror will not be ground for reversal.—McGuire v. State, 2 O. C. D. 318.

[i] (Tex. 1877) Act Aug. 1, 1876, § 1, enumerates the qualifications of jurors. Pasch. Dig. art. 3043, provides that it is the duty of the court in every case of felony to cause questions to be asked a juror for the purpose of testing his qualifications. Held, that the failure of the court to test the jurors as to their qualifications in a capital case was ground for reversal.—Lester v. State, 2 Tex. App. 432.

[j] (Wis. 1843) Justices of the peace are not authorized by statute to ascertain the qualifications of jurors, and they are not, therefore, obliged to do so.—Bracken v. Preston, 1 Pin. 365.

[a] (U. S. 1834) At the request of the prisoner's counsel, the court will ask each juror, as he comes to be sworn, whether he has formed and delivered any opinion as to the guilt of the prisoner upon the indictment.—United States v. Woods, Fed. Cas. No. 16,760 [4 Cranch, C. C. 484].

[b] (Ga. 1884) The judge is not required, at the request of counsel, to ask unusual questions of jurors on their voir dire, nor to address them, after the panel is made up, on the matter of disqualification by reason of bias or having formed an opinion.—Simmons v. State, 73 Ga. 609, 54 Am. Rep. 885.

[c] (Mass. 1858) The refusal of a judge presiding at a criminal trial to ask persons summoned as jurors whether they belong to any association formed for the purpose of enforcing the law under which the defendant is indicted is no ground of exception, if the defendant's counsel disclaims any knowledge or suspicion of any such connection and assigns no ground for making the request.—Commonwealth v. Thrasher, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 55.

[d] (Mass. 1895) On the voir dire examination of jurors, it is not error to refuse to put to them questions which add nothing material to the questions already put.—Commonwealth v. Surles, 165 Mass. 59, 42 N. E. 502.

[e] (Miss. 1883) It is optional with the court, in the examination of jurors upon their voir dire, to allow counsel to propound questions to proffered jurors, or to propound them itself.—Guice v. State, 60 Miss. 714.

[a] (Ill. 1881) It is within the discretion of the court to give the state leave to further examine a proposed juror after his acceptance by the state and tender to defendant.—Belt v. People, 97 Ill. 461.

[b] (Ill. 1883) After certain jurors had been accepted, but before the panel had been completed, the action of the court, in allowing a re-examination of such jurors, on affidavit of the state's attorney that they were improper persons to sit, whereby it appeared that they were friends or associates of some of defendants and that there had been an exercise of outside influence to get them upon the jury, and in discharging them thereupon, is not subject to exception.—Ochs v. People, 124 Ill. 399, 16 N. E. 662.

[c] (Ky. 1890) Gen. St. c. 62, art. 5, § 5, provides that in selecting jurors in civil cases 18 names shall be drawn from the jury box, and each side shall strike 3 names from the list, and the remaining 12 shall constitute the jury. Held, that where the court asks the panel all questions desired by counsel, who announce themselves satisfied, and it appears that the jurors were competent, a refusal by the court to permit counsel to examine each individual juror to ascertain his bias, after the 18 names have been drawn and no challenge for cause is made, is proper.—London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Rufer's Adm'r, 89 Ky. 525, 12 S. W. 948.

[d] (Mich. 1878) The judge may examine jurors on the part of the prosecution, if he chooses; but defendant's counsel are entitled to re-examine them.—Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739.

[e] (Nev. 1896) Where, in a capital case, a juror is excused by the court against defendant's objection, after evidence has been admitted, it is error to retain the other jurors without giving defendant the privilege asked for of re-examining them as to their then state of mind before being resworn to try the case with the new juror. Belknap, J., concurring on the ground that the jury should have been discharged after the juror had been excused.—State v. Vaughan, 23 Nev. 103, 43 Pac. 193.

[a] (U. S. 1878) A person offered as a juror is not compelled to disclose under oath his guilt of a crime which would work his disqualification. If he declines to answer, the objecting party must prove such disqualification by other evidence.—Burt v. Panjaud, 99 U. S. 180, 25 L. Ed. 451.

[b] (Ga. 1854) A juror, challenged for expression of opinion from rumor, will be heard in his own vindication.—Anderson v. State, 14 Ga. 709.

[c] (Ind. 1824) If the cause of challenge to a juror tend to his infamy, he cannot be examined on oath respecting it. The challenge must be supported by extrinsic proof.—Hudson v. State, 1 Blackf. 317.

[d] (Mo. 1884) Jurors are not bound on their voir dire examination to answer questions which are irrelevant or impertinent, or those the answer to which might tend to their disgrace, infamy, or self-accusation of crime.—State v. Mann, 83 Mo. 589.

[e] (N. Y. 1855) A juror may be examined as a witness to sustain a challenge of himself to the favor, and will not be excused from stating whether he has any prejudice against a religious sect, on the ground that the answer would disgrace him.—People v. Christie, 2 Abb. Prac. 256, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 579.

[f] (N. C. 1884) That a juror has stated on his voir dire that he had said it would injure an attorney politically with certain persons to appear for the defense does not require him to name them in response to a question by the prisoner's counsel.—State v. Mills, 91 N. C. 581.

[g] (Tenn. 1845) The prosecuting officer may inquire of a person presented as a juror in the trial of a case for counterfeiting whether he has taken an oath to acquit all persons of counterfeiting; but the person may refuse to answer.—Fletcher v. State, 25 Tenn. (6 Humph.) 249.

[h] (Tex. 1883) While the fact that one is under an indictment for a felony imperatively disqualifies him from serving as a juror, the fact must appear otherwise than from the examination of the proposed juror on his voir dire.—Sewell v. State, 15 Tex. App. 56.

Number of jurors to be drawn before parties must examine, see ante, § 356.

[a] (Ga. 1863) It is not error for the court to explain to a juror who is on trial for competency the meaning of a phrase which he does not understand.—Henry v. State, 33 Ga. 441.

[b] (N. Y. 1894) Defendant in a criminal case is not prejudiced by the fact that he was compelled to examine a juror on his voir dire before the state was compelled to exercise its right of challenge, defendant not being compelled to challenge till after the state exhausted its right.—People v. Miles, 143 N. Y. 383, 38 N. E. 456.

[c] (Wis. 1891) Where a special venire is issued, after exhausting the regular panel, the action of the court in giving defendant only 10 minutes in which to examine the list of jurors summoned will not be disturbed, in the absence of any showing that defendant was prejudiced, as it is a matter resting in the discretion of the court to limit the time.—Carthaus v. State, 78 Wis. 560, 47 N. W. 629.

[a] (Ala. 1891) It is not error for a court in a criminal case to refuse to permit defendant to inquire of a juror on his voir dire whether he is willing to accord a negro as fair a trial as a white person, as neither party to the action has a right to interrogate a juror before he is challenged.—Hornsby v. State, 94 Ala. 55, 10 South. 522.

[b] (Ala. 1895) Neither party has the right, before challenge, to interrogate jurors to ascertain whether they are subject to challenge, it being the duty of the presiding judge to conduct their examination.—Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Whitehead, 109 Ala. 495, 19 South. 705.

[c] (Cal. 1855) The defendant may ask the jurors if they have formed or expressed an opinion, before challenging them for cause.—People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 275.

[d] (Ga. 1877) A panel of 24 jurors being presented for the striking of a jury, the defendant made demand "that said jurors be put upon their voir dire and questioned as to their competency and impartiality as jurors to try such case in accordance with the ruling of the supreme court as contained in Justices of Inferior Court of Pike County v. Griffin & W. P. Plank Road Co., 15 Ga. 39, said case having before that time undergone two investigations in said court, both of defendants being residents of said county, while all of the complainants were nonresidents, and the principal defendant, S. G. H., belonging to said panel of jurors and having been relieved by a substitute when said case was called." Held, that it was error to refuse defendant the privilege of examining said jurors before striking the jury, as such demand was a sufficient challenge to the array.—Howell v. Howell, 59 Ga. 145.

[e] (Ga. 1890) Under Code, § 4682, prescribing the questions that may be asked a juror on his voir dire, the judge may first explain the meaning of the words "bias," "prejudice," and "perfectly impartial," used therein; but his failure to do so is not error.—Woolfolk v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 11 S. E. 814.

[f] (Ga. 1893) In trials for misdemeanors there is no right to examine a juror upon his voir dire without first challenging him, and assigning a cause of challenge.—Schnell v. State, 92 Ga. 459, 17 S. E. 966.

[g] (Mass. 1850) When jurors are returned from the bystanders in a criminal case, it is not necessary that the indictment should be read to them before making the inquiries prescribed by Rev. St. c. 95, § 27. It is sufficient to state to them in general terms the offense charged and the party to be tried therefor.—Commonwealth v. Gee, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 174.

[h] (Mich. 1860) On the impaneling of a jury, it is irregular for counsel to put questions to the jurors called without interposing any challenge; and no error can be assigned to the action of the court in allowing jurors thus questioned, but not challenged, to be sworn to try the case.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

[i] (Minn. 1876) Whether or not a party shall be allowed to interrogate a juror as to his qualifications, without first interposing a challenge, is discretionary with the court.—State v. Lautenschlager, 22 Minn. 514.

[k] (N. M. 1884) Technically, on the trial of a juror for general or absolute disqualification under the statute, the challenge should be first interposed, and the evidence introduced afterwards; but where, on a voir dire, it appears that the juror is not the head of a family, a challenge therefor may be disposed of on the evidence already received.—Territory v. Lopez, 2 Pac. 364.

[a] (U. S. 1806) The court will not ask a juror, before he is sworn, whether he has formed and delivered any opinion as to the case, but leave the party to challenge for favor.—United States v. Johnson, Fed. Cas. No. 15,484 [1 Cranch, C. C. 371].

[b] (Conn. 1880) In showing ground for a challenge for cause in a criminal case, it is not necessary that the juror be sworn on his voir dire.—State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89.

[c] (Fla. 1889) Jurors, when examined as to their qualifications, should be sworn on their voir dire.—Ellis v. State, 25 Fla. 702, 6 South. 768.

[d] (Ga. 1854) The voir dire oath, after being administered by the court to a juror, need not be readministered to him when sent before triors.—Griffin v. State, 15 Ga. 476.

[e] (Miss. 1859) Where a defendant, before proceeding to trial, moves that the court have each juror sworn to answer questions as to whether he has formed or expressed an opinion in the case, and offers to prove as a ground for this inquiry that the case is one of great notoriety, and that there is great prejudice against himself, a refusal of the court to grant such motion is no ground of error in an appellate court.—Powers v. Presgroves, 38 Miss. 227.

[f] (N. J. 1824) A juror cannot be asked, without being first sworn, whether he has formed an opinion as to the guilt of the prisoner.—State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 220.

[g] (N. Y. 1872) The oath to a juror challenged and sworn for examination need not specify the ground of challenge, unless this be required by counsel at the time.—In re Foster, 13 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 372.

[h] (Okl. 1893) Rev. St. U. S. c. 15, § 800, provides that jurors to serve in the United States courts, "in each state respectively," shall have the same qualifications as jurors in the highest court in such state, and be drawn in the mode practiced therein, and such courts may "conform the designation and impaneling of juries" to the laws and usages relating to jurors in state courts, etc. Held, that such statute applied to territories as well as states, and that a judge of a United States court in Oklahoma territory could lawfully administer an oath to a juror on his voir dire, though there was no statute of the United States expressly authorizing him to administer it.—Finch v. United States, 1 Okl. 396, 33 Pac. 638.

[i] (Tex. 1878) In forming a jury from a special venire in a prosecution for murder, there is no objection to calling several of the venire together and swearing them simultaneously to answer questions touching their qualifications.—Wasson v. State, 3 Tex. App. 474.

[a] (U. S. 1847) The jury cannot be asked generally whether their conscientious scruples on the slavery question will prevent them from giving a verdict for the plaintiff, but such a question may be put to the members separately.—Driskell v. Parish, Fed. Cas. No. 4,087.

[b] (Ga. 1878) On a prosecution for a felony, two or more jurors cannot be examined together at the same time on the voir dire, nor put upon the accused after such examination; but each juror called should be disposed of separately, and either accepted or rejected, before another is presented to the accused.—Williams v. State, 60 Ga. 367, 27 Am. Rep. 412.

[c] (Ga. 1884) It is error in a criminal case to cause 12 jurors to be sworn upon their voir dire and examined together touching their competency, to order such as disqualified themselves to stand aside, and put on defendant each of those pronounced competent as his name is called.—Wilkerson v. State, 74 Ga. 398.

[d] (Mo, 1894) A defendant may not examine each juror separately as to whether he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the merits of the case, where the court has asked that question of the entire panel.—State v. Munch, 57 Mo. App. 207.

[e] (Tenn. 1870) Refusal of the court below in a civil suit to allow counsel for defendant, during the impaneling of the jury, to poll each juror, to see whether they had formed and expressed an opinion touching the merits of the case, held error.—Williams v. Godfrey, 48 Tenn. (1 Heisk.) 299.

[f] (Tex. 1878) In forming a jury from a special venire in a prosecution for murder, the questions should be put to them separately and not en masse.—Wasson v. State, 3 Tex. App. 474.

[a] (Cal. 1887) Where, on an information charging defendant with an assault with intent to commit murder, the defendant's counsel, in challenging the jury, has put to them hypothetical questions based on his theory of the case against the objection of the district attorney, the district attorney may, in cross-examining them, ask hypothetical questions based on his theory of the case.—People v. Copsey, 71 Cal. 548, 12 Pac. 721.

[b] (Tex. 1878) The accused, if desiring to cross-examine a juror on his qualifications, may be required to do so before the state accepts or rejects the juror.—Hardin v. State, 4 Tex. App. 355; Grissom v. State, 4 Tex. App. 374; Ray v. State, 4 Tex. App. 450.

[b] (Ill. 1890) On the examination of a juror who has shown himself in all other respects competent, it is proper to refuse to allow counsel to ask how he would decide the case if the evidence were exactly balanced, unless the explanation is added that in such case the law would require a verdict for defendant.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Fisher, 38 Ill. App. 33, affirmed (1892) 141 Ill. 614, 31 N. E. 406.

[c] (Ind. 1887) Counsel asked leave to propound to a juror on his voir dire the following question: "In a case where the plaintiff is a young man, and the defendant a farmer and an old man, upon a note payable in bank, assigned before maturity without notice of any defense, and where the evidence shows that the note was executed by the defendant on the belief that he was only executing an agency agreement, and for which he received no consideration, for whom would you find,—the plaintiff or the defendant?" Held, that there was no error in refusing to allow the question to be asked.—Woolen v. Wire, 110 Ind. 251, 11 N. E. 236.

[d] (Wash. 1896) On examination of a juror on his voir dire it was not error to refuse to allow counsel for defendant to ask the juror: "After hearing all the evidence and the testimony and the instructions of the court in this cause, if there yet remains in your mind a reasonable doubt regarding the guilt of the defendant, would you return a verdict of not guilty in his favor?"—such question being hypothetical.—State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889.

[a] (Ala. 1889) It is proper to refuse to ask a juror on his voir dire whether or not he has previously had a fixed opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, since an answer to the question would not indicate that the juror had a present opinion on the subject.—Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 7 South. 302.

[b] (Iowa, 1864) A party in a criminal case cannot, in ascertaining whether the jury are prejudiced, ask them whether, if the evidence should be the same as in a case they had just decided, their minds were not made up as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant.—State v. Leicht, 17 Iowa, 28.

[c] (La. 1859) When, in a criminal case, the question was asked a juror, examined on his voir dire, "Have you, or not, formed or expressed the opinion, from what you have heard of the case, that the defendant is guilty?" Held, that the question was not in legal form, and that the district judge, in refusing to allow it to be answered, did not abuse the discretionary power to overrule interrogatories not in legal form.—State v. Bennett, 14 La. Ann. 651.

[d] (N. C. 1879) On a trial for murder, the judge may properly require the question asked of a juror to be whether he has "formed and expressed an opinion that the prisoner at the bar is guilty," without more, when the judge explains in the presence of the jurors that this question applies to manslaughter as well as to murder.—State v. Matthews, 80 N. C. 417.

[e] (Pa. 1888) It is error to refuse to permit a juror to answer on the voir dire whether he had not heard the merits of the case discussed, and formed an opinion, although there had been no trial of the case before.—Comfort v. Mosser, 121 Pa. 455, 15 Atl. 612.

[a] (U. S. 1895) On an indictment, under Rev. St. § 5511, for violation of the election laws, the refusal to permit a juror to be asked on his voir dire whether his political affiliations would bias his judgment was not error, in the absence of any statement tending to show a special reason for asking it.—Connors v. United States, 158 U. S. 408, 15 Sup. Ct. 951, 39 L. Ed. 1033.

[b] (Fla. 1894) Under Rev. St. § 2850, providing that "no person whose opinions are such as to preclude him from finding any defendant guilty of an offense punishable by death shall be allowed to serve as a juror on the trial of any capital case," it is improper to ask a venireman if he would find a man guilty on circumstantial evidence, since the question is insufficient to bring the matter within the statute.—Lambright v. State, 34 Fla. 564, 16 South. 582.

[c] (Mich. 1895) Where, in a prosecution for illegally selling liquor, a juror is asked on his voir dire, "Which way would you desire to give your verdict if the evidence * * * was just even? * * * Which way would you lean,—for the people or for defendant?" it was not reversible error to require the question to be so framed as to merely require him to answer which way he would find.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374, 65 N. W. 213.

[d] (Pa. 1888) A juror having on his voir dire declared that he had no conscientious scruples against a defense on the ground of insanity, it was not error to exclude defendant's questions, "Whether, under any circumstances, in his capacity as a juror, he thinks it would be possible to set up such a defense, and if he would consider it a valid defense? Whether he could conceive of any case in which there could be such a defense, which he would entertain as a juror?"—Hall v. Commonwealth, 12 Atl. 163.

[e] (Tex. 1883) In testing the bias of a white man summoned as a juror on a special venire for the trial of a negro, he may not be asked whether he has "the same neighborly regard" for a negro as for a white man.—Cavitt v. State, 15 Tex. App. 190.

Doubt as to effect of opinion, see ante, § 479.

[a] (Colo. 1883) The mere fact that a juror, on the voir dire examination in the trial of one of several persons jointly indicted, testifies that he served on "the other jury," does not render him incompetent when it is not shown what "the other jury" was, or whether the co-defendant was convicted or not.—Mooney v. People, 7 Colo. 218, 3 Pac. 235.

[b] (Ga. 1855) A juror was asked, "Do you reside in the city?" and answered in the affirmative. To the next question, "Have you lived here six months?" he answered in the negative. The state's counsel challenged him for cause, and the challenge was sustained. Held, that there is no necessary connection between the above questions, and that the second question and answer must be taken to refer to the county, and not the city in which the trial was held.—Boyd v. State, 17 Ga. 194.

[c] (Ga. 1857) A juror summoned by the sheriff as a tales juror is presumptively a qualified person, and his answer to a question by counsel that he was born out of the limits of the United States does not overcome the presumption that he was naturalized.—Jordan v. State, 22 Ga. 545.

[d] (Ga. 1884) Where a juror, when asked if his mind was impartial, answered that he "could not say it was," but, when told that he must answer "Yes" or "No," said "Yes," held no error to rule him competent.—Cato v. State, 72 Ga. 747.

[e] (Ind. 1875) It is not error for the court to overrule an objection to the competency of a juror based entirely upon the mere supposition and presumption by the juror of the existence of facts which might render him incompetent.—Miller v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co., 52 Ind. 51.

[f] (Ind. 1894) The competency of a juror is not to be determined from one answer alone, but from all that he says on the subject.—Pemberton v. State, 11 Ind. App. 297, 38 N. E. 1096.

[g] (Mo. 1891) A juror on his voir dire stated that plaintiff was second or third cousin to his wife. Defendant's counsel asked, "Would that relationship influence you in coming to a conclusion?" He answered, "Yes, sir." Plaintiff's counsel then asked, "Don't you believe that under your oath you could try the case impartially?" He answered he could if it was his brother. Held, that the court erred in overruling defendant's challenge for cause.—Mahaney v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 108 Mo. 191, 18 S. W. 895.

[h] (Neb. 1893) Where the examination of a juror raises a doubt as to his being an elector of the county where the action is brought, there is no error in sustaining a challenge for cause.—Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Cook, 37 Neb. 435, 55 N. W. 943.

[i] (N. Y. 1867) Where the evidence of a juror challenged on a trial for murder is substantially that he had no impression as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and that it would require evidence to enable him to find a verdict, the challenge will be properly overruled. —O'Brien v. People, 48 Barb. 274, affirmed (1867) 36 N. Y. 276, 3 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 368.

[j] (Pa. 1825) In an action against a banking company, the juror, on being challenged, was asked, on his voir dire, whether he was a drawer or indorser of a note in the bank, and answered that he was an indorser of a note in the bank, but had no interest in the bank. The court not being called upon for the purpose, and expressing no opinion as to the sufficiency of the evidence, the triors found that the juror was not indifferent, and he was set aside. Held, that this was no ground of error.—Gratz v. Benner, 13 Serg. & R. 110.

[k] (Pa. 1889) After a juror has stated on his voir dire that he did not think the opinion he had formed as to defendant's guilt would have any influence on his verdict, it is proper for the court to ask him to answer the question "by yes or no," and also whether he would, if sworn, make up his verdict solely from the evidence of the witnesses.—Clark v. Commonwealth, 123 Pa. 555, 16 Atl. 795, 23 Wkly. Notes Cas. 317.

[l] (Tenn. 1857) A juror, on his examination by the court, stated that "shortly after the killing, and while he was looking at the body of the deceased, he inquired of the bystanders how the killing occurred. Being told that it was done without provocation, he said that the prisoner ought to be hung," but also stated, that he had no opinion now. The court held him competent. The prisoner excepted. Held that, without some explanation of his change of mind, the juror was incompetent, and a new trial was ordered.—Norfleet v. State, 36 Tenn. (4 Sneed) 340.

[m] (Utah, 1876) On the trial of the defendant, charged with the crime of polygamy, a juror, under examination as to his qualifications to serve, was asked the following question: "Are you living in polygamy?"—which, under the caution of the court, he declined to answer, as the answer would tend to criminate him. Held, that the juror virtually admitted the fact, and was properly excluded from the panel. It was not necessary that his disqualification should be shown by extrinsic evidence. —United States v. Reynolds, 1 Utah, 319.

[n] (Va. 1834) One called to serve as a juror in a criminal case, being examined on his voir dire, first said that he was not a freeholder, but, before the panel was completed, returned into court, and said he was mistaken, and that he was a freeholder. Held, that he was a good and lawful juror.—Hendrick v. Commonwealth, 5 Leigh, 707.

[a] (U. S. 1807) Evidence as to the prevailing opinion of individuals of the religious sect to which the juror belongs is inadmissible on trial of a challenge for favor.—Reason v. Bridges, Fed. Cas. No. 11,617 [1 Cranch, C. C. 477].

[b] (U. S. 1808) The challenged juror cannot be examined as a witness to the triors.—Joice v. Alexander, Fed. Cas. No. 7,435 [1 Cranch, C. C. 528].

[c] (Ala. 1861) A freemason is a competent juror in a cause to which his lodge is a party, the court taking judicial notice that such lodge is a charitable or eleemosynary body.—Burdine v. Grand Lodge of Alabama, 37 Ala. 478.

[d] (Ark. 1853) On challenging a juror for principal cause, the party challenging has a right to elect whether the competency of the juror shall be tried by the court or by triors. If by the court, then the trial must be on the testimony of the juror only, on his voir dire; if by triors, then by other evidence, to the exclusion of the oath of the juror challenged.—Stewart v. State, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 720.

[e] (Cal. 1855) Where a person offered as a juror is charged with actual bias, the triors are to determine the fact from the testimony; and any testimony which would lead to the conclusion that a bias existed in the juror's mind is competent testimony.—People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 347.

[f] (Cal. 1855) To ascertain whether a bias exists in the mind of the juror, resort must be had to his declarations to others, or to his sworn statements when interrogated.—People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 347.

[g] (Ga. 1854) A person called as a juror, and challenged, may be examined as a witness as to the matter of challenge.—Justices of Superior Court Pike County v. Griffin & West Point Plank Road Co., 15 Ga. 39.

[h] (Mass. 1835) In general, if a juror stands indifferent upon his answers on the voir dire, a want of impartiality is not to be shown by other evidence. A cause of challenge, however, which could not be known to the juror, might be thus shown.—Commonwealth v. Wade, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 395.

[i] (Mich. 1888) After a juror has denied on his voir dire that he has said he believed respondent to be guilty, it may be shown by other witnesses that the juror had made such statement.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473.

[j] (Minn. 1889) Defendant, on trial for murder, challenged a juror of the regular panel, on the ground of actual bias, asserting that in a conversation on business matters with defendant's mother the juror had manifested the alleged bias. The mother testified to expressions of ill-will made by the juror, all of which he positively denied. It appeared that the conversation was in the presence of the juror's clerk, whereupon defendant's counsel demanded that the clerk be summoned, that he might be examined as to the juror's competency. Held, that the court did not err in refusing to issue a subpœna, suspend proceedings, and secure the attendance of the clerk.—State v. Barrett, 40 Minn. 65, 41 N. W. 459.

[k] (N. H. 1845) A challenge to the juror is founded upon evidence not so strong but that it permits of rebuttal, and leaves the question of partiality to be determined on the evidence adduced by both sides.—State v. Howard, 17 N. H. 171.

[l] (N. J. 1794) If a juror challenged is sworn on his voir dire, and does not disclose any interest, the party challenging may prove the interest by other testimony.—Bickham v. Pissant, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 220.

[m] (N. Y. 1823) Where a juror is challenged for having expressed an opinion as to the merits of the case, he may be used as a witness on the trial of his qualifications.—Pringle v. Huse, 1 Cow. 432.

[n] (N. Y. 1823) When triors are appointed for a jury challenged for favor, the juror may be sworn as a witness to state or explain facts not impeaching his character or motives.—People v. Fuller, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 16.

[o] (N. Y. 1845) On a challenge to a juror for favor, any fact or circumstance from which bias or prejudice may justly be inferred, although weak in degree, is admissible evidence before the triors.—People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281.

[p] (N. Y. 1845) In the examination before triors of the competency of a juror, it is proper to examine the wife and children, as well as the neighbors and journeymen, of the person on trial.—People v. Boughton, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 140.

[r] (N. Y. 1847) On the trial of a challenge for favor, an impression or hypothetical opinion adverse to the prisoner, though not conclusive, is admissible evidence in support of the challenge.—Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216.

[s] (Pa. 1822) Where a juror swears, on the voir dire, that he "does not know whether he is interested or not," his interest in the suit may be proved aliunde.—Shannon v. Commonwealth, 8 Serg. & R. 444.

[a] (Ark. 1857) Where a juror admits that he has formed an opinion, it is incumbent on the state, and not on the prisoner, to show that the opinion was founded on rumor, and was not such as to bias his mind.—Meyer v. State, 19 Ark. 156.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) The burden is on the party challenging, to prove the cause of challenge.—State v. Hartman, 10 Iowa, 589.

[c] (Kan. 1875) In a criminal prosecution for murder, while the jury were being impaneled, one of the jurors, upon an examination as to his competency to serve as a juror, stated that he "had formed the opinion that the deceased was killed, and that the defendant killed him," and nothing further was shown with reference to the competency of said juror; and the defendant then challenged said juror for cause, and the court overruled the challenge. Held, that the court erred.—State v. Brown, 15 Kan. 400.

[d] (Mich. 1865) A person called to be a juror is presumed to be qualified and impartial, and the burden of proving the disqualification is on the challenging party, who must make out a prima facie case, and in criminal cases, such a case, at the least, as leaves the juror's impartiality in reasonable doubt.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

[e] (N. Y. 1845) A fixed opinion of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, though it may be necessary to sustain a challenge for principal cause, need not be proved where the challenge is for favor. A less decided opinion may be shown and exhibited to the triors, who must determine upon its effect.—People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281.

[f] (Tex. 1882) The better practice is to discharge a juror whose impartiality is questionable, though he be not presumably disqualified. —Dreyer v. State, 11 Tex. App. 631.

[g] (Vt. 1888) Proof that a juror took out naturalization papers after he had acted as juror raises a presumption that he was an alien at the time of the trial, especially where it is shown that he was of foreign birth.—Richards v. Moore, 60 Vt. 449, 15 Atl. 119.

[h] (Va. 1853) On trial for arson, where it appears that a juror is the nephew of the deceased wife of the person whose house was burned, and that he was therefore incompetent as a juror, if she left no children, it is for the prosecution to show the fact.—Jaques v. Commonwealth, 10 Grat. 690.

[a] (Ga. 1887) On indictment for murder, an affidavit stating that before the trial affiant heard a juror say that he thought defendant ought to be hung is not sufficient evidence of prejudice to outweigh the juror's own oath, and to disqualify him from serving.—West v. State, 79 Ga. 773, 4 S. E. 325.

[b] (Ill. 1878) When an effort is made to show that a juror has sworn falsely on his voir dire, the evidence must clearly preponderate in establishing the fact.—A mere doubt is not sufficient.—Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 221.

[c] (Kan. 1872) The fact that a juror frequently meets a party to an action is insufficient to show an intimacy disqualifying him to try the case.—Moore v. Cass, 10 Kan. 288.

[d] (Mich. 1865) Wherever, in criminal cases, the examination of the evidence given upon a challenge leaves a reasonable doubt of the impartiality of a juror, the defendant should have the benefit of the doubt, and the juror be excluded.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

[e] (Mo. 1884) The trial court is the sole judge of the weight of evidence as to the prejudice of a juror.—State v. Cook, 84 Mo. 40.

[f] (Nev. 1865) The mere statement of a stranger that a person of whom it is known only that his home and residence have been in a foreign country was a citizen of the United States is not sufficient to establish his citizenship here, so as to qualify him as a juror.—State v. Salge, 1 Nev. 465.

[g] (N. Y. 1887) The fact that a large number of men were called before a jury was finally chosen does not show that the jury was either prejudiced or unfavorable towards the accused, or moved by improper motives.—People v. Beckwith, 108 N. Y. 67, 15 N. E. 53.

[h] (Pa. 1872) Proof that some months previous to the trial, one of the jurors had a spell of sickness, which was accompanied with a certain amount of mental disorder, is not sufficient evidence of insanity to disqualify him from sitting on the jury.—Commonwealth v. Morrow, 9 Phila. 583.

[i] (Tenn. 1892) A person of good character, who admits having read the newspaper accounts of a certain murder, and of having talked with a number of persons, but who says he has formed no opinion, and can render an impartial verdict, is competent as a juror, notwithstanding the testimony of one who is shown to be a partisan of defendant, and whose memory is not entirely clear as to the expression of any such opinion by the person mentioned, or of another who has been impeached, and who is unable to swear positively as to the expression of an opinion, but only as to his information and belief.—King v. State, 91 Tenn. 617, 20 S. W. 169.

[j] (Tex. 1893) A verdict will not be set aside for prejudice of a juror summoned on a special venire, and shown to be an honorable man, unacquainted with either defendant or deceased, or with the facts of the case, on evidence that he said to another venireman that he lived so far away that he hoped to be called on some case so as to pay expenses, and that defendant "ought to have his d——d neck broke"; he testifying that he said "they would keep hauling him on the jury until he would get a chance to help break some one's neck."—Mayes v. State (Cr. App.) 24 S. W. 421.

[k] (Wash. 1859) The fact that a resident of this territory, while absent in another state, intending to return, and considering this country his home, voted for president of the United States while absent, cannot be considered as establishing his residence elsewhere, contrary to his oath that it was his fixed intention to return, and that he considered his home here in this territory, made on his voir dire examination as a juror.—Clarke v. Territory, 1 Wash. T. 68.

[l] (Wis. 1858) To disqualify a juror on the ground of alienage, it is insufficient to show that search of the records of the county has been made, and that no record of the naturalization of his father, who was an alien, could be found.—Keenan v. State, 8 Wis. 132.

[m] (Wis. 1891) A juror testified that he was a citizen of the United States. The only evidence to the contrary was that he had stated that he came to this country from England, and had never completed his naturalization. It was not shown that his parents during his minority had not become naturalized. Held, that his incompetency was not established.—Schuster v. State, 80 Wis. 107, 49 N. W. 30.

[a] (Minn. 1861) Where a challenge for bias is made by one party, and admitted by the other, no trial of the challenge is necessary.—Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 319 (Gil. 224).

[b] (N. C. 1849) If a juror is challenged for favor by the prisoner, and the cause of challenge is admitted by the prosecution, the prisoner is bound thereby, and cannot insist on the juror's being tried by triors or by the court.—State v. Creasman, 82 N. C. 395.

On challenge to array, see ante, § 550 [j].

[a] (Cal. 1872) An objection to the appointment of a trior in a criminal case must be made at the time, and the grounds of objection brought to the attention of the court; and, if overruled, an exception must be reserved in the usual mode.—People v. Voll, 43 Cal. 166.

[b] (Fla. 1860) If neither party, in a capital case, asks for triors of the interest of jurors, the court may act as such.—O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215.

[c] (Ga. 1846) Where a prisoner desires the benefit of his right to challenge a juror "propter affectum," he must, under the act of 1843, ask the court for the appointment of triors for that purpose, in the manner provided by common law.—Robinson v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 563.

[d] (Ga. 1846) After a juror has answered in the negative the questions propounded by the act of 1843, it is competent for the prisoner to put him upon triors, for the purpose of showing that he is not indifferent.—Boon v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 618.

[f] (Mich. 1850) The usual mode of trying the impartiality of a juror, challenged for favor, is by triors appointed for that purpose, on the demand of the challenging party, but it is not the only legal mode; and, where a juror is challenged for favor, and the challenging party, when asked by the court how he will have the challenge tried, refuses to indicate the mode of trial, it may be tried by the court by administering an oath to the juror, and propounding questions to him.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. (Man.) 451.

[g] (N. Y. 1830) The production of evidence to the judge, in case of a challenge, without asking for triors, will be considered as the substitution of him in the place of triors in every respect.—People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122.

[h] (N. Y. 1839) Where, on a trial for felony, the prisoner consents to substitute the court for triors, upon challenges to jurors, he cannot revoke his consent, especially after the challenge has been passed upon by the court.—People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 509.

[i] (N. Y. 1839) A bill of exceptions lies for refusing triors, or upon any question arising on a challenge to jurors where triors may be demanded.—People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 509.

[j] (N. Y. 1867) It is competent for the court to act as trior upon challenge to the favor; and it must be assumed that it so acts by consent of all the parties, in the absence of objection or of request to submit the question to triors.—O'Brien v. People, 36 N. Y. 276.

[k] (Pa. 1831) In a capital case, two jurors declared, upon oath, that they had formed and expressed opinions unfavorable to the prisoner, and were challenged by the commonwealth for that cause. Held, that inasmuch as the prisoner made no objection, but acquiesced in the challenges, there was no necessity for appointing triors.—Commonwealth v. Gross, 1 Ashm. 281.

§ 588. Who may be triors.

[a] (U. S. 1807) If, after eight jurors have been sworn in chief, the defendant challenge one for favor, the challenge is to be tried by the jurors already sworn.—Reason v. Bridges, Fed. Cas. No. 11,617 [1 Cranch, C. C. 477].

[b] (U. S.) The two jurors first sworn in a cause are the proper triors of a challenge for favor.—(1808) Joice v. Alexander, Fed. Cas. No. 7,435 [1 Cranch, C. C. 528]; (1810) Queen v. Hepburn, Fed. Cas. No. 11,503 [2 Cranch, C. C. 3], affirmed (1813) 11 U. S. (7 Cranch) 290, 3 L. Ed. 348.

[c] (Ga. 1853) If a challenge be made to the first juror before any one has been sworn, the court will direct two indifferent persons taken from the bystanders to try the question, and if they find the party challenged indifferent he will be sworn and joined with the triors in determining the next challenge; but when two jurors have been found impartial, and have been sworn, then the office of triors will cease, and every subsequent challenge will be referred to the decision of the jurymen.—Copenhaven v. State, 14 Ga. 22.

[d] (Ga. 1853) If the prisoner challenge ten jurors, and the state one, and the twelfth be sworn, one trior shall be chosen by each party and added to the jurymen sworn, and the challenges referred to their decision; but, if several be sworn and the rest challenged, the court may assign any two persons sworn to determine the challenge. To the triors thus chosen no challenge can be admitted.—Copenhaven v. State, 14 Ga. 22.

[e] (Ga. 1855) Any two of the jurors already sworn are sufficient to try the challenges.—McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497.

[f] (Ga. 1855) After one juror has been sworn, it is error in the court to omit to join him with the bystanders who are to try the next challenge.—McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497.

[a] (Ga. 1853) Triors should not exceed two in number, unless by the consent of the prosecutor and defendant, or unless some special cause is alleged by one of them.—Copenhaven v. State, 14 Ga. 22.

[b] (N. J. 1818) A challenge to the favor, tried by three jurors, vitiates a judgment.—McCormick v. Brookfield, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 69.

[a] (Minn. 1867) Triors are not required to be resworn upon the submission of each challenge in a case.—State v. Brown, 12 Minn. 538 (Gil. 448).

[b] (N. Y. 1847) Where triors of a challenge for favor are sworn to find whether the juror is indifferent "upon the issue joined," the oath is erroneous. They should be sworn to find whether the juror is indifferent as to the issue and impartial between the parties.—Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216.

[a] (U. S. 1808) The court will not permit counsel to argue to the triors on a challenge for favor.—Joice v. Alexander, Fed. Cas. No. 7,435 [1 Cranch, C. C. 528].

[b] (Ark. 1853) On the trial, by triors, of the competency of a juror, the party may object to the admission of evidence before the triors, or to the instructions of the court, and make them a part of the record by bill of exceptions.—Stewart v. State, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 720.

[c] (Ga. 1852) When a juror has been put upon triors, and they have retired to make up their verdict, it is not proper to move the court to send written instructions to the triors, to pro-pound a particular interrogatory to the juror, for the purpose of establishing his disqualification. The triors should be brought into open court, and instructed publicly and in presence of both parties respecting the whole matter.—Whaley v. State, 11 Ga. 123.

[d] (Ga. 1854) The trial of a juror before triors is best conducted when conducted after the manner of the trial of a collateral issue before a full jury.—Baker v. State, 15 Ga. 498.

[e] (Ga. 1855) Where a juror is put upon the triors to ascertain his competency, the trial should be conducted in presence of the court; but it is not error if the triors are allowed to retire with the juror, and question him in private.—Epps v. State, 19 Ga. 102.

[f] (N. Y. 1845) Where, upon a challenge for favor, the court err in admitting or rejecting evidence, or instructing the triors upon matters of law, a bill of exceptions lies.—People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281.

[g] (N. Y. 1847) Where a challenge for principal cause is overruled by the court, and the juror is then challenged for favor, it is erroneous to instruct the triors that the latter challenge is in the nature of an appeal from the judgment of the court upon the facts.—Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216.

[h] (N. Y. 1863) On a challenge for favor, a juror testified before the triors that he had conscientious scruples in reference to serving as a juror in a case where the punishment on conviction would be death; that he would, if he took an oath to serve as a juror, render a verdict in accordance with the evidence, but that it would violate his conscience to do so; and that he could not, where the punishment was death, conscientiously render a verdict which would take a man's life, even if the evidence clearly showed that the prisoner was guilty. Held, that it was proper for the court to refuse to charge the triors that, assuming what the juror had sworn to be true, no cause was shown which would justify the triors in finding the challenge true.—Lowenberg v. People, 5 Parker, Cr. R. 414.

[a] (N. Y. 1853) On a trial for murder, a juror was challenged for favor. The first two jurors sworn, having been appointed triors, sworn as such, and having heard the evidence, arguments, and charge, could not agree. Held, that the next two (the third and fourth) should be selected to rehear the matter as triors; and they were so sworn.—People v. Dewick, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 230.

[b] (Pa. 1837) Where triors disagree as to the indifference of a juror, one finding that he was indifferent, and the other that he was not, —it was error for the court to declare him competent.—Commonwealth v. Fitzpatrick, 3 Clark, 520, 6 Pa. Law J. 201.

[a] (Cal. 1894) Where defendant has no counsel, it is reversible error for the court to fail to comply with Pen. Code, § 1066, which provides that, before a juror is called, defendant must be informed that if he intends to challenge an individual juror he must do so when the juror appears and before he is sworn.—People v. Moore, 103 Cal. 508, 37 Pac. 510.

[b] (Fla. 1890) On an indictment for murder one of the veniremen stated that he had no bias against the accused, whereupon counsel for accused asked for reasonable time to procure witnesses to show the bias of the juror, but without stating how long it would require to procure such witnesses, their residence, or the facts to be proved by them. Held, that there was no error in refusing the request.—Hodge v. State, 26 Fla. 11, 7 South. 593.

[c] (N. Y. 1858) The testimony of a juror, on the challenge to him for favor, cannot be considered upon the question whether the challenge for principal cause was properly decided. —Cancemi v. People, 16 N. Y. 501.

[d] (N. Y. 1878) Where the court is the trior of the challenge for principal cause, and also of the challenge for favor, and the latter immediately succeeds the other, the court may, in determining the challenge for favor, take into account what has been said by the proposed juror on the former challenge, and so may an appellate court, with power to review the determination on the challenge for favor.—Greenfield v. People, 74 N. Y. 277, 6 Abb. N. C. 1.

On challenge to array, see ante, § 550 [a, f].

[a] (U. S. 1807) It is not a principal cause of challenge that the juror has had conversations with some of the parties; but it is evidence for the consideration of triors upon a challenge for favor.—Young v. Marine Ins. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 18,163 [1 Cranch, C. C. 452].

[b] (Colo. 1873) A preconceived opinion of a juror in a criminal case is a ground of challenge to the favor, and not a ground of principal challenge.—Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48.

[c] (Ga. 1853) A juror having been challenged to the favor, the trial proceeds before the triors, and the truth of the matter alleged as cause of challenge must be made out to the satisfaction of the triors.—Copenhaven v. State, 14 Ga. 22.

[d] (Ga. 1857) Under Act 1856, the presiding judge in criminal cases is trior of the competency of jurors.—Jordan v. State, 22 Ga. 545.

[e] (Me. 1857) The court has jurisdiction, and it is its duty, to try all challenges of jurors for cause.—State v. Knight, 43 Me. 11.

[f] (Minn. 1886) At the trial of an indictment for murder, on a challenge to jurors for implied bias, the questions put related only to matters of actual bias. Held, that they were properly excluded, as, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 116, § 24 et seq., a challenge for implied bias must be tried by the court alone, while, in a capital case, a challenge for actual bias must be tried before triors appointed for that purpose.—State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 430, 26 N. W. 397.

[g] (N. H. 1845) A principal challenge of a juror is grounded on a charge of such a fact as, being proved true, raises a presumption of partiality too strong to be rebutted.—State v. Howard, 17 N. H. 171.

[h] (N. J. 1833) Principal challenges are to be tried by the court, and challenges to the favor by triors.—Mann v. Glover, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 195.

[i] (N. J. 1846) It is no ground of principal challenge to a juror that he has expressed an opinion on the matter to be tried, if it was not done through ill will or malice.—State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 196.

[j] (N. Y. 1812) If the facts alleged in the challenge to the array are admitted, the court decides upon them; if denied, two triors are appointed by the court out of the panel, or perhaps any two other persons named by the court.—Gardner v. Turner, 9 Johns. 260.

[k] (N. Y. 1821) A juror challenged to the favor may be sworn on his voir dire, and asked such questions as do not tend to his infamy or disgrace. The triors are to decide whether he stands indifferent between the parties.—Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank v. Smith, 19 Johns. 115.

[l] (N. Y. 1823) Where a juror is challenged by one party, for having expressed an opinion in favor of the other party, the challenge should, regularly, be tried by the court.—Pringle v. Huse, 1 Cow. 432.

[m] (N. Y.) If a juror have expressed an opinion against the party, though from his knowledge of the cause, and not from any ill will or favor, yet this is a principal cause of challenge.—(1826) Ex parte Vermilyea, 6 Cow. 555; (1827) People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. 108.

[n] (N. Y. 1839) The mere forming of an opinion by a juror upon the guilt or innocence of a party on trial for felony is a principal cause of challenge.—People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 509.

[o] (N. Y. 1845) The question of a challenge for favor is to be submitted as a question of fact upon all the evidence to the conscience and discretion of the triors, whether the juror is indifferent or not.—People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281.

[p] (N. Y. 1846) On a challenge for favor, the weight of the evidence adduced is for the triors.—People v. Honeyman, 3 Denio, 121.

[q] (N. Y. 1846) It is not a good ground of challenge to a juror, for principal cause, that he has an impression as to the defendant's guilt or innocence.—People v. Honeyman, 3 Denio, 121.

[r] (N. Y. 1848) Where an opinion in the mind of a juror is fixed and definite, it is ground for principal challenge, and is to be passed upon by the court; but, if it is short of a fixed and definite opinion, it becomes a question of fact for the triors.—People v. Hayes, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 582.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) The opinion of a juror, so far formed and fixed as to require evidence to remove it, disqualifies him, and is good ground of challenge for principal cause.—People v. Sullivan, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 277.

[t] (N. Y. 1854) A plaintiff brought an action of quare clausum fregit, and one of the defenses set up in the answer was the existence of a certain custom. Some of the jurors were challenged on the ground that they had formed an opinion as to the alleged custom. One of the jurors, on the trial of the challenge, testified that he had formed an opinion against the custom. Held, that the triors had two questions to determine: (1) Was the alleged ground of challenge true in fact? (2) If true, was its effect upon the mind of the juror such as to produce bias or favor?—and that therefore what the influence and effect of such an opinion was on the mind of the juror was not a question of law, but was a question to be decided by the triors.—Smith v. Floyd, 18 Barb. 522.

[v] (N. Y. 1858) To sustain a challenge for principal cause, on the ground that the juror has expressed an opinion, it must appear that the opinion was absolute and settled. It is not enough that it was hypothetical and uncertain. If the opinion belong to the latter class, it is a proper subject for a challenge to the favor.—People v. Stout, 4 Parker. Cr. R. 71; Stout v. People, Id. 132.

[w] (N. Y. 1867) In an action for libel brought by an opera manager against an editor, it was held that a juror could not be challenged for principal cause on the ground that he had stated that he was "opposed to theatrical representations."—Maretzek v. Cauldwell, 28 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Rob.) 660, 2 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 407.

[x] (N. Y. 1870) If the prisoner upon a criminal trial challenges a juror to the favor, although the facts proved on the trial of the challenge would be ground for challenge for principal cause, yet the determination of the question of competency belongs in such case to the triors, and not to the court; and the court cannot be called upon to rule, as matter of law, that the juror, upon the fact proved, was incompetent.—People v. Allen, 43 N. Y. 28, reversed Allen v. People (1870) 57 Barb. 338.

[y] (N. Y. 1878) Under Laws 1873, c. 427, providing that challenges in criminal cases shall be tried and determined by the court only, a challenge to the favor, as well as a challenge for cause, must be tried by the court instead of by triors, as was the former custom.—Greenfield v. People, 13 Hun, 242, reversed (1878) 74 N. Y. 277.

[z] (Vt. 1867) Whether a juror who has conscientious scruples against capital punishment should be excused is to be determined by the court.—State v. Ward, 39 Vt. 225.

[zz] (Wis. 1854) A juror, on his examination, stated that he had an opinion on the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence, if what he had heard was true; that he had heard the story talked about, but had not read the report of the examination before the coroner, or heard the story from witnesses or those who had heard the testimony; and that his opinion would not prevent his hearing testimony impartially. Held, that this was cause for a challenge to the favor, but not for principal cause.—Schæffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823.

[a] (Mich. 1878) There is no practical difference in criminal cases between a challenge for principal cause and a challenge for favor; and a judge, in ruling upon such a challenge, should make his ruling cover both grounds.—Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739.

[b] (N. Y. 1854) The triors of a juror, who is challenged for favor, must find that the juror stands impartial or indifferent, or they must reject him.—Smith v. Floyd, 18 Barb. 522.

[c] (Ohio, 1889) The fact that the court admitted a juror to sit is a sufficient finding that it was satisfied he could render an impartial verdict.—Goins v. State, 46 Ohio St. 457, 21 N. E. 476.

[a] Where the question of the competency of a juror is submitted to the court, the finding of the court is conclusive.

[c] (Ark. 1866) Where the challenge of jurors is "to the favor," the finding of the judge, sitting in lieu of triors, is conclusive.—Milan v. State, 24 Ark. 346.

[d] (Conn. 1879) A finding and declaration by the court that a juror was disqualified in itself severs his connection with the panel, and a subsequent waiver of the disqualification cannot restore the juror to the panel.—State v. Allen, 46 Conn. 531.

[e] (Minn. 1860) The objection of bias made to a juror being once established, it would seem that no possible combination of circumstances can remove the disqualification.—State v. Dumphey, 4 Minn. 438 (Gil. 340).

[f] (N. Y. 1860) The district attorney and the prisoner's counsel agreed that the court should act as trior. Held that, in the absence of exceptions to the admission of evidence, the decision upon the evidence as to the jurors' competency was conclusive.—Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 147, affirming People v. Sanchez (1859) 18 How. Prac. 72, and Sanchez v. People, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 535.

[g] (Pa. 1842) If a juror be set aside on sufficient evidence of interest, it is not error, although it afterwards appear that he had no interest.—Silvis v. Ely, 3 Watts & S. 420.

[h] (Wis. 1854) Jurors were sworn and examined, and after the examination were "challenged for cause." From the answers made it appeared that the challenge could only be for favor, no one having formed such an opinion as would justify a challenge for principal cause. The judge having decided in favor of their competency, it was held that the challenges must be regarded as for favor and the judge as having acted in the place of triors, and his decision as therefore conclusive.—Schoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823.

[a] (Cal. 1888) It is not error to deny defendant's motion for a retrial of certain challenges, after the jury has been completed and sworn.—People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161.

[b] (Conn. 1879) Defendant in a capital case, after having obtained the discharge of a juror pending trial, on the ground that he had declared beforehand an opinion as to the guilt of defendant, cannot demand that he be restored to the panel.—State v. Allen, 46 Conn. 531.

[c] (Ga. 1855) If, from a misapprehension of the answer of a juror, on the voir dire, he has been set aside as incompetent, the court may correct the mistake, whenever discovered, and restore him to the panel.—Epps v. State, 19 Ga. 102.

[d] (La. 1893) The question of a juror's competency cannot be reopened by defendant's counsel after he has been examined on his voir dire and adjudged competent.—State v. Donelon, 45 La. Ann. 744, 12 South. 922.

§ 598. —— Errors and irregularities.

[a] Where an impartial jury is secured, error cannot be predicated on the rejection of persons who may have been qualified.

(N. Y. 1873) Armsby v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. 157.

[d] (Colo. 1880) Under Gen. Laws, § 814, everyone charged with murder must be furnished previous to his arraignment with a list of jurors. Under sections 812, 1479, after the regular panel has been exhausted, the court may order a tales. Held that, where the court erroneously rules against two of defendant's challenges for cause, the fact that there were two talesmen on the jury entitles defendant to a new trial.—Stratton v. People, 5 Colo. 276.

[e] (Colo. 1883) A prisoner has the right to object to the depletion of the panel of jurors for insufficient reasons, and a challenge for cause sustained for such insufficient reasons is ground for a reversal of the judgment.—Mooney v. People, 7 Colo. 218, 3 Pac. 235.

[f] (D. C. 1893) Error in overruling a challenge for cause by defendant in a criminal case, whereby defendant is forced to challenge peremptorily, is ground for reversal where, when the jury was sworn, defendant had exhausted all his peremptory challenges.—United States v. Schneider, 21 D. C. 381.

[g] (Ind. 1889) Where the examination of a juror shows that he was placed on the jury by the sheriff as one of the regular panel, and the record does not show that it was done by order or direction of the court to fill out a deficient panel, it will be presumed, a challenge having been sustained on the ground that the juror had served during the year preceding, that the juror was not a part of the regular panel, and that the challenge was properly sustained.—City of Goshen v. England, 119 Ind. 368, 21 N. E. 977.

[h] (La. 1883) The fact that the judge excused a juror who was not legally exempt is not ground for reversal, though defendant had exhausted all his peremptory challenges.—State v. Hamilton, 35 La. Ann. 1043.

[i] (La. 1890) The maintenance of a challenge for cause by the state, even if erroneous, affords no ground for relief in absence of suggestion that the state's peremptory challenges were exhausted.—State v. Jackson, 42 La. Ann. 1164, 8 South. 297.

[j] (Mass. 1830) Where, after the twelfth juror in a capital case had been sworn, but before the jury was impaneled, the fifth juror said that he had conscientious scruples against punishment by death, except for the crime of murder, and was discharged by the court, no error was committed where the defendant was allowed to waive any of the challenges which he had made to any of the list.—Commonwealth v. Twombly, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 480, note.

[k] (N. J. 1856) Where an offer is made to swear a juror, and to ask him a particular question, to test his competency, which is immaterial, it is no error in the court to overrule the offer, although the examination itself is competent.—State v. Fox, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 566.

[l] (N. J.) A principal challenge to a juror on the sole ground that from what he had read he had formed an opinion of the guilt or innocence of the accused, without alleging malice or ill will on the part of the juror, should be overruled; but if the court below proceed without objection to try the challenge, and then overrule it, the appellate court must assume that no malice or ill will was in fact found by the court below.—(1891) Moschell v. State, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 498, 22 Atl. 50; (1892) Id., 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 390, 25 Atl. 964.

[m] (N. Y. 1886) In an action against the city of Troy, the rejection by the court of a citizen as a juror, otherwise competent, is ground for reversal, though the jurors who actually tried the case were competent.—Hildreth v. City of Troy, 101 N. Y. 234, 4 N. E. 559, 54 Am. Rep. 686.

[n] (N. D. 1896) While a jury was being impaneled, the state had exercised five of the six peremptory challenges allowed by law. The state challenged a proposed juror for cause. The examination of the juror disclosed that he was generally disqualified. The court, however, denied the challenge, and thereupon the state challenged the juror peremptorily. Immediately thereafter the court sustained the challenge for cause, and the juror stepped aside. Subsequently the court permitted the state to exercise another peremptory challenge. Held no error.—State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[o] (Or. 1888) Though the statute prescribing the qualifications of jurors does not require his name to be on the assessment roll, yet it is not ground for reversal that the trial court allowed a challenge to a juror by the state, for the reason that his name was not on the assessment roll for the previous year.—State v. Ching Ling, 16 Or. 419, 18 Pac. 844; State v. Harding, 16 Or. 493, 19 Pac. 449.

[p] (Tenn. 1857) An improper discharge of a juror as incompetent is not such an error as would avail a prisoner after verdict, where the court on discharging the juror allowed the prisoner the same number of challenges as if the juror had been discharged for cause.—Norfleet v. State, 36 Tenn. (4 Sneed) 340.

[q] (Tex. 1880) The overruling of a good challenge for cause is not material error, unless it appears that an objectionable juror was thereby forced upon the defendant.—Holt v. State, 9 Tex. App. 571.

[r] (Tex. 1890) Where a challenge to a juror for cause is improperly overruled, and the defendant challenges him peremptorily, the error is cured by allowing the defendant an extra peremptory challenge.—Blackwell v. State, 29 Tex. App. 194, 15 S. W. 597.

[s] (Tex. 1892) Unless objection is shown to jurors who tried a case, the ruling of the trial court upon the competency or incompetency of such jurors will not be inquired into on appeal, even though defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges.—Holland v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 345, 20 S. W. 750.

[t] (Wis. 1887) In an action against a corporation, one of the jurors, on a challenge for favor, testified that he had had some business difficulty with the president of the company, who was one of its principal stockholders, and did not feel friendly towards him; but he thought he could render an impartial verdict in the case. The court deciding that he was competent, the defendant challenged him peremptorily, and he was set aside. Held not error, although the defendant exhausted its peremptory challenges; it not appearing that the jury which tried the cause was not impartial and unobjectionable.—Heucke v. Milwaukee City Ry. Co., 69 Wis. 401, 34 N. W. 243.

[u] (Wis. 1891) Where it is not shown that defendant was prejudiced because he was compelled to challenge peremptorily a disqualified juror, the judgment will not be reversed.—Carthaus v. State, 78 Wis. 560, 47 N. W. 629.

[b] (Ala. 1888) A motion as to the number of defendant's challenges is not properly made during proceedings preliminary to the drawing of names on the venire.—Clarke v. State, 87 Ala. 71, 6 South. 868.

[d] (La. 1844) Slaves charged with capital offenses have no right to challenge jurors peremptorily.—State v. George, 8 Rob. 535.

[e] (Me. 1879) The right of peremptory challenge does not exist when the question of damages is to be determined by a sheriff's jury.—Barrett v. Bangor, 70 Me. 335.

[f] (Nev. 1876) There is a broad distinction between challenges for bias and peremptory challenges. The former challenges exist as a matter of right; the latter is by favor of the legislature only. The number of peremptory challenges has always been regulated by statute.—State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39.

[a] (Ala. 1889) An act of February 28, 1887, established a general jury system for the state. That of February 11, 1889, "To expedite the trial of capital cases in Jefferson county," provided a mode for drawing and impaneling special jurors, and prescribed the number of peremptory challenges. By an act of February 28, 1889, four sections of the general act of 1887 were re-enacted in full, as amended,—among them, section 17, containing a repealing clause "of all laws and parts of laws, general and special, in conflict with this act;" but no change was made in that clause. Held, that the Jefferson county act is repealed so far, only, as its provisions conflict with the four sections as amended.—Maxwell v. State, 89 Ala. 150, 7 South. 824.

[b] (N. H. 1879) Laws 1860, c. 2350, § 1, giving the state two peremptory challenges in criminal cases omitted from Gen. St. 1878, is not in force, and therefore it is error to sustain a peremptory challenge by the state.—State v. Drake, 59 N. H. 21.

[a] (Ala. 1887) There being no statute authorizing peremptory challenges of jurors in condemnation proceedings, no challenges can be made except for cause.—Brown v. Rome & D. R. Co., 86 Ala. 206, 5 South. 195.

[b] (Conn. 1859) Under Rev. St. tit. 1, § 110, which provides that "on the trial of every civil action each party shall have the right to challenge two jurors peremptorily," a party to a proceeding for the reassessment of damages for land taken for a public highway, by a jury of six disinterested electors, under section 25 of the act with regard to highways, has the right of peremptory challenge.—Pettis v. Pomfret, 28 Conn. 566.

[c] (Neb. 1884) Defendant in a bastardy proceeding, under Comp. St. c. 37, is not entitled to peremptory challenges of jurors, as provided by law in criminal cases; such a proceeding being in the nature of a civil action.—Kremling v. Lallman, 16 Neb. 280, 20 N. W. 383.

[d] (N. Y. 1868) Act April 27, 1847, giving the right of peremptory challenge upon the trial of an issue of fact joined in a civil action, does not apply to summary proceedings by the landlord against the tenant to obtain the possession of demised premises.—People v. Hamilton, 39 N. Y. 107.

[e] (Pa. 1842) The statute of 1834, authorizing two peremptory challenges of jurors in civil cases, does not extend to viewers provided for in the same statute.—Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Farr, 4 Watts & S. 362.

[f] (S. C. 1844) An action of debt brought by the city council of Charleston, to recover a penalty imposed by an ordinance for keeping spirituous liquors in a retail grocery store, without license, is to be regarded as a civil suit, and either party may exercise the right of challenge given by the statute of 1841.—City of Charleston v. Kleinback, 2 Speers, 418.

In bastardy proceedings, see ante, § 601 [c].

[a] (U. S. 1802) Peremptory challenge allowed only in capital cases, in Alexandria, D. C.—United States v. Carrigo, Fed. Cas. No. 14,735 [1 Cranch, C. C. 49].

[b] (U. S. 1807) In manslaughter, a peremptory challenge is allowed under the Virginia law.—United States v. McLaughlin, Fed. Cas. No. 15,697 [1 Cranch, C. C. 444].

[c] (U. S. 1808) Peremptory challenges are not allowed in cases of larceny, in the District of Columbia.—United States v. McPherson, Fed. Cas. No. 15,703 [1 Cranch, C. C. 517].

[d] (U. S. 1809) A case of horse stealing is simple larceny, and peremptory challenges will not be allowed.—United States v. Toms, Fed. Cas. No. 16,532 [1 Cranch, C. C. 607].

[e] (U. S. 1811) Upon an indictment for manslaughter, the prisoner is allowed the right of peremptory challenge.—United States v. Craig, Fed. Cas. No. 14,882 [2 Cranch, C. C. 36].

[f] (U. S. 1811) Upon the trial of indictment for forgery, under Act Md. 1795, c. 75, the defendant is entitled to no peremptory challenges.—United States v. Smithers, Fed. Cas. No. 16,347 [2 Cranch, C. C. 38].

[g] (U. S. 1814) In Alexandria, D. C., a prisoner indicted under Act April 30, 1790, § 16 (1 Stat. 116), for larceny, has the right of peremptory challenge.—United States v. Peter, Fed. Cas. No. 16,034 [2 Cranch, C. C. 98].

[h] (U. S. 1817) Upon a trial for bigamy in Alexandria, the prisoner is entitled to a peremptory challenge.—United States v. Lambert, Fed. Cas. No. 15,554 [2 Cranch, C. C. 137].

[i] (U. S. 1819) Upon the trial of an offense in the circuit court for the District of Columbia, where the punishment may be death, the court will allow peremptory challenges.—United States v. Black, Fed. Cas. No. 14,601 [2 Cranch, C. C. 195].

[j] (U. S. 1819) Upon an indictment for larceny, in Alexandria, D. C., the prisoner is entitled to a peremptory challenge, under Laws Va. Nov. 13, 1792, p. 103, § 3.—United States v. Gee, Fed. Cas. No. 15,196 [2 Cranch, C. C. 163].

[k] (U. S. 1821) A prisoner indicted for horse stealing, in Washington county, D. C., is not entitled to the right of peremptory challenge.—United States v. Krouse, Fed. Cas. No. 15,544 [2 Cranch, C. C. 252].

[l] (U. S. 1832) On an indictment for forgery, defendant has no right to peremptory challenges.—United States v. Shive, Fed. Cas. No. 16,278 [Baldw. 510].

[m] (U. S. 1833) Peremptory challenge may be allowed, upon an indictment for stealing a slave, in Alexandria, D. C.—United States v. Summers, Fed. Cas. No. 16,416 [4 Cranch, C. C. 334].

[n] (U. S. 1849) Upon a criminal prosecution in the circuit court of the District of Columbia, the prisoner has no right to peremptory challenges where the offense for which the prisoner is on trial is not a capital one.—Drayton v. United States, Fed. Cas. No. 4,074 [1 Hayw. & H. 369].

[o] (U. S. 1852) Peremptory challenges to jurors are not allowed in the courts of the United States in any other than capital cases, even though they are allowed in other cases by the state law.—United States v. Cottingham, Fed. Cas. No. 14,872 [2 Blatchf. 470].

[q] (U. S. 1869) Act March 3, 1868, § 2 (13 Stat. 500), regulating peremptory challenges in criminal cases, does not give the right to such challenge except in capital cases, because, when the act was passed, such right did not exist by law in any other cases, but was only permitted by rule of court.—United States v. Randall, Fed. Cas. No. 16,118 [Deady, 524].

[r] (Mass. 1830) In a capital trial, the prisoner may challenge a juror peremptorily after he has made such answers on the voir dire as do not authorize a challenge for cause.—Commonwealth v. Knapp, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491.

[s] (N. Y. 1809) A person indicted for forging an order for the payment of money is not entitled to peremptory challenge, it being an offense under the statute punishable only with imprisonment for a term of years.—People v. Howell, 4 Johns. 296.

[t] (N. Y. 1847) On the preliminary trial of a prisoner's insanity before the trial of an indictment against him, he has not the privilege of peremptory challenges.—Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216.

[u] (N. Y. 1847) Where a statute gives the right of peremptory challenges to a prisoner put on trial "for an offense punishable with death or imprisonment in a state prison ten years or any longer time," a person indicted for burglary in the second degree, which is punishable "by imprisonment in a state prison for a term not more than ten years nor less than five years," is entitled to peremptory challenges.—Dull v. People, 4 Denio, 91.

[v] (S. C. 1877) A prisoner indicted for horse stealing is entitled, since the act of 1830, to the right of peremptory challenge, though it should not appear, on the face of the indictment, that it was for the first or second offense.—State v. Allen, 8 Rich. Law, 448.

[w] (Va. 1843) Upon an inquiry, in pursuance of Rev. Code, c. 171, § 16, whether a convict received into the penitentiary be the same person mentioned in the record of a former conviction, the prisoner has no right to challenge peremptorily any person called as juror.—Brooks v. Commonwealth, 2 Rob. 845.

[x] (W. Va. 1891) Since, under Code, c. 116, § 17, "in every case, the plaintiff and defendant may each challenge four jurors peremptorily," the refusal by the court, on the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanor, to allow defendant such challenges, is reversible error.—State v. Pearis, 35 W. Va. 320, 13 S. E. 1006.

As infringement of right to trial by jury, see ante, § 232.

Standing jurors aside, see ante, § 501.

[a] The people are not allowed any peremptory challenge in a criminal case.

(S. C. 1805) State v. Stalmaker, 2 Brev. 1.

[c] (N. J. 1855) Act Feb. 12, 1852 (P. L. p. 32), provides that the attorney general or prosecutor of the state shall be entitled to challenge peremptorily 3 of the panel of jurors summoned or returned to the sheriff or other officer, provided that the act shall not apply to the cases of struck juries. Rev. St. p. 968, pars. 15, 16, provide that struck juries may be had in all criminal cases, except where the party is entitled to 20 peremptory challenges. Held, that it could not be said that the act of 1852 was designed to include not only struck juries, technically so called, but also all juries where defendant is entitled to a service of the list and to 20 peremptory challenges, since the latter statute clearly distinguishes between the two kinds of juries, allowing the one only where the party is not entitled to the other, and therefore the state was entitled to strike 3 names peremptorily from a panel of 48 summoned and returned to try an indictment.—Cook v. State, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 843.

[d] (N. Y. 1852) 2 Rev. St. p. 734, § 11, providing that the prosecution shall be entitled to the same challenges as are allowed parties in civil causes, and the same proceedings shall be allowed thereon as in civil causes; and Laws 1847, p. 130, c. 134, § 1, providing that on the trial of an issue of fact in a civil action each party shall be entitled to two peremptory challenges,—do not entitle the prosecution to any peremptory challenges.—People v. Aichinson, 7 How. Prac. 241.

[e] (Ohio) The state has no peremptory challenge in a capital case.—(1845) State v. Carver, 1 Ohio Dec. 135. CONTRA, see (1857) Fouts v. State, 8 Ohio St. 98.

[f] (Pa. 1811) The commonwealth may challenge peremptorily in cases of felonies and misdemeanor.—Commonwealth v. Addis, 1 Browne, 285.

[g] (Pa. 1873) At common law the government has no peremptory challenges.—Commonwealth v. Keenan (Quart. Sess.) 30 Leg. Int. 416.

(Me. 1888) State v. Cady, 80 Me. 413, 14 Atl. 940;

(N. H. 1877) State v. Doolittle, 58 N. H. 92;

(N. C. 1842) State v. Smith, 24 N. C. 402; (1890) State v. Jacobs, 106 N. C. 695, 10 S. E. 1031.

[b] (Cal. 1857) If one jointly indicted for a capital offense elect a joint trial, he cannot challenge peremptorily or for cause, without the consent of his codefendant. Comp. Laws, § 327.—People v. McCalla, 8 Cal. 301.

[c] (Ga. 1805) If two persons joined in an indictment wish the privilege of each challenging 20 jurors, they must claim the privilege before trial, and cannot object, in arrest of judgment, that they were allowed by 20 peremptory challenges jointly.—State v. Monaquas, T. U. P. Charlt. 16.

[d] (La. 1847) A party cannot deprive his codefendant of the right to challenge peremptorily.—Reynolds v. Rowley, 2 La. Ann. 890.

[e] (La. 1887) Neither the prosecution nor the accused, though he be one of two or more jointly indicted and on trial, can be heard to complain of peremptory challenges tendered by the other.—State v. Durr, 39 La. Ann. 751, 2 South. 546.

Manner of striking, see ante, § 376.

Number, see post, § 617.

[a] (U. S. 1849) In the federal circuit court for the Third circuit, no peremptory challenges are allowed to either side, where the jury has been already struck on both sides.—Blanchard v. Brown, Fed. Cas. No. 1,507 [2 Blatchf. 411].

[b] (Ga. 1859) Under our practice, "striking" a jury in petty offense is equivalent to challenging them.—O'Byrne v. State, 29 Ga. 86.

[c] (Ind. 1887) Under Code, § 525, prescribing the mode of selecting a struck jury, and providing that the names "shall be called as they stand upon the panel, and the first 12 of them who shall appear and are not challenged for cause, or set aside by the court, shall be the jury" in the cause, the right of peremptory challenge does not exist.—May v. Hoover, 112 Ind. 455, 14 N. E. 472.

[d] (Minn. 1886) A party has no right of peremptory challenge to any of the 16 names constituting the venire for a struck jury, under Gen. St. c. 71, § 15; and the fact that, by reason of the nonappearance of a part of this number, talesmen have to be called to complete the jury, gives no right of peremptory challenge to those on the struck list who do appear.—Branch v. Dawson, 36 Minn. 193, 30 N. W. 545.

[e] (Minn. 1889) Where a struck jury is summoned under the provisions of Gen. St. 1878, c. 71, § 15, no peremptory challenges will be allowed to any of the jurors composing the panel as finally made up.—Watson v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 42 Minn. 46, 43 N. W. 904.

[f] (N. J.) Laws 1878, p. 284, § 1, which provides that, "upon the trial of any indictment where 20 peremptory challenges are not allowed, the defendant shall be entitled to challenge peremptorily, at any time before the jury is sworn, 6 of the general panel of jurors summoned and returned by the sheriff or other officer," does not apply when the trial is to be conducted with a jury previously elected or struck. —(1891) Moschell v. State, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 498, 22 Atl. 50; (1892) Id., 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 390, 25 Atl. 964.

[h] (Ohio, 1857) A struck jury (St. March 12, 1853) is not subject to peremptory challenge; but a jury of seven struck jurors and five talesmen is not such a jury.—Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Stanley, 7 Ohio St. 155.

[i] (Ohio, 1876) Upon impaneling a struck jury, under the statute (San. & S. Rev. St. p. 407), after 12 jurors have passed into the box unchallenged for cause, the party demanding the struck jury has no right of peremptory challenge.—State v. Moore, 28 Ohio St. 595.

[j] (Pa. 1871) Under Act Assem. March 29, 1860 (P. L. 344), providing that on trial of all civil suits in any court of this commonwealth the plaintiff and defendant shall each have four peremptory challenges, a peremptory challenge may be made to a juror on a struck list. —McDermott v. Hoffman, 70 Pa. (20 P. F. Smith) 31.

[a] (U. S. 1830) The United States may challenge a juror in the first instance peremptorily, till the panel is exhausted, after which they can only challenge for cause.—United States v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730 [Baldw. 78].

[b] (U. S. 1883) In the trial of a prosecution for presenting false claims to the government, or making a false affidavit concerning a pension, the district court is governed by section 819 of the Revised Statutes, and under that section each party will be entitled to three peremptory challenges; and when the calling of a new juror is necessitated by the challenge of either party, the other party has a right of challenge as to such juror, although he may have previously passed the list, provided he has not already exhausted his three peremptory challenges.—United States v. Daubner (D. C.) 17 Fed. 793.

[c] (Ky. 1883) Where either the commonwealth or the defendant decline to challenge, the challenges as to jurors thus passed are exhausted.—Munday v. Commonwealth, 81 Ky. 233.

[d] (Ohio, 1877) Code Cr. Proc. § 133, provides that "the prosecuting attorney and every defendant may peremptorily challenge two of the panel." In a criminal case, a special venire was exhausted by the challenge of one of such venire, and thereupon a regular juror was called to fill the panel. Held, that defendant had the right then to challenge one of the panel; he having up to that time exercised but one peremptory challenge.—Koch v. State, 32 Ohio St. 352.

[e] (S. C. 1870) After jurors have been challenged, under the act of 1841, and others drawn in their places, neither party can, under the act, challenge the jurors so drawn.—Durant v. Ashmore, 2 Rich. Law, 184.

[f] (S. C. 1878) On trial for conspiracy the state challenged two jurors, whose places were filled by two from the supernumerary list. The defense challenged the latter two before accepting or rejecting any of the other jurors. Held, that the challenges of the defense so interposed were properly disallowed.—State v. Cardoza, 11 S. C. 195.

[g] (S. C. 1881) The plaintiff in a civil cause cannot peremptorily challenge a juror drawn to fill the place of a juror removed for cause.—Huff v. Watkins, 15 S. C. 82, 40 Am. Rep. 680; Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 15 S. C. 443.

[h] (S. C. 1882) Gen. St. p. 523, allows each party to challenge peremptorily "two of the jury so impaneled, and the place of the jurors so challenged shall be supplied as provided by law." Held, that defendant could not challenge talesmen drawn in place of jurors removed by the challenges of plaintiff.—Burckhalter v. Coward, 16 S. C. 435.

[i] (Tex. 1891) Under Rev. St. art. 3084, allowing a party, in trespass to try title, six peremptory challenges, and articles 3088–3090, directing that, if the jurors drawn are less than 12, talesmen shall be summoned to complete the jury, whose names shall be entered on slips just as in the original drawing, a party who has not exhausted his peremptory challenges has a right to exhaust them on the talesmen, and it is error to have the talesmen thus summoned sworn in, without giving the party an opportunity to challenge them.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 80 Tex. 101, 15 S. W. 705.

[j] (Wis. 1888) Rev. St. § 2851, entitling each party to three peremptory challenges from a full panel called in the action, applies to a jury filled out by special venire, as well as to the regular panel.—Olson v. Solverson, 71 Wis. 663, 38 N. W. 329.

Sufficiency of title of act allowing peremptory challenges, see "Statutes," III.

[a] (U. S. 1840) In offenses made capital by Act April 30, 1790 (1 Stat. 118), the prisoner may challenge 20 jurors peremptorily, and no more. In offenses made capital since that act, he is entitled to 35 peremptory challenges, according to the rules of the common law.—United States v. Dow, Fed. Cas. No. 14,990 [Taney, 34].

[b] (Ala. 1888) Act Gen. Assem. Feb. 28, 1887, § 17, repealed all laws in conflict with it, and provided that "all laws now in force in relation to jurors, their drawing, selecting, or qualification, not in conflict with this act, are hereby continued in full force and effect;" but contained no provisions as to jurors in capital cases. Held not a re-enactment of that date of the provisions of the act of 1885 allowing a defendant in a capital case 12 peremptory challenges, so as to affect Code 1886, § 4330, under which such a defendant is entitled to 21 peremptory challenges, under Const. 1875, art. 4, § 2, providing that, in order to re-enact or confer the provisions of an older act, such part as is re-enacted shall be published at length.—Todd v. State, 85 Ala. 339, 5 South. 278.

[c] (Ala. 1889) Section 13 of the general act, as amended, providing that in capital cases the defendant shall have 21, and the state 14, peremptory challenges, conflicts with and repeals section 8 of the Jefferson county act, allowing 10 and 5, respectively. The other sections of the local act remain in force.—Maxwell v. State, 89 Ala. 150, 7 South. 824.

[d] (Conn. 1880) At the time of the commission of a homicide, the state was, by statute, allowed two peremptory challenges. By an act passed afterwards, but before the trial, the state was allowed a greater number. Held, that the act related solely to the mode of procedure, and therefore governed the trial of the case.—State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89.

[e] (Fla. 1893) The right to peremptorily challenge jurors does not accrue to an accused until trial; and Laws 1891, c. 4055, § 3, adopting the revision, and providing that "the repeal of any statute by said revision shall not affect any right accrued before such repeal," does not save to one charged with a capital crime alleged to have been committed before the Revised Statutes became operative the right to 20 peremptory challenges given by the previous law.—Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 291, 12 South. 681.

[f] (Ind. 1847) The right of challenging jurors peremptorily in Decatur county has been, since the act of 1846 on the subject, governed by the general law; and, by the general law on the subject, each of the parties may, under certain circumstances, challenge six jurors peremptorily.—Cable v. State, 8 Blackf. 531.

[g] (Ind. 1866) Section 67 of the justices' act (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 596), which provides that cases appealed from justices of the peace shall be tried under the same rules and regulations as are prescribed for trials before justices, cannot be construed to give four peremptory challenges on appeal, as provided by section 52 of the justices' act, instead of three, as provided by the Code.—Kerschner v. Cullen, 27 Ind. 184.

[h] (Iowa, 1891) Code 1873, §§ 4413, 4414, as amended by Acts 22d Gen. Assem. c. 39, providing that, in impaneling a jury to try a felony punishable by death or imprisonment for life, the state and defendant are each entitled to 10 peremptory challenges, in force at the time of the trial, and not the one in force at the time of the commission of the offense, governs the number of peremptory challenges to be permitted.—State v. Shreves, 81 Iowa, 615, 47 N. W. 899.

[i] (Ky. 1855) That section of the Criminal Code which allows to the commonwealth five peremptory challenges in prosecutions for felony applies as well to prosecutions pending at the time of its passage as to those commenced afterwards.—Walston v. Commonwealth, 55 Ky. (16 B. Mon.) 15.

[j] (Me. 1883) The state is entitled to five peremptory challenges, under Act 1872, c. 78, giving the state that number in capital cases, though the death penalty has been abolished.—State v. Chadbourne, 74 Me. 506.

[k] (Mo. 1857) The "act to regulate and pay grand and petit jurors in Stoddard county," approved February 13, 1855, does not take away the right of the defendant, on a trial for murder, to challenge peremptorily 20 jurors.—State v. Buckner, 25 Mo. 167.

[l] (Pa. 1885) Act 1885, § 140 (P. L. 138), provides that 20 jurors shall be drawn from the box, from which number the plaintiff and defendant shall strike alternately one juror at a time "until each party shall have exercised the four peremptory challenges allowed by law, and the remaining twelve jurors" shall be the jury to try the case, is applicable to cases in which the parties had theretofore the right to 4 peremptory challenges, and not to those cases in which 20 peremptory challenges are allowed.—Commonwealth v. Carling, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 413.

[a] (Ala. 1882) As the statutes relating to trials for bastardy do not state the number of peremptory challenges to which defendant is entitled, he cannot complain that he was not allowed six challenges as in criminal cases.—Dorgan v. State, 72 Ala. 173.

[b] (Conn. 1850) A complaint under the statute of forcible entry and detainer is regarded as a civil remedy; and, on the trial of such a complaint, each party has the right of challenging peremptorily two jurors.—Quinebaug Bank v. Tarbox, 20 Conn. 510.

[c] (Conn. 1850) On the trial of a complaint in summary process to obtain possession of leased premises, each party has the right of challenging peremptorily two jurors.—Miner v. Brown, 20 Conn. 519.

[d] (Ind. 1865) Section 67 of the justices' act (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 596), which provides that cases appealed from justices of the peace shall be tried under the same rules and regulations prescribed for trials before justices, cannot be construed to give four peremptory challenges on appeal, as provided by section 52 of the justices' act, instead of three, as provided by the Code.—Vanschoiack v. Farrow, 25 Ind. 310.

[e] (Wis. 1844) Three peremptory challenges of jurors may be allowed upon an assessment of damages in open court.—Hill v. Bloomer, 1 Pin. 463.

[a] (U. S. 1892) Where actions by one plaintiff against different defendants, in which the defenses are the same, are consolidated, each of the several defendants in such a consolidated action is entitled to the three peremptory challenges allowed each party by statute, since Rev. St. § 819, in stating that the "parties on each side shall be deemed a single party for the purposes of all challenges," does not refer to consolidated actions.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Same, Id.; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Same, Id.

[b] (Ala. 1841) The several defendants in a cause constitute but one party, and are entitled to no more peremptory challenges than a single defendant.—Bibb v. Reid, 3 Ala. 88.

[c] (Idaho, 1888) Where in an action there are several parties on either side, each side has four peremptory challenges.—United States v. Alexander, 2 Idaho, 354, 17 Pac. 746.

[d] (Ind. 1860) The expression "each party," as used in 2 Rev. St. 1852, § 313, p. 107, includes, on the one hand, all persons named as plaintiffs, and, on the other, all who are joined as defendants; and "each party," as thus defined, and not each plaintiff or defendant, is entitled to challenge peremptorily three jurors.—Snodgrass v. Hunt, 15 Ind. 274.

[e] (Ky. 1830) In a civil action of trespass for assault and battery, where there has been but one trespass, the defendants, though they plead severally, are entitled to only three peremptory challenges.—Sodousky v. McGee, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 267.

[f] (Mass. 1866) Under St. 1862, c. 84, giving either party in a civil cause the right to challenge peremptorily two of the jurors, joint plaintiffs or defendants can challenge peremptorily but two jurors in all.—Stone v. Segur, 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 568.

[g] (Mich. 1877) Under Comp. Laws, § 6027, that in all civil cases each party may challenge peremptorily two jurors, when several defendants unite in one plea and defense, and appear by the same counsel, two challenges to all the defendants are all that need be allowed; but where two defendants sever in pleas, and appear by different counsel to litigate antagonistic defenses, each must be deemed a "party," within the enactment, and entitled to two challenges.—Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 Mich. 490.

[h] (Neb. 1885) When an action is brought against two or more defendants jointly, they are entitled to no more peremptory challenges of jurors than where the action is against a single defendant.—McClay v. Worrell, 18 Neb. 44, 24 N. W. 429.

[i] (N. C. 1877) Battle's Revisal, § 229, provides that "the parties, or their counsel for them, may challenge peremptorily four jurors." Held, that but four peremptory challenges on each side are allowable, whether there be one or more than one plaintiff or defendant.—Bryan v. Harrison, 76 N. C. 360.

[j] (Ohio, 1889) Under Rev. St. § 5177, providing that in impaneling a jury each party may peremptorily challenge two jurors, "each party" means "side," and however numerous the defendants in a civil case may be they can only exercise two peremptory challenges.—Moores v. Bricklayers' Union, 10 Ohio Dec. 665, 23 Wkly. Law Bul. 48.

[k] (Ohio, 1890) In a civil action against two or more defendants jointly, where the defendants file separate answers making the same defense, and are represented by different counsel, all of the defendants constitute one party to the action, under Rev. St. § 5177, and are entitled to but two peremptory challenges.—Gram v. Sampson, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 490, 2 O. C. D. 666.

[l] (Tenn. 1867) The "party," in the sense of section 4012 of the Code, entitled to two peremptory challenges, is either party to the action, whether comprising one or more persons.—Blackburn v. Hays, 44 Tenn. (4 Cold.) 227.

[m] (Tex. 1883) In a suit against a building contractor to recover possession of the building, on the ground that plaintiff had paid the full contract price, a person claiming a material man's lien was made a party. Held, that the interests of the codefendant were not antagonistic, so as to entitle each to six peremptory challenges.—Jones v. Ford, 60 Tex. 127.

[n] (Tex. 1891) Where there was no antagonism of interests between the defendants in an action for false imprisonment, it was no abuse of discretion to limit the challenges of all of them to six jurors.—Wolf v. Perryman, 82 Tex. 112, 17 S. W. 772.

[o] (Tex. 1891) A firm of druggists and its prescription clerk were joined as defendants in an action brought by a parent to recover damages for the death of his child caused by the mistake of the clerk in putting up a prescription. Held not such a case as would entitle the clerk to challenge six jurors in addition to the six challenges by the other defendants, under Rev. St. art. 3084, which provides that "each party to a civil suit in the district court shall be entitled to six peremptory challenges."—Hargrave v. Vaughn, 82 Tex. 347, 18 S. W. 695.

[p] (Tex. 1894) Rev. St. art. 3084, provides that each party to a civil action in the district court shall be entitled to six peremptory challenges. Held, that where, in garnishment, plaintiff and intervener were making common cause against the garnishee, intervener cannot, on appeal, complain that he was not allowed to challenge any juror, except in conjunction with plaintiff, and that plaintiff exhausted all his challenges; it not appearing from the bill of exceptions that intervener was forced to accept any juror objectionable to him; and no injury being shown to have been sustained from the action of the court.—Kelley-Goodfellow Shoe Co. v. Liberty Ins. Co., 8 Tex. Civ. App. 227, 28 S. W. 1027.

[q] (Tex. 1895) Under Rev. St. art. 3084, providing that "each party to a civil suit in the district court shall be entitled to six peremptory challenges," several defendants whose interests are identical will be regarded as one party; but if the issues between them and plaintiff are different, or if they claim adversely to each other, each is entitled to six peremptory challenges.—Rogers v. Armstrong Co. (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 848.

[r] (Tex. 1896) On a trial of right of property between vendee's attaching creditors and the vendor, the creditors should, as constituting a single party, be allowed the challenges to which a single party is entitled.—Raby v. Frank, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 125, 34 S. W. 777.

[s] (Wis. 1875) The word "party," as used in Rev. St. c. 118, § 36, entitling each party to three peremptory challenges, applies to each defendant having a distinct issue to maintain; otherwise, where all have a common defense, even though they answer severally.—Hundhausen v. Atkins, 36 Wis. 518.

As infringement of right to trial by jury, see ante, § 232.

Statutory provisions, see ante, § 607.

[a] In criminal cases the state may challenge peremptorily three jurors.
—(Ind. 1837) Wiley v. State, 4 Blackf. 458; (1842) Beauchamp v. Same, 6 Blackf. 299; (Mo. 1840) Mallison v. State, 6 Mo. 399.

[b] (Ga. 1892) Under Code, §§ 298, 299c, on trial in the county court of an indictment transferred from the superior court, the accused has four challenges and the state two.—Grant v. State, 89 Ga. 393, 15 S. E. 488.

[c] (Mo. 1891) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 4200, which allows a defendant charged with an offense punishable by death or imprisonment 20 peremptory challenges, and a defendant charged with an offense punishable by imprisonment alone not more than 12 peremptory challenges, a defendant indicted for murder in the first degree, but only tried for murder in the second degree, is only entitled to 12 challenges, since murder in the second degree is not punishable with death.—State v. Talmage, 107 Mo. 543, 17 S. W. 990.

[d] (N. Y. 1850) By 2 Rev. St. p. 734, § 11, construed in connection with the act of 1847 (Laws 1847, p. 130), the prosecuting officer of the state is entitled to challenge peremptorily the same number of jurors as is allowed to parties in civil actions.—Waterford & Whitehall Turnpike v. People, 9 Barb. 161.

[e] (N. Y. 1855) Under the statutes, the people are entitled to two peremptory challenges, in a criminal prosecution.—People v. Caniff, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 586.

[f] (N. C. 1801) A prisoner may challenge 35 jurors, and no more, without showing cause.—State v. Gayner, Conf. R. 305; Same v. Gainer, 3 N. C. 140.

[g] (Ohio, 1889) Under Rev. St. § 7277, providing that "except as otherwise provided * * * every defendant may peremptorily challenge two of the panel," a defendant in a criminal trial is only entitled to two peremptory challenges unless he is on trial for a capital offense when section 7272 entitles him to sixteen peremptory challenges. The facts that defendant had been indicted for murder in the first degree, that a jury of 36 had been summoned and were in attendance for his trial, that a nolle was then entered as to the charge of murder in the first degree, and that a jury to try him for murder in the second degree was being impaneled from the 36 jurors so in attendance, did not enlarge his right in this respect.—Goins v. State, 46 Ohio St. 457, 21 N. E. 476.

[h] (S. C. 1887) Where the court, the regular panel for the week being exhausted by peremptory challenges, continued the cause to the next week, instead of summoning additional jurors, and then placed defendant on trial before the regular jury for that week, it was error to restrict defendant's peremptory challenges to the number not previously used.—State v. Briggs, 27 S. C. 80, 2 S. E. 854.

[i] (Tenn. 1876) In a trial for a capital crime, the court, in reply to the defendant's counsel, said that he was entitled to 10 peremptory challenges, instead of 24, as given by Code 1865, § 4673a. Held, after a verdict of guilty, commuting the punishment to imprisonment, that the judgment should be reversed.—Fowler v. State, 67 Tenn. (8 Baxt.) 573.

[j] (Tex. 1878) Under Pasch. Dig. art. 3037, allowing a defendant in capital cases 20 peremptory challenges and in other cases only 10, a defendant after having been convicted of murder in the second degree, and obtained a reversal on appeal, is only entitled to 10 peremptory challenges at the new trial, as he has been acquitted of murder in the first degree.—Cheek v. State, 4 Tex. App. 444.

Bastardy proceedings, see ante, § 608 [a].

[a] (U. S. 1896) Rev. St. § 5472, imposing penalties for robbing the mails, uses the word "rob" in its common-law sense; and hence the crime specified is a felony, within Rev. St. § 819, giving defendant on a trial for felony the right to 10 peremptory challenges.—Harrison v. United States, 163 U. S. 140, 16 Sup. Ct. 961, 41 L. Ed. 104.

[b] (U. S. 1806) In all cases of felony, by the laws of Virginia, the prisoner is entitled to a peremptory challenge of 20 jurors.—United States v. Browning, Fed. Cas. No. 14,673 [1 Cranch, C. C. 830].

[c] (U. S. 1806) One indicted for murder on the high seas is entitled, by the express provision of the statutes, to only 20 peremptory challenges.—United States v. Russel, Fed. Cas. No. 16,209 [4 U. S. (4 Dall.) 414, note, 1 L. Ed. 889].

[e] (U. S. 1880) Section 819 of the Revised Statutes provides that, "when the offense charged is treason or a capital offense, the defendant shall be entitled to 20 and the United States to 5 peremptory challenges. On the trial of any other felony the defendant shall be entitled to 10 and the United States to 3 peremptory challenges; and in all other cases, civil and criminal, each party shall be entitled to 3 peremptory challenges." Held, that the offense of uttering and passing counterfeit coin was not a felony within the terms of this section.—United States v. Coppersmith (C. C.) 4 Fed. 198.

[f] (U. S. 1883) The offense of presenting a claim known to be false or fraudulent to any person in the civil service, for payment or approval, punishable by hard work and a fine (Rev. St. § 5438), and of procuring the making or presentation of a false or fraudulent affidavit concerning a pension, punishable by imprisonment and fine or both (section 4746), are not felonies under the federal laws, within section 819, giving a defendant 10 peremptory challenges in such cases.—United States v. Daubner (D. C.) 17 Fed. 793.

[g] (Cal. 1881) It is only in capital cases, or cases in which a life sentence is in terms affixed by the legislature as the punishment for a crime, that defendant is entitled to 20 peremptory challenges. Robbery is not such a crime.—People v. Clough, 59 Cal. 438.

[h] (Cal. 1882) Upon prosecution for robbery, where the information charges that the defendant had been previously convicted of a similar crime, the offense charged is punishable, under Code, § 667, by imprisonment for life in the state prison; and the defendant, therefore, is entitled to 20 peremptory challenges.—People v. Harris, 61 Cal. 136.

[i] (Cal. 1882) One charged with a crime punishable only by imprisonment for life is entitled, under Code, § 1070, to 20, not to 10 only, peremptory challenges.—People v. O'Neil, 61 Cal. 435.

[j] (Cal. 1895) Pen. Code, § 1070, provides that, if the offense charged be punishable with death or with imprisonment for life, defendant is entitled to 20 and the state to 10 peremptory challenges. On a trial for any other offense defendant is entitled to 10 and the state to 5 peremptory challenges. Held, that on a trial for rape defendant is limited to 10 challenges.—People v. Fultz, 109 Cal. 258, 41 Pac. 1040.

[k] (Conn. 1881) Under Gen. St. 1875, c. 13, § 5, providing that "for any offense punishable by imprisonment for life" there may be a challenge of 10 jurors, and "for any offense the punishment for which may be imprisonment in the state prison for less than life, 4 jurors," held that, where the offense was punishable at the discretion of the judge for life or less than life, defendant was entitled to a challenge of 10 jurors.—State v. Neuner, 49 Conn. 232.

[l] (Ind. 1842) On the trial of an indictment for murder, the state is entitled to three peremptory challenges.—Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299.

[m] (Ky. 1830) In prosecutions under a penal statute, the prisoner has not the right of 20 peremptory challenges.—Montee v. Commonwealth, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 132.

[n] (Ky. 1850) In case of an indictment for stabbing without malice, the defendant may challenge 20 jurors peremptorily.—Hayden v. Commonwealth, 49 Ky. (10 B. Mon.) 125.

[o] (Ky. 1853) The keeping of a gaming house being only a misdemeanor, the prosecution and the defendant are each entitled, as in civil cases, to three peremptory challenges and no more.—Buford v. Commonwealth, 53 Ky. (14 B. Mon.) 24.

[p] (Me. 1878) Since the punishment for murder has been reduced from death to imprisonment for life, by Laws 1876, c. 114, a prisoner on trial for murder has the right to challenge only two jurors peremptorily.—State v. Smith, 67 Me. 328.

[q] (Mo. 1873) In an indictment for rape, defendant is not entitled, under Wag. St. pp. 449, 450, § 82, and Id., p. 1102, § 4, to a peremptory challenge of 12 jurors.—State v. Ray, 53 Mo. 345.

[r] (Mo. 1887) Rev. St. § 1261, provides that a person convicted of mayhem shall be confined in the penitentiary not more than 25 years. Section 1900 provides that the defendant on trial for an offense punishable by not less than a certain number of years' imprisonment, but with no limit as to its duration, shall be entitled to 12 peremptory challenges of jurors; for offenses punishable by death or imprisonment for life, 20 challenges; in other cases punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, 8 challenges and no more. Held, that in an indictment for mayhem defendant was entitled to 8 challenges.—State v. Stevenson, 93 Mo. 91, 5 S. W. 806.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) On a prosecution for manslaughter, which is punishable by imprisonment for not less than 5 nor more than 20 years, defendant is entitled to 20 peremptory challenges, under Code Cr. Proc., allowing 20 challenges if the crime charged be punishable with imprisonment for life or for a term of 10 years or more.—People v. Keating, 61 Hun, 260, 16 N. Y. Supp. 748.

[t] (N. C. 1801) One indicted for horse stealing cannot challenge peremptorily more than 35 jury men.—State v. Gayner, 1 N. C. 479, Conf. R. 305; Same v. Gainer, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 140.

[u] (N. C. 1854) A defendant, on a trial for a clergyable felony, is entitled to challenge peremptorily 35 jurors.—State v. Cadwell, 46 N. C. 289.

[v] (N. C. 1888) Under Code, § 1199, a defendant on trial for a crime not capital has but four peremptory challenges.—State v. Hargrave, 100 N. C. 484, 6 S. E. 185.

[w] (Ohio, 1847) The defendant in a capital case is entitled to only 23 peremptory challenges.—Martin v. State, 16 Ohio, 364.

[ww] (Pa. 1859) A defendant charged with counterfeiting bank notes, though such crime is made a felony by the act of assembly, is entitled to but 4 peremptory challenges. The right to 20 peremptory challenges existing in capital felony only.—Commonwealth v. Handy, 3 Phila. 403.

[x] (Pa. 1861) Forgery was never a felony of death, and a prisoner charged with it is entitled to the same number of challenges which is allowed in cases of misdemeanor.—Shuster v. Commonwealth, 38 Pa. (2 Wright) 206.

[xx] (Pa. 1861) Prisoners are entitled to 20 peremptory challenges, only when charged with crimes that were felonies of death on September 15, 1786.—Shuster v. Commonwealth, 38 Pa. (2 Wright) 206.

[y] (Pa. 1873) In Pennsylvania the right to challenge jurors is regulated by statute. In all cases of treason, murder, manslaughter, concealing the death of a bastard child, rape, robbery, sodomy, malicious maiming, and arson, the accused is entitled to 20, and on the trial of all other indictments to 4, peremptory challenges. In all cases the commonwealth has the right to challenge peremptorily 4 of the panel of jurors.—Commonwealth v. Keenan (Quart. Sess.) 30 Leg. Int. 416.

[yy] (Tenn. 1808) One indicted for horse stealing, under Act 1807, is entitled to a peremptory challenge of 35 jurors, although such privilege is for those on trial for life; and the statute provides corporal punishment for the first offense, and death for the second.—State v. Humphreys, 1 Tenn. (1 Overt.) 306.

[z] (Tenn. 1826) A man charged with perjury is entitled to challenge peremptorily the same number of jurors as in other cases of felony.—Hooper v. State, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 422.

[zz] (Tenn. 1870) On the trial of all criminal prosecutions above the grade of petit larceny, the state is, under the Code, entitled to 10 peremptory challenges; and the defendant, if charged with a capital felony, is entitled to 35 challenges.—Allen v. State, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 357.

[a] Where several defendants are jointly tried, each is entitled to the number of peremptory challenges allowed by law.
—(Ala. 1855) Brister v. State, 26 Ala. 107;
(La. 1853) State v. Cazeau, 8 La. Ann. 109; (1885) Same v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 443;
(Tenn. 1829) Hill v. State, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 246.

[b] (U. S. 1890) Under Rev. St. § 819, which restricts persons indicted for a capital felony to 20 peremptory challenges, where several persons are jointly indicted for such felony they are to be deemed a single party for the purpose of such challenges, and are only entitled to 20 peremptory challenges in all.—United States v. Hall (C. C.) 44 Fed. 883, 10 L. R. A. 323.

[c] (Ala. 1889) Under Act 1888–89, pp. 77–79, giving a defendant in a capital case 21 peremptory challenges, and providing that when two or more defendants are tried jointly for a capital offense each shall be entitled to "one-half of the peremptory challenges allowed by this act," there is no error in giving to one of two defendants 10 and to the other 11 peremptory challenges.—Gibson v. State, 89 Ala. 121, 8 South. 98, 18 Am. St. Rep. 96.

[d] (Ala. 1894) Act Feb. 28, 1887, § 13 (Cr. Code, p. 132), as amended by Act Feb. 28, 1889 (Acts 1888–89, p. 77), provides that on the trial of a capital case the defendant shall have 21 peremptory challenges, and that when two or more defendants are on trial jointly each shall have one-half of the peremptory challenges allowed by the act. Held, that a joint defendant, who accepts 11 peremptory challenges, cannot complain that the act is impossible of execution, and that the Code provision giving each defendant 21 peremptory challenges hence applies.—Gregg v. State, 106 Ala. 44, 17 South. 321.

[e] (Ga. 1877) In trials of prisoners jointly, each has the same right to peremptory challenge as if tried severally, unless they stipulate otherwise.—Cruce v. State, 59 Ga. 83.

[f] (Ill. 1854) Under a statute allowing each defendant a certain number of peremptory challenges, the full number of challenges is preserved to each defendant, though they are tried jointly.—Maton v. People, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 536.

[g] (Kan. 1883) Each of two defendants, joined in one information for a misdemeanor, and put on trial together, is entitled to the same number of peremptory challenges that he would be entitled to if tried separately.—State v. Durein, 29 Kan. 688.

[h] (Ky. 1894) Cr. Code, § 198, providing that, when several defendants are tried together, the challenge of any one shall be deemed the challenge of all, authorizes the court to charge defendant with peremptory challenges made by himself and his codefendant before he demanded a separate trial.—Glass v. Commonwealth, 26 S. W. 811.

[i] (La. 1869) Where two parties are tried together for murder, each one is entitled to 12 peremptory challenges to the jurors.—State v. McLean, 21 La. Ann. 546.

[j] (Me. 1888) Under Rev. St. c. 82, § 74, giving each party in criminal cases not capital two peremptory challenges, several defendants jointly indicted are jointly, and not severally, entitled to such challenges.—State v. Cady, 80 Me. 413, 14 Atl. 940.

[k] (Mich. 1896) While defendants charged together with a misdemeanor must be tried together, unless separate trials are ordered by the court, such trial is, in substance and effect, several; and under How. Ann. St. § 7607, providing that "the defendant may challenge five persons peremptorily," each defendant is entitled to five challenges.—People v. Welmer, 110 Mich. 248, 68 N. W. 141.

[l] (Miss. 1880) Where several persons are jointly tried for felony not capital, each is entitled to four peremptory challenges, by Code 1871, § 2761; and where all are restricted to four, and convicted of a misdemeanor, a new trial will be awarded.—Smith v. State, 57 Miss. 822.

[m] (N. H. 1867) When several persons are tried together for an offense less than capital, each cannot have his two peremptory challenges.—State v. Reed, 47 N. H. 466.

[n] (N. Y. 1825) Where two or more persons are tried together, only 20 peremptory challenges can be allowed to all the persons so tried.—People v. Thayer, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 595.

[o] (Utah, 1881) The provision of U. S. Act July 23, 1874, giving to "each party," whether in civil or criminal cases, three peremptory challenges, does not enable defendants, who have waived separate trials, to sever in their challenges.—People v. O'Loughlin, 3 Utah, 133, 1 Pac. 653.

[p] (Vt. 1879) One indicted with others does not waive his right to the statutory number of peremptory challenges by consenting to be tried with them.—State v. Stoughton, 51 Vt. 362.

[q] (Wis. 1863) Where several persons are jointly indicted and tried, each is entitled to four peremptory challenges, under Rev. St. c. 179, § 3.—Washington v. State, 17 Wis. 147.

[a] (Fla. 1882) Where two are jointly indicted and tried for a capital offense, each of them is entitled to 20 peremptory challenges on impaneling a jury, but the state can have but 5.—Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909.

[b] (Ga. 1893) Under Code, § 4643, allowing a defendant who, if convicted, is subject to death or four years' imprisonment, 20 peremptory challenges, and the state one-half the number of challenges allowed to defendant, where two are tried jointly for a capital offense the state is entitled to 20 challenges.—Butler v. State, 92 Ga. 601, 19 S. E. 51.

[c] (Ill. 1887) Where eight defendants, indicted for murder, aggregate the peremptory challenges to which they are entitled under Rev. St. Ill. c. 38, § 432, thus obtaining 160 peremptory challenges, the state is entitled to the like number.—Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

[d] (La. 1872) Under Rev. St. 1870, § 998, which declares that "in criminal prosecutions wherein the defendant is allowed peremptory challenges the state shall also be allowed to challenge, without cause, any number not exceeding six," the state is entitled to six challenges in a single prosecution, without any reference to the number of defendants included in the prosecution, or mentioned in the indictment.—State v. Earle, 24 La. Ann. 38, 13 Am. St. Rep. 109.

[e] (La. 1887) Under Acts 1878, No. 30, in all criminal trials the state is entitled to six peremptory challenges for each of the parties who are jointly on trial.—State v. Waggoner, 39 La. Ann. 919, 3 South. 119.

[f] (Ohio, 1840) 29 Ohio Laws, p. 98, "relating to juries," which gives to the prosecuting attorney, on the trial of an indictment, a right to two peremptory challenges, gives only two in the same indictment, however many defendants may be joined in the indictment.—Mahan v. State, 10 Ohio, 233.

[g] (Tenn. 1878) The fact that two defendants are on trial under a joint indictment does not entitle the state to double the number of challenges prescribed.—Wiggins v. State, 09 Tenn. (1 Lea) 738.

[h] (Vt. 1896) Under V. S. § 1914, providing that in criminal prosecutions one-third the number of peremptory challenges to jurors shall be allowed to the state which are by law allowed to respondent, where two or more respondents are tried together the state is entitled to one-third the number of challenges allowed by law to all the respondents.—State v. Fournier, 68 Vt. 262, 35 Atl. 178.

[i] (Wis. 1854) On trial of an indictment for a capital offense, the prosecuting officer is entitled to but six peremptory challenges whatever may be the number of defendants (Rev. St. c. 97, § 37). Act 1854, c. 48, does not enlarge this right, but leaves it as before.—Shoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823.

§ 614. —— Several counts in same indictment.

[a] (Kan. 1885) Where an indictment in separate counts states separate misdemeanors of a kindred character against the same person, the defendant is not entitled to four peremptory challenges upon each separate offense, but is entitled, upon the trial under the indictment or information, to four peremptory challenges only, under section 198, Cr. Code.—State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256, 8 Pac. 420; Same v. Gormaly, Id.; Same v. Frew, Id.; Same v. Carnine, Id.; Same v. Teft, Id.

[b] (Mass. 1878) Under St. 1862, c. 84, accused is only entitled to two peremptory challenges, without regard to the number of counts in the indictment.—Commonwealth v. Walsh, 124 Mass. 32.

[c] (Tenn. 1881) On an indictment for forgery, defendant is entitled to but 10 challenges, though there are several distinct counts in the indictment.—Smith v. State, 76 Tenn. (8 Lea) 386.

[d] (Utah, 1886) A person who is tried on an indictment containing two counts is not entitled to three peremptory challenges for each count.—United States v. Groesbeck, 4 Utah, 487, 11 Pac. 542, 622; Same v. Bromley, 4 Utah, 498, 11 Pac. 619.

[a] (Ala. 1885) Where a juror is discharged on account of sickness, and another substituted, though the trial is commenced anew (Code, §§ 4879, 4906), if defendant has already exhausted his peremptory challenges, he cannot challenge peremptorily the substituted juror.—Jackson v. State, 78 Ala. 471.

[b] (Cal.) Under Pen. Code, § 1123, providing that, if a juror becomes sick and is discharged, a new juror may be sworn and the trial begin anew, when a new juror is sworn defendant is entitled to all the peremptory challenges he had in the first instance.—(1883) People v. Stewart, 28 Pac. 112; (1887) Same v. Brady, 72 Cal. 490, 14 Pac. 202; (1892) Same v. Wong Ark, 96 Cal. 125, 30 Pac. 1115.

[c] (N. D. 1892) Where, during the trial of a criminal case, a juror becomes sick and unable to sit further in the case, the court orders him discharged, and a new juror is sworn to complete the panel, under Comp. Laws, § 7401, providing that in such case the "trial" shall begin anew, the prisoner is not entitled to again exercise all the peremptory challenges given him by statute, or to peremptorily challenge any one of the 11 remaining jurors, but may exercise only such of his peremptory challenges as he has not already exhausted in procuring the other 11 jurors.—State v. Hasledahl, 2 N. D. 521, 52 N. W. 315.

[d] (Tenn. 1833) If, in the trial of a criminal case, a juror becomes sick, and is discharged, upon the summoning of a juror to fill his place, the defendant is entitled to as many challenges of persons not before summoned in that cause as if no juror had been selected.—Garner v. State, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 160.

See post, § 618.

As cure of error in overruling challenge for cause, see ante, § 598 [b, c, j, n, p, r].

Waiver of right to object, see ante, § 522 [r].

Withdrawal of challenges, see post, § 629.

[a] (Idaho, 1892) Where a juror who is incompetent under the statute swears falsely upon examination on his voir dire, and compels plaintiff to exhaust a peremptory challenge to exclude him, and, before the jury is completed, plaintiff discovers that he was incompetent, and offers to make proof thereof, he should be permitted to do so; and, upon satisfactory proof being made, his peremptory challenge should be restored to him.—Burke v. McDonald, 2 Idaho, 1022, 29 Pac. 98.

[b] (N. C. 1886) The fact that a juror summoned on a special venire fails to answer, but his name is put in the hat and drawn therefrom, and he is again called and fails to answer, does not entitle defendant to an additional challenge.—State v. Powell, 94 N. C. 965.

[c] (Pa. 1863) After the peremptory challenges allowed by law have been exhausted, another peremptory challenge cannot be made, and it is error to allow it.—Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. (9 Wright) 444.

[d] (Tex. 1886) It is not error to refuse to permit a defendant in a criminal case to challenge a juror peremptorily after he has exhausted his 20 peremptory challenges.—Pierson v. State, 21 Tex. App. 14, 17 S. W. 468.

Manner of striking, see ante, § 376.

[a] (N. J.) When a jury has been struck for the trial of an indictment against two or more defendants for a crime not within Revision, p. 280, § 71, permitting 20 peremptory challenges, the defendants collectively, and not separately, are entitled to only three peremptory challenges, under Revision, p. 531, § 42 (Jury Act), which provides that, upon the trial of any indictment for which a struck jury shall be summoned and returned, three peremptory challenges shall be allowed.—(1891) Moschell v. State, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 498, 22 Atl. 50; (1892) Id., 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 390, 25 Atl. 964.

Waiver of challenges or objections, see ante, § 522.

[a] (Ala. 1841) Where a party was allowed more peremptory challenges than he is entitled to by law, the irregularity is not available, if the cause was tried by an impartial jury and the opposite party was not prejudiced thereby.—Bibb v. Reid, 3 Ala. 88.

[b] (Ala. 1891) A trial court, on being informed that a juror had been convicted of a felony and had not been pardoned, declined to exclude him unless he was challenged for that cause. Defendant thereupon challenged him for that cause, and the court sustained the challenge. Held, that defendant was not injured by the ruling of the court, as the exclusion of the juror was not charged to defendant as one of his peremptory challenges.—Jackson v. State, 94 Ala. 85, 10 South. 509.

[c] (Miss. 1891) Error of the court in allowing defendant a fifth peremptory challenge is not ground for reversing a judgment for him if plaintiff had an impartial jury, as plaintiff has no vested right to any particular juror, but only to an impartial jury.—State v. Dalton, 69 Miss. 611, 10 South. 578.

[d] (S. C. 1889) On commencing the trial, the court announced that defendants were each entitled to 20 peremptory challenges, but, after each had challenged two jurors, held that they were each entitled to five challenges only, which was correct. Held not ground for new trial.—State v. Jacob, 30 S. C. 131, 8 S. E. 698, 14 Am. St. Rep. 897.

3. TIME.

DISCRETION OF COURT, § 620.
AFTER ACCEPTANCE OF JUROR, § 621.
AFTER PASSING OR TENDER OF JUROR, § 622.
AFTER SWEARING OF INDIVIDUAL JUROR OR JURY AS A WHOLE, § 623.

Examination of jurors before exercising challenges, see ante, § 568.
Exercise of peremptory challenges before challenging for cause, see ante, § 556 [n].
Exhaustion of peremptory challenges before exercising challenges for cause, see ante, § 556 [w].
Number of jurors to be drawn before peremptory challenges must be made, see ante, § 357.
Right to full panel before exercising challenges, see ante, § 357.

[a] The right of peremptory challenge exists up to the time the juror is sworn.
—(Ala. 1872) Murray v. State, 48 Ala. 675;
(Cal. 1864) People v. Jenks, 24 Cal. 11;
(Ind. 1845) Munly v. State, 7 Blackf. 593; Morris v. State, Id. 607; (1846) Jackson v. Pittsford, 8 Blackf. 194; (1847) Wyatt v. Noble, Id. 507;
(Va. 1834) Hendrick v. Commonwealth, 5 Leigh, 707.

[b] (U. S. 1877) In challenging petit jurors, the right of peremptory challenge need not be exercised until the opportunity of rejecting for cause is afforded.—United States v. Butler, Fed. Cas. No. 14,700 [1 Hughes, 457].

[c] (Ala. 1878) The right of peremptory challenge is not lost until the juror is sworn or accepted for the trial of the issue; and, when the juror is one of the regular panel for the week, the defendant does not lose his right to challenge until he accepts the juror for his trial.—Spigener v. State, 62 Ala. 383.

[d] (Cal. 1869) Under the various provisions of the practice acts prescribing the method of forming juries, defendant may examine the whole 12 before exercising his right of peremptory challenge to any.—People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676.

[e] (Ind. 1842) Peremptory challenges on trial of an indictment for murder may be made by the state at any time between the appearance and swearing of the jury.—Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299.

[f] (Iowa, 1856) A party who has not exhausted his right of peremptory challenge may exercise the right up to the moment the jury is called upon to take the oath, if there is any intermission of the court after his acceptance of the jury and before the swearing them.—Spencer v. De France, 3 G. Greene, 216.

[g] (Ky. 1891) After 12 men have been proven competent on the voir dire examination, and before they have been sworn to try the case, the defense can then exercise its peremptory challenges in a criminal case under the practice.—Shelby v. Commonwealth, 91 Ky. 563, 16 S. W. 461.

[h] (Mass.) The right of a party who is put on trial for a capital offense to a peremptory challenge of jurors must be exercised, if at all, before the jurors are interrogated by the court concerning their bias and opinions.—(1844) Commonwealth v. Rogers, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; (1850) Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

[i] (Mich. 1870) This right is not lost by not being exercised immediately after the voir dire examination, unless the juror has been sworn.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96.

[j] (Mo. 1877) Thanksgiving Day, although by statute a public holiday, and, for certain purposes, considered to be the same as Sunday, is properly counted as part of the 48 hours within which the defendant is required to make his challenges, after he is furnished with a list of jurors.—State v. Green, 66 Mo. 631.

[k] (N. Y. 1885) The common-law right to peremptorily challenge jurors in cases of felony until the juror is actually sworn is preserved by the constitution of the state adopting the common law as the law of the state, and by Code Cr. Proc. § 369, providing that before a juror is called, the defendant must be informed that he must challenge him before he is sworn, and section 371, providing that a challenge must be taken when the juror appears and before he is sworn.—People v. Carpenter, 16 Abb. N. C. 128.

[l] (N. Y. 1885) The right of peremptory challenge exists until the juror is sworn, and cannot be abridged by an order of the court that it shall not be exercised after he takes his seat in the jury box.—People v. Carpenter, 36 Hun, 315.

[m] (Pa. 1869) In capital cases where each juror is sworn or affirmed separately, he may be challenged at any time until he is brought to the book or the formula of affirmation is commenced.—Commonwealth v. Marra, 8 Phila. 440.

[n] (Pa. 1880) On indictment for murder, where a juror is accepted by the prisoner and then stood aside by the state, if the facts show no improper motive in standing him aside, the state may afterwards peremptorily challenge him.—Zell v. Commonwealth, 94 Pa. 258.

—(1892) State v. Haines, 36 S. C. 504, 15 S. E. 555; (1895) Same v. Corley, 43 S. C. 127, 20 S. E. 989.

[a] (Iowa, 1859) In the absence of any statutory rule, the order of proceedings in challenging petit jurors peremptorily may be properly left to the discretion of the judge.—State v. Pierce, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 231.

[b] (La. 1896) It is within the discretion of the trial judge to allow a peremptory challenge after the juror has been sworn.—State v. Wren, 48 La. Ann. 803, 19 South. 745.

[c] (Mich. 1891) Under How. Ann. St. § 7599, providing that the first 12 persons who shall be approved of as indifferent between the parties shall be sworn, and shall be the jury to try the case, the trial court cannot, in its discretion, after the panel has been sworn in a cause, permit either party to peremptorily challenge a juror, and have another drawn in his place, against the objections of the opposing party.—Ayres v. Hubbard, 88 Mich. 155, 50 N. W. 111.

[d] (Miss. 1876) Where a full jury was presented with which plaintiff declared himself satisfied and defendant peremptorily challenged one of the jurors, and, without exercising other challenges, permitted another talesman to take the place of the one rejected, whom both parties accepted, it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to permit defendant to peremptorily challenge other jurors.—Tatum v. Preston, 53 Miss. 654.

[e] (N. Y. 1873) The court has power to allow a juror to be peremptorily challenged, even after he has been sworn in, at any time before actual commencement of the trial.—In re Tweed, 13 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 371.

[f] (N. Y. 1885) The court cannot deprive a defendant of his right to peremptorily challenge a juror any time before he is actually sworn by requiring him to exhaust all his challenges to the juror before the juror takes his seat in the box.—People v. Carpenter, 16 Abb. N. C. 128.

[g] (N. Y. 1886) It is within the discretion of the trial court to determine the practice as to when the jurors shall be sworn, and it has the power to lay down the rule that, if the prisoner intends to challenge an individual juror, he must do so when the juror appears, and before he is sworn.—People v. Carpenter, 102 N. Y. 238, 6 N. E. 584, affirming (1886) 38 Hun, 490.

[h] (N. Y. 1892) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 371, providing that "the court may, in its discretion, for good cause set aside a juror at any time before evidence is given in the action," the court may grant leave to interpose a peremptory challenge to a juror already accepted and sworn, if it do not prejudice defendant's rights, upon the oral statement of counsel for the prosecution that matters had come to his knowledge, after the juror was sworn, leading him to believe that he was unsatisfactory.—People v. Hughes, 64 Hun, 638, 19 N. Y. Supp. 550, 8 N. Y. Cr. R. 448.

[i] (N. Y. 1893) Where it is conceded that a court has discretionary power to permit a peremptory challenge of a juror after he is sworn, it is no abuse of discretion to give the permission to the state, on the assurance of the prosecuting officer of undisclosed disqualifying facts, even after defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges, and before the introduction of evidence.—People v. Hughes, 137 N. Y. 29, 32 N. E. 1105, affirming (1892) 19 N Y. Supp. 550, 8 N. Y. Cr. R. 448.

[j] (Ohio, 1870) It being discretionary with the court as to the means and manner of exercising the right to make peremptory challenges, it was not injurious to defendant indicted for murder for the court to require him to make his peremptory challenges, after first having exhausted his challenges for cause, to each juror as called, and on failure of the party to make any valid challenge, order the juror so called at once to be sworn.—Schufflin v. State, 20 Ohio St. 233.

[k] (S. C. 1896) Under Rev. St. § 2404, allowing each party two peremptory challenges to jurors in civil cases, and providing that the right "shall extend to jurors drawn to fill the places of those challenged," where plaintiff challenged the foreman of the jury, and another was appointed as foreman without objection from defendant, and both parties stated that they were satisfied with the jury, the court, in allowing plaintiff to challenge such substituted foreman, was acting within his discretion.—Curnow v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 46 S. C. 79, 24 S. E. 74.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 620 [h, k, l].

[a] (U. S. 1843) Where the statute gives a right to each party to challenge peremptorily two jurors, plaintiff may be allowed to exercise the right after he has once expressed himself as satisfied with the jury, and after defendant has used his challenges.—Jones v. Vanzandt, Fed. Cas. No. 7,502 [2 McLean, 611].

[b] (Ala. 1877) A peremptory challenge is too late when interposed after defendant and his counsel have expressed satisfaction with the jury as organized.—Sparks v. State, 59 Ala. 82.

[d] (Ill. 1887) Under Rev. St. c. 78, § 21, providing that the jury shall be passed upon and accepted in panels of four, the refusal of the court to allow a peremptory challenge addressed to a juror in a panel of four which both parties have passed upon and accepted, such challenge being made before any of the jurors are sworn, and while the parties are passing upon a subsequent panel, is not error.—Mayers v. Smith, 121 Ill. 442, 13 N. E. 216, affirming (1887) 25 Ill. App. 67.

[f] (Mich. 1881) Though a juror has taken his place in the jury box, and both parties profess to be satisfied with him, yet he may be peremptorily challenged by the prosecution before he is sworn.—People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442, 9 N. W. 487.

[g] (Mich. 1883) Either party may peremptorily challenge a juror before the jury is sworn, though he has announced himself as satisfied with the jury.—Appeal of Hamper, 51 Mich. 71, 16 N. W. 236.

[h] (Tex. 1875) In impaneling a jury in a capital case, the names of the persons summoned should be called in the order they stand upon the list, and, when found qualified, they are to be challenged either peremptorily or for cause, or accepted severally, as each one is determined by the court to be a qualified juror, which is to be continued one by one until the jury is fully formed to the number of 12. No law, or established practice under the law, is known which sanctions the peremptory challenge of a juror by either party, in such case, after the juror is accepted and impaneled, whether the jury be full or not, though there may be discretion in the court for excusing or setting aside a juror, after he is thus selected, for good cause shown at the time why he cannot or ought not to serve on the jury.—Horbach v. State, 43 Tex. 242.

[i] (Tex. 1879) When a juror has been duly accepted to try a capital case, neither party can challenge him peremptorily, whether the jury is full or not.—Drake v. State, 5 Tex. App. 649.

[j] (Tex. 1895) A juror in a criminal case was accepted without being questioned by either side as to his qualifications. The state subsequently asked him if he was qualified, and, receiving affirmative answers, again accepted him, and defendant peremptorily challenged. Held no error.—Seals v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 138, 32 S. W. 545.

[k] (Vt. 1887) Under R. L. § 1658, providing that "every person who is arraigned and put on trial in the county court in a criminal prosecution may peremptorily challenge six jurors, and such further number as he can show good cause for challenging," defendant's right to peremptorily challenge a juror continues until the juror is sworn, even though he has previously accepted him.—State v. Spaulding, 60 Vt. 228, 14 Atl. 769.

[l] (Wis. 1850) Where, after the panel of the jury is complete, they are accepted by the state and the accused, though not sworn, it is then too late for the accused to challenge one of the number, though his peremptory challenges are not exhausted.—State v. Cameron, 2 Chand. 172, 2 Pin. 490.

[m] (Wis. 1886) The district attorney being, under Rev. St. § 4690, entitled to 12 peremptory challenges, he may, before the jury is accepted by both parties and sworn, strike from the list the name of a juror, although he had previously, after striking 7 jurors from the list, expressed himself as satisfied with the jury.—Santry v. State, 67 Wis. 65, 30 N. W. 226.

[a] (Cal. 1874) If the prosecution, in a criminal case, pass the jury to the defendant, who declines to make any challenge, the prosecution may then interpose a peremptory challenge to a juror, before he is sworn.—People v. McCarty, 48 Cal. 557.

[b] (Cal. 1892) Pen. Code, § 1088, provides that, after the challenges of both sides are disallowed, "either party, first the people, and then defendant, may take peremptory challenges, unless the parties' peremptory challenges are exhausted." Held, that the prosecution may exercise the right of peremptory challenge after once passing the jury, and the right has been exercised by defendant.—People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315, 31 Pac. 107.

[c] (Conn. 1846) B. having been called as a talesman, in the same cause, and examined as to his bias, and no reason to except to him on that account appearing, the counsel for the prisoner were informed by the court that they could then challenge B. peremptorily, if they desired to do so. They declined to exercise the right at that time, as the panel was not then full, and B. was directed to take his seat as one of the jurors. After the panel was full, and but six peremptory challenges had been made, the prisoner's counsel claimed the right to challenge B. peremptorily. Held, that in the absence of any reason for a peremptory challenge then which did not exist before, when the exercise of the right was declined, it was too late to challenge B. peremptorily.—State v. Potter, 18 Conn. 166.

[d] (Fla. 1887) A juror tendered and accepted, but not sworn, may be peremptorily challenged by the state, as well as by the defendant.—Mann v. State, 23 Fla. 610, 3 South. 207.

[e] (Miss. 1874) Under Rev. Code 1871, § 2761, a peremptory challenge of a juror cannot be made by the state after he has been presented to the prisoner.—Stewart v. State, 50 Miss. 587.

[f] (Nev. 1880) Upon a trial for murder, A. and 11 other jurors were examined and passed for cause, and were in the box, when, upon the prisoner being asked if he had any peremptory challenges, he then refused to exercise his right, and passed his challenge several times after notice from the court that, in so passing, he would be considered as having accepted all the jurors then in the box. The state interposed several challenges, and as often as a juror was challenged another name was drawn, thus keeping the panel full. When the state ceased challenging, no challenge had been taken by the prisoner, who then challenged A. Held, that the court was in error in disallowing this challenge.—State v. Pritchard, 15 Nev. 74.

[g] (N. Y. 1867) The right of a defendant on trial for manslaughter to peremptorily challenge a juror continues until the juror is sworn, notwithstanding that when the juror was declared competent to serve as such, the court asked defendant's counsel if he challenged the juror peremptorily, and he stated "No," and the juror took his seat in the box.—Lindsley v. People, 6 Parker, Cr. R. 233.

[h] (N. C. 1880) A juror may be set aside at any time before he is impaneled. He may be challenged by the state after he has been passed to and accepted by the defendant.—State v. Vestal, 82 N. C. 563; Same v. Vann, Id. 631.

[i] (N. C. 1894) Under Code, § 1200, providing that in capital cases the state may challenge peremptorily four jurors, provided the challenge is made before the juror is tendered to the prisoner, it is error to permit the state to peremptorily challenge a juror after he is tendered to the prisoner.—State v. Fuller, 114 N. C. 885, 19 S. E. 797.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 620.

[a] The allowance of a peremptory challenge of a juror, after he has been accepted and sworn, is not a matter of right; and the refusal of the court to allow it does not constitute error.
—(Cal. 1860) People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128; (Nev. 1868) State v. Anderson, 4 Nev. 265.

[b] (Cal. 1858) After 11 of the jury, in a capital case, had been sworn, and the twelfth selected, the defendant offered to interpose a peremptory challenge to one of the 11, without naming him, or stating that any fact had been learned since he was sworn. The offer was refused.—People v. Rodriguez, 10 Cal. 50.

[c] (Cal. 1860) Whether jurors in criminal cases are sworn as they are accepted or after the jury is complete, peremptory challenges must be exercised before the oath is administered.—People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128.

[d] (Cal. 1864) A juror in a criminal action may be peremptorily challenged, even after he is sworn, until the jury is completed.—People v. Jenks, 24 Cal. 11.

[e] (Ill. 1893) Permitting a peremptory challenge after the jury has been sworn and the opening statements made is erroneous.—Peoria, D. & E. Ry. Co. v. Puckett, 52 Ill. App. 222.

[f] (Ind. 1895) In a criminal trial, after the first witness had commenced to testify, a juror told the court that he might have talked about the case, though on his examination he had stated the contrary, and the court granted defendant's motion for his examination over objection. The juror proving competent, defendant, who had not exhausted all his peremptory challenges, without the interposition of any further motion, challenged him peremptorily. Held, that the challenge was properly denied; Rev. St. 1894, § 1863 (Rev. St. 1881, § 1794), providing that peremptory challenges shall be made before the jury is sworn, and the proper course being to move to set aside the submission.—Kurtz v. State, 145 Ind. 110, 42 N. E. 1102.

[g] (Mass. 1890) A talesman in a civil case may be challenged peremptorily after he is sworn, and "before anything else is done," under Pub. St. c. 170, § 36, providing that "In all cases, civil and criminal, either party shall, before the trial commences, be entitled to challenge peremptorily two of the jurors from the panel called to try the cause."—Sackett v. Ruder, 152 Mass. 397, 25 N. E. 736, 9 L. R. A. 391.

[h] (Mich. 1883) Where the jury in a criminal case had been impaneled, and, during the temporary absence of the prosecuting attorney from the court room, they had been sworn, it was error to permit him on his return to challenge one of the jurors, and to fill his place with another, against the objection of defendant.—People v. Dolan, 51 Mich. 610, 17 N. W. 78.

[i] (Mich. 1889) A peremptory challenge cannot be allowed after the jury is sworn.—Thorp v. Deming, 78 Mich. 124, 43 N. W. 1097.

[j] (Pa. 1869) Where seven jurors had been sworn, and the clerk directed those who affirmed to rise, held too late to challenge after the jurors who affirmed stood upon their feet, and the clerk was in the act of affirming them.—Commonwealth v. Marra, 8 Phila. 440.

4. MAKING AND EFFECT OF CHALLENGES.

ORDER OF CHALLENGES, § 625.
EXHAUSTION OF CHALLENGES, § 626.
MODE OF MAKING CHALLENGES, § 627.
OPERATION AND EFFECT OF CHALLENGES, § 628.
—— WITHDRAWAL, § 629.
ERRORS AND IRREGULARITIES, § 630.

Examination of jurors before exercising challenges, see ante, § 563.
Exercise of challenges as waiver of defects, see ante, § 519.
Right to full panel before exercising challenges, see ante, § 357.

[a] In the absence of any provision of statute on the subject, the order in which peremptory challenges to individual jurors may be taken in a civil action rests in the sound discretion of the court in which the trial takes place.—(Md. 1881) Turpin v. State, 55 Md. 462; (Minn. 1874) St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. Eastman, 20 Minn. 277 (Gil. 249); (Vt. 1888) State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 14 Atl. 178.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 624.
Of parties in making challenges on different grounds, see ante, § 499.
On different grounds, see ante, § 498.

[a] (U. S. 1847) Peremptory challenges of jurors need not be made at the same time, but the parties may alternate.—Driskell v. Parish, Fed. Cas. No. 4,087.

[b] (Ala. 1878) In all criminal prosecutions the state must be required to pass upon the jurors offered before the defendant can be compelled to announce his acceptance or rejection of them.—Spigener v. State, 62 Ala. 383.

[c] (Idaho, 1896) In the impaneling of a trial jury in a criminal case, where the defendant has double the number of peremptory challenges given the state, the state making the first challenge, the defense is required to make two before the state is again called upon to exercise its next peremptory challenge.—State v. Browne, 44 Pac. 552.

[d] (Ill. 1877) On proceedings to condemn lands for a public sewer, after the first objecting lot owners had passed on the jurors, new jurors were introduced into the panel by challenges from the other objectors and from petitioner. Held, that thereupon, the first objectors, who had not exhausted their peremptory challenges, were entitled to again challenge.—Fitzpatrick v. City of Joliet, 87 Ill. 58.

[e] (Iowa, 1858) Where, on the trial of an indictment, the district attorney challenged a juror peremptorily, and then the defendant one; and where, the panel being filled, the defendant insisted that the state should exercise a second peremptory challenge, if any more were to be made, which the court refused, and required the defendant to challenge the second time, before the state exercised the right, holding that, upon his failure to do so, the defendant would waive the privilege as to one juror, it was held that the rule adopted by the court was fair and equitable.—State v. Pierce, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 231.

[f] (Iowa, 1862) In the formation of a jury, the parties to the suit must alternate in their challenges, the plaintiff beginning. Revision, § 3036.—Davenport Gaslight & Coke Co. v. City of Davenport, 13 Iowa, 229.

[g] (Mo. 1856) In a trial for murder, the prisoner may be required to make his peremptory challenges from the list of jurors, without first knowing what the state may make.—State v. Hays, 23 Mo. 287.

[h] (Mo. 1877) The defendant in a criminal case cannot be required to announce his peremptory challenges of jurors until those of the state have been announced.—State v. Steeley, 65 Mo. 218, 27 Am. Rep. 271.

[i] (Mo. 1894) On the trial of an interplea in an attachment suit, the interpleader is the plaintiff, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1889, § 6081, providing that plaintiff shall in all cases announce his peremptory challenges first.—Cunningham v. Prusansky, 59 Mo. App. 498.

[j] (Mo. 1894) The requirement of Rev. St. 1889, § 6081, that the plaintiff shall in all cases first announce his peremptory challenges of jurors, is mandatory, and a refusal by the trial court to permit the plaintiff to first exercise his right of peremptory challenge is reversible error.—Cunningham v. Prusansky, 59 Mo. App. 498.

[k] (Mo. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6081, providing that each party may challenge peremptorily three jurors, and that "plaintiff shall, in all cases, announce his challenge first," in an action to set aside a will plaintiff should be required to announce his challenges first, though defendants have the burden of proof.—Hegney v. Head, 126 Mo. 619, 29 S. W. 587.

[l] (N. Y. 1888) Code Cr. Proc. § 385, as amended in 1882, declaring that "challenges to an individual juror must be taken first by the people, and then by the defendant," is mandatory; and the prosecution must first exhaust its peremptory challenges before defendant can be called on to challenge peremptorily. Violation of the order of challenge is not within section 542, requiring the appellate court to disregard technical errors or defects not affecting a substantial right.—People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, 18 N. E. 156, 1 L. R. A. 273, affirming (1888) 21 Abb. N. C. 417, 6 N. Y. Cr. R. 1.

[m] (Pa. 1871) Cr. Proc. Act, § 38, providing that all challenges in criminal proceedings shall be alternate, the commonwealth making the first challenge, does not preclude a first challenge by the commonwealth, after defendant had exhausted his challenges, where defendant made his challenges as the jurors entered the box, and did not call on the district attorney to make any challenges.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 1 Leg. Gaz. R. 182.

[n] (Tex. 1873) The proper mode of selecting a jury in a criminal case is by trial or examination, until 12 qualified jurors are found. Then the party holding the affirmative should be required to pass upon the jury. Should he pass upon it without challenge, the party holding the negative is then called upon to pass upon it. Should either make a peremptory challenge, another juror must be called, when the peremptory challenging may proceed.—Cooley v. State, 38 Tex. 636.

[o] (Tex. 1874) On the trial of a criminal charge, after the state had tendered the defendant a full jury, he was required to pass upon all the jurors tendered, after which the places of those challenged were filled, and defendant required to pass on the new jurors (before the state was required to pass), until he was satisfied with the panel, or had exhausted his challenges. Held, that there was no error.—State v. Ezell, 41 Tex. 35.

[p] (Wash. 1894) Code Proc. § 1297, provides that the law relating to the selection of jurors in civil cases shall apply in criminal cases. Section 348 provides that plaintiff may peremptorily challenge one, and then defendant one, and so alternately until the peremptory challenges are exhausted. Held, in a criminal case, where defendant has twelve challenges, and the state only six, that defendant must make two challenges to the state's one.—State v. Eddon, 8 Wash. 292, 36 Pac. 139.

[q] (Wis. 1856) Under Rev. St. c. 148, § 5, the defendant is entitled to twenty-four peremptory challenges, and cannot be required to exercise four or waive four at one time—Schumaker v. State, 5 Wis. 324.

[r] (Wis. 1883) In a trial for murder, the state and defendant have the right of alternate challenge of jurors; and, where there are two defendants, the state may challenge one juror and the two defendants four, and the state is not bound to challenge until after such four challenges by defendants.—Rounds v. State 57 Wis. 45, 14 N. W. 865.

Allowance to state after exhaustion by defendant, see ante, § 620 [i].

Discharge of jurors by court after exhaustion of challenges, see ante, § 540.

Effect of discharging juror for cause, see ante, § 598 [f, h, i, t, u].

Failure to exhaust challenges as waiver of defects, see ante, § 520.

Jurors subject to challenge, see ante, § 606.

[a] (Kan. 1892) After the regular panel of jurors had been exhausted in a trial for a misdemeanor, and the sheriff had commenced to select the talesmen, defendant objected to the sheriff or his deputies making the selection because of the interest they might have in the result. The court, with the consent of both parties, then named the talesmen, and among those so named was one who had been previously selected by the sheriff. The defendant exhausted his last peremptory challenge upon this talesman. Held, that the action of the court was not cause for a new trial.—State v. Plum, 49 Kan. 679, 31 Pac. 308.

[b] (Ky. 1870) Disallowing a challenge for cause, thus necessitating the use of the peremptory challenge, cannot be regarded as a refusal to allow a peremptory challenge, although this action of the court exhausts the number of the latter challenges allowed by law.—Moore v. Commonwealth, 70 Ky. (7 Bush) 191.

[c] (La. 1887) Notwithstanding defendant's challenges have been exhausted at a time when one made by the counsel for the state is sustained, no ground of complaint is afforded the former. His right is that of selection, and not that of rejection by the state.—State v. Carries, 39 La. Ann. 931, 3 South. 56.

[d] (Tex. 1880) The fact that the defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges before the panel was filled does not show that any disqualified juror was forced upon him.—Grissom v. State, 8 Tex. App. 386.

[e] (Tex. 1891) Though the bill of exceptions shows that defendants demanded six challenges for one defendant and six for the other defendants, and that but six were allowed for all, and when these were exhausted two jurors were placed in the panel, yet, where it is not shown that any of defendants desired to challenge those two, no injury is shown, and the ruling becomes immaterial.—Wolf v. Perryman, 82 Tex. 112, 17 S. W. 772.

[f] (Tex. 1893) An objection that defendant was compelled to accept, because all his peremptory challenges were exhausted, a certain person called as a juror, will not be sustained where such person was in all respects qualified to sit as a juror.—McKinney v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 583, 21 S. W. 683.

[g] (Tex. 1896) That defendant in a criminal case was misled by the clerk as to the number of his peremptory challenges, and was thereby compelled to accept an objectionable juror, is not ground for reversal.—Miller v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 47, 35 S. W. 391.

[a] (U. S. 1892) In the trial of a capital case it is the right of the accused to be confronted with the panel of jurors, and to be present during the challenges, and it is therefore reversible error for a federal judge to direct secret challenges to be made from separate jury lists, each side being ignorant of the challenges the other has made.—Lewis v. United States, 146 U. S. 370, 13 Sup. Ct. 136, 36 L. Ed. 1011.

[b] (Ky. 1835) Peremptory challenge is a personal privilege that cannot be exercised by a volunteer in the absence of the accused and without his authority.—Steele v. Commonwealth, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 84.

[c] (Tenn. 1873) Where one having the right to challenge for cause directed the juror to stand aside without asking the judgment of the court, he has peremptorily challenged him.—Crider v. Lifsey, 57 Tenn. (10 Heisk.) 456.

[d] (Tex. 1873) It is not proper to make more than one peremptory challenge at the same time.—Cooley v. State, 38 Tex. 636.

Effect of order quashing array, see ante, § 550 [b].

Exercise of challenges as waiver of defects, see ante, § 519.

[a] (Tenn. 1829) Where several defendants are jointly tried, a challenge by one excludes the juror challenged as to all.—Hill v. State, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 246.

See post, § 630 [a].

[a] (U. S. 1795) On a trial for high treason, where the whole panel has been drawn out of the jury box without furnishing 12 names unchallenged, the counsel for the prisoner may retract the challenge of a juror, who will be qualified by order of the court.—United States v. Porter, Fed. Cas. No. 16,073 [2 U. S. (2 Dall.) 345, 1 L. Ed. 409].

[b] (Md. 1887) In a criminal action, after the peremptory challenges allowed a defendant have been exhausted, he will not be permitted to withdraw his challenge to one of the rejected jurors, and have him substituted in the place of a talesman that has been called to complete the jury.—Biddle v. State, 67 Md. 304, 10 Atl. 794.

[c] (Mo. 1884) A party having once made his peremptory challenge of a juror cannot capriciously withdraw it and examine him in order to challenge for cause.—Vojta v. Pelikan, 15 Mo. App. 471.

[d] (N. J. 1850) A peremptory challenge cannot be withdrawn after the juror has been set aside and the next juror called.—Furman v. Applegate, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 28.

[e] (Or. 1865) It is not error for the court to allow a peremptory challenge of one juror to be withdrawn before another has been called. —Garrison v. City of Portland, 2 Or. 123.

[f] (S. C. 1857) A prisoner on trial for murder made a peremptory challenge of a juror, and then, having ascertained that there was a connection by marriage between the juror and the deceased, proposed to withdraw it in order to challenge him for cause. This the court would not permit him to do.—State v. Price, 10 Rich. Law, 351.

[g] (S. C. 1876) The defendant in a criminal case cannot have a juror whom he has challenged peremptorily recalled in order that he may object to him for cause.—State v. Coleman, 8 S. C. (8 Rich.) 237.

[a] (Ala. 1880) Where the prosecuting attorney challenged a juror who had taken his seat in the jury box, and the challenge was withdrawn on objection by the defendant, and the juror directed to take his seat, held that there was no ground for an exception by the defendant.—Leonard v. State, 66 Ala. 461.

[b] (Ind. 1847) When a peremptory challenge has been allowed, it must be presumed, if the contrary does not appear, that the challenge was authorized by the circumstances of the case.—Cable v. State, 8 Blackf. 531.

[c] (Iowa, 1895) Code 1873, § 2763, provides that where there are several defendants, and no separate trial is allowed, they must join in their challenges to jurors. In an action on a note, after judgment for plaintiff, but in favor of one of the defendants as against the other two defendants, a new trial was granted to the two defendants only, and in impaneling the jury for the second trial a peremptory challenge by them was overruled because the other defendant did not join therein. The claim by the latter defendant of former adjudication, which was afterwards sustained, was not raised until after the jury was impaneled. Held, that the ruling on the challenge would not be disturbed.—Cleveland v. Atkinson, 94 Iowa, 621, 63 N. W. 465.

IMPANELING AND ORGANIZATION IN GENERAL, § 631.
CONSTITUTION OF JURY FOR TRIAL OF CAUSE, § 632.
DESIGNATION AND IDENTITY OF JURORS, § 633.
EFFECT OF PRESENCE OR SERVICE ON JURY OF PERSON NOT DRAWN THEREFOR, § 634.
DISCHARGE OR WITHDRAWAL OF JUROR PENDING TRIAL, § 635.
DISCHARGING ACCEPTED JURORS BEFORE COMPLETION OF JURY, § 636.
DISCHARGE OF JURY PENDING TRIAL, § 637.
APPOINTMENT OF FOREMAN, § 638.
OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS, § 639.

§ 631. Impaneling and organization in general.

[a] (Ga. 1874) When one juror, on a trial or an indictment for a felony, has been sworn.

and a nolle prosequi is then entered, and a new bill found, it is not error that the array, with the same juror upon it, is put upon the prisoner; and in such a case the right of challenge, both on the part of the state and the prisoner, is the same as if the former proceedings had not been taken.—Reid v. State, 50 Ga. 556.

[b] (Iowa, 1865) The word "impaneled" used with reference to the organizing of a jury, means its final formation by the court. It is the act that precedes the swearing of the jury, and which ascertains who are to be sworn.—State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa, 435.

[c] (Nev. 1866) The impaneling of a jury is not complete until after the jurors are sworn and charged with the case.—State v. Squaires, 2 Nev. 226.

[d] (N. Y. 1809) Where a jury was sworn and impaneled to try a prisoner on several indictments, and after giving a verdict of not guilty on the first indictment, they separated and went to a tavern, and then returned into court, when the prisoner was tried by the same jury on the other indictments, and found guilty, the supreme court held the proceedings on the other indictments irregular, and that the jury ought to have been sworn and impaneled again.—People v. Meany, 4 Johns. 294.

[e] (Va. 1885) The provisions of the statute relative to impaneling juries in capital cases are not directory merely, but imperative, and may not be disregarded.—Hall v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 555.

[a] (U. S. 1826) The jury is to be composed of the first 12 men whose names remain upon the panel after the challenges are exhausted.—United States v. White, Fed. Cas. No. 16,682 [4 Mason, 158], affirmed United States v. Marchant (1827) 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 480, 6 L. Ed. 700.

[a] (Pa. 1858) Act 1834, § 88, requiring an addition to be given to jurors, is merely directory; and to be a mark of identity, it is necessary that the addition should be written as it is commonly known in the community where he is drawn. Therefore the addition "mill boss" was held insufficient ground for quashing the array for want of a suitable addition to the name of one of the jurors.—Clark v. Commonwealth, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 129.

[b] (Tex. 1852) It is not necessary, in civil cases, that the names of the jurors should be set out in the record of each case.—Clark v. Davis, 7 Tex. 556.

Drawing from jury box name of one not previously drawn for the venire, see ante, § 308 [a].

As ground for new trial, see "New Trial," II. (D).

[a] (Mass. 1885) Under Pub. St. c. 170, § 40, providing that no "irregularity in the * * * impaneling of jurors shall be sufficient to set aside a verdict, unless the party making the objection was injured by the irregularity," the fact that the wrong man, but a qualified juror, by mistake took his seat in the jury box, in answer to a name called by the clerk, is no ground for setting aside the verdict, the mistake not being discovered till after the verdict was rendered.—Commonwealth v. Parsons, 139 Mass. 381, 31 N. E. 767.

[b] (Mo. 1875) If, after the jury are sworn, an unchallenged and unexamined juryman is found in the panel, the proper juror should be substituted and the jury resworn. Wag. St. p. 797, § 3, excluding objections after the jury is sworn, does not apply to such case.—State v. Sternberg, 59 Mo. 410.

[c] (N. Y. 1879) C. was summoned as a juror, but did not attend. A person whose name was not on the panel answered to C.'s name, and served. All parties were ignorant of the substitution. Held, that the verdict must be set aside; it was that of 11 men only.—Dayton v. Church, 7 Abb. N. C. 367.

[d] (Pa. 1891) Where the sheriff in good faith summoned a person as a juror, identical in name, occupation, and the street of his residence with a person on the venire, the error was cured, after verdict, by Act March 31, 1860, § 53, which provides that "no verdict in any criminal court shall be set aside * * * for any defect or error in drawing, summoning, or returning any juror," etc.—Commonwealth v. Beucher (Orph. Ct.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 3.

As infringement of right, see ante, §§ 223, 232 [h].

Effect on number of peremptory challenges, see ante, § 615.

Excusing and discharging members of panel, see ante, § 385.

Filling vacancies in panel caused by excusing jurors, see ante, § 314 [e].

Of juror not drawn, see ante, § 634 [b].

Power of court, see ante, §§ 532–538.

Rejection or discharge on court's own motion, see ante, §§ 524–531.

[a] (U. S. 1852) Where a United States court sitting in New York, in accordance with New York practice, excused a juror for illness during the plaintiff's opening, it was discretionary with the court to impanel a whole new jury, or, as in this case, to fill the vacancy and proceed with the trial.—Silsby v. Foote, 55 U. S. (14 How.) 218, 14 L. Ed. 394, affirming Foote v. Silsby (1849) Fed. Cas. No. 4,916 [1 Blatchf. 445].

[b] (Ala. 1894) The court may fill the place of a juror selected for trial of a criminal case, excused for illness before entering on the trial, by calling another juror from the panel, or, if that is exhausted, by summoning a talesman from the body of the county.—Yarbrough v. State, 105 Ala. 43, 16 South. 758.

[d] (Cal. 1895) In an action against a street railroad company for death by wrongful act, after much evidence was taken, a juror stated to the judge, in the presence of counsel, that he was familiar with the country in which the accident occurred, and did not believe the statements of three of plaintiff's witnesses in regard to its description. Held, that it was error to discharge the juror on account thereof.—Mahoney v. San Francisco & S. M. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 471, 42 Pac. 968.

[e] (Ga. 1860) After one of the selected jurors on a struck jury has been excused for sickness, the court properly called another juror to complete the panel, and had the jury stricken over again.—Pannell v. State, 29 Ga. 681.

[f] (Ga. 1872) After a jury, in a criminal case, had been stricken, but before the case was given to them, it was discovered that two of the jurors had been on the grand jury which found the indictment. Held, that the defendant was entitled to a new jury list, with talesmen substituted for the incompetent jurors.—Cobb v. State, 45 Ga. 11.

[g] (Ill. 1876) Where the court has discharged a juror for illness, after the trial is begun, his place may be filled, and the trial commenced de novo.—City of Shawneetown v. Mason, 82 Ill. 337, 25 Am. Dec. 321.

[h] (Ill. 1889) The fact that a juror sharply cross-examines one of the witnesses as to the accuracy of his memory does not show that the juror has become incompetent, through prejudice, to discharge his duty as a juror, and a motion to exclude him from the panel is properly overruled.—Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Harper, 128 Ill. 384, 21 N. E. 561.

[i] (Ind. 1837) A jury in a civil case was impaneled, heard part of the evidence in a case, and was dispersed, by consent, over night. The next day one of the jurors failed to appear, whereupon the jury was dismissed, and a new jury impaneled. Held, that this was not erroneous.—Harris v. Doe, 4 Blackf. 369.

[j] (Iowa, 1850) Where a juror, in a criminal case, during the adjournment of court for dinner, separated himself from his fellows, and was discharged by the court for that reason, it was improper to substitute another juror in his place and proceed with the trial as though no change had been made.—Grable v. State, 2 G. Greene, 559.

[k] (La.) Where a juror is discharged and another substituted, after the trial has commenced and part of the evidence been introduced, plaintiff is entitled to open his case again and have the trial proceed de novo.—(1835) Follin v. Foucher, 8 La. 563; (1841) Prentice v. Chewning, 1 Rob. 71.

[l] (La. 1841) Where the court excused a juror for sickness, after the trial had commenced, it was error to call another juror from the bystanders, over defendant's objection, and place him on the jury, reading to him the evidence already taken.—Prentice v. Chewning, 1 Rob. 71.

[m] (La. 1887) Where a juror is incapacitated from serving, by illness, immediately after the swearing of the complete jury, his place may be filled from the panel.—State v. Moncla, 39 La. Ann. 868, 2 South. 814.

[n] (La. 1896) The court may call another juror to supply the place of one excused for illness after being accepted and sworn, but before the completion of the trial jury.—State v. Johnson, 48 La. Ann. 437, 19 South. 476.

[o] (Mo. 1872) Judgment reversed, because one of the jurors, after trial, and before verdict rendered, became insane.—Norvell v. Deval, 50 Mo. 272, 11 Am. Rep. 413.

[p] (Nev. 1881) Where, after the jury had been sworn in a capital case, it appeared that one of the jurors had conscientious scruples against convicting defendant on circumstantial evidence, held proper to discharge him and impanel a new juror, and that there was no necessity for discharging the other 11 jurors.—State v. Pritchard, 16 Nev. 101.

[q] (Pa. 1850) Act April 14, 1836, § 142, provides that the names of the jurors sworn in any cause shall be kept separate until such jury shall give their verdict, or until the jury shall be discharged. Section 141 provides that juries shall swear to well and truly try the issue and a true verdict give, unless dismissed by the court. Held, that where a juror, after being sworn, fails to appear, the court is not entitled to summon another in his place, but must either compel his attendance, or dismiss the whole jury and call another.—Pennell v. Percival, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 197.

[r] (Pa. 1888) Where a juror, in a criminal case, after being sworn, fails to appear, the course which the court ought to pursue is either to compel his appearance, or dismiss the jury, and impanel another to try the case.—Commonwealth v. Byers (Quart Sess.) 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 270.

[s] (S. C. 1835) Where a juror has been sworn, but has heard no testimony, and the case is adjourned to another day, on which the juror does not attend, the commissioner may call and swear another juror.—Rice v. Sims, 3 Hill, 5.

[t] (S. C. 1839) The foreman of the jury in a slander case, who had used like words of the plaintiff to those on which the action was brought, was excused, against the defendant's consent, from sitting on the trial; and the defendant was not permitted for that reason to continue the cause.—Palmer v. Bogan, 1 Cheves, 52.

[v] (Tenn. 1833) Where some jurors are discharged for sickness and inability to sit in the trial of a criminal case, as provided by Acts 1817, c. 99, the others remain as selected jurors.—Garner v. State, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 160.

[w] (Tenn.) Where a juror has been discharged during a criminal trial because incapacitated by illness, the court may either supply his place and try the case de novo, or continue the cause.—(1845) State v. Curtis, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 601; (1874) Snowden v. State, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 482.

[x] (Tenn. 1874) Under Code, § 4028, the court, on finding, in a criminal trial, a juror mentally incapacitated, may, at discretion, substitute another and try the cause de novo, or discharge the jury and continue the case.—Snowden v. State, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 482.

[y] (Tenn. 1883) A duly qualified juror in a capital case remained with the other jurors for two days, until the panel was completed, and was then discharged, it appearing that he had expressed an opinion which disqualified him. Held, that the court was not bound to discharge the entire panel.—Taylor v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 708.

[z] (Tex. 1873) If an irregularity in impaneling 13 jurors is discovered before the verdict is rendered, the cause should be withdrawn from the jury, and a lawful jury impaneled and sworn to try it; but if the last juror sworn can be pointed out, he may be dismissed from the panel, and the trial proceed before the legally constituted jury.—Bullard v. State, 38 Tex. 504, 19 Am. Rep. 30.

[zz] (Tex. 1882) After a juror has once been impaneled in a felony case, it is beyond the power of the court to excuse him from serving in the case. If he becomes sick so that he cannot proceed, the jury must be discharged and another one impaneled.—Ellison v. State, 12 Tex. App. 557.

See ante, § 347 [a].

[a] (Ala. 1872) On trial of a murder case, a juror duly summoned and in attendance, being sworn and examined by the court, was pronounced competent and accepted by both sides. The juror then requested to be discharged, on the ground that he belonged to a fire company and was exempt, which the court refused. The juror then stated that he would discharge himself and left the room. Held, that the action of the court in selecting another juror to fill his place, without discharging him and without the consent of accused, was reversible error.—Powell v. State, 48 Ala. 154.

[b] (Ala. 1894) Where a juror who has been merely examined and found competent, and who is allowed by the court to go while talesmen are being summoned, fails to appear again, the court may complete the jury without reference to him.—Byers v. State, 105 Ala. 81, 16 South. 716.

[c] (Ga. 1874) Where a juror selected for a struck jury failed to answer when his name was called before the jury was sworn, the court properly ordered the panel to be filled and the jury to be struck over again.—Clifton v. State, 53 Ga. 241.

[d] (Ga. 1891) The court may call another juror to supply the place of one excused for illness after he was accepted though not yet sworn.—Osburn v. State, 87 Ga. 173, 13 S. E. 247.

[e] (Pa. 1890) There is no irregularity of which defendant can complain in the substitution of one person as a juror for another by defendant's express consent, when the jury is being impaneled in a criminal prosecution.—Commonwealth v. Fritch (O. & T.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 164.

[f] (Tenn. 1878) After six jurors had been obtained in a criminal case and placed under charge of an officer, two, after an unexplained separation from the others, were taken back and spent the night with them. Held, that the court properly punished the two and ordered a panel de novo; and that the four others, being tendered to the prisoner without objection, might be included therein.—Griffee v. State, 69 Tenn. (1 Lea) 41.

[g] (Tenn. 1892) On a trial for murder, after eight jurors had been accepted, two of the eight were discharged as having expressed opinions as to defendant's guilt. Held not a cause for discharging the remaining jurors on the ground that they had become tainted by association with the two so discharged, where the remaining jurymen were again interrogated by the court, and qualified as competent.—Ellis v. State, 92 Tenn. (o Pickle) 85, 20 S. W. 500.

[h] (Tex. 1890) Code Cr. Proc. art. 657, provides that, in all crimes less than capital, the jury shall be sworn in a body. Held, upon an indictment for assault with intent to commit murder, that where but seven jurors have been selected the first day, and the oath administered to them as a matter of precaution before giving them in charge of the officer for the night, they were not thereby impaneled, and therefore excusing one did not excuse the others.—Rippey v. State, 29 Tex. App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

[a] (Colo. 1895) It is reversible error for the court, without any sufficient reason therefor, but merely because a case was to be adjourned, to discharge a jury duly impaneled and sworn, and to call another when the case is again called for trial.—Swink v. Bohn, 6 Colo. App. 517, 41 Pac. 838.

[b] (Conn. 1875) A jury was impaneled to try a prisoner for burglary. After the reading of the information, his counsel, claiming to be taken by surprise by certain new matter in it, moved for a postponement, which the judge granted, but fixed no time and made no order for the trial, and on the same day adjourned the court for three weeks. When the court came in again, a different judge held it, who ordered the trial to proceed before the same jury that had before been impaneled; overruling a motion of the prisoner's counsel for a new jury. Held, that the jury could not reasonably have been expected to regard themselves, after the postponement, as having the case under their consideration, with the responsibility with regard to it which that fact would have involved, and that therefore a new jury should have been impaneled.—State v. Williamson, 42 Conn. 261.

[a] (La.) In criminal proceedings no foreman is appointed to the jury.—(1843) State v. Nolan, 8 Rob. 513; (1843) Same v. Seaborne, Id. 518; (1879) Same v. Daniel, 31 La. Ann. 91.

[b] (Mass. 1822) Where, in a capital case, the foreman of the jury for the trial of civil actions happened to serve as foreman in the criminal cause, no foreman having been regularly appointed for that cause, it was held that no exception could be taken to the verdict on that account.—Inhabitants of Amherst v. Inhabitants of Hadley, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 38, 43, note.

As to oath, see post, § 650.

Failure to object as waiver, see ante, § 513.

Objections in general, see ante, § 500.

To panel or array, see ante, §§ 541–550.

To polls in general, see ante, §§ 551–598.

[a] (U. S. 1886) In the absence of anything to the contrary, the presumption is that the jury were selected and drawn according to law.—Kie v. United States (C. C.) 27 Fed. 351.

[b] (D. C. 1889) Objection to the manner of impaneling a jury should be made when the panel is made up, before the jury is sworn, and, unless so made, will be deemed to have been waived by the defendant.—United States v. McBride, 7 Mackey, 371.

[c] (Iowa, 1859) Where a juror who had been excused was allowed to substitute another juror in his place on the panel, the objection to such procedure must be taken at the time the vacancy was so filled.—State v. Howard, 10 Iowa, 101.

[d] (N. Y. 1891) An objection for irregularity in drawing a jury must be made before the jury is drawn.—Goodman v. Goetz (Com. Pl.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 267.

[a] (Ark. 1850) Where there are two or more counts in a declaration to which there are pleas and issue, it is error to impanel and swear the jury to try the issue on one count only.—Adams v. State, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 466.

[b] (Ill. 1859) A jury in a criminal court should not be sworn for the term, but for the trial of each particular case.—Barney v. People, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 160.

[c] (Ill. 1860) Where several cases are by agreement submitted together to one jury, they must be sworn separately for each case.—Kitter v. People, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 42.

[d] (Mass. 1830) A juror who is under impression that he has only been sworn on the voir dire, but has in fact been sworn in chief, should be resworn.—Commonwealth v. Knapp, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491.

[e] (N. Y. 1887) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 277, where a defendant is indicted under many aliases, it is not error for the court, against the defendant's objection, to permit the clerk, after defendant's true name had been given, to repeat, in giving the oath to jurors, the designation of defendant by many aliases, as it occurred in the indictment.—People v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 591, 11 N. E. 62, affirming (1886) 5 N. Y. Cr. R. 91.

[f] (Pa. 1890) There is no statutory provision regulating the manner in which juries shall be sworn; and, if one juryman be sworn separately from the rest, it is no ground of exception.—Commonwealth v. Fritch (O. & T.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 164.

[g] (W. Va. 1868) Although the records of the court show that a jury had been properly sworn and all the other prerequisites complied with, if it appears that one juror who signed the verdict was another than any of the jurors named as having been sworn, in the absence of any averment that this odd man had been sworn, the judgment and verdict should be set aside.—Younger v. State, 2 W. Va. 579, 98 Am. Dec. 791.

[a] (Utah, 1887) On March 2, 1887, a jury having the requisite legal qualifications was selected, accepted, and sworn, according to the existing law, to try a criminal case in a Utah court. On March 3d, congress passed a law requiring all jurors to take an additional oath. Held, that the act of congress did not affect the case, as it only applied to such jurors as might be sworn in a case after the law took effect, and that the court properly refused to require the jurors to take the additional oath.—People v. Chalmers, 5 Utah, 201, 14 Pac. 131.

[b] (Wis. 1857) Where a statute is unconstitutional because not requiring the jury assessing the damages of property sought to be taken for public use to be sworn, the fact that the jury was actually sworn does not cure the defect.—Lumsden v. City of Milwaukee, 8 Wis. 485.

[a] (U. S. 1826) A jury may not be sworn to try the issue till issue be made by replying to good pleas in bar in actions of trespass on the case, such as non assumpsit and payment.—Miles v. Rose, Fed. Cas. No. 7,544a [1 Hemp. 37].

[b] (Cal. 1860) Under the statute, jurors in criminal cases may be sworn in chief as they are accepted, without waiting for the completion of the panel, or may all be sworn together.—People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128.

[c] (Fla. 1860) It is not necessary for a juror, in a capital case, to be sworn in chief immediately after his acceptance by the prisoner, or that the jurors should be sworn one at a time.—O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215.

[d] (Idaho, 1885) A juror, if accepted, must be sworn to try the case as he appears, and before another is called.—People v. Kuok Wah Choi, 2 Idaho, 85, 6 Pac. 112.

[e] (Iowa, 1853) The pleadings should all be in and the issue made up before the jury is sworn.—Cole v. Swan, 4 G. Greene, 82.

[f] (Mich. 1882) Where a jury was impaneled for the trial of joint offenders, but a separate trial was ordered, it was immaterial that they were sworn before the order was entered, if sworn for the trial of one only.—People v. Cummins, 47 Mich. 334, 11 N. W. 184.

[g] (Minn. 1867) Swearing each juror separately, in the trial of a criminal case, and before a full jury is present, is correct practice.—State v. Brown, 12 Minn. 538 (Gil. 448).

[h] (N. Y. 1831) A general oath may be administered to jurors at the opening of a court for the trial of issues; it is not necessary that they should be sworn in each cause in which they are called.—People v. Albany Court of Common Pleas, 6 Wend. 548.

[a] (Colo. 1890) Jurors sworn to well and truly try the matters at issue may make any special findings of fact raised under the pleadings, and need not be resworn during the trial, if the pleadings are not changed.—Londoner v. People, 15 Colo. 557, 26 Pac. 135.

[b] (Fla. 1876) If, after the jury is sworn and before testimony is taken, one of the jurors is discharged because of newly-discovered disqualification, and his place filled with a competent person, the entire jury must be sworn anew.—Keech v. State, 15 Fla. 591.

[c] (Ind. 1863) Where the issues are altered after the jury are sworn, they must be resworn before hearing the cause.—Hoot v. Spade, 20 Ind. 326.

[d] (Ind. 1872) It was not error for the court, when it was ascertained that the jury had not been properly sworn, to reswear them and recommence the trial.—Leas v. Patterson, 38 Ind. 465.

[e] (Ind. 1874) Where, by leave of court, an amendment to a pleading is filed after the trial has commenced, the jury need not be resworn, unless such amendment changes the issue.—Hackney v. Williams, 46 Ind. 413.

[f] (Ind. 1884) It is not necessary to reswear the jury upon allowing an amendment to a pleading, after the trial has begun, which does not change the issues.—Rogers v. State, 99 Ind. 218.

[g] (Ind. 1891) Where plaintiff has amended his complaint to conform to the proof, it is not error to fail to reswear the jury, as no new cause of action is submitted to them.—Sandford Tool & Fork Co. v. Mullen, 1 Ind. App. 204, 27 N. E. 448.

[h] (Iowa, 1874) The Indiana rule of practice as to the reswearing of the jury in case of certain amendments is not followed in Iowa; upon the filing of a substituted petition, after striking out the name of a party plaintiff, the jury need not be resworn, even though the issue is enlarged.—Hinkle v. Davenport, 38 Iowa, 355.

[i] (La. 1871) Where the indictment is amended at the trial, it is within the discretion of the court to permit the trial to proceed before the same jury, without their being resworn.—State v. Holmes, 23 La. Ann. 604.

[j] (Md. 1875) Where the jury has been sworn and the trial proceeded with, it is not necessary, on the amendment of the original writ and declaration, by changing the form of action from assumpsit to covenant, to reswear the jury.—Clagett v. Easterday, 42 Md. 617.

[k] (Mo. 1882) An amendment not affecting the merits of the case, which consists merely of the joinder of an additional party, does not make it necessary to reswear the jury.—Merrill v. City of St. Louis, 12 Mo. App. 466, affirmed (1884) 83 Mo. 244, 53 Am. Rep. 576.

[m] (Pa. 1891) When additional plaintiffs are added at the trial of an action, it is the most regular practice to reswear the jury; but the omission to do so is not error, at least when there is no request to do it.—Vann v. Downing (Com. Pl.) 48 Leg. Int. 264.

[n] (W. Va. 1888) Where the court discharged a juror in the middle of a trial on account of the death of his son, the court properly swore in another juror to fill his place, and commenced the trial de novo, without swearing the other jurors anew.—State v. Davis, 31 W. Va. 390, 7 S. E. 24.

Sufficiency of record, see post, § 648.

In bastardy proceedings, see "Bastards," vol. 6, c. 1964, § 184.

[a] (U. S. 1803) A juror summoned in a case in the District of Columbia may be sworn by holding up of the hand and without kissing the book.—In re McIntire, Fed. Cas. No. 8,824 [1 Cranch, C. C. 157].

[b] (Nev. 1866) Different juries should not be sworn to try issues raised by an equitable defense and those raised by a legal defense all in the same case.—Low v. Crown Point Min. Co., 2 Nev. 75.

Sufficiency of record, see post, § 648 [t, u].

[a] (U. S. 1803) Where a juror summoned in a case in the District of Columbia refuses to be sworn, but offers to affirm, he will not be permitted to affirm where it appears that he is not a Quaker and is not attached to any particular religious sect.—In re McIntire, Fed. Cas. No. 8,824 [1 Cranch, C. C. 157].

[b] (U. S. 1804) A juror will not be allowed to make affirmation in lieu of oath, on the ground that he is a Methodist, where it is not contrary to the principles of that religious society to take an oath.—In re Bryan, Fed. Cas. No. 2,063 [1 Cranch, C. C. 151].

[c] (N. J. 1830) Where the award of the venire was in the usual form for a jury to come, etc., "to recognize upon their oaths whether," etc., and it appears that one of the jurors was affirmed, the record is sufficient.—State v. Price, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 203.

[a] Where there are two issues, it is not error to swear the jury to try "the issue."

—(Ky. 1829) Bate v. Lewis' Ex'rs, 24 Ky. (1 J. J. Marsh.) 313; (1830) Fowler v. Garret, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 681;

(Va, 1836) White v. Clay's Ex'rs, 7 Leigh, 68.

[b] Where a common order is taken in a cause, and no plea filed or issue joined, it is error to swear the jury "to try the issue."

—(Ky. 1819) Hopkins v. Preston, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 64;

(W. Va. 1876) High v. Peerce, 9 W. Va. 291.

[c] (Ala. 1848) Where, on the trial of a suggestion against a sheriff and his sureties for the failure of the sheriff to return an execution, a jury is impaneled and sworn to assess the damages as well for a failure to "execute," as for a failure to return, the execution, and judgment is rendered on the verdict, such judgment is erroneous and cannot be sustained.—Garey v. Edwards, 15 Ala. 105.

[d] (Ark. 1857) It is not necessary, in an action of trover, to swear the jury "to try the issue and the damages to assess;" it is sufficient if they are sworn "to try the issue joined."—Vaden v. Ellis, 18 Ark. 355.

[e] (Ark. 1860) In suits on penal bonds, where breaches have been assigned, swearing the jury to inquire into the truth of the breaches is equivalent to swearing them to try the issues, and not liable to objection.—McCoy v. State, 22 Ark. 308.

[f] (Fla. 1858) The jury were "sworn well and truly to try and the truth to speak upon the issues joined." Held, that they were properly sworn.—Burk v. Clark, 8 Fla. 9.

[g] (Ga. 1850) The oath required to be administered to the jury in a justice's court on the trial of the right of property is substantially the same as that required to be administered to special jurors in the superior court; and therefore it is no error to administer to a jury, in the justice's court, such oath.—Carter v. Stanfield, 8 Ga. 49.

[h] (Ga. 1852) The oath which is administered to a special jury on appeals in cases at common law is that which was originally prescribed for the jury in equity causes.—Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459.

[i] (Ga. 1852) The word "equity" in the oath administered to the special jury on appeals in common law cases is synonymous with "law," meaning a system of jurisprudence governed by established rules, and bound down by fixed precedents. The special jury is sworn to try the cause according to equity and the opinion they entertain of the evidence, and not their opinion of equity as well as the evidence.—Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459.

[j] (Ind. 1884) A jury to whom are submitted questions of fact involved in a suit in equity should not be sworn to try the matters in issue between the parties, but to try the questions submitted to them.—Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345.

[k] (Iowa, 1844) It is sufficient if the form of the oath prescribed to be administered to a petit jury is substantially complied with.—Humphreys v. Humphreys, 1 Morris, 359.

[l] (Miss. 1854) Where a jury was sworn "well and truly to try the issue joined between the parties," it was held to be according to the universal practice in civil cases, and sufficient.—Pierce v. Tate, 27 Miss. (5 Cushm.) 283.

[m] (N. J. 1799) Where a justice administered to the jury the form of oath usually administered in courts of justice, it was held sufficient, though he had not pursued the precise form prescribed by the statute for juries in justices' courts.—Earle v. Vanburen, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 344.

[n] (Tex. 1849) Where a summary proceeding, under Act Feb. 5, 1840, brought by a landlord to obtain possession, is carried by an appeal to the district court, the jury should be sworn in the ordinary manner prescribed for the trial of issues of fact in civil cases.—Hendrick v. Cannon, 5 Tex. 248.

[p] (Vt. 1802) Upon trial at the supreme court on appeal from a freehold court, the "petit jurors' oath" in civil causes described by the act establishing the forms of oaths must be administered.—Allen v. Ormsby, 1 Tyler, 345.

[q] (W. Va. 1875) In an action of ejectment, when an issue has been regularly made, an oath administered to the jury to speak the truth of and upon the premises is not objectionable.—Mercer Academy v. Rusk, 8 W. Va. 373.

[a] (Ala. 1843) It is sufficient, in a criminal case, that the jurors are sworn well and truly to try the issue, etc., because to do so they must have regard to the law and the evidence.—State v. Pile, 5 Ala. 72.

[b] (Ala. 1843) Jurors are properly sworn to "render a verdict according to the evidence."—State v. Jones, 5 Ala. 666.

[c] (Ala. 1860) Under the provisions of the statutes for the oath to be administered to a petit jury, it is sufficient if they are sworn in a criminal case "well and truly to try the issue joined."—McGuire v. State, 37 Ala. 161.

[d] (Ala. 1873) The statute (Rev. Code, § 4092) is substantially complied with where the jury in a criminal case are sworn "well and truly to try the issue joined," omitting the words "and true verdict render according to the evidence."—Edwards v. State, 49 Ala. 334.

[e] (Ala. 1873) The statute (Rev. Code, § 4092) is substantially complied with where the jury in a criminal case are sworn "well and truly to try the issue joined between the state of Alabama and the prisoner at the bar, and a true verdict to render according to the law and the evidence."—Walker v. State, 49 Ala. 369.

[f] (Ala. 1874) Where the jury are sworn, in a criminal case, "well and truly to try the issue joined, and true verdict to render according to the evidence" (Rev. Code, § 4092), this is a substantial compliance with the statute.—Hendrix v. State, 50 Ala. 148.

[g] (Ala. 1874) An oath given the jury in a criminal case "to well and truly try and true deliverance make between the people of the state of Alabama and the prisoner at the bar" is insufficient under Rev. Code, § 4092, since the issue is between the state, not the people, and the prisoner.—Lewis v. State, 51 Ala. 1.

[h] (Ala. 1877) Under the requirement of the constitution that all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name of "the state of Alabama," an oath to a petit jury, to well and truly try, etc., "between the people of the state of Alabama and the prisoner at the bar," was a ground for reversal.—Commander v. State, 60 Ala. 1; Perkins v. Same, Id. 7.

[i] (Ala. 1881) An oath to a petit jury, "well and truly the issue joined to try and a true verdict to render," omitting "according to the evidence," will not sustain a conviction; the latter words being required by statute.—Allen v. State, 71 Ala. 5.

[j] (Ala. 1882) On a criminal prosecution, an oath to the jury, which omits the words "and a true verdict render according to the evidence, so help you God," required by Code 1876, § 4299, is insufficient to support a verdict.—Storey v. State, 71 Ala. 329.

[k] (Ala. 1884) Code 1876, § 4765, requires a jury to be sworn "well and truly to try the issues joined, and a true verdict render according to the evidence, so help you God." Held, that where the jury are sworn "well and truly to try the issues joined" only, it is insufficient.—Cary v. State, 76 Ala. 78.

[l] (Ark. 1846) The jury in a capital case should, under the laws of this state, be sworn to decide according to the law and the evidence of the case, since they are judges of both; and it is wholly insufficient to swear them merely to "say the truth in the premises."—Patterson v. State, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 59, 44 Am. Dec. 530.

[m] (Ark. 1850) In a criminal case it is not sufficient to swear the jury "well and truly to try the issue joined, and a true verdict to render according to the evidence." The jurors in such cases are judges as well of the law as the facts, and consequently should be sworn to try the cause according to both.—Sandford v. State, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 328.

[n] (Ark. 1851) In criminal cases the jury should be sworn to try the issue according to law and evidence.—Burrow v. State, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 65.

[o] (Fla. 1860) The court may rightly refuse to have the jury in a capital case sworn to find a verdict according to the law and the evidence.—O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215.

[p] (Iowa, 1848) Under the statutes it is erroneous in a criminal case to swear the jury "the truth to speak on the issue joined," etc.—Warren v. State, 1 G. Greene, 106.

[q] (Iowa, 1849) Where jurors in a capital case were sworn "to speak the truth upon the issue joined between the parties," a trial de novo was awarded. The oath prescribed by statute must be followed.—Harriman v. State, 2 G. Greene, 270.

[r] (Iowa, 1854) A jury sworn "the truth to speak," etc., but not "to try the issue joined," is not legally sworn.—Dixon v. State, 4 G. Greene, 381.

[s] (La. 1885) The form of oath for a juror in a criminal case prescribed by the common law is the proper form in Louisiana.—State v.

[u] (Nev. 1884) While jurors should, in substance, be sworn according to the form prescribed by statute, a slight and immaterial departure from the prescribed form will not vitiate the proceedings.—State v. Angelo, 18 Nev. 425, 4 Pac. 1080.

[v] (N. H. 1851) Rev. St. c. 176, § 22, prescribes the form of oath to be administered to petit jurors in criminal trials, and imperatively requires its administration, and any other form of oath is insufficient. Accordingly where, in such a case, an oath in the form prescribed in civil trials was administered, upon exception taken by the respondent, the verdict returned was set aside, and a new trial granted.—State v. Rollins, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 528.

[w] (N. C. 1875) Upon administering the oath to jurors as to their competency in the regular way, the immediate addition of their oath as jurors, omitting the words "you swear," will not vitiate the verdict.—State v. Owen, 72 N. C. 605.

[x] (N. C. 1883) After an oath administered to a juror in the statutory form, he need not repeat the words "so help me God."—State v. Paylor, 89 N. C. 539.

[xx] (Tenn. 1892) It was sufficient that the jury were sworn "well and truly to try the issues joined," the omission of the words "and true deliverance make" being immaterial.—Lancaster v. State, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 267, 18 S. W. 777, distinguishing State v. Hargrove (1884) 81 Tenn. (13 Lea) 179.

[y] (Tex.) A conviction will be reversed where the record shows that another and different oath was administered to the jury than the one prescribed by law.—(1874) Bawcom v. [yy] (Tex. 1894) The failure to swear, in a body, the jury in a criminal case, as provided by Code Cr. Proc. art. 657, is fatal to a conviction.—Stephens v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 101, 25 S. W. 286.

[z] (Wash. 1874) There is no error in a superfluous addition to the oath to jurors prescribed by statute only requiring them to comply with an obligation imposed on them by law.—Hartigan v. Territory, 1 Wash. T. 447.

[zz] (Wash. 1885) The oath of a jury, if substantially in the words of the statute, is not bad because there is added, after the words "according to the evidence," the words "as given you on the trial."—Leonard v. Territory, 2 Wash. T. 381, 7 Pac. 872.

§ 648. Record.

—(Ark. 1888) Carnett v. State, 6 S. W. 513;

(Tex. 1887) Biles v. State (App.) 4 S. W. 902.

[b] Statements in the record that there came a jury, "who, being * * * sworn well and truly to try the issue joined herein," the trial proceeded, and that "a jury was impaneled and sworn to well and truly try the issues joined herein," are not attempts to give the form of oath administered, and do not show that the jury were not sworn "to well and truly try the matters submitted to them in the case in hearing, and a true verdict give according to the law and the evidence," as required by Comp. Laws Kan. c. 82, art. 11, § 208, and chapter 80, art. 15, § 274.

[c] (Ala. 1883) A compliance with Code, § 4765, providing that the clerk shall administer to the petit jury the oath: "You do solemnly swear that you will well and truly try all issues which may be submitted to you, and render true verdicts according to the evidence. So help you God,"—is not shown by a recital in the judgment entry that the jury were "sworn according to law" or that they were "duly sworn."—Peterson v. State, 74 Ala. 34.

[d] (Ala. 1883) A compliance with Code, § 4765, providing that the clerk shall administer to the petit jury the oath, "You do solemnly swear that you will well and truly try all issues that are submitted to you, and render true verdicts according to the evidence," is not shown by a recital in the judgment entry that the jury were sworn to well and truly try the issue joined between the state of Alabama and the defendant.—Johnson v. State, 74 Ala. 537.

[e] (Ark. 1889) Where the record shows that "the following named jurors * * * are called, found qualified, accepted, and sworn," it cannot be objected that it does not appear that the jury were properly sworn.—Pruitt v. State, 11 S. W. 822.

[f] (Fla. 1889) The record of a judgment in a criminal case contained the entry: "Thereupon came a jury, to wit [naming them], 12 good and lawful men, who were duly elected and sworn to well and truly try, and true deliverance make, between the state of Florida and the prisoner at the bar." Held, that it was sufficient to show that the jury were properly sworn, in accordance with the statute, to "well and truly try, and true deliverance make," between the state of Florida and the defendant, according to the evidence.—Smith v. State, 25 Fla. 517, 6 South. 482.

[g] (Fla. 1891) A record entry in a criminal case which, after showing that the prisoner was arraigned and pleaded not guilty, states: "Whereupon came the following jurors [naming them], who were duly selected, chosen, impaneled, and sworn to try the issue joined."—cannot properly be construed as purporting to recite the oath as it was in fact administered to the jury, but should be construed as merely intended to show that the jurors were in fact sworn properly, in the form prescribed by the statute.—Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 9 South. 835, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232.

[h] (Fla. 1891) Where the record shows that the jury was sworn to try the issues joined between the parties it is sufficient.—Jacksonville, T. & K. W. Ry. Co. v. Neff, 28 Fla. 373, 9 South. 653.

[i] (Ind. 1833) If the record show that the jury were sworn, the omission of the words "the truth to speak in the premises" is not material.—Judah v. McNamee, 3 Blackf. 269; Mann v. Clifton, Id. 304.

[j] (Iowa, 1845) Where the record shows that an improper oath was administered to the jury, the error will not be disregarded, though probably a mere clerical error.—Roberts v. Smith, 1 Morris, 417.

[k] (Iowa, 1855) It is sufficient if the record shows that the jury were sworn the truth to speak upon the issue joined.—Wrocklege v. State, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 167.

[l] (Iowa, 1865) No form of oath to the jury in the trial of indictments being prescribed by statute, it was held, where the record recited that "the jury were duly impaneled, and sworn well and truly to try the cause and a true verdict give therein, according to the evidence and the best of their ability," that this oath was sufficient, and that in the absence of a record to the contrary the oath must be presumed to have been administered in due form.—State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa, 435.

[m] (Kan. 1886) It is not the duty of the clerk to place on the record the formulary of words in which the oath administered to a jury is couched; and, where he enters the fact that the jury was duly sworn, the presumption is that the oath was correctly administered.—State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. 318.

[n] (Miss. 1854) Where the recital of the oath of the jury in the record is that a jury of good and lawful men came, "who being impaneled, tried, and sworn truly to try the issue joined between the parties," etc., it was held to be sufficient.—Windham v. Williams, 27 Miss. (5 (Cushm.) 313.

[o] (Miss. 1856) Where it appeared that the jury were "sworn a true verdict to give according to the evidence," it was held sufficient, as it must be presumed that a due and formal oath was administered, for if an insufficient oath was actually administered, it was the duty of the parties to take exception to it at the time.—Welborn v. Spears, 32 Miss. 138.

[p] (Miss. 1857) It is sufficient if the justice's record states that the jury were sworn "according to law;" but if the oath be set out, and does not conform to the statute, it is bad.—Graham v. Busby, 34 Miss. 272.

[q] (Miss. 1857) A recital that the jury were sworn "well and truly to try the matter in controversy between the parties" is bad in an action for forcible entry.—Graham v. Busby, 34 Miss. 272.

[r] (Miss. 1873) Where the record in a capital case shows that the jury were "sworn," it will be presumed that they were sworn properly and according to law.—Edwards v. State, 47 Miss. 581.

[s] (Miss. 1876) If the swearing of the jury constituted a part of the proceedings in each case, it would be necessary for the record to show it; but under the statute, it is no part of the history of the proceedings in the case. The jury are not, as matter of fact, sworn specially to try each particular issue, and it cannot be necessary for the record of the trial to show that which did not take place. The forms of entries usually employed were adopted when it was the practice to swear the jury in each case. The present law provides for the impaneling of petit juries, and requires them to be sworn for the term, and tales jurors for the day.—Waddell v. Magee, 53 Miss. 687.

[t] (N. J. 1812) It need not appear of record that jurors who are affirmed are conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath.—Anonymous, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 930.

[u] (N. J. 1836) In a civil action for a penalty, if the record state that jurors were affirmed, it will be presumed that they were conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath.—Clark v. Collins, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 473.

[v] (Tex. 1852) The statute prescribes that the jury shall be sworn, once for all, for the trial of such civil cases as shall be submitted to them during the term; in a civil case, therefore, the presumption is that the jury were sworn, and it is not necessary that the fact should appear on the record.—Clark v. Davis, 7 Tex. 556.

[w] (Tex. 1852) In civil cases the record need not show that the jury were sworn; it is otherwise, however, in criminal cases.—Drake v. Brander, 8 Tex. 351.

[x] (Tex. 1853) An entry in a criminal case, that the jury were "sworn the cause to try according to law," cannot be regarded as an attempt to spread the form of the oath actually administered upon the record; and, as it states that the jury were "sworn," the court will presume that the proper oath was administered.—Russell v. State, 10 Tex. 288.

[y] (Tex. 1877) A judgment entry reciting that the jurors (naming them) were "duly tried, impaneled, and sworn" was a sufficient recital of the due impaneling of the jury as against any objections made after verdict.—Lester v. State, 2 Tex. App. 432.

[z] (Va. 1890) A recital of the record that the jury "were sworn the truth of and upon the premises to speak," shows that the jury were duly sworn.—Brown v. Commonwealth, 86 Va. 466, 10 S. E. 745.

[zz] (W. Va. 1890) Where it appears by the record in a felony case that the jury were elected, impaneled, tried, and sworn as required by law, it will be presumed that the proper oath was administered to them.—State v. Ice, 34 W. Va. 244, 12 S. E. 695.

§ 649. Attaint.

[a] (N. J. 1806) Where a matter omitted to be inquired of by the principal jury goes to the very point in issue and constitutes the gist of the action, an attaint will lie, and it cannot be supplied by a writ of inquiry; but it is otherwise where the matter omitted does not go to the point in issue and constitute the gist of the action,—as a neglect to assess damages.—Stalcope v. Capner, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 132.

Failure to object as waiver, see ante, § 514.

[a] (Ga. 1879) A defendant in a criminal proceeding cannot, after the discharge of the jury, raise the objection that the oath administered to them deviated from that prescribed by statute.—Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168.

[b] (N. Y. 1890) Where some of the jurors in a criminal case are drawn and sworn in the absence of one of the sessions justices, and objection thereto is first made at the close of the trial by motion to dismiss, the irregularity will be deemed to have been waived.—People v. De Camp, 57 Hun, 591, 10 N. Y. Supp. 811.

[a] (Colo. 1871) Though the charter of the city of Central, authorizing the election of a justice of the peace, to be denominated a "police judge," with certain powers, is void in so far as it gives the justice another name, yet such act is valid so far as it creates the office and describes its jurisdiction.—Deits v. City of Central, 1 Colo. 323.

[b] (Colo. 1880) The office of "police judge," as denominated in Gen. Laws, §§ 2714, 2720, can only be established and fully equipped for service by the legislature. Such officer is not the creature of the municipal authority of a city or town, which cannot invest the office with any powers or functions of its own creation.—People v. Curley, 5 Colo. 412.

[c] (Ill. 1855) Const. art. 5, § 1, providing for the establishment of courts, does not restrict the power of the legislature, as to the number of justices of the peace that may be created, nor require that the jurisdiction of such justices shall be uniform.—In re Welsh, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 161.

[d] (Ill. 1880) Where the charter of a town provided for the election of a police magistrate, who was to have exclusive jurisdiction of all cases arising under its ordinances, and that appeals should be allowed to the circuit court of the county, it was to this extent in conflict with the general laws of the state, which conferred jurisdiction in such cases upon justices of the peace, with the right of appeal to the circuit or county court.—Campbell v. Town of Lewiston, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 530.

[e] (Ill. 1881) Laws 1881, p. 103, dividing Cook county into two justices' districts, while leaving the other counties to constitute each a district, violates Const. art. 6, § 21, providing that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall be uniform.—People v. Meech, 101 Ill. 200.

[f] (Ind. 1867) The first section of the justices' act (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 576) empowers the board of county commissioners to fix the number of justices of the peace for each township in the county, and confers on the commissioners a discretionary power as to the number, to be exercised by them as the public exigency may require. The latter clause of the section, however, limits that discretion by providing that not more than three shall be elected in each township, and one in addition thereto for each incorporated town therein. In other words, if the township contains no incorporated town within its limits, it cannot have more than three justices of the peace; but, if it contains an incorporated town or towns, then an additional number of justices equal to the number of incorporated towns may be allowed. All, however, are justices of the township, and elected by the voters thereof. The additional justice so provided for, on account of an incorporated town, may by the order of the board of commissioners providing for his election be required to reside within the corporate limits; but he is, nevertheless, a justice of the township, and his jurisdiction is coextensive with the township.—Town of Spencer v. Cline, 28 Ind. 51.

[h] (Minn. 1893) Sp. Laws 1891, c. 125, providing for the election of justices of the peace in the city of Minneapolis, and forbidding justices outside the city to issue process to be served inside the city, is not obnoxious to Const. art. 6, § 8, requiring the legislature to provide for the election of a sufficient number of justices in each county, whose duties shall be prescribed by law.—Smith v. Victorin, 54 Minn. 338, 56 N. W. 47.

[i] (Mo. 1889) In the amendment of Rev. St. § 2803, which fixed the number of justices of the peace in townships, by Laws 1881, p. 154, providing that "towns of 100 inhabitants or more" containing a medical spring, shall be entitled to an additional justice, the word "towns" may include a city of the fourth class, not having been used with reference to the statutory classification of cities, towns, and villages.—State v. Simmons, 35 Mo. App. 374.

[j] (Neb. 1886) Const. art. 6, § 19, which requires that "all laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation, and the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, and the force and effect of the proceedings, judgments, and decrees of such courts severally shall be uniform," is not violated by Laws 1885, p. 249, limiting the number of justices of the peace in cities of the first class to three, to be elected in districts to be created by the board of county commissioners of the counties in which such cities are situated, as such law comes within the rule declaring not objectionable, as wanting uniformity of operation, any law which is general and uniform throughout the state, operating alike upon all persons and localities of a class, or who are brought within the relations and circumstances provided for.—State v. Berka, 20 Neb. 375, 30 N. W. 267.

[l] (Neb. 1895) Laws 1895, c. 28, relating to township organization, and providing that there shall be but one justice of the peace for each township adopting organization, is not repugnant to Const. art. 6, § 19, providing that all laws relating to courts shall be of uniform operation.—Van Horn v. State, 46 Neb. 62, 64 N. W. 365.

[m] (Nev. 1868) Act March 5, 1867, providing for the appointment of additional justices of the peace by county commissioners in certain cases, is in conflict with Const. art. 6, § 8, providing that the legislature shall determine the number of justices of the peace to be elected.—State v. Snodgrass, 4 Nev. 524.

[o] (N. Y. 1883) Laws 1870, c. 25, incorporating the city of Rome, declares that four justices of the peace shall be elected by the city at large, and defines their term of office, and provides that they shall have and exercise all the powers, authority, and jurisdiction, and discharge all the duties, and be entitled to the fees and compensation, of justices of the peace of the several towns in the state, except as modified by the act. It also confers on the recorder of the city exclusive jurisdiction in the city to issue all criminal process required to be issued by justices of the peace of the several towns of the state, to hear all complaints, and to conduct all examinations in criminal cases, hold courts of special sessions, and perform all the duties of such courts, and conduct and try all matters of a criminal nature that may by law be done or tried by a justice of the peace or two justices of the peace, and declares that in case of sickness, absence from the city, or disability or inability to act of the recorder, his powers and duties shall devolve upon either of the said justices of the peace. Held, that the justices of the peace so created are justices of the peace within Const. art. 6, § 15, and hence are eligible to the office of justice of sessions, and as such to sit in courts of oyer and terminer.—Ostrander v. People, 29 Hun, 513.

[p] (N. Y. 1887) The act incorporating the village of Canton (Laws 1845, c. 192, as amended by Laws 1859, c. 70, as further amended by Laws 1870, c. 263), and providing for the election of a justice for that village, is intended to prescribe a limited jurisdiction for said justice coextensive with the boundaries of the village, and is therefore constitutional.—People v. Terry, 108 N. Y. 1, 14 N. E. 815.

[q] (Pa. 1874) Under Act March 20, 1818, incorporating the city of Lancaster, the recorder of the city of Lancaster has no powers except those therein expressly conferred, and he is not judge in the full and true sense of the term, but an adviser, mouthpiece, and organ of the mayor's court.—Locher v. King, 5 Lanc. Bar, No. 49, p. 2.

[s] (Tenn. 1891) Acts 1875, c. 8, providing that every city having a certain population "shall be entitled to and have two justices of the peace for each ward into which such city may be subdivided," does not come within the saving of Const. 1870, art. 6, § 15, providing that "the legislature shall have power to provide for the appointment of an additional number of justices of the peace in incorporated towns," since such an act would involve the power by the municipality to increase the number of justices indefinitely by merely increasing the number of wards.—State v. Adams, 90 Tenn. 722, 18 S. W. 393.

[t] (Va. 1894) Const. art. 7, provides that each county shall be divided into as many magisterial districts as may be deemed necessary, not less than three, and that in each district there shall be elected three justices of the peace and other officers. Section 4 provides that nothing herein shall be considered as prohibiting the general assembly from providing for any additional officers in the city or county. Held, that the legislature had power to provide for additional justices of the peace.—Ex parte Bassitt, 90 Va. 679, 19 S. E. 453.

§ 3. Abolition.

Abolition of office as shortening term of office, see post, § 12.

Removal from office by change of territory, see post, § 4.

[a] (Cal. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. § 108, which provides, among other things, that there shall be one justice of the peace in every city having 10,000, and not more than 20,000, inhabitants, does not by implication repeal a provision for two justices in the town of Berkeley, made by its charter, which was granted by special act before the adoption of the present constitution, although said town has a population of less than 10,000.—Ex parte Armstrong, 84 Cal. 655, 24 Pac. 398.

[b] (Colo. 1896) After the determination by a board of county commissioners of such facts as entitle a precinct, under the law, to an additional justice, and they have filled the position by an appointment, they have no power to abolish the office.—Pueblo County Com'rs v. Smith, 22 Colo. 534, 45 Pac. 357.

[c] (Ill. 1872) Const. 1870, art. 6, § 28, prohibiting the election of justices of the peace in Chicago, and providing for their appointment, abolished by implication the office of police magistrate therein.—People v. Palmer, 64 Ill. 41.

[d] (Me. 1880) Sp. Laws 1879, c. 180, entitled "An act to establish the police court of the city of Belfast and to abolish the Belfast municipal court," terminates the commission of one appointed judge of the police court created by Sp. Laws 1850, c. 303, §§ 11–14.—Fahay v. Boardman, 70 Me. 448.

[e] (N. Y. 1857) The office of justice of the peace is as much beyond legislative abolition as that of a justice of the supreme court.—People v. Keeler, 25 Barb. 421.

[h] (Pa. 1892) When, by an order of court in proceedings under Act May 14, 1874, wards in a borough are subdivided into other wards, such borough is "divided into wards," within the meaning of Act May 10, 1878, which provides that in such case two justices of the peace shall be elected in the borough by the concurrent votes of the several wards, and which, in effect, repeals Act June 21, 1839, providing for the election of two justices in every ward.—Commonwealth v. Pattison (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 202, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 128.

[i] (Pa. 1894) Act 1839 (P. L. 376) § 1, providing that each ward in a borough should elect two justices of the peace, was repealed by Act 1878 (P. L. 51) § 1, which provides that, whenever any borough is divided into wards, in every such borough there shall be elected two justices of the peace, who shall be chosen by the concurrent votes of each ward.—Commonwealth v. Pattison (Com. Pl.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 238; Id., 3 Pa. Dist. R. 599; Id., 7 Kulp, 477.

[j] (Pa. 1894) Act 1878 (P. L. 51) § 1, which provides that, whenever any borough is divided into wards, in every such borough there shall be elected two justices of the peace, who shall be chosen by the concurrent votes of each ward, applies to boroughs divided into wards before such act was passed, as well as to boroughs afterwards divided.—Commonwealth v. Pattison (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 477, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 238, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 599.

[b] (Mich. 1853) Const. art. 6, § 22, provides that, whenever a judge has removed beyond the limits of the jurisdiction for which he was elected, or a justice of the peace from a township in which he was elected, or by change of the boundaries of said township shall be placed outside the same, they shall be deemed to have vacated their respective offices. Held, that section 6 of the act incorporating the city of Adrian, continuing in office justices residing on territory thereby taken from townships, is unconstitutional.—People v. Geddes, 3 Mich. 70.

[c] (N. J. 1864) The constitution provides that "the commission of any justice of the peace shall become vacant upon his ceasing to reside in the township in which he is elected." Held, that a justice duly commissioned was not disqualified by an act creating a new township, whose territory included that part of his township in which he resided.—State v. Dilloway, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 42.

[d] (N. Y. 1827) Where a new county is made out of several towns, the justices of such towns will continue to hold their offices as such justices in the new county.—Garey v. People, 9 Cow. 640.

[e] (Ohio, 1896) Rev. St. § 568, providing that "if a part of any township is attached to any other township the justices of the peace residing in the limits of that part of the township so attached, as aforesaid, shall execute the duties of their office in the township to which the same is attached, in the same manner as if they had been elected for such township," is constitutional; and a justice of another township residing in territory which after his election is added to the township of Cincinnati becomes a justice of Cincinnati township, notwithstanding the provision of section 621a, that "hereafter there shall not be more than five justices of the peace" in Cincinnati township, such provision having reference to the election of justices.—Pfeiffer v. Green (Com. Pl.) 8 Ohio N. P. 156.

[f] (Pa. 1807) A justice of the peace, commissioned in a certain district and county, cannot act under his appointment in a division of the county, if he reside in the new county, although the district remains in it entirely.—Respublica v. McClean, 4 Yeates, 399.

[g] (Pa. 1818) The division of a town does not vacate the commission of a justice of the peace for the district in which the town lies.—Commonwealth v. Sheriff and Keeper of Northumberland County Jail, 4 Serg. & R. 275.

§ 5. Appointment.

Validity of appointment of justice of the peace by concurrent act of governor and senate at special session, see "Officers," I. (B).

[a] (Ala. 1855) Under Judiciary Act 1789, § 33 (1 Stat. 91), which empowers justices of the peace to arrest and commit (or bail, as the case may require) persons charged with a violation of the criminal law of the United States, the exercise of the authority as conferred does not make the justices federal officers appointed by congress, and not by the president, in violation of Const. art. 2, § 2, cl. 2.—Ex parte Gist, 26 Ala. 156.

[b] (Ala. 1894) The office of police judge of the city of Birmingham, created by Act 1894, is "a civil office of profit under the state," within Const. art. 4, § 17, prohibiting one from holding any "office of profit under this state," unless elected thereto by the people, created by the legislature when he was member thereof.—Montgomery v. State, 107 Ala. 372, 18 South. 157.

[c] (Cal. 1884) Where the mayor of the city was by the charter constituted ex officio judge of the city court, with power, in case of absence or inability to act, to deputize any justice of the peace to act for him, a general deputation of all the justices to act, on the ground that he could not perform such duties without neglecting other duties, carried with it no authority to act.—Los Angeles County v. City of Los Angeles, 65 Cal. 476, 4 Pac. 453; Same v. Morgan, 4 Pac. 456.

[d] (Conn. 1870) Const. art. 5, §§ 1, 3, provide that the judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, a superior court, and such inferior courts as the general assembly shall from time to time establish, and that the judges of all these courts shall be appointed by the general assembly in such manner as shall be by law prescribed. The general assembly passed an act establishing a police court in the city of Hartford, and providing for the appointment of a judge of the court by the common council of the city. Held that, under the constitution, the judge could be appointed only by the general assembly, and an appointment by the common council was void.—Brown v. O'Connell, 36 Conn. 432, 4 Am. Rep. 89.

[e] (Ill. 1895) Though the governor has power, under Const. art. 6, § 28, to appoint justices of the peace in Chicago, by and with the advice of the senate, and on the recommendation of the circuit, superior, and county court judges, he cannot designate whom such appointees shall succeed; such duty devolving on the county clerk, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1893, c. 79, § 111.—People v. O'Toole, 60 Ill. App. 534; Same v. Moore, Id. 547.

[f] (Ky. 1824) The appointment by the governor of C. as a justice of the peace, who had been recommended by the county court with L., after the latter had been appointed and declined, is unconstitutional; and, where such facts appear on the return of a mandamus nisi for admission to the office, a peremptory mandamus cannot be awarded.—Justices v. Clark, 17 Ky. (1 T. B. Mon.) 82.

[g] (Ky.) The governor cannot commission a person a justice of the peace without a nomination, according to the constitution.—(1824) Justices of Jefferson County v. Clark, 17 Ky. (1 T. B. Mon.) 82; (1827) Commonwealth v. Frazier, 20 Ky. (4 T. B. Mon.) 513.

[h] (Mass. 1826) St. 1821, c. 109, § 6, providing that justices of the police court of Boston shall have original jurisdiction of civil suits formerly determinable by a justice of the peace, is not in violation of the constitutional provision that the governor has the right to appoint all judicial officers.—Wales v. Belcher, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 508.

[i] (Mich. 1879) Acts 1879, No. 76, purported to establish the police court of Grand Rapids, and repealed the act under which the police justice was acting, but continued him in office to the end of his term under the title of "police judge." Held, that Const. art. 15, § 14, requiring judicial officers of cities and villages to be elected, was not violated, as such act did not confer a new office, but only abstained from legislating the police justice out of office.—In re Coon, 42 Mich. 65, 3 N. W. 258.

[j] (Mont. 1880) The provision of the Butte city charter for the mayor and city council to appoint a police justice does not contravene Rev. St. U. S. 329, § 1856, requiring justices of the peace to be elected by the people in such manner as the respective legislatures may provide.—Ex parte Parks, 3 Mont. 426.

[k] (N. Y. 1827) The appointment of more than four justices of the peace in a town is void.—People v. Garey, 6 Cow. 642.

[l] (N. Y.) Under Const. art. 4, § 7, providing that all judicial officers shall be appointed by the governor and senate, except justices of the peace in several towns, an act authorizing the common council of a city to appoint police justices is unconstitutional.—(1840) People v. Kane, 23 Wend. 414. CONTRA, see (1841) Clark v. People, 26 Wend. 599.

[m] (N. Y. 1874) The office of "police justice of the city of New York" is not embraced under the title of "justices of the peace," as used in Const. 1869, art. 6, § 18, wherein it is provided that "the electors of the several towns shall * * * elect justices of the peace," so that the legislature may provide for the appointment of such police justices without violating the constitution.—People v. Morgan, 5 Daly, 161, affirmed (1874) 58 N. Y. 679.

[n] (Va. 1848) The governor may commission some of the persons recommended as justices at the same time by the county court, and may refuse to commission the others.—Frederick Justices v. Bruce, 4 Grat. 281.

Elections to fill vacancies, see post, § 13.

Contest of election, see "Elections," vol. 18, cc. 428–430, § 253.

Validity of act relating to election of justices of the peace as local or special law, see "Statutes," II.

[a] (Cal. 1852) The failure of a county judge to call a convention of the justices of the peace to elect associate justices of the court of sessions cannot defeat the election, if the justices had actual notice and there was no fraud or surprise.—People v. Campbell, 2 Cal. 135.

[b] (Cal. 1880) Justices of the peace are judicial officers, within the meaning of Const. art. 22, § 10, and must be elected at the general election.—McGrew v. City of San José, 55 Cal. 611.

[c] (Cal. 1881) The act of 1880, amending Code Civ. Proc. §§ 84, 106, 110, providing for the election of justices of the peace at the general election in 1880, is constitutional.—People v. Ransom, 58 Cal. 558; Bishop v. City of Oakland, Id. 572.

[d] (Cal. 1881) Justices of the peace are judicial officers, within Const. art. 22, § 10, relating to elections, and are officers whose election the constitution requires to be held in 1879, and afterwards in even-numbered years.—People v. Ransom, 58 Cal. 558; Bishop v. City of Oakland, Id. 572.

[e] (Cal. 1881) Though a police judge is a judicial officer, he is also a municipal officer, and as such he is not within the provisions of Const. art. 22, § 10, that "judicial officers * * * shall be elected at the time and in the manner that state officers are elected."—People v. Henry, 62 Cal. 557.

[f] (Iowa, 1883) Under Code 1873, §§ 635, 636, providing that the board of county supervisors shall canvass the returns of elections, and designating "county officers" among those to be listed in the abstract of the votes cast, the board, and not the township trustees, should canvass the votes cast for justices of the peace, who are by section 593 declared to be "county officers," although voted for by the voters of their respective townships.—Lynch v. Vermazen, 61 Iowa, 76, 15 N. W. 663.

[g] (Iowa, 1890) Code 1873, § 590, provides for the election of two justices of the peace in each township, and section 592 provides that one or two additional justices may be elected in each township if the trustees so direct, by posting notices, etc. Section 395 requires an accurate record of the proceedings of such trustees to be kept. Held, that this section includes such direction of elections for additional justices, and, where there is no record of such direction, no more than two justices can be elected for that township.—State v. Gaston, 79 Iowa, 457, 44 N. W. 706.

[h] (Kan. 1876) Under Const. art. 3, § 9, the regular term of office for a justice of the peace is two years, and under Gen. St. p. 1083, § 4, all the justices elected for full terms must be elected in the same year; but neither the constitution nor the statutes provide whether the election is to be held in the even or the odd year.—Odell v. Dodge, 16 Kan. 446.

[i] (Kan. 1881) In February, 1880, a city of the second class was organized from W. township. In April, 1880, a city election was held, and C., then a justice of the peace for the township under an election held in November, 1878, was elected a justice of the peace for the city. In April, 1881, at the annual city election, S. was elected to fill the office. Held that, under Comp. Laws 1879, April, 1881, was the time fixed by law for holding the election, and that C.'s election was a nullity; he being entitled, as justice for the township, to act until S.'s qualification.—Showalter v. Cox, 26 Kan. 120.

[j] (La. 1846) Section 2, St. June 1, 1846, providing for the election of justices of peace in the parish of Orleans by the qualified voters in each district into which it subdivides the parish, is not a violation of article 81 of the constitution, which declares that justices of the peace "shall be elected by the qualified voters of each parish"; the object of that article being merely to declare that the mode of election should be by the people, instead of by the executive and senate.—Second Municipality v. Schmidt, 1 La. Ann. 387.

[k] (La. 1858) Justices of the peace are not included in the word "judges" in the constitution (article 82), declaring that "it shall be the duty of the legislature to fix the time for holding elections for all judges, at a time which shall be different from that fixed for all other elections."—Andrews v. Saucier, 13 La. Ann. 301.

[n] (N. Y. 1868) The provision of the charter of the city of Rochester, creating three justices of the peace in that city, to be elected by the legal voters of the city, and providing that in exercising civil jurisdiction they shall be deemed justices of the peace of the county of Monroe, and that the general laws relating to proceedings before justices of the peace of the several towns in the state shall be applicable to proceedings before them, held not to be in conflict with the provisions of section 17, art. 6, of the state constitution, respecting the mode of electing justices of the peace, because the provisions of the constitution relate only to justices of the peace of towns.—Dawson v. Horan, 51 Barb. 459.

[o] (N. Y. 1879) The legislature cannot make an office of justice of the peace elective otherwise than as provided by Const. art. 6, § 18.—Geraty v. Reid, 78 N. Y. 64.

[p] (N. Y. 1884) Const. art. 6, § 18, designates the annual town meeting as the time when justices of the peace are to be elected. Held, that Laws 1881, c. 564, providing for their election in a certain class of towns at a general election, is void.—People v. Schiellein, 95 N. Y. 124.

[q] (N. Y. 1886) Const. art. 6, § 18, provides that the electors of the several towns shall elect justices of the peace. Therefore a provision of a village charter authorizing an election of a justice of the peace by the electors of the village is invalid, and a person elected under the charter cannot claim to be even a de facto justice.—People v. Terry, 42 Hun, 278.

[r] (N. Y. 1887) The constitution permits the election in villages of a judicial officer of inferior and local jurisdiction, and it is immaterial that such officer is called "a justice of the peace."—People v. Terry, 108 N. Y. 1, 14 N. E. 815, reversing (1886) 42 Hun, 273.

[s] (Okl. 1895) St. 1890, c. 83, art. 1, §§ 43, 44, providing that cities having more than 1,500 inhabitants shall constitute a township for the purpose of electing justices of the peace, which officers shall be elected at the regular city elections held biennially in April, was repealed by St. 1893, c. 33, § 1, providing that general elections for the purpose of electing all township officers shall be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November.—Davis v. Hull, 41 Pac. 144.

[t] (R. I. 1869) A town which has once elected a trial justice to serve in two or more voting districts cannot afterwards change the constitution of the court so created by electing separate trial justices for each district. Such election would be void, and the officer first elected would hold till his successor is appointed.—State v. Stiness, 9 R. I. 368.

[u] (Utah, 1876) Election as alderman of the city of Salt Lake does not entitle a person to be a justice of the peace upon simply qualifying as such.—In re Wineman, 1 Utah, 39.

[v] (Wis. 1876) Under Const. art. 7, § 15, providing that cities shall at their charter elections elect justices of the peace "in such manner as the legislature may direct," the legislature after having once provided in a city charter for the election of justices of the peace in the city, has no power by subsequent legislation wholly to deprive the inhabitants of the city of the right to elect a justice.—State v. Goldstucker, 40 Wis. 124.

§ 7. Eligibility.

Eligibility of women to office of justice of the peace, see "Officers," I. (C).

Holding other office as affecting eligibility to the office of justice of the peace, see "Officers," I. (C).

Validity of acts of infant justice of the peace, see "Infants," vol. 27, cc. 974–976, § 8.

[a] A justice of the peace does not "hold the office of justice or judge of any court," within the meaning of a constitutional provision declaring that such shall not hold office after arriving at the age of 70 years.

[b] (Colo. 1880) Const. art. 6, § 26, authorizes the general assembly to provide for and create police magistrates for cities, who shall have jurisdiction in all cases arising under the ordinances of such cities. Gen. Laws, § 2661, allows all justices of the peace and police magistrates certain jurisdiction, and provides that "the city council may designate one justice of the peace who shall have such jurisdiction exclusively." Section 2720 authorizes the city council in certain cities to elect a police judge. Held, that a police magistrate must primarily be a justice of the peace.—People v. Curley, 5 Colo. 412.

[c] (Ky. 1895) One not a qualified elector in the city may be eligible to the office of judge of the police court; St. 1894, § 3511, merely providing that no person can be such a judge unless 24 years of age, and a resident of the city for the 6 months preceding his election.—Boyd v. Land, 97 Ky. 379, 30 S. W. 1019.

[d] (Mo. 1888) By Rev. St. § 2810, no person is eligible to the office of justice who shall not have been an inhabitant of the township for which he is chosen six months before his election. Section 2805 divides the city of St. Louis into districts for the election of justices. By section 2806 a justice elected under section 2805 must hold his court in the district for which he is elected, and, if he removes his office out of the district, his office will be deemed vacated. Section 3065 provides that the powers and jurisdiction given by that chapter to county or township officers are also given to the like officers in any city not within a county, or any district in such city. Held that, to be eligible to the office of justice of a district in St. Louis, a person must have been a resident of such district six months before his appointment or election.—Mullery v. McCann, 95 Mo. 579, 8 S. W. 774.

[e] (N. Y. 1873) Where a justice of the peace, who had been chosen after reaching 70 years of age, sits as a justice of sessions at a criminal trial, the conviction cannot be avoided, since Const. art. 6, § 13, limiting the tenure of judicial office to 70 years of age, is not applicable to justices of the peace.—Dohring v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. 458.

[f] (Pa.) There is nothing in the constitution to confine the choice of electors of a district to an elector of that district for the office of alderman or justice of the peace, nor empowering the legislature to make a justice a township officer.—(1867) In re Camphausen, 3 Pittsb. R. 57; (1872) Commonwealth v. Kerr, Id. 348.

Disqualification of justice, see post, §§ 199–203.

Failure of justice to qualify as creating vacancy, see post, § 13.

Qualification anew of justice holding over, see post, § 14.

[a] (U. S. 1807) A magistrate, who is found acting as such, must be presumed to have taken the requisite oaths.—Ex parte Bollman, 8 U. S. (4 Cranch) 75, 2 L. Ed. 554.

[b] (Ill. 1877) The notice which the surety on the justice's official bond gives to the county clerk of his unwillingness to continue longer as such is required to be filed, and, when filed, it becomes a part of the files of his office.—Rudesill v. Jefferson County Court, 85 Ill. 446.

[c] (Ill. 1877) When the question arises whether a justice, in filing a new bond in place of one on which the surety has notified the county clerk that he is unwilling longer to continue to be bound, has acted in pursuance of the statute, resort may be had to the notice filed by such surety with the clerk.—Rudesill v. Jefferson County Court, 85 Ill. 446.

[d] (Ill. 1877) Though the statute requires a justice of the peace to file a new bond, upon notice to the county clerk by his surety in the original one that he does not wish longer to be bound thereby, it is not essential that such new bond should recite the circumstances.—Rudesill v. Jefferson County Court, 85 Ill. 446.

[e] (Ind. 1847) Where a surety in the bond of a justice of the peace applies to be discharged from liability, the justice may waive the issuing of a summons in such case and execute an additional bond.—Weaver v. State, 8 Blackf. 563.

[f] (Miss. 1890) Where one elected justice of the peace before his term begins files his bond, but does not take the oath, and there is no other recognition of his official character, and no other official functions performed by him, a writ of replevin issued by him before his term actually begins is void.—Dabney v. Hudson, 68 Miss. 292, 8 South. 545, 24 Am. St. Rep. 276.

[g] (Ohio, 1869) Where a justice of the peace, having refused to pay over moneys received by virtue of his office, and having been notified by the township's trustees that his sureties were unwilling longer to be liable, procured other persons to subscribe their names to his official bond, but with no seals attached, and without their names in the body of the bond, held, that he "failed to give other security," within the meaning of the justices' act of 1854.—Stevens v. Allmen, 19 Ohio St. 485.

[h] (Pa. 1884) Every person elected to the office of alderman or justice of the peace must file his acceptance with the prothonotary of the proper county within 30 days after the election; otherwise, he will be held to have declined the office.—In re Justices of the Peace, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 539.

[i] (S. C. 1820) Const. art. 8, § 3, provides that all commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the state, be sealed with the seal of state, and signed by the governor; and article 6 provides that all persons chosen or appointed to any office, before entering on the execution thereof, shall take a prescribed oath. Held, that a justice of the peace taking such oath is legally qualified to act without a commission.—Billy v. State, 2 Nott & McC. 356.

[j] (S. C. 1820) Act 1778, providing that justices shall at the time of qualification sign a roll, which shall be lodged in the secretary's office, so that all persons may discover who are acting magistrates, is not a condition precedent to a justice going into office.—Billy v. State, 2 Nott & McC. 356.

[k] (S. C. 1820) Act 1819, providing that thereafter all justices then in commission, who had not qualified before the governor, shall within 90 days qualify before the clerks, does not embrace justices who had qualified agreeably to Act 1800.—Billy v. State, 2 Nott & McC. 356.

[l] (S. C. 1824) The act of 1778, providing that justices, before commencing the duties of their office, shall sign a roll to be lodged with the secretary of state, has been impliedly repealed by long disuse and by the passage of subsequent acts rendering the provision inapplicable and unnecessary.—Morrison v. Barksdale, Harp. 101.

[m] (Va. 1848) A person who has been commissioned by the governor as a justice may take the oaths of office before a justice of the peace, if it be done in the court house on a court day.—Frederick County Justices v. Bruce, 4 Grat. 281.

Collateral attack on title of de facto justice, see post, § 18.

[a] (Ala. 1861) Where one elected intendant of a town under the statute assumed to act as a justice of the peace on the authority of his election, although it did not make him a justice virtute officii, held, that it constitutes a valid foundation for a bona fide claim to be ex officio justice of the peace, and, upon acting as such, he became a justice de facto.—Williamson v. Woolf, 37 Ala. 298.

[b] (Ga. 1856) Where a justice of the peace removed to another county, but continued to act under his commission, it was held that his acts were not void so far as the public and third persons were concerned, nor could they be invalidated in a proceeding to which he was not a party.—Hinton v. Lindsay, 20 Ga. 746.

[c] (Ga. 1871) One holding a commission from the governor as notary public and ex officio justice of the peace, and acting as such, is a de facto officer.—Pool v. Perdue, 44 Ga. 454.

[d] (Ill. 1860) The decisions of a magistrate de facto will be enforced, though he was not regularly elected.—Town of Lewiston v. Proctor, 23 Ill. (13 Peck) 533.

[e] (Ill. 1895) Const. 1870, art. 6, § 32, makes the terms of offices of justices of the peace four years and until their successors shall be qualified; and section 28 provides that all justices in the city of Chicago shall be appointed by the governor. Held that, though the justices in the town of Lake still had a right to hold their offices for four years on its annexation to Chicago, other justices, who were appointed for such town before the expiration of such four years' term, became the successors of the elected justices, and the latter were not even justices de facto, after expiration of said four years.—Becker v. People, 156 Ill. 301, 40 N. E. 944; Wilmott v. Same, Id., affirming (1894) 55 Ill. App. 285.

[f] (Kan. 1875) It is enough to sustain the proceedings of a justice of the peace and sheriff, in respect to the arrest, examination, and bail of alleged offenders, so far as the question of their power to act is concerned, that they are officers de facto.—Rheinhart v. State, 14 Kan. 318.

[g] (Ky. 1843) A constable may justify under an execution issued by one illegally commissioned, but who has qualified, as a justice of the peace.—Rodman v. Harcourt, 43 Ky. (4 B. Mon.) 224.

[h] (Ky. 1845) Although a justice of the peace may have vacated his office by a removal from the county, yet, if he continues to exercise the functions of the office, he is a justice de facto, and his acts will be binding on third persons.—Lexington & H. Turnpike Road Co. v. McMurtry, 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 214.

[i] (Me. 1854) An acknowledgment taken before one who had acted as justice of the peace for many years, but whose last commission has in fact expired, he himself being in ignorance of this, continuing to act as justice in perfect good faith, is nevertheless good, as made before an officer de facto.—Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me. 423.

[j] (Me. 1854) One who had been a justice of the peace under successive commissions for 40 years, and constantly and frequently acted as such, but whose last commission had expired, was held to be an officer de facto, having since that time habitually exercised the functions of that office, not knowing that its term had expired.—Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me. 423.

[k] (Me. 1884) The disclosure of a poor debtor is valid, although the justice hearing it is only such de facto.—Johnson v. McGinly, 76 Me. 432.

[l] (Mass. 1849) If a justice of the peace, having been legally qualified to act as such, continue to act in the same capacity after accepting an incompatible office, he will be considered as a justice of the peace de facto, so far as third persons are concerned, and his warrant will justify the officer to whom it is directed in making service thereof.—Commonwealth v. Kirby, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 577.

[m] (Mich. 1896) Notwithstanding How. Ann. St. § 649, providing that every office shall become vacant on the neglect of the officer to deposit his oath of office or official bond in the manner and within the time prescribed by law, a justice of the peace is a de facto officer, though he does not file his oath of office and bond within the time stipulated by sections 767–769.—People v. Payment, 109 Mich. 553, 67 N. W. 689.

[n] (Miss. 1890) One who is elected justice of the peace for a term beginning at a certain time is not a de facto justice before that time, though both he and his predecessor believe that his term begins on a certain day before, and the latter then delivers to him the docket, and he files his bond, but does not take the oath of office.—Dabney v. Hudson, 68 Miss. 292, 8 South. 545, 24 Am. St. Rep. 276.

[o] (Mo. 1880) Where a justice holds over after the election of his successor, denying the validity of the act ousting him, his judicial acts are valid as far as the public and third persons are concerned.—Fleming v. Mulhall, 9 Mo. App. 71.

[p] (Mo. 1894) There can be an officer de facto only where there is an office de jure. A justice of the peace appointed after abolishment of his office is not, therefore, a de facto justice.—Ayers v. Lattimer, 57 Mo. App. 78.

[q] (N. Y. 1847) The acts of a person elected to the office of a justice of the peace, and acting as such, will be held to be valid, as regards the public and third persons, although he has neglected to take the oath of office and to give the security required by law.—Greenleaf v. Low, 4 Denio, 168.

[r] (N. Y. 1848) A person having been elected to the office of justice of the peace, and entering upon the discharge of its duties, without having first taken the oath prescribed by law, is nevertheless a justice of the peace de facto; and his acts as such, so far as relates to the public and third persons, are valid, until a forfeiture of his office has been judicially declared in a proceeding against him for that purpose.—Weeks v. Ellis, 2 Barb. 320.

[s] (N. Y. 1848) And a warrant issued by such person justifies the person to whom it issues to the same extent as if it had been issued by a magistrate de jure.—Weeks v. Ellis, 2 Barb. 320.

[t] (N. Y. 1887) Where it did not appear affirmatively that no ballots were cast for a certain person for the office of justice of the peace, and there was evidence to indicate that probably some were so cast, and where many were cast for the person for an office designated in nearly the same way as the office in question, and it further appeared that the person had entered upon the duties of the office, and in pursuance thereof convicted one who was accused of a crime, held, that the office was held by an officer de facto, and the prisoner should not be discharged.—People v. Terry, 108 N. Y. 1, 14 N. E. 815.

[u] (Or. 1887) A justice of the peace who, on the expiration of his term, has refused to surrender the office, docket books, and papers to his duly-qualified successor, is a de facto officer, and his acts, as such, cannot be collaterally attacked.—Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Or. 456, 15 Pac. 778, 3 Am. St. Rep. 176.

[v] (Pa. 1887) A mortgage is not rendered invalid because the justice taking the acknowledgment held at the same time another office, and the law declared the two offices to be incompatible; it not being declared which should be forfeited.—Adam v. Mengel, 8 Atl. 606.

[w] (Vt. 1842) Though a justice of the peace holds an office incompatible with the office of justice, he is, however, a justice de facto, and all his acts as such before removal are valid between third persons.—McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 428, 39 Am. Dec. 231.

[x] (Va. 1817) Where a justice of the peace forfeits his office by an acceptance of another office, such acceptance does not vacate such of his subsequent acts as may have been done before his disqualification is established by some proper judicial tribunal.—Maddox v. Ewell, 2 Va. Cas. 59.

[y] (Wis. 1871) A justice of the peace, appointed by the trustees of a village, who assumed the right under the charter to fill a vacancy, having in good faith filed his oath and bond and assumed the duties of the office, is a de facto justice, although the appointment was without authority; and process regularly issued by him protects the officer who executed it.—Laver v. McGlachlin, 28 Wis. 364.

§ 10. Justices ex officio.

Officers invested with jurisdiction as justices, see post, § 76.

[a] (Ala. 1826) After the statute of 1819, the chief justice of the county court could not try a case as justice of the peace.—Rhodes v. Sneed, Minor, 403.

[b] (Cal. 1863) The constitution not having defined the jurisdiction of municipal courts, an act of the legislature conferring upon the mayor of a city the office of justice of the peace ex officio is not unconstitutional.—Uridias v. Morrill, 22 Cal. 473.

[c] (Colo. 1880) Under Gen. Laws, § 2661, granting justices of the peace and police magistrates certain jurisdiction, and providing that "the city council may designate one justice of the peace who shall have such jurisdiction exclusively," and section 2720, authorizing the city council in certain cities to elect a police judge, the designation or appointment of a justice of the peace with such exclusive jurisdiction makes him a police magistrate ex officio.—People v. Curley, 5 Colo. 412.

[d] (Ill. 1853) The provisions of Act Feb. 10, 1849, incorporating towns and cities, and authorizing the mayors thereof to be commissioned as justices of the peace, and vesting them with judicial powers, were abrogated by the provisions of article 5, § 27, of the new constitution, declaring that justices of the peace shall be elected and hold office for four years.—People v. Maynard, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 419.

[e] (Ind. 1859) Article 7, § 16, of the constitution, provides that "no person elected to any judicial office shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, be eligible to any office of trust or profit under the state, other than a judicial office." W. was chosen mayor of Indianapolis, a city incorporated under St. 1857, p. 42, and ex officio, until the city should see fit to elect a city judge, he was to hold court and to have exclusive jurisdiction of offenses against the ordinances, and also the general jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. No other judge was elected, and within the two years he resigned, and was chosen sheriff of the county. Held, thereupon, that he assumed the judicial duties, not as incidental to his office as mayor, but as separate and independent duties under the statute.—Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569.

[f] (Miss. 1892) Under Const. 1869, art. 6, § 23, providing that "a competent number of justices of the peace * * * shall be chosen in each county by the qualified electors thereof, by districts," a provision of a town charter making the mayor ex officio justice of the peace for the whole district of which the town is a part is void as to that part of the district outside of the town.—Heggie v. Stone, 70 Miss. 39, 12 South. 253.

[g] (Mo. 1879) Const. 1865, art. 6, § 25, authorizes the legislature to provide as many justices of the peace as are required, and no requirement is made as to the mode of appointment. Hence a provision in a city charter that the city recorder shall be ex officio a justice of the peace within the city limits is valid.—Dunn v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 70 Mo. 663.

[h] (N. J. 1827) The legislature may constitutionally confer the powers of justices of the peace on the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of a city or borough.—Hutchings v. Scott, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 218.

[i] (N. J. 1854) The charter of the borough of Beverly requires that certain officers be sworn or affirmed before a justice of the peace of the county of Burlington. Section 7 of the said charter declares that the mayor of the borough shall have all the power and authority of a justice of the peace for the state of New Jersey. Held, that said section does not constitute said mayor a justice for the county of Burlington, authorized to administer the oaths of the said officers.—State v. Perkins, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 409.

[j] (N. Y. 1887) Under Laws 1873, c. 370, the recorder of the village of Port Jervis is, for purposes of civil trials within the village, a justice of the peace of the town of Benpark.—Village of Port Jervis v. Barrett Bridge Co., 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 339.

[k] (N. C. 1871) The constitution requires that justices of the peace shall be elected by townships. Hence the legislature cannot confer the judicial powers of a justice of the peace upon the mayor of an incorporated town; such mayor being elected, not by the voters of the township, but only by the inhabitants of the town.—Town of Edenton v. Wool, 65 N. C. 379.

[l] (Ohio, 1857) Act May 3, 1852, conferring on mayors of cities of the second class the jurisdiction and powers of a justice of the peace in certain cases, provided the same was passed by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly (and this vote will be presumed if the record does not show the contrary), is not repugnant to Const. art. 4, reposing the judicial powers of the state in certain courts "and in such other courts * * * in one or more counties" as the legislature shall establish.—The Northern Indiana v. Milliken, 7 Ohio St. 383.

[m] (Or. 1866) The provision in the charter of Portland making the city recorder ex officio a justice of the peace within the corporate limits is an act within the constitutional authority of the legislative assembly.—Ryan v. Harris, 2 Or. 175.

[n] (Pa. 1800) The judges of the supreme court are ex officio justices of the peace and have power to take recognizances for good behavior.—Respublica v. Cobbet, 3 Yeates, 93.

[o] (Pa. 1850) The recorder of the city of Philadelphia was expressly vested with the power of a justice of the peace, by sections 13 and 14 of the act of incorporation of March 11, 1789. It was not an accessory of his jurisdiction of recorder, and was not taken away by the act of March 19, 1838, transferring the jurisdiction of the mayor's court to the court of criminal sessions. His power as a justice of the peace is not judicial.—Rhoads v. Commonwealth, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 272.

[p] (Wis. 1854) The constitution of this state vests the judicial power in certain courts and officers. Article 7 provides for the election of justices of the peace. Held, that Acts 1849, c. 87, § 2, constituting the mayor of Racine a justice of the peace by virtue of his office, is unconstitutional.—Attorney General v. McDonald, 8 Wis. 805.

§ 11. Term of office.

Expiration of term as affecting powers of justice, see post, § 204.

Term of office on election or appointment to fill vacancy, see post, § 13.

Judicial notice of expiration of term, see "Evidence," vol. 20, c. 105, § 58 [h].

[a] (Cal. 1884) The act of 1880, fixing the terms of office of justices of the peace at two years, is constitutional.—Bailey v. San Joaquin County Sup'rs, 66 Cal. 10, 4 Pac. 768.

[b] (Fla. 1875) Under the amendments of the constitution, justices of the peace hold their offices for four years from the date of signing and sealing their commissions.—In re Executive Communication, 15 Fla. 735.

[c] (Ill. 1895) Const. 1870, art. 6, § 32, makes the terms of office of justices of the peace four years, and provides that they shall hold office until their successors shall be qualified; and section 28 provides that all justices in the city of Chicago shall be appointed by the governor, while in the rest of the state they are elected. Held that, on the annexation of the town of Lake to the city of Chicago, the justices then in office in the town had a right to hold office until the expiration of their four years.—Becker v. People, 156 Ill. 301, 40 N. E. 944; Wilmott v. Same, Id., affirming (1894) 55 Ill. App. 285.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) Const. art. 12, § 7, prescribing the times for the election of state and county officers, provided, however, that the time for which any county officer had been elected at the April election of 1858 should not extend beyond the time fixed for holding the election as prescribed, uses the term "county officer" in the sense which was given to it by the laws in existence at the time of the adoption of the constitution; and hence the term of a justice of the peace elected at the April election expired with the election of a successor at the time prescribed by the constitution for the election of county officers.—State v. Coenzler, 9 Iowa, 433.

[f] (Kan. 1876) Under Gen. St. p. 231, § 8, providing that a person elected to a township office at the first election shall continue to hold it until the next annual township meeting, one so elected justice of the peace can hold his office only for one year, and it is not a full term.—Odell v. Dodge, 16 Kan. 446.

[h] (Md. 1866) By section 16, art. 2, Const. 1864, it was provided that "all civil officers appointed by the governor and senate shall be nominated to the senate within fifty days from the commencement of each regular session of the general assembly; and their term of office, except in cases otherwise provided for in this constitution, shall commence on the first Monday of May next ensuing the appointment, and continue for two years (unless sooner removed from office) and until their successors respectively qualify according to law." By section 6, art. 12, it was provided that "all officers, civil and military, now holding office, whether by election or appointment, under the state, shall continue to hold and exercise their offices according to their present tenure, unless otherwise provided in this constitution, until they shall be superseded according to its provisions, and until their successors be duly qualified." By section 47, art. 6, the term of office of justice of the peace was changed from an election by the people to appointment by the governor by and with the consent of the senate. Under these provisions, held, that the justices of the peace who were elected in November, 1863, and in office when the constitution of 1864 was adopted, continued to hold their offices until regular appointments were made by the governor and senate superseding them.—Taylor v. Hebden, 24 Md. 202.

[i] (Mass. 1840) The justices of the several police courts of Boston, Salem, Lowell, Newburyport, and New Bedford hold their offices during good behavior, and not for the term of seven years only.—In re Opinion of Justices, 57 Mass. (3 Cush.) 584.

[j] (Mich. 1895) The language of the charter of Battle Creek (section 4) is identical with Const. art. 6, § 17, and provides for the election and duration of office of justice of the peace, but fixes no time for the term to begin or end. How. Ann. St. § 719, provides that the terms of justices of the peace shall commence July 4th, next succeeding their election. Held, that the legislature intended the terms of justices of the peace under the charter to be controlled by section 719.—Hulbert v. Henry, 105 Mich. 211, 62 N. W. 1030.

[k] (Mich. 1895) An act providing for a term of four years for justices of the peace does not contravene Const. art. 6, § 17, declaring that they "shall hold their offices for four years and until their successors are elected and qualified."—Messenger v. Teagan, 106 Mich. 654, 64 N. W. 499; Engel v. Donovan, Id.

[l] (N. Y. 1863) Laws 1859, c. 10, relating to the village of Whitesborough, and declaring that the police justice shall have the same jurisdiction and powers as a justice of the peace, and providing for the election of a police judge annually, is unconstitutional, in that he is in contemplation of law a justice of the peace, whose constitutional term of office is four years.—Waters v. Langdon, 40 Barb. 408.

[m] (Pa. 1879) Under Act March 22, 1877, the term of a justice of the peace, who had been re-elected, which would expire after the passage of the act, was extended to the first Monday in May next following the expiration of his commission.—Hess v. Evans, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 89. CONTRA, see (1880) Haupt v. Borough, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 213, reversing (1879) 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 176.

[a] (Cal. 1885) Act April 1, 1880, amending the Code of Civil Procedure, and providing for the terms of office of justices of the peace, applies to those elected before, as well as after, the general election of 1879.—Shearer v. City of Oakland, 67 Cal. 633, 8 Pac. 384.

[b] (Fla. 1875) Since the amendment to the state constitution fixing the term of office of a justice of the peace at four years from the date of the signing and sealing of his commission, a justice at the expiration of this term ceases to be such officer, although he was appointed prior to the amendment, when the tenure of office was during good behavior.—In re Executive Communication, 15 Fla. 735.

[c] (Ill. 1895) Act April 25, 1889, for the annexation of the town of Lake to the city of Chicago, provided that, at the expiration of the terms of office of certain justices of the peace, their dockets and files should be deposited with any justice of the city that the circuit court should designate. Held, that the omission of the court to so designate did not extend the terms of office of such justices.—Becker v. People, 156 Ill. 301, 40 N. E. 944; Wilmott v. Same, Id. Affirming (1894) 55 Ill. App. 285.

[d] (Me. 1880) Sp. Laws 1879, c. 180, entitled "An act to establish the police court of the city of Belfast, and to abolish the Belfast municipal court," terminates the commission of one appointed judge of the police court created by Sp. Laws 1850, c. 363, §§ 11-14.—Fahay v. Boardman, 70 Me. 448.

[e] (Mo. 1880) The fact that Rev. St. 1879, § 2807, concerning the election of justices of the peace, etc., results incidentally in extending the terms of some justices, does not render it invalid as inconsistent with the constitutional provision relating to terms of offices; nor is the act otherwise unconstitutional.—State v. Ranson, 73 Mo. 78.

[f] (N. Y. 1827) The legislature has no power to shorten the constitutional term of office of justices of the peace, either directly or indirectly, by the erection or division of counties; but it has power to enlarge or diminish their territorial jurisdiction.—People v. Garey, 6 Cow. 642; Gary v. People, 9 Cow. 640.

[g] (N. Y. 1873) The term of office of police justice in the city of New York is not vested by the constitution, but is subject to legislative control.—Coulter v. Murray, 15 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 129.

[h] (N. Y. 1888) Laws 1886, c. 335, § 7, providing that justices of a town, duly elected, qualified, and acting, at the time the law extinguishing the town organization takes effect, shall hold their office for the term for which they were elected, does not extend to one who was elected, but had not qualified, before the law became operative.—Gertum v. Kings County Sup'rs, 109 N. Y. 170, 16 N. E. 328. Affirming (1887) 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 659.

[i] (N. Y. 1888) The provision of the constitution making the term of office of justices four years does not prevent the legislature, in the exercise of its duty to organize cities from other forms of civil government, from extinguishing the town organization, and thereby shortening the term of office of the justices thereof.—Gertum v. Kings County Sup'rs, 109 N. Y. 170, 16 N. E. 328. Affirming (1887) 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 659.

[j] (N. Y. 1896) Justices of the peace of the city of Brooklyn are "justices of inferior local courts," within Const. 1895, art. 12, § 3, providing that the terms of city officers holding office on January 1, 1895, which would expire in an even-numbered year, shall be abridged so as to expire with the close of the preceding year, but that such provision shall not apply to any judicial officer "except judges and justices of inferior local courts."—Petterson v. Van Wart, 1 App. Div. 8, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1009; Murphy v. Schnitzpan (Sup.) 15 Misc. Rep. 496, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1013.

[k] (Tenn. 1886) The legislature cannot, by repealing the charter of a town, cut short the term of office of a justice of the peace elected before the repeal of the charter.—Ex parte Cross, 84 Tenn. (16 Lea) 486.

[a] (Ariz. 1894) Under Rev. St. par. 1393, declaring the term of office of a justice of the peace to be two years, and till his successor is elected and qualified, and paragraph 484, providing that all county and precinct officers shall hold office till their successors are elected and qualified, a justice of the peace, who is a precinct officer, in a precinct entitled to two justices, holds over where only one candidate receives more votes, and another the same number as he, and there is no vacancy to which an appointment can be made.—Meyer v. Culver, 35 Pac. 984.

[b] (Cal. 1867) R. was appointed to fill a vacancy in the office of police judge for the unexpired term. Held, that he was entitled to hold the office for the same term his predecessor would have had no vacancy occurred, and not merely until his successor was elected and qualified.—People v. Rix, 33 Cal. 503.

[c] (Cal. 1894) Under a charter providing that the mayor shall appoint suitable persons to fill vacancies in office, he is empowered to fill vacancies in the offices of city justices of the peace.—People v. Sands, 35 Pac. 330.

[d] (Cal. 1894) City justices of the peace are not township or county officers, and the board of supervisors has no authority to fill vacancies therein.—People v. Sands, 35 Pac. 330.

[e] (Cal. 1894) Acts 1891, p. 304, § 25, authorizing the board of supervisors to fill by appointment all vacancies occurring in any office filled by its appointment, and elective county and township offices, does not repeal Code Civ. Proc. § 111, providing that if any vacancy occurs in the office of a justice the board shall appoint an eligible person to hold the office for the remainder of the term.—People v. Sands, 102 Cal. 12, 36 Pac. 404.

[f] (Cal. 1894) Code Civ. Proc. § 111, providing that, if any vacancy occurs in the office of a justice of the peace, the board of supervisors shall appoint an eligible person for the remainder of the term, applies to all justices, whether in cities or townships; the Oakland city charter, which provides that the mayor may appoint suitable persons to fill vacancies in any office, except as in the charter provided, applying only to vacancies in offices created by the charter itself.—People v. Sands, 102 Cal. 12, 36 Pac. 404.

[g] (Ill. 1846) The statutes require that every justice of the peace shall file a bond in a prescribed form within 20 days after his election; otherwise, the office shall be considered as vacant. A justice filed a bond within 20 days, omitting a part of the prescribed condition, and, after the 20 days had expired, filed another in proper form. It was held that neither bond would avail, and that the office was vacant.—People v. Percells, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 59.

[h] (Ind. 1832) Under the statute of 1831, county commissioners, doing county business, may order an election of a justice of the peace to supply a vacancy which had previously occurred; but they cannot make such order in anticipation of a vacancy.—Nooe v. Bradley, 3 Blackf. 158.

[i] (Kan. 1874) Where A. is duly elected justice of the peace for the term of two years, and qualifies, and thereafter during the first year of his term resigns his office, and B. is appointed to fill the vacancy more than 30 days prior to the first succeeding regular election, and then at such election elected justice of the peace, this election is also only to fill the vacancy, and his term expires at the expiration of the term of which A. was elected.—Hale v. Evans, 12 Kan. 562.

[j] (Kan. 1886) Const. art. 3, § 11, provides that, "in case of vacancy in any judicial office, it shall be filled by appointment of the governor until the next regular election shall occur more than 30 days after such vacancy shall have happened." Held that, since Gen. St. 1868, c. 110, § 48, provides that, in cities having more than 2,000 inhabitants, justices of the peace shall be elected at the regular city election, a person appointed to fill a vacancy in such office held over till the next city election, though this did not take place till after the next general November election.—Ward v. Clark, 35 Kan. 315, 10 Pac. 827.

[k] (Ky. 1895) In April, 1893, M. was elected police judge of a fourth-class city for a term of one year, under provisions in its charter. On November 7, 1893, under St. 1894, § 3510, providing that judges of the police courts in fourth-class cities may be appointed by the board of council, under ordinance passed 60 days previous to any November election, M. was again appointed judge of the police court of the same city, his term of office to begin September 1, 1894. Held, that by provision of Const. § 167, providing that the terms of police judges elected in November, 1893, should begin September 1, 1894, and continue until the November election, 1897, the term of office of M. under his election in April, 1893, was extended until September, 1894, and upon his death, August 8, 1894, two vacancies existed, one for the balance of the term ending August 31, 1894, and the other for the full term beginning September 1, 1894, and ending with the November election, 1897.—Boyd v. Land, 97 Ky. 379, 30 S. W. 1019.

[l] (Md. 1859) Under Const. art. 4, § 19, the appointee of the governor to a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace holds till the next regular election of justices of the peace, and the appointment must be made by the governor alone.—Cantwell v. Owens, 14 Md. 215.

[m] (Mich. 1887) Under section 20 of the charter of Grand Rapids, Mich., providing that all officers of the city shall take office on the first Monday in May, and section 23, limiting the term of elective officers appointed to fill vacancies, to "the first Monday of May succeeding," a justice of the peace appointed by the council January 25, 1885, to fill a vacancy in that office caused by death, held only until the first Monday in May following, and a judgment rendered by such justice May 16, 1885, is void.—Edison v. Almy, 66 Mich. 329, 33 N. W. 509.

[n] (Miss. 1892) Const. 1890, § 170, provides for dividing each county into districts. Section 171 provides that justices of the peace shall be chosen in each county in the manner provided by law for each district. The mode of filling vacancies in all offices not specifically provided for by the constitution (which provisions do not include justices of any county office) is left by section 103 to the legislature. The legislature provided for the election in districts of justices of the peace, and also (Code 1892, § 3683) for filling vacancies in any "county" or "county district" office by election. Section 3686 authorizes the governor to fill by appointment any vacancy in a "county, city, town, or village" office, where the local authorities have failed to act, but contains no mention of "county district" offices. Held that, although the governor is not authorized by section 3686 to fill a vacancy in the office of a justice, the same not being a county office, he is authorized by section 103 of the constitution, the failure of the local authorities being an emergency not otherwise provided for within said section.—State v. Lovell, 70 Miss. 309, 12 South. 341.

[o] (Mo. 1884) The term of office of a justice of the peace, appointed under Rev. St. § 2809, to fill a vacancy in the office, extends only to the next general election, and the election, commission, and qualification of a successor.—State v. Manning, 84 Mo. 661.

[p] (Mo. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6090, providing that at the general election in 1890, and every four years thereafter, there shall be elected a justice of the peace, who "shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor is elected and qualified," and section 6096, providing that a vacancy occurring in the office of justice of the peace shall be filled by the appointment of one "who shall hold his office until the next general election of county officers," the term of one appointed in 1892 to fill a vacancy expires at the general election of county officers in 1894.—State ex rel. Brown v. Spitz, 127 Mo. 248, 29 S. W. 1011.

[q] (N. Y. 1853) Const. 1846, art. 6, § 17, abrogates the provisions of 1 Rev. St. p. 347, relative to supply vacancies in town offices. An appointment of a justice of the peace to fill a vacancy made under those provisions is null and void; and the appointee cannot even be deemed a justice in fact, nor can perjury be assigned of testimony given before him.—People v. Albertson, 8 How. Prac. 363.

[r] (N. Y. 1856) Act Feb. 3, 1849, which provides that, whenever vacancies occur in any office for the filling of which there is no existing provision, the governor shall appoint some capable person to execute the duties until the commencement of the political year succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy at which such officer can be by law elected, applies to the office of the justice of the peace, since there was no provision of law applicable to vacancies therein.—People v. Keeler, 25 Barb. 23.

[s] (N. Y. 1858) Where a justice of the peace was appointed by the governor to fill a vacancy caused by death, the term of such justice was at an end as soon as a person was chosen at the next annual town meeting for the residue of the unexpired term.—People v. Keeler, 17 N. Y. 370, reversing (1857) 25 Barb. 421.

[t] (N. Y. 1859) H., a justice of the peace of the city of B. prior to the consolidation of the cities of B. and W. and the town of B., resigned after the consolidation, and the governor appointed J. in his place. Held that the appointment was invalid; the common council of the city having the power to fill vacancies.—People v. Carter, 29 Barb. 208.

[u] (N. Y. 1886) Laws 1875, c. 166, providing that a person appointed to fill the vacancy in the office of a justice of the peace whose term of office would have expired on the 31st day of December next succeeding such appointment shall hold office until said 31st day of December, does not contravene the constitutional provision that, when the legislature directs an election to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of a full term, the person elected shall hold for the residue of the unexpired term. Such provision does not require the holding of an election to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of a full term.—In re Elliott, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 8.

[v] (N. Y. 1889) The engagement of the city judge of Yonkers in attending to the removal of his family of 12 persons from their summer resort to his home in Yonkers, is an "inability," within Laws 1881, c. 184, tit. 3, § 8, which makes it the duty of the mayor to designate one of the justices of the peace of the city "who shall, only in case of * * * inability of the city judge to act, exercise, in the place and stead of the city judge, criminal jurisdiction."—People v. Schirmer, 55 Hun, 160, 8 N. Y. Supp. 76.

[w] (N. C. 1887) Const. § 28, art. 4, provides that when the office of justice of the peace becomes vacant, and the voters of the district fail to elect, the clerk of the superior court shall appoint to fill the vacancy. Code, § 819, provides that the justices of the peace shall be elected by the legislature. Acts 1885, c. 288, repealing all conflicting laws, provides that all appointments made by the legislature shall be void unless the appointees qualify in three months, and that the governor shall fill all vacancies so occurring by an appointment for the unexpired term. The legislature appointed a justice, who failed to qualify in the time prescribed, and the governor appointed the plaintiff to fill the vacancy. Plaintiff being duly notified, and with proper credentials, appeared before the clerk of the court, the defendant, to qualify, who refused to qualify him. Code, § 821, provides that a justice shall qualify before the clerk of the superior court, and the clerk shall file the oath. Held, that the act of appointment in no way conflicts with article 4, § 28, of the constitution.—Gilmer v. Holton, 98 N. C. 26, 3 S. E. 812.

[x] (Ohio, 1888) Rev. St. § 1802, authorizing the mayor to appoint a person to act as police judge in the temporary absence of the duly-elected judge, does not contravene Const. art. 4, § 10, providing that, on the office of any judge becoming vacant before the expiration of his term, the vacancy shall be filled by the governor, since such temporary absence is not a vacancy.—Moliter v. State, 10 Ohio Dec. 324, 20 Wkly. Law Bul. 323.

[y] (Pa. 1884) Where a ward has been divided into two or more wards, and no justice resides in some of the new wards, there is a vacancy in the office of justice, which is properly filled at the next annual municipal election.—Commonwealth v. Pattison, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 252.

[yy] (Tenn. 1855) That part of chapter 1, § 15, of the Acts of 1835, which limits the term of a justice elected to fill a vacancy produced by resignation, etc., to the unexpired term of his predecessor, is unconstitutional. By article 6, § 15, of the constitution, the term of office is fixed at six years; the manner of election only being referred to the legislature.—Keys v. Mason, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 6.

Justice holding over as de facto justice, see ante, § 9.

[a] (Cal. 1886) The character of the office of justice of the peace was not changed by the reduction of the number of justices in pursuance of the constitution of 1879, nor were justices' courts abolished, but, on the contrary, they were expressly continued in force; and the failure of a justice elected under such constitution to qualify would leave a vacancy in the office, which the board of supervisors could fill by appointment; but until the qualification of the person duly elected or appointed, the former incumbent, though holding over by virtue of an election under the old constitution, would be legally entitled to the office, under section 879 of the Political Code.—French v. Santa Clara County, 69 Cal. 519, 11 Pac. 30.

[b] (Kan. 1871) Under the constitution, a justice of the peace is elected for two years and until his successor is qualified, and no vacancy will occur in the office at the expiration of the two years by reason of a failure on the part of the people to elect his successor at the proper time, but he will continue to hold the office until a successor is duly qualified.—Borton v. Buck, 8 Kan. 302.

[c] (Kan. 1875) A justice of the peace holds his office until his successor is qualified; and if a party has once been elected and qualified, and at a subsequent election is re-elected, but fails to qualify, he nevertheless remains a justice de jure, as well as de facto, until a successor is qualified.—Rheinhart v. State, 14 Kan. 318.

[d] (Neb. 1891) Comp. St. c. 10, § 17, provides that "when it is ascertained that the incumbent of an office holds over by reason of the nonelection or nonappointment of a successor, or of the neglect or refusal of the successor to qualify, he shall qualify anew within ten days from the time at which his successor, if elected, should have qualified." Held, in an action of quo warranto by an incumbent of the office of justice of the peace holding over, against an appointee, that the incumbent could not continue to exercise the duties of the office without filing a sufficient hold-over bond, and that his remedy was by mandamus to compel the county board to approve his bond, instead of quo warranto against the appointee.—State v. Lynn, 31 Neb. 770, 48 N. W. 881.

[e] (Wis. 1886) Where, under Const. art. 7, § 15, a justice holds over until his successor is elected and qualified, he does so in a case where the city charter is silent on the subject, and where, but for the constitutional provision, there might be a doubt.—City of Platteville v. Bell, 66 Wis. 326, 28 N. W. 404.

§ 15. Resignation or abandonment of office.

Justice holding incompatible office as justice de facto, see ante, § 9.

Forfeiture of office of justice of the peace by acceptance of incompatible office, see "Officers," I.

[a] (Ga. 1856) Where A. was elected justice of the peace for one county, afterwards boarded and lodged four nights in a week in another county, keeping school there, and returning to the first the remaining three, it was held that, under the act of 1838, A. acquired a residence in the latter, and his commission as justice was vacated thereby, notwithstanding his intention to return at the end of six months.—Hinton v. Lindsay, 20 Ga. 746.

[b] (Ky. 1814) A temporary removal of a justice of the peace from his county, with an intent to stay four months and then return, does not vacate his office.—Lyon v. Commonwealth, 6 Ky. (3 Bibb) 430.

[c] (Ky. 1845) That the removal of a justice of the peace from his county may operate to vacate his commission, it must be with the absolute intent to change his place of residence.—Lexington & H. Turnpike Road Co. v. McMurtry, 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 214.

[d] (Pa. 1887) A justice of the peace who has removed from the district for which he was elected cannot administer an oath to road jurors, as by his removal he vacates his office.—In re Clinton Tp. Road, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 170.

[dd] (Tex. 1894) The mere absence of a justice of the peace from his precinct does not create a vacancy, within Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1536, authorizing the commissioners' court to fill any vacancy in the office.—Crawford v. Saunders (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 102.

[e] (Va. 1820) A mandamus will not issue from the superior court to reinvest a former justice of the peace with his office, who had removed from the county in which he was appointed with his family to another county, where he remained for several years and then returned.—Chew v. Justices of Spottsylvania, 2 Va. Cas. 208.

[f] (Va. 1830) A justice of the peace of the county of A. left the state with intent to reside in another state. He remained in another state nine months, but did not establish his permanent residence there. He then returned, and resumed his former residence in the county of A. Held, that he had no right to resume his office of justice of the peace of A.—Poulson v. Justices of Accomack, 2 Leigh, 743.

§ 16. Suspension or removal.

Removal from office of justice of the peace for acceptance of incompatible office, see "Officers," I.

Validity of act relating to removal of justices of the peace as not embraced in title, see "Statutes," III.

[a] (Ala. 1879) A report of the grand jury as to misconduct on the part of a justice of the peace, recommending his removal, under the provisions of Act Jan. 23, 1879, must set forth clearly the nature and description of the misconduct charged, although it need not be described with the same degree of accuracy required in pleading.—State v. Seawell, 64 Ala. 225.

[b] (D. C. 1887) Under Act Cong. June 7, 1878 (20 Stat. 700), authorizing the president to appoint justices of the peace for the District of Columbia for the term of four years, "subject to removal for cause," the president may remove a justice for cause, and the supreme court of the district cannot review his action to determine the sufficiency of the cause, nor can it presume that he acted without cause from the fact that none is specified in the order of removal.—United States v. Oliver, 6 Mackey, 47.

[c] (La. 1876) As the manner of removal from office of justices of the peace is established by the constitution, and requires the vote of two-thirds of the members of both branches of the general assembly, the statute providing that a conviction for extortion shall operate a vacation of the office is unconstitutional.—State ex rel. Koppel v. Thompson, 28 La. Ann. 444.

[d] (Md. 1859) The power of removal of officers for incompetency or misconduct, conferred upon the governor by Const. art. 2, § 15, applies only to such offices as he has power to fill by original appointment for terms of years, and does not embrace justices of the peace.—Cantwell v. Owens, 14 Md. 215.

[e] (Mo. 1886) Police justices of the city of St. Louis, being appointed for a specified term, and removable only for cause, and not at the discretion of the mayor or council of the municipal assembly, a resolution removing a person from the office is void, if the person so removed does not receive a specification of the charges, notice, and an opportunity to be heard.—State ex rel. Denison v. City of St. Louis, 90 Mo. 19, 1 S. W. 757.

[f] (N. Y. 1877) The justices of the peace for the city, appointed under Laws 1861, c. 143, may be removed by the legislature, and others appointed in their stead.—People v. City of Rochester, 11 Hun, 241.

[g] (N. Y. 1888) Under Laws 1847, c. 280, providing for removal of a justice for malfeasance in office, denial of bail on an arrest for a misdemeanor, though unauthorized, is not a ground for removal.—In re Thomas, 48 Hun, 617, 2 N. Y. Supp. 38.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) Where a judge is charged with intoxication, affidavits are relevant, tending to show that he has well and faithfully discharged his judicial duties.—In re Grogan, 52 Hun, 615, 5 N. Y. Supp. 499.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) Where all the affidavits in support of the charges are fully met by affidavits on the part of respondent, and on examination of all the papers the charges appear to be substantially answered, a reference will not be ordered under Laws 1880, c. 354, which gives the power to order a reference in such cases, but does not require one as a matter of course, or in every instance where there are conflicting affidavits.—In re Grogan, 52 Hun, 615, 5 N. Y. Supp. 499.

[j] (N. Y. 1889) Const. art. 6, § 18, provides that justices of the peace and justices and judges of inferior courts not of record, may be removed for cause by such courts as may be prescribed, and Code Cr. Proc. § 132, designates the general term of the supreme court as the court to make such removals. Held, that the charter of the city of Buffalo (Laws 1870, c. 519, tit. 2, § 24, as amended by Laws 1886, c. 17), which authorizes the mayor to remove the police justice of that city, does not oust the supreme court of jurisdiction.—In re King, 53 Hun, 631, 6 N. Y. Supp. 420.

[k] (N. Y. 1889) In a proceeding for the removal of a police justice, a general charge of misconduct in office during his present term of office will not justify an inquiry into acts committed by such justice before such term began, though such acts are set forth in the specifications accompanying the charge.—In re King, 53 Hun, 631, 6 N. Y. Supp. 420.

[m] (N. Y. 1889) Nor is it sufficient cause for such removal that he maliciously uttered from the bench slanderous words regarding the mayor of his city and the county judge of his county.—In re King, 53 Hun, 631, 6 N. Y. Supp. 420.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) Nor that he objected because the police commissioners detailed certain policemen for duty in his court, and told one of the policemen to tell the commissioners that he did not want the policemen there.—In re King, 53 Hun, 631, 6 N. Y. Supp. 420.

[o] (N. Y. 1889) Nor that he suspended sentence on a prisoner convicted of assault and battery.—In re King, 53 Hun, 631, 6 N. Y. Supp. 420.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) Nor that in his return on an appeal he maliciously referred to the appellant's attorney as "a penitentiary outcast, and legal pirate, who has made a practice of hanging around the police court and penitentiary seeking whom he might devour, and persuading ignorant persons to appeal when he knows there is no cause for reversal, often causing them unwittingly to commit perjury," when it appears that such statements are substantially true.—In re King, 53 Hun, 631, 6 N. Y. Supp. 420.

[q] (N. Y. 1891) On a motion to remove a justice of the peace it appeared that, while the justice was temporarily acting as a police justice, one C. was brought before him, duly charged with the commission of a criminal offense. The justice required C. to give $1,000 bail. The bondsman offered was not a resident of the city in which the proceeding was had, and the justice adjourned the hearing for five days, to enable C. to procure a city bondsman. The petition for removal stated that on the day to which the hearing was adjourned the justice fixed the bail at $2,000, which averment the justice denied. It was also charged by C., and denied by the justice, that the justice denied C. the right of counsel before he pleaded. No new bail was given, and the case was again adjourned for five days, during which the complaint against C. was transferred to the grand jury by a certificate of a justice of the supreme court. Held, that no such evil or oppressive conduct on the part of the justice as would justify his removal from office was shown.—In re Peterson, 60 Hun, 585, 15 N. Y. Supp. 489.

[r] (N. Y. 1892) In a proceeding to remove a police justice from office under Laws 1847, c. 280, § 25, as amended by Laws 1880, c. 354, § 1, which empowers the general term to certify "the reasonable expenses of [the] referee," it has no authority to include in such expenses the counsel fees and disbursements of the parties to the proceeding.—In re King, 130 N. Y. 602, 29 N. E. 1096.

[s] (N. Y. 1893) Evidence that a justice of the peace attended a prize fight, and prevented the arrest of the guilty parties; that he frequently visited gambling houses on Sundays, and made no effort to suppress them, but was apparently intimate with the "coppers," who were appointed to watch those trying to suppress the gambling and inform the gamblers; that he attended a dog fight; that he used his office to punish a constable who was alleged to have shot at the proprietor of the hotel where the prize fight occurred, which allegation the justice knew to be false,—was sufficient to justify his removal from office.—In re Carpenter, 66 Hun, 631, 21 N. Y. Supp. 351.

[v] (N. Y. 1895) A police justice will be removed on the ground of misconduct in office where it appears that his judicial acts were intentional violations of the laws governing magistrates, or were in disregard of legal rules.—In re Quigley (Sup.) 32 N. Y. Supp. 828.

[w] (Tenn. 1873) An indictment against a justice of the peace as a private citizen for drunkenness and profanity will not support a verdict of dismissal from his office, under Code, §§ 4817, 4818a.—Carpenter v. State, 65 Tenn. (6 Baxt.) 585.

[ww] (Tex. 1872) Act Aug. 15, 1870, §§ 2, 8, "giving effect to the several provisions of the constitution concerning taxes," which purport to authorize the removal of justices of the peace by district judges by summary proceedings, are repugnant to section 24, art. 5, of the constitution, which provides the manner by which county and district officers shall be removed, when their removal is not otherwise provided for.—Ex parte Hogg, 36 Tex. 14; Laflain v. State, 36 Tex. 696.

[x] (Tex. 1873) Where a rule nisi was entered against all the justices of the peace in a certain county, without naming them, to show cause why they should not be removed from office for a specified cause, a judgment entered by default against one of them, removing him from office for an entirely different cause, was void.—Ex parte Fields, 37 Tex. 575.

[yy] (Va.) Where a justice of the peace had been indicted for drunkenness while in the execution of his official duties, and, tried by a jury, found guilty, it was held that he ought to be removed from his office.—(1808) Commonwealth v. Alexander, 1 Va. Cas. 156; (1812) Same v. Mann, Id. 308.

[z] (Va. 1818) Where a justice of the peace maliciously issued a warrant commanding a person to appear before him and answer the complaint of another person, and adjudged him to pay costs, when in fact said complaint was never made to him, it was held that he was guilty of malfeasance, and he was accordingly removed from office.—Wallace v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 130.

[zz] (Va. 1830) A conviction and judgment for felony against a justice of the peace is a forfeiture of his office, and incapacitates him from ever afterwards acting under his commission.—Commonwealth v. Fugate, 2 Leigh, 724.

§ 17. Title to and possession of office.

Certificate as to official character, see "Acknowledgment," vol. 1, cc. 1000–1012, §§ 244–254.

[a] (Cal. 1884) The exercise by a justice of the peace of jurisdiction outside of that conferred by the constitution is not the exercise of an office, from which he may be ousted by quo warranto.—People v. Veuve, 3 Pac. 862.

[b] (Colo. 1874) A writ of attachment and return thereto is sufficient evidence to warrant a finding of the official character of the justice of the peace who issued the attachment.—McCraw v. Welch, 2 Colo. 284.

[c] (Colo. 1880) A person assuming as police judge to exercise judicial functions under no other authority than that conferred by municipal authority is guilty of usurpation.—People v. Curley, 5 Colo. 412.

[d] (Ga. 1879) Where, pending a contest for the office of justice of the peace, a commission is inadvertently issued to one of the claimants, after due notice to the governor of the contest and without the fault of the other claimant, the commission is not conclusive.—Hardin v. Colquitt, 63 Ga. 588.

[e] (Ill. 1857) A justice of the peace is not obliged to pass over money, collected by him while in office, to his successor.—Warren County v. Jeffrey, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 329.

[f] (Ill. 1884) Under Acts 1847, c. 51, § 17, providing that, before proceedings in a justice court can be used in another county, the county clerk shall certify that the justice was at the time a justice of the peace duly commissioned, the certificate of a justice that certain commissioners appointed to survey and locate a road were fully sworn before him is not, without other proof, admissible in evidence out of the justice's county.—Crossett v. Owens, 110 Ill. 378.

[g] (Ill. 1890) On a petition in quo warranto charging defendant with unlawfully exercising the powers of a police magistrate and justice of the peace in East St. Louis, in St. Clair county, a plea setting up that defendant was a duly elected and qualified police magistrate of the village of New Brighton, in St. Clair county, is good on demurrer, as such officer could exercise certain duties of his office through the entire county.—People v. Wyatt, 34 Ill. App. 454.

[h] (Ind. 1835) In trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded in justification a judgment and execution of a justice of the peace. Held, that the official character of the justice must be proved.—Hunter v. Harris, 4 Blackf. 126.

[i] (Ind. 1884) Upon the election of A., B., and C. as justices of the peace, A. qualified, B. failed to, and C., who had resigned a similar position, was appointed to fill the vacancy left by B., and qualified and kept the books B. had been using. Held that, upon B.'s qualifying, he was entitled to the books retained by C.—Morris v. State, 94 Ind. 565.

[j] (Ky. 1816) The recommendation by the county court of a person, as a member of their body, as a proper person to fill the office of sheriff, is not conclusive that he was a justice at that time, as against persons not parties to such recommendation.—Gilbert v. Huston, 16 Ky. (Litt. Sel. Cas.) 223.

[k] (Me. 1851) Where there are several persons in a town, each holding the office of a justice of the peace, it is not in conflict with any constitutional right that one of them should be selected by the voters of the town to exercise the powers of that office within the town, exclusively of the others, or that the one so selected should be vested with some superadded powers. The person thus selected derives his powers, not from the choice of the town, but from his previous appointment as justice of the peace.—State v. Coombs, 32 Me. 526.

[l, m] (N. J. 1844) Proof that a party acted as, and exercised the office of, a justice of the peace, is sufficient evidence of his being one, without producing his appointment or commission.—Conover v. Solomon, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 295.

[n] (Pa. 1851) Under Act April 21, 1846, justices of the peace or aldermen are bound to deliver over their dockets and papers to their successors in office, where the vacation arises from removal out of the district, ward, or township, or from any other cause; and the representatives of a deceased magistrate are also bound to deliver the docket of such deceased alderman to the person elected as his successor.—Regle v. Nugent, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 297.

[o] (Pa. 1863) A justice of the peace whose term of office has expired cannot be summarily compelled to deliver over his docket to his successor in office by an order of court, on petition and rule to show cause.—In re Baker, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 440.

[p] (Pa. 1895) Where an alderman elected for one ward moves his office into another ward, and holds court there, the remedy of the alderman whose ward is thus invaded is by injunction, not by quo warranto or writ of prohibition.—Wright v. Millar (Com. Pl.) 1 Lack. Leg. N. 346.

[q] (Tenn. 1871) A presentment for assuming to be a justice of the peace without being legally qualified must show wherein the want of qualification consists.—Daniel v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 257.

[r] (Tenn. 1873) The act of 1873 to provide justices of the peace with the statutes, etc., does not intend to replace lost copies thereof.—Perkins v. Gibbs, 60 Tenn. (1 Baxt.) 171.

§ 18. —— Collateral attack.

[a] (Ga. 1871) The official acts of a justice of peace de facto cannot be attacked collaterally by the parties to a suit on the ground that his appointment was not authorized by law.—Pool v. Perdue, 44 Ga. 454.

[b] (Ill. 1845) A suit commenced before a person assuming to act as a justice of the peace, and appealed to the circuit court, will not be dismissed on motion and affidavit showing that he was not duly qualified; and his right to act cannot be collaterally examined in such a case.—Culbertson v. City of Galena, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 129.

[c] (Ind. 1884) The title of a justice of the peace to his office, held by appointment under color of law, cannot be questioned in a suit to enjoin the collection of a judgment rendered by him.—Baker v. Wambaugh, 99 Ind. 312.

[d] (La. 1881) A prisoner cannot, in an application for a writ of habeas corpus, question the legality of the title to office of the magistrate who committed him, where the magistrate is the regular incumbent de facto, and the tribunal one of recognized legal existence and competency.—State v. Pertsdorf, 33 La. Ann. 1411.

[e] (Me. 1861) In a suit on a poor debtor's bond, where the defense was that the debtor had performed one of its alternative conditions by taking the oath required, evidence that the justice who issued the notification to the creditor was at the time he was commissioned a minor, and not eligible to the office, was rightfully excluded.—Hooper v. Goodwin, 48 Me. 79.

[f] (Mass. 1861) The validity of the appointment of one who holds a commission as justice of the peace, and has taken the oaths of office, cannot be inquired into in the superior court, on a motion to dismiss an action which was originally made returnable before him.—Coolidge v. Brigham, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 333.

[g] (Mich. 1865) The actual legal right of a justice of the peace to his office cannot be collaterally tried in a suit by third parties on a judgment rendered by him.—Facey v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 527.

[h] (Mich. 1877) On habeas corpus, the court cannot inquire into the title of the office of the committing magistrate.—In re Corrigan, 37 Mich. 66.

[i] (Mich. 1891) Under How. Ann. St. § 745, which provides that, in case of the temporary disability of one of the elder justices of the peace to act on the township board, "one of the remaining justices," on being notified by such board, shall act thereon, the board cannot question the election or qualification of two justices who have acted and been recognized as such justices for over two years.—Grondin v. Logan, 88 Mich. 247, 50 N. W. 130.

[j] (Mont. 1880) The title of a de facto officer to his office cannot be inquired into collaterally, as, for instance, a de facto justice of the peace in a habeas corpus proceeding.—Ex parte Parks, 3 Mont. 426.

[k] (Neb. 1884) The jurisdiction of a justice in a criminal case cannot be attacked on the ground that he is not entitled to the office, since his acts are valid as an officer de facto; nor can his title to the office be the subject of collateral attack in habeas corpus proceedings for the release of a person by him convicted.—In re Johnson, 15 Neb. 512, 19 N. W. 594.

[l] (N. J. 1882) Whether a justice of the peace was such officer at the time of the rendition of a judgment purporting to be by him as such justice cannot be collaterally inquired into, for such question can only be raised by making him a party to a suit to determine it.—Frichnicht v. Hulsaidt, 6 N. J. Law J. 57.

[m] (N. Y. 1848) It is not proper, on habeas corpus, to inquire into the question whether the magistrate who issued the warrant for the arrest of the petitioner, acting as a police justice de facto, under color of an election, in pursuance of an act of the legislature, was rightfully in office.—In re Wakker, 3 Barb. 162.

[o] (N. Y. 1867) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, while holding over after his term of office had expired, but before that of his successor commenced, cannot be impeached collaterally. The office is continuing in its nature, and, as he was in undisputed possession under apparent authority of law, his title can only be questioned in a proceeding directly involving that issue.—Read v. City of Buffalo, 4 Abb. Dec. 22.

[p] (N. C. 1892) Defendant cannot collaterally impeach the election of the officers of the town in order to question the authority of the mayor, who issued the warrant on which he was arrested, since an acting mayor, whose judicial authority and official character are recognized by the court to which the record is certified, and by the constable and people of the town, is at least a de facto officer, and as such may lawfully take cognizance of any offense which is within his jurisdiction.—State v. Davis, 111 N. C. 729, 16 S. E. 540.

[q] (Ohio, 1881) The authority of a magistrate who was an officer de factor cannot be collaterally attacked.—Caldwell v. High (Dist. Ct.) 6 Wkly Law Bul. 201.

[r] (Ohio, 1892) Questions as to the constitutionality of the appointment of an acting police judge, appointed by the mayor of a city, under Rev. St. § 1802, authorizing such appointment, are collateral issues, which cannot be raised or decided at the trial, nor is the decision thereon a subject of review.—Molitor v. State, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 263.

[s] (Ohio, 1892) In such a case, the proper manner of trying such issues is by quo warranto.—Molitor v. State, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 263.

[t] (Vt. 1842) In a suit to which he is not a party, his appointment or eligibility cannot be tried or determined, and it is therefore no ground of a plea in abatement as to the jurisdiction that the magistrate, at the time of issuing the writ and trying the case, was a postmaster.—McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 428, 39 Am. Dec. 231.

[u] (Vt. 1848) Where a person, acting as justice of the peace, holds a commission for that office from the governor under the seal of the state, the court will not go behind that commission to inquire whether he had been duly appointed to that office by the general assembly of the state, or not.—Overseer of the Poor of Town of Norwich v. Yarrington, 20 Vt. 473.

[v] (Vt. 1889) In an action before a justice of the peace, who was appointed by the governor to fill a vacancy, and was regularly commissioned, defendant cannot object that the justice was ineligible to the office as not being a naturalized citizen, as he is a de facto justice.—Fancher v. Stearns, 61 Vt. 616, 18 Atl. 455.

[w] (Wash. 1896) Where a justice of the peace has been appointed by the proper authorities, in prosecutions before him his qualifications for the office cannot be questioned.—State v. Fountain, 14 Wash. 236, 44 Pac. 270.

[x] (Wis. 1842) The qualifications of a justice and his right to office cannot be inquired into upon an appeal from a judgment rendered by him.—Tolle v. Stone, 1 Pin. 230.

[y] (Wis. 1874) Even if the provision of a city charter by which a justice of the peace has been appointed by the mayor and council to act as police justice were invalid, he would be still a de facto police justice, and his right to exercise the office could not be determined in a collateral proceeding by habeas corpus at the suit of one convicted of crime in police court.—State v. Bartlett, 35 Wis. 287.

[z] (Wis. 1887) It is no objection to the jurisdiction of the circuit court in a bastardy proceeding that the village justice of the peace, before whom the preliminary examination was had, was elected by the voters both of the village (an independent organization) and of the town in which it was situated. The validity of appointment or election of an officer de facto will not be inquired into collaterally.—Baker v. State, 69 Wis. 32, 33 N. W. 52.

[zz] (Wis. 1894) Prohibition will not issue, on relation of one sued before one appointed by the city council to fill a vacancy as justice of the peace, on the ground that the council had no power to appoint, since, the office existing de jure, the appointee is a de facto officer.—In re Radl, 86 Wis. 645, 57 N. W. 1105, following State v. McMartin (1889) 42 Minn. 30, 43 N. W. 572.

[a] (N. Y. 1869) Under Laws 1862, c. 337, § 1, providing that justices of the peace of a city should each nominate, and with consent of the common council appoint, one clerk for each court, the concurrence of the mayor was requisite to a valid appointment.—Cassidy v. City of Brooklyn, 60 Barb. 105.

[b] (N. Y. 1869) Acts 1868, c. 689, § 2, which authorized the election of an additional justice in a city and conferred upon him jurisdiction of all civil and criminal cases which was possessed by the justices then in office, and all laws governing the justices in said city should apply to and be binding upon the justice, but made no provision for a clerk. Held, that the power to nominate or appoint a clerk could not be extended to the justice by construction, notwithstanding the other justices had the power to nominate a clerk and appoint him with the consent of the common council.—Cassidy v. City of Brooklyn, 60 Barb. 105, affirmed (1871) 47 N. Y. 659.

[c] (N. Y. 1881) Laws 1873, c. 538, which provides that the police clerks to be appointed under it shall keep records similar to those mentioned in the act of 1867, but omits any provision for the appointment of or specification of duties for a record clerk, takes away from the police justices of the city of New York the authority given under Laws 1867, c. 861, § 2, to appoint a record clerk of the city of New York to take charge of specified records in each police court.—Fitch v. City of New York, 9 Daly, 514, affirmed (1882) 88 N. Y. 500.

[a] (Ind. 1876) The office of city clerk is not an office "under the state," within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 16; and one who has been elected to the office of justice of the peace, and has qualified and entered upon the duties of that office, is not ineligible to the office of city clerk during the term for which he was elected justice of the peace.—Mohan v. Jackson, 52 Ind. 599.

[b] (Mass.) A bastardy process is not to be dismissed by the court of common pleas because the attorney appearing there for the complainant is the justice before whom the sworn accusation was made.—(1857) Reardon v. Russell, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 366; (1861) Kenney v. Driscoll, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 210.

[c] (Neb. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. § 1101, which declares that "it shall not be lawful for any justice of the peace to purchase any judgment on any docket in his possession," prohibits the purchase by a justice of fees earned by a constable in an action, which are taxed as costs therein, and constitute part of the judgment.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Bohman, 31 Neb. 131, 47 N. W. 637.

[d] (N. J. 1844) If a judge or justice of the peace is the bona fide assignee of a book account or other chose in action not assignable in law, he may appear in person and prosecute the same before a justice of the peace in the name of his assignor without incurring the penalty given by Elmers' Dig. p. 287.—Conover v. Solomon, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 295.

[e] (N. J. 1844) But such an officer cannot appear and prosecute or defend for another person in a court for the trial of small causes by virtue of a power of attorney without incurring the penalty, unless his constituent is absent from and resident out of the state; nor even then, unless the power is to attend to the general concerns of his constituent.—Conover v. Solomon, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 295.

[f] (N. Y. 1886) It is no defense, in an action upon a promissory note, that plaintiff, a justice of the peace, bought the same for the purpose of bringing an action thereon in the supreme court.—Hoag v. Weston, 10 Civ. Proc. R. 92.

[g] (N. C. 1887) Code, § 27, forbidding any attorney at law or justice of the peace to practice law in any court of the county wherein he holds the office of county commissioner or justice, applies as well to justices who are not licensed attorneys as to those who are.—State v. Bryan, 98 N. C. 644, 4 S. E. 522.

§ 21. Duties as conservators of the peace.

[a] (U. S. 1829) A justice of the peace in the city of Washington, D. C., has authority, under the charter of May 4, 1812, and section 7 of the by-law of December 16, 1812, to require a common prostitute to give security for her good behavior, and has jurisdiction of a suit upon the bond given therefor; the penalty not exceeding $20.—Patten v. Washington, Fed. Cas. No. 10,813 [3 Cranch, C. C. 654].

[b] (Ala. 1854) A justice of the peace has authority in cases of emergency to appoint a special constable (Code, § 712), and he must himself judge of such emergency.—Noles v. State, 24 Ala. 672.

[c] (Ala. 1855) Section 33 of the judiciary act of 1789 (1 Stat. 91), empowering justices of the peace to arrest and commit offenders against the criminal laws of the United States, is not unconstitutional, in that it makes such justices of the peace, in the exercise of the power conferred upon them, officers of the United States within Const. U. S. art. 2, § 2, cl. 2, providing for the appointment of officers of the United States by the president or under authority conferred by congress.—Ex parte Gist, 26 Ala. 156.

[d] (Mich. 1876) A magistrate, as conservator of the peace, has the same power to order into custody an insane man who is committing a breach of the peace in his presence as one who is sane. Though an insane person may not be guilty of crime, he may lawfully be prevented from doing harm.—Lott v. Sweet, 33 Mich. 308.

[e] (Mich. 1889) Loc Act No. 435, Sess. Laws 1887, conferring on the police justice of Bay City exclusive and original jurisdiction to hear and determine all criminal cases within the limits of said city which had theretofore been cognizable by justices of the peace, is void, in so far as it deprives justices of the peace of jurisdiction as conservators of the peace, under Const. 1850, art. 6, § 19, which declares that justices of the peace shall be conservators of the peace within their several jurisdictions.—Averell v. Perrott, 74 Mich. 296, 41 N. W. 929.

[f] (N. Y. 1837) Justices of the peace, presiding at town meetings, may make a parol order for the removal of a disorderly person.—Parsons v. Brainard, 17 Wend. 522.

[g] (N. Y. 1866) A magistrate, before whom property taken under a warrant for grand larceny was brought, had a right to order its delivery to the person from whom it was alleged to have been stolen, if, on examination of the accused, the magistrate adjudged that it was so stolen.—Houghton v. Bachman, 47 Barb. 388.

[h] (S. C. 1834) A justice of the peace may issue a warrant for abusive words in relation to his office and threats of personal injury to himself, and require the party to give security for his good behavior.—Edmondson v. Frean, 2 Hill, Law, 410.

[i] (Vt. 1839) A justice of the peace has authority to issue a warrant to apprehend offenders and commit them for trial.—State Treasurer v. Rice, 11 Vt. 339.

[a] (Ala.) A justice of the peace, who has collected money in his official capacity, cannot retain it to satisfy a debt due him in his private capacity.—(1831) Prewett v. Marsh, 1 Stew. & P. 17, 21 Am. Dec. 645; (1845) Lowrie v. Stewart, 8 Ala. 163; (1846) Spence v. Mitchell, 9 Ala. 744.

[b] (Cal. 1850) By the Mexican law, alcaldes and justices of the peace in the department of California, as well as some others, were empowered to perform the functions of judges of first instance in those districts in which there were no judges of first instance.—Mena v. Le Roy, 1 Cal. 216.

[c] (Ill. 1825) At common law a justice may authorize any person he pleases to be his officer; and under Act March 22, 1819, a magistrate can appoint a constable in a criminal case, where there is a probability that the criminal will escape.—Flack v. Ankeny, 1 Ill. (Breese) 187.

[d] (Ill. 1878) The duty of a justice of the peace under Rev. St. p. 638, § 5, to pay over all moneys "collected on any judgment or otherwise by virtue of his office," exists regardless of the time when the claims were received by him for collection.—People v. Price, 3 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 15.

[e] (Ind. 1853) When a statute confers a new power on a justice of the peace, he must proceed in the mode prescribed by the statute.—Bargis v. State, 4 Ind. 126.

[f] (Ind. 1857) 2 Rev. St. p. 500, § 21, requiring every justice of the peace to pay over to the county treasurer all money he may have received on account of fines for the benefit of the common schools, includes all fines, no matter for what offenses they were assessed.—Alexander v. State, 9 Ind. 337.

[g] (Ind. 1857) 2 Rev. St. p. 500, § 21, requiring justices of the peace to pay over to the county treasurer all moneys received on account of fines, was not repealed by Act March, 1855, amendatory thereof.—Alexander v. State, 9 Ind. 337.

[h] (Me. 1827) Where a statute confers certain powers upon, or requires certain duties to be performed by, any two justices quorum unus, it is only necessary that one should be of the quorum.—Gilbert v. Sweetser, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 483.

[i] (Me. 1835) Under St. 1833, c. 85, two justices of the peace and of the quorum have not the power to imprison a person for refusing to give his deposition in perpetuam memoriam.—In re Pierce, 10 Me. (4 Shep.) 255.

[j] (N. C. 1891) Code, § 1159, authorizing two justices of the peace to sit together in criminal proceedings, and giving them the same powers and duties as are given to any justice sitting alone, was authorized by Const. art. 4, § 12, empowering the general assembly to allot and distribute the judicial power and jurisdiction which does not pertain to the supreme court in such manner as they may deem best.—State v. Flowers, 109 N. C. 841, 13 S. E. 718.

[k] (Tex. 1860) A justice, receipting for a note for collection in his official capacity, does not thereby become a collecting agent, and is not bound to cause a suit to be instituted in another precinct.—White v. Goffe, 24 Tex. 658.

Du Bois (Sess.) 26 N. Y. Supp. 895.

[d] (N. C. 1892) Code, § 906, making it the duty of a justice of the peace to furnish the clerk of the superior court at each term with a list containing the "names and offenses of all parties" tried in criminal proceedings and finally disposed of by him, does not require him to make any return to the clerk where no such proceedings have been had.—State v. § 24. In general.

[a] (Cal. 1892) Pen. Code, § 770, provides that from a judgment of removal from office "an appeal may be taken to the supreme court in the same manner as from a judgment in a civil action; but, until such judgment is reversed, defendant is suspended from his office. Pending the appeal, the office must be filled as in case of a vacancy." Held that, where a judgment removing a justice of the peace from office for willful misconduct therein is reversed on appeal, the justice is entitled to his salary during the period of removal, though another has filled the vacancy and been compensated therefor.—Ward v. Marshall, 96 Cal. 155, 30 Pac. 1113, 31 Am. St. Rep. 198.

[b] (Iowa, 1887) Under Code 1873, § 3806, which requires fees of justices in criminal cases where the prosecution fails to be certified by the justice and verified by affidavit, a police judge or justice of the peace cannot certify and collect from the county fees earned by his predecessor, but not certified to by such predecessor.—Labour v. Polk County, 70 Iowa, 568, 31 N. W. 873.

[c] (Ky. 1895) In an action against a city to recover salary as police judge it appeared that before appointment to such office an ordinance was passed reducing the salary from $900 to $600; that then, and for four months afterwards, plaintiff was mayor of such city, and had actual knowledge of such ordinance; that it was his duty to see that the ordinances were executed; that he was appointed judge at the end of his term as mayor; and that such ordinance was not published until after such appointment. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to the higher salary on the ground that the constitution forbids a change in salary during the term, and that such ordinance was not in force when he was appointed, because not published; since it was his duty as mayor to see that it was published.—City of Paris v. Webb, 33 S. W. 87.

[d] (Nev. 1881) Under section 17 of the salary act, the right of every justice of the peace, elected or appointed after the act took effect, to salary or fees, should be determined by reference to the number of legal votes cast at the last general election preceding the time when the claim for his salary is preferred.—State v. Storey County Com'rs, 16 Nev. 92.

[e] (N. H. 1855) The police justice of the city of Manchester furnished a room for keeping the files and transacting a portion of the business of the police court. Held, that he could recover rent for the same. He also furnished a seal for the police court. Held, that he was entitled to pay therefor.—City of Manchester v. Potter, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 409.

[f] (N. H. 1877) Under a statute authorizing the establishment of a police court in any town which by vote provides "a suitable compensation, not less than $100 per annum, for the justice," a vote of a town directing "that the compensation of such justice shall be the fees established by law" is to be construed as adopting the statutory minimum of compensation.—State v. Varrell, 58 N. H. 148.

[g] (N. H. 1886) Gen. St. c. 196, § 1, provides that "any town may by vote provide suitable compensation, not less than $100 per annum, for the justice of the police court therein," and section 14, subsequently enacted, provides that "any town may rescind their vote establishing an annual salary for a police justice, in which case the justice and special justice of said court may receive and hold all fees accruing to them, to their own use." Held, that where such vote has been rescinded the justice is only entitled to the fees, though they amount to less than $100 per annum.—Hill v. Town of Pittsfield, 64 N. H. 78, 5 Atl. 910.

[h] (N. Y. 1843) A justice of the peace was impeached, tried, and acquitted, and then claimed an allowance against the county for the expenses of his defense. The board of supervisors allowed the claim. Held, that mandamus did not lie to compel the treasurer to pay the claim, inasmuch as the supervisors exceeded their jurisdiction.—People v. Lawrence, 6 Hill, 244.

[i] (N. Y. 1854) By Act 1851 the supervisors were authorized to increase the salaries of the police justices of New York county, which was to be in full for all extra services, and the salaries thus fixed were not to be increased during the term of office of said justices. In 1852 the supervisors fixed the salaries for regular and extra services. In 1853 the supervisors ordered a further compensation to be made the justices for extra services. Held, that the last resolution and order was void.—People v. Edmonds, 19 Barb. 468.

[j] (N. Y. 1857) Laws 1857, c. 344, relating to the district courts of the city of New York and providing for an increase of the salary of the justices of such courts, renders the corporation of the city of New York liable to an action for an increase of salary given by the act, where the legislature, under the act executing it, gave the corporation authority to raise money for the payment of the increase.—Green v. City of New York, 5 Abb. Prac. 503.

[k] (N. Y. 1874) Laws 1860, c. 508, § 26, provided that for certain additional duties imposed on the police justices of a city the common council or board of supervisors in such city or county might increase the compensation of such officers, which they did. Under 2 Laws 1869, c. 876, § 11, the common council was prohibited from increasing the salaries of persons then in office, except as provided by acts passed by their predecessors. Held, that a resolution of the common council in December of that year, increasing the salaries of the police justices, was invalid.—Smith v. City of New York, 8 Thomp. & C. 160.

[m] (N. Y. 1893) Laws 1875, c. 283, authorizing the town auditors of Middletown, Richmond county, to audit claims of justices of the peace up to $300 which had accrued subsequent to the abolition of the office of police justice, did not reinstate the section so repealed.—People v. Marsh, 69 Hun, 123, 23 N. Y. Supp. 728.

[n] (N. Y. 1893) Laws 1866, c. 59, § 2, limiting the compensation of a justice of the peace in Richmond county to $300 a year, was repealed by Laws 1866, c. 692, fixing the fees of the justices of the peace for the state, and providing (section 11) that all inconsistent laws were repealed, except those locally applicable to villages and cities.—People v. Marsh, 69 Hun, 123, 23 N. Y. Supp. 728.

[o] (N. Y. 1894) On an application for mandamus to compel the recognition of relator as police justice of a village, the court has no power to fix his compensation where his fees are by statute made a charge on the village, to be audited and allowed as other village charges.—People v. Village of Wappinger's Falls, 83 Hun, 130, 31 N. Y. Supp. 758, affirming judgment (1894) 9 Misc. Rep. 246, 30 N. Y. Supp. 265, and affirmed (1895) 144 N. Y. 616, 39 N. E. 641.

[p] (Or. 1874) Section 160 of the special act incorporating Portland, providing that the police judge shall receive no other compensation for his services than a salary fixed by the common council, does not preclude him from receiving fees as a justice of the peace, when acting as such under the authority of sections 155 and 156.—City of Portland v. Denny, 5 Or. 160.

[q] (Pa. 1893) Justices of the peace and constables are public officers, within Const. art. 3, § 13, providing that no law shall increase or diminish the salary or emoluments of an officer after his election or appointment.—Rupert v. Chester County (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 342, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 688.

[s] (Tenn. 1881) A justice of the peace does not forfeit his claim for costs by neglecting upon the preliminary hearing of a felony to take down the testimony in writing as required by law.—Winters v. State, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 254.

[t] (Tex. 1890) A justice of the peace is not a "county officer" within the meaning of Rev. St. art. 705, providing that the county commissioners shall provide and maintain offices for the county officers, and he cannot maintain an action to recover from the county moneys expended for office rent and furnishings.—Reynolds v. Tarrant County, 78 Tex. 289, 14 S. W. 580.

[u] (Wash. 1891) The charter of the city of S. provided that the city might designate one of the justices of the peace residing therein to act as police magistrate, and might regulate the compensation of its officers, "except when otherwise provided." Held, that the phrase, "except when otherwise provided," referred to the general statutes, and not to the ordinances of the city which fixed the compensation of the police magistrate, and that he was entitled only to the fees allowed by statute to other justices of the peace.—Furth v. McIntosh, 2 Wash. St. 108, 26 Pac. 79.

[w] (Wash. 1892) Const. art. 4, § 10, providing that "in incorporated cities or towns having more than 5,000 inhabitants justices of the peace shall receive such salary as may be provided by law, and shall receive no fees for their own use," does not apply to cities which had less than 5,000 by the last federal census, but which had more than 5,000 by a census taken under Code 1881, § 2754.—Rohde v. Seavey, 4 Wash. 91, 29 Pac. 768.

[x] (Wyo. 1894) Sess. Laws 1890–91, c. 55, provides fees for justices of the peace in precincts having less than 1,500 population, and salaries in precincts having a larger population. Held, where it is determined, after the election of a justice, that the population of the precinct at the time of his election was 1,500, and it is voted that he have a salary from a certain time during his term, which amounts to more than the fees which he would have received, his emoluments are not increased after election, in violation of Const. art. 3, § 32, as the population at the time of his election entitled him to the salary.—Davis v. Sweetwater County Com'rs, 4 Wyo. 477, 35 Pac. 467.

[y] (Wyo. 1894) Sess. Laws 1890–91, c. 55, providing fees for justices of the peace in precincts having less than 1,500 population, and salaries in precincts having a larger population, declares that the population shall be ascertained from the last census, and that where this cannot be done the presumption shall be, till overcome by evidence satisfactory to the county commissioners, that the population is less than 1,500. Held, that the determination of commissioners, from the last census and the registration of voters, that a precinct contained 1,500 population, would not be disturbed, in the absence of proof that it erred.—Davis v. Sweetwater County Com'rs, 4 Wyo. 477, 35 Pac. 467.

§ 25. Particular proceedings and services.

[a] (Iowa, 1878) Code 1873, § 3804, regulating justices' charges, refers to fees. There can be no costs for the collection of a debt, unless there is a suit.—Pennington v. Beedy, 50 Iowa, 85.

[b] (Ky. 1845) Though a justice of the peace is not bound to go to distant parts of his county at the request of individuals to take acknowledgments of deeds, without being paid for his time and trouble, yet, if he does go without stipulating for compensation for his trouble as an individual, he cannot afterwards charge for it as official dues.—Bristow v. Sullivan, 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 143.

[c] (Mich. 1845) Sess. Laws 1840, p. 186, § 14, allowing to "clerks" and certain other officers therein named one dollar per day "for attending on subpœna with bills, records, or other written evidence," does not apply to a justice of the peace in attendance with his docket.—Prentiss v. Webster, 2 Doug. 5.

[d] (Nev. 1895) Under Act March 12, 1885 (consolidating certain county offices, and fixing the salaries thereof), § 11, providing that the salaries named "shall be in full for all services and all ex-officio services required of the officers herein named," a justice of the peace in Storey county, who is ex officio registry agent thereof, is not entitled to the compensation provided for in Act March 5, 1869, § 12, to be paid registry agents, in addition to the justice's salary provided for in the act of 1885.—Lobenstein v. Storey County, 22 Nev. 376, 40 Pac. 1016.

[e] (N. J. 1881) Justices' fees are not recoverable from the county on an illegal and void commitment to imprisonment in the county jail.—Fairbanks v. Sheridan, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 484.

[f] (N. Y. 1849) A special justice of the city of New York, receiving an annual salary, is not entitled to extra compensation for services performed on Sunday.—Palmer v. City of New York, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 318.

[g] (Pa. 1827) A magistrate, in binding over a defendant in a criminal action, has no right to take from him any fees beyond those for the recognizance, the commitment, and the supersedeas, and then only if such services be actually performed.—Clark v. Alderman, 3 Clark, 414.

[h] (Pa. 1831) By the fee bill of February 22, 1821, the justice is only entitled to the fee of 12½ cents for entering a discontinuance in a case of assault and battery; and where, on a settlement by the parties, he receives 25 cents, the penalty may be recovered.—Wallace v. Coates, 1 Ashm. 110.

[i] (Pa. 1895) Where several persons are charged with a criminal offense, the justice may, in his discretion, issue separate warrants for each, and where no abuse of discretion appears he will be entitled to a fee for each warrant.—Commonwealth v. Ruski (Quart. Sess.) 1 Lack. Leg. N. 396, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 92.

[j] (Tenn. 1877) Code, § 5062, entitled "Proceedings before Committing Magistrates," provides that evidence taken shall be reduced to writing. Section 4550 fails to fix the magistrate's fees for taking such testimony, but provides, "for any other services required by law in criminal cases, the same fees allowed by law in similar services in civil cases." Held, that for taking down the testimony the magistrate should be allowed the same fees allowed for taking depositions in civil cases.—State v. Anthony, 68 Tenn. (9 Baxt.) 227.

[k] (Wis. 1891) A justice of the peace is a local officer, and the matter of his compensation for services which he performs for the county is within the power of county boards to determine.—Ryan v. Outagamie County, 80 Wis. 336, 50 N. W. 340.

§ 26. —— Trials, examinations, and judgments.

[a] (Ark. 1890) Under Mansf. Dig. § 4068, providing that in cases before a justice of the peace, where plaintiff's claim is not founded on a written instrument, signed by defendant, and the latter fails to appear, the justice shall hear the allegations and proof of the plaintiff, and render judgment for the amount to which plaintiff is entitled, the proceeding in such a case is a trial within the meaning of section 3259, allowing justices a certain fee "for each trial in a civil case."—Reigler v. Quinn, 54 Ark. 37, 14 S. W. 1103.

[b] (Cal. 1864) Revenue Act 1861, § 46, providing that justices of the peace shall be paid no fees for trying actions before them for the collection of delinquent taxes, "unless the same be collected from the defendants," is not unconstitutional.—Miner v. Solano County, 26 Cal. 115.

[c] (Cal. 1867) Where the plaintiff, after summons had been served on the return day without other proceedings, directed a justice of the peace to enter judgment on discontinuance, it was held that no such trial was begun or entered upon as, under Act Feb. 6, 1855, regulating the fees of justices of the peace in San Francisco, would entitle him to a fee for "a trial and proceedings subsequent thereto."—Anderson v. Pennie, 32 Cal. 265.

[d] (Ill. 1869) Under provisions of Laws 1867, p. 113, fixing the fees of justices of the peace, a police magistrate is not authorized to charge a fee of two dollars per day for the trial of a cause in garnishment proceedings against a bank.—Town of Carlyle v. Sharp, 51 Ill. 71.

[e] (Iowa, 1872) Under Laws 1860, c. 1, § 5, amending Revision 1860, § 4152, a justice of the peace is entitled, both in civil and criminal cases, to a fee for continuances or adjournments, and in criminal cases he is also entitled to the cost of stationery used.—Evans v. Story County, 35 Iowa, 126.

[f] (Iowa, 1881) Under Code 1873, § 3804, giving to justices of the peace "for entering judgment by default 50 cents, * * * for trial of all causes $1," in case of judgment by default the justice is entitled to charge both a trial fee and a fee for entering judgment.—Shaw v. Kendig, 57 Iowa, 390, 10 N. W. 771.

[g] (Iowa, 1890) Code 1873, § 3804, provides that the fees of justices of the peace for the trial of criminal causes shall be one dollar for each six hours or fraction thereof; section 2739 defines a trial to be the judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or of fact, in the cause; and sections 4348, 4349, declare that in a criminal case an issue of law arises upon a demurrer to the indictment, an issue of fact on a plea of not guilty, or of former conviction or acquittal. Held, that where a justice pronounces judgment on a plea of guilty, there being no objection to the information, and no evidence introduced, there is no trial, and he is not entitled to such fee.—Mathews v. Clayton County, 79 Iowa, 510, 44 N. W. 722.

[h] (Ky.) Since the compensation of recorder of the city of Lexington is by law the same as that of a justice of the peace, under Gen. St. p. 467, fixing the compensation of justices of the peace at two dollars per day "for presiding at examining courts in felony cases," the recorder is not entitled to two dollars for each of such cases, when there is more than one examining trial held by him on the same day.—(1883) Auditor v. Kinkead, 80 Ky. 596, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 544. CONTRA, see (1868) Johnson v. Auditor, 67 Ky. (4 Bush) 321.

[i] (Ky. 1889) Gen. St. p. 277, § 7, which enacts that a justice of the peace or other officer, except the county judge, acting as an examining court, shall receive for the first day, as fee for his services, two dollars, and for each day thereafter one dollar, providing that his fees in one case shall not exceed four dollars, allows such an officer fees at the prescribed rate for each case, though more than one examining trial is held on one day.—Hewitt v. Walton, 88 Ky. 633, 11 S. W. 722.

[j] (Me. 1887) The fee of 80 cents to which a trial justice is entitled, under Rev. St. c. 116, § 2, for "the trial of an issue," applies to civil, and not criminal, proceedings.—Knowlton v. Waldo County Com'rs, 79 Me. 164, 8 Atl. 683.

[k] (Mich. 1879) Under a statute allowing the police justice a fee of one dollar for each case, such charge may be made without any reference to the time occupied in the trial; but it cannot be charged in cases dismissed or where a nolle prosequi is entered.—People v. Kent County Sup'rs, 40 Mich. 481.

[l] (Mich. 1882) Under Acts 1881, which give to a justice specific fees for various services in criminal cases, and among others a definite sum for the trial of a case, he is not entitled to such fee where the accused pleads guilty.—Potts v. Jackson County Sup'rs, 47 Mich. 635, 11 N. W. 413.

[m] (Mo. 1890) Although a justice of the peace be recorder of a town, whose ordinances authorize prosecutions for vagrancy before him in that capacity, he is still entitled to fees in prosecutions before him as justice of the peace for vagrancy, under the statute laws of the state.—State v. Heege, 40 Mo. App. 650.

[n] (Neb. 1893) A justice of the peace is not entitled to a fee for entering a default, in addition to that allowed by statute for rendering judgment.—Van Etten v. Selden, 36 Neb. 209, 54 N. W. 261.

[o] (N. H. 1855) Section 16 of the act of 1846 incorporating the city of Manchester provides, among other things, that "all fines and forfeitures, and all costs in criminal prosecutions, which shall be received by or paid into the hands of the justice of said court [the police court], shall be by him accounted for and paid over to the city of Manchester, in the same manner and under the same penalties for neglect as are by law prescribed in the case of justices of the peace; and all costs in such prosecutions, not thus received, shall be made up, taxed, certified, and allowed, and shall be paid and satisfied in like manner as provided by law in cases of justices of the peace"; and the section also fixes a salary for the police justice. Held, that the police justice, under this section, was entitled, in addition to his salary, to his legal costs in those criminal prosecutions in which the costs were not paid by the respondents, but not to costs in cases tried by a special justice of the police court.—City of Manchester v. Potter, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 409.

[p] (N. Y.) Laws 1845, c. 180, § 26, as amended by Laws 1847, c. 455, providing that a warrant issued by a magistrate outside of the town where an offense is committed shall authorize the offender to be taken for trial before a magistrate of the town, and that the magistrate issuing the warrant shall be entitled to no compensation other than for issuing the warrant, is repealed by Code Cr. Proc. §§ 150, 151, 158, 161, 164, providing that the offender be taken before the magistrate issuing the warrant, and such magistrate may recover from the town fees for trial of the offender.—(1888) People v. Board of Auditors (Sup.) 2 N. Y. Supp. 609; (1893) Same v. Board of Auditors of Hamden, 71 Hun, 461, 24 N. Y. Supp. 974.

[s] (Vt. 1890) Acts 1888, No. 37, § 2, entitling the justice or municipal court before whom a prosecution for intoxication is pending to $1.50 for taking the disclosure of the respondent, does not apply to the city court of Burlington; and the judge of that court is entitled to $3 for such service, under the charter of said city, which provides that "in all causes * * * before the city court the city judge shall be entitled to tax and receive double the costs allowed by law to justices of the peace," etc.—Peck v. Powell, 62 Vt. 296, 19 Atl. 227.

[t] (Wis. 1891) Laws 1887, c. 470, § 6a, providing for the arrest and imprisonment of tramps, empowers the county boards to fix a fee to be allowed magistrates in cases of arrest and conviction. Held, that a resolution that no sum exceeding two dollars, in case of arrest and conviction or acquittal, will be allowed, is an effectual exercise of the authority conferred upon the county board.—Ryan v. Outagamie County, 80 Wis. 336, 50 N. W. 340.

§ 27. —— Certificates, transcripts, and recognizances.

[a] (Iowa, 1879) Under Code 1873, § 3804, allowing a justice of the peace a fee of 50 cents for "drawing and approving bond when required in any case," a justice is not entitled to a fee for the approval and filing of an appeal bond prepared by the appellant's attorney.—McKay v. Maloy, 53 Iowa, 33, 3 N. W. 808.

[b] (Iowa, 1889) Code 1873, § 3804, provides that a justice of the peace is entitled to fees "for each official certificate, * * * 25 cents; * * * for making and certifying transcripts, 50 cents." Section 3806 provides that fees "in criminal cases shall be audited and paid out of the county treasury in any case where the prosecution fails, or where such fees cannot be made from the person liable to pay the same; the facts being certified by the justice, and verified by affidavit." A justice made a copy of the entries in his docket in criminal cases in which the prosecution failed or defendants were insolvent, showing who were entitled to fees and the amounts. Plaintiff called these copies "transcripts," and filed them with the county auditor. To each copy was attached a certificate "that the foregoing is a true transcript of costs from my docket, that the items charged are legal, and that the costs enumerated have not been paid." Held, that such copies were not transcripts, within the meaning of section 3804, for which the justice was entitled to a fee of 50 cents each.—Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 312, 43 N. W. 198.

[c] (Iowa, 1889) Neither section 3806, nor section 3843, Code 1873, requiring the statement filed with the auditor to contain a particular account of the fees or other compensation demanded, made it a part of the official duty of a justice to file the statement referred to.—Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 312, 43 N. W. 198.

[d] (Iowa, 1889) Under Code 1873, § 3804, entitling a justice to fees "for each official certificate," the justice was not entitled to fees for the certificates attached to the copies, as they failed to comply with section 3806, which required that the certificate should show that the fees claimed were taxed in criminal cases when the prosecution failed, or that the fees could not be made from the persons liable to pay them.—Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 312, 43 N. W. 198.

[e] (Iowa, 1889) Even if the certificates had complied with the provisions of the statute, the justice would not be entitled to recover against the county, where he failed to show that they were furnished at the request of the county; the presumption being that they were prepared and filed for the justice's own benefit, to enable him to collect fees to which he was entitled.—Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 312, 43 N. W. 198.

[f] (N. H. 1851) The certificates of attestation on the various copies of a case on appeal are not to be regarded as parts of the copies for which the magistrate is entitled to compensation on the basis of the number of pages composing the entire copy of the case allowed by Rev. St. c. 229, § 8.—Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 9.

[g] (N. H. 1851) Under Rev. St. c. 229, § 8, providing that the certifying officer shall be allowed a certain fee for every certificate on a copy of a whole case, the magistrate is entitled to the fee only for one certificate on a copy of the whole case, though he appends certificates to the various copies composing the case; a single attestation being sufficient.—Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 9.

[h] (N. J. 1827) The court's fee on the return of the appeal is 37 cents.—Carpenter v. Titus, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 90.

[i] (Pa. 1828) On binding over a defendant in a criminal case, a justice is only entitled to demand the fees for the recognizance, commitment, and supersedeas, and then only if such services be actually performed.—Clark v. Alderman, 1 Haz. Reg. 373.

[j] (Pa. 1831) Where the hearing of the parties before a justice in a criminal case, and the binding over of the defendant, take place at the same time, the justice is entitled to but two fees for recognizance,—one for the recognizance in which he binds over the commonwealth's witnesses, and the other for that in which he binds over the party and his bail.—Wallace v. Coates, 1 Ashm. 110.

[k] (Pa. 1892) A magistrate who takes a recognizance before hearing, fixed for a future day, at which defendant is discharged, is not entitled to a fee under Act 1868, § 10, entitling him to a fee for taking a recognizance, "and returning the same to court," and "same fee for services not herein specifically provided for as for similar services."—Young v. Northampton County (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 508.

[l] (Wis. 1891) Where a county board has fixed the fees of magistrates in all cases of the arrest and conviction or acquittal of tramps, they are not entitled to additional fees for filing a certificate of conviction, and for making report to the county board, since such services are performed under the law giving to magistrates jurisdiction for the trial of the offense.—Ryan v. Outagamie County, 80 Wis. 336, 50 N. W. 340.

§ 28. Accounting for and disposition of fees.

[a] (Mo. 1895) Though Acts 1891, p. 175, while providing for the salary of justices, makes no direct provision for the disposition of fees of justices collected by a constable, such fees are to be paid to the city treasurer, and not to the justice.—Spaulding v. Brady, 128 Mo. 653, 31 S. W. 103.

[b] (Pa. 1859) Act May 13, 1856, requiring a magistrate to pay over his receipts to the state treasurer before obtaining a warrant for his salary, is not inconsistent with the ordinance of November 21, 1855, limiting compensation of the justices of the peace or magistrates to the receipts of their respective offices; and hence police magistrates are entitled only to the amount of fees received by them not exceeding $500.—Gibson v. City of Philadelphia, 3 Phila. 411.

§ 29. Recovery of fees.

[a] (Ala. 1884) Code, § 5088, provides that in prosecutions before a justice, where the case is not taken to the circuit or city court, the fees for such services as may be rendered in the case must be taxed by him and collected by execution as in cases tried in the county court; and in all other cases the fees must be certified by him to the court to which the proceedings are removed, and there taxed and collected as other costs. Held, that such statute does not make the fees of justices of the peace arising from criminal cases removed to the circuit court claims against the fine and forfeiture fund, under section 4461, which makes the fees only of officers of court payable in certain cases out of the fund arising from fines and forfeitures.—McPherson v. Boykin, 76 Ala. 602.

[b] (Cal. 1864) Under Revenue Act 1861, § 46, providing that justices of the peace shall be paid no fees for trying actions before them for the collection of delinquent taxes, "unless the same be collected from the defendants," the justice cannot collect the fees from the state, where he does not from the defendants, on the ground that he may do so in order to balance his interest in the case, because of his implied interest in favor of the defendants under the act.—Miner v. Solano County, 26 Cal. 115.

[d] (Kan. 1882) Laws 1881, c. 108, repeals St. 1868, c. 39, § 19, and by implication chapter 83, § 27, so that now fees in misdemeanor cases cognizable by a justice of the peace are payable by the county, when they cannot be collected from the defendant or prosecuting witness, as the case may be.—Labette County Com'rs v. Kiersey, 28 Kan. 40.

[e] (N. H. 1860) An officer who has made an arrest for debt on a writ on which is indorsed the affidavit required by statute, and has at the debtor's request carried him before two justices of the peace to enable him to apply to them for a discharge, is not liable to the justices for their fees.—Stevens v. Merrill, 41 N. H. 309.

[f] (N. H. 1875) Prior to the amendments of 1851, 1855, and 1867, the charter of the city of Manchester provided that all costs in criminal proceedings, not paid to the judge of the police court by the respondents, should be "made up, taxed, certified, and allowed, and paid and satisfied in like manner as provided by law in cases of justices of the peace," thus in effect requiring such costs to be paid by the city to the police judge in addition to his annual salary, unless the prosecution had been directed by the counsel for the state or allowed by the court of common pleas. The amendments named fixed the salary of the police judge at a certain sum, which is declared to be "in full compensation for all services performed by him in behalf of the city * * * and for all fees in actions for which the city would otherwise be responsible." Held, that he is not entitled to recover from the city fees in cases prosecuted by the city in which city officers were complainants, and in which no costs were paid by the respondents.—Upton v. City of Manchester, 56 N. H. 54.

[g] (N. Y. 1823) The services of a justice of the peace in examining and removing paupers from one town to another are not a county, but a town, charge.—Ex parte Bennet, 1 Cow. 204.

[h] (N. Y. 1882) Code, §§ 2993, 3328, do not authorize a justice or constable to require prepayment of fees for services probably, but not necessarily, to be required in the further conduct of the cause.—Powens v. Jones, 10 Abb. N. C. 458.

[i] (N. C. 1890) Code, § 739, which provides for the payment of justice's fees by the county where defendant is acquitted or unable to pay costs on conviction, applies only to such cases wherein the justice acts as examining magistrate, and not to those over which he has final jurisdiction.—Merrimon v. Henderson County Com'rs, 106 N. C. 369, 11 S. E. 267.

[j] (N. D. 1894) By Comp. Laws, § 1420, fixing the fees that justices are "entitled to charge and receive," and section 6184 et seq., requiring justices to report under oath, to the county board, an itemized account of fees in all criminal cases, showing what, if anything, has been paid thereon, the legislature intended that the county should be liable for such unpaid fees.—Barrett v. Stutsman County, 4 N. D. 175, 59 N. W. 964.

[k] (Ohio, 1889) The county commissioners, in the absence of statutory authority for the payment of compensation to justices of the peace for services rendered by them in making abstracts of election returns, have no power to make payment for such services out of the common funds.—State v. Hamilton County Com'rs, 10 Ohio Dec. 467, 21 Wkly. Law Bul. 228.

[l] (Wis. 1885) Rev. St. § 1561, by providing that any person found intoxicated in a public place shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, makes drunkenness a misdemeanor; but it allows cities and villages to provide a different mode of punishment for such offenses. An ordinance of the village of Waukesha of March 19, 1878, provides that all persons found in public places intoxicated, or "guilty of disorderly conduct calculated to disturb the peace," shall be fined by the justice, and in default of payment the offender may be imprisoned. Held, that the offenses named in the ordinance are not misdemeanors, and a prosecution for a violation of the ordinance is merely a civil action, and therefore Rev. St. § 679, which, in effect, makes a county liable to justices of the peace for fees incurred in criminal proceedings, does not apply to cases prosecuted under such ordinance.—Chafin v. Waukesha County, 62 Wis. 463, 22 N. W. 732.

[m] (Wis. 1885) Rev. St. § 679, requires justices of the peace, on or before a certain date, to forward to the county clerk correct statements of all proceedings had before them, during the preceding year, "in which the county shall have become liable for costs," and provides that no officer failing to return such statements shall receive any compensation "from the county" for any service rendered by him in any criminal proceeding during said year. Held that, by implication, a county is liable to one of the justices of the peace for fees accruing to him on prosecutions for drunkenness in violation of section 1561, where he has returned said statements.—Chafin v. Waukesha County, 62 Wis. 463, 22 N. W. 732.

§ 30. —— Rendering account.

[b] (Mich. 1880) Under the statute specifying in detail the fees to which a justice of the peace shall be entitled in any case, the supervisors of a county are entitled to a detailed statement of the fees claimed by a justice, so that they can ascertain if the charges are correct, and their decision on the facts is not reviewable on mandamus from this court.—McDonald v. Muskegon County Sup'rs, 42 Mich. 545, 4 N. W. 266.

[c] (N. Y. 1887) A police magistrate, who fails to make a complete report to the board of county commissioners of money received and disbursed as costs in a particular case, is not entitled to mandamus to compel the board to allow him his fees in such case.—People v. Greene County Sup'rs, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 633.

[d] (Wis. 1885) An account of a justice of the peace for fees and costs in criminal cases, filed with the county clerk for allowance, which is sufficient in form and substance to be allowed in part by the county board, is equally sufficient to be allowed altogether, if the whole amount claimed constitutes a legal charge against the county, and this, either before the board, or in the circuit court on appeal. Such an account is not required to stand the test of a formal complaint for the recovery of money against the county.—Grimm v. Jefferson County, 62 Wis. 572, 22 N. W. 857.

§ 31. —— Actions for fees.

[a] (Mass. 1861) A magistrate may maintain an action against a judgment creditor to recover fees for services rendered in taking a recognizance and attending the examination of a judgment debtor on his application to take the poor debtor's oath, if the same are not paid in advance.—Townsend v. Way, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 245.

[b] (Mass. 1861) In an action by a magistrate to recover fees in taking a recognizance of a judgment debtor on his application to take the poor debtor's oath, it cannot be shown in defense that the recognizance was invalid, if the poor debtor appeared in obedience thereto and submitted to an examination.—Townsend v. Way, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 245.

[c] (Neb. 1893) Under Comp. St. c. 28, § 32, a justice of the peace, before bringing suit for his fees, must, when requested so to do, make and furnish the person to whom the services were rendered an itemized bill of his costs, but such statement may be waived by the person entitled thereto.—Van Etten v. Selden, 36 Neb. 209, 54 N. W. 261.

[d] (N. Y. 1891) The intent of the legislature in passing Act May 26, 1888 (Laws 1888, c. 412), which provides that all payments made by the mayor, etc., of New York City, from January 1, 1870, to September 1, 1871, to persons then police justices, at the rate of salary fixed by the resolution of the common council of December 31, 1869, "are hereby declared to have been lawfully paid, and said resolution is hereby legalized, ratified, and confirmed," was to protect the city officials by legalizing the payments which had been made in mistakenly supposing such resolution to be valid. The act does not confer a right of action upon such police justices to recover for the increased salary given by the resolution.—Bixby v. City of New York, 61 Hun, 490, 16 N. Y. Supp. 364.

[e] (Ohio, 1891) Under Act May 15, 1886, entitled "An act supplementary to section 621 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio," and providing (Rev. St. § 621a) that in all cities of the second grade of the first class each justice of the peace shall receive a certain salary in lieu of all fees, payable out of the city treasury, and (section 621b) that it shall be the duty of each justice in such cities to collect the fees as provided in sections 615 and 621, and pay the same into the city treasury, such justice may during his term of office maintain a civil action to collect the fees, and is not limited to the usual mode of collecting them by execution.—Hart v. Murray, 48 Ohio St. 605, 29 N. E. 576.

[f] (Pa. 1849) The fees of a justice of the peace, appearing by his docket, may be recovered in assumpsit for work and labor, and are earned when judgment is recovered.—Harris v. Christian, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 233.

[g] (Pa. 1849) In assumpsit by a justice of the peace for his fees, his docket is evidence against the defendant of the suits brought for him and the amount of fees earned.—Harris v. Christian, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 233.

(C) LIABILITIES FOR JUDICIAL ACTS.

WHAT ACTS ARE JUDICIAL, § 32.
LIABILITIES IN GENERAL, § 33.
—— ACTS IN CIVIL PROCEEDINGS, § 34.
—— ACTS IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS, § 35.
ACTS WITHOUT JURISDICTION, § 36.
—— IN CIVIL PROCEEDINGS, § 37.
—— IN ATTACHMENT, GARNISHMENT, OR REPLEVIN PROCEEDINGS, § 38.
—— IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS, § 39.
—— ACTS IN GOOD FAITH, § 40.

Liabilities on official bonds for acts in official capacity, see post, § 57.

§ 32. What acts are judicial.

[a] (U. S. 1848) A justice of the peace in the District of Columbia is not liable in damages for judicial acts, and for ministerial acts only in case of intentional or gross negligence; and the justice is not liable for taking a supersedeas on Sunday and from a minor.—Gannon v. Donn, Fed. Cas. No. 5,211 [1 Hayw. & H. 346], 7 D. C. 264.

[b] (Iowa, 1863) Where a justice of the peace approved a replevin bond, one of the sureties in which was a married woman, it was held that this was an error while acting in a judicial capacity, and he was not liable therefor upon his official bond, unless it could be shown that he acted corruptly.—Howe v. Mason, 14 Iowa, 510.

[c] (Mich. 1878) Where an unauthorized party appeared for a defendant in a suit, and the justice entered on his docket that defendant appeared, defendant could not maintain an action against said justice, as what he had done was done by him in his judicial capacity.—Morton v. Crane, 39 Mich. 526.

[d] (Mo. 1860) All the proceedings which a justice is required to perform, from the commencement to the close of a suit, are, it seems, to be held to be of a judicial, rather than of a ministerial, character, so far as to exempt him from any greater responsibility for his acts than that which attaches to other judicial officers.—Wertheimer v. Howard, 30 Mo. 420, 77 Am. Dec. 623.

[e] (N. H. 1870) A justice of the peace is not liable to an action for erroneously refusing to grant an appeal. The granting of an appeal is a judicial act.—Jordan v. Hanson, 49 N. H. 199, 6 Am. Rep. 508.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) A justice, in liquidating the amount of the costs of an inquiry into an alleged encroachment upon a highway upon the application of highway commissioners, acts judicially, and is not liable in a civil suit for taxing illegal costs.—Voorhees v. Martin, 12 Barb. 508.

[g] (N. Y. 1858) Proceedings of a justice on hearing an excuse of a person summoned as a juror for failing to appear in compliance with such summons, and the imposing of a fine, are judicial, and cannot be overhauled in an action against him, but can be reviewed only by further proceedings in the same matter.—Robbins v. Gorham, 26 Barb. 586.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) The justice before whom a person charged with violating a village ordinance is brought, under Laws 1885, c. 385, providing that such magistrate must proceed to hear the charge, and on conviction the accused must be fined according to the ordinance, and be imprisoned until the fine is paid, having acquired jurisdiction, his subsequent acts are judicial, and he is not answerable in damages therefor.—Roderick v. Whitson, 51 Hun, 620, 643, 4 N. Y. Supp. 112.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) Though under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3126, 3207, it is the duty of a justice, on the service of a summons and verified complaint on a defendant, to render judgment without proof on the return day for want of an answer, yet the adjournment of the action over plaintiff's objection is a judicial error, and plaintiff cannot recover damages of the justice, sustained by reason of other creditors securing liens on defendant's property pending the adjournment, whereby plaintiff loses his debt.—Merwin v. Rogers, 6 N. Y. Supp. 882, 15 Daly, 334.

[j] (N. Y. 1891) Where a justice of the peace, holding a court of special sessions, imposes a fine in excess of the amount authorized by law, and orders that defendant stand committed until the fine is paid, and defendant pays the fine to avoid imprisonment, and then demands its return before it is paid into the county treasury, he cannot maintain an action against the justice for the amount so paid, since the justice, as such court of special sessions, acted judicially in imposing the fine.—Burns v. Norton, 59 Hun, 616, 15 N. Y. Supp. 75.

[k] (S. C. 1882) A trial justice entered judgment and issued execution before the five days within which defendant was entitled to move for a new trial, and the property in controversy was delivered accordingly by the constable to the plaintiff. Held, in a suit against the justice, that, if his action was contrary to law, it was in his judicial capacity, and, he not being charged with acting willfully or corruptly, he could not be made to respond in damages.—Abrams v. Carlisle, 18 S. C. 242.

[l] (Tex. 1878) Justices of the peace, who are also members of the county court, and authorized by virtue of their office to approve sheriff's bonds, are not personally liable for refusing to approve such a bond, even if the refusal is willful and malicious; their action in such a case being judicial.—Rains v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 495, 32 Am. Rep. 609.

§ 33. Liabilities in general.

[a] When a justice of the peace has jurisdiction, but errs in exercising it, he is not personally liable to the person injured.
—(Conn. 1790) Ambler v. Church, 1 Root, 211;
(Del. 1854) Bailey v. Wiggins, 5 Har. 462, 60 Am. Dec. 650;
(Ky. 1827) Jarrett v. Higbee, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 546;
(N. J. 1818) Little v. Moore, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 74, 7 Am. Dec. 574;
(N. Y. 1824) Adkins v. Brewer, 3 Cow. 206, 15 Am. Dec. 264;
(S. C. 1819) Reid v. Hood, 2 Nott & McC. 168, 10 Am. Dec. 582.

[b] (Conn. 1836) Where a justice of the peace, on application duly made by the committee of an ecclesiastical society, with a rate bill, regular and valid on the face of it, grants a warrant for the collection of the tax, he is not liable in trespass, although the tax was not legally imposed.—Prince v. Thomas, 11 Conn. 472.

[bb] (D. C. 1848) A justice of the peace is not liable in damages for judicial acts, and is only liable for ministerial acts in case of intentional violation or gross negligence.—Gannon v. Donn, 7 D. C. 264.

[c] (D. C. 1876) Where a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction whatever, and undertakes to act, his acts are coram non judice and void, equally as if he were not a justice. If he has jurisdiction, but errs in exercising it, then his acts are not void, but voidable only. In the former case he is personally liable; in the latter he is not.—Holtzman v. Robinson, 2 MacArthur, 520.

[d] (Iowa, 1856) A justice acting officially with jurisdiction and in good faith, is not answerable in trespass for his acts, though erroneous.—Hetfield v. Towsley, 3 G. Greene, 584.

[e] (Iowa, 1863) A justice of the peace is liable for errors committed by him in a ministerial capacity, but not when acting judicially, unless it be proven that he has acted corruptly.—Howe v. Mason, 14 Iowa, 510.

[f] (Iowa, 1870) The rule of exemption from liability for erroneous judicial acts applies to inferior as well as superior tribunals.—Londegan v. Hammer, 30 Iowa, 508.

[g] (La.) A justice is not answerable civiliter for an error of judgment, if acting within his jurisdiction; otherwise, if acting beyond it.—(1824) Dressen v. Cox, 2 Mart. (N. S.) 631; (1827) Bore v. Bush, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 1; (1830) Buquet v. Watkins, 1 La. 131.

[h] (Me. 1859) No action will lie against a justice for an error of judgment committed while acting honestly within the scope of his jurisdiction.—Downing v. Herrick, 47 Me. 462.

[i] (N. H. 1856) A witness was summoned to appear before a justice of the peace, in a case pending in a court of Maine, and neglected to attend. He was brought before the justice by attachment, and fined, and was imprisoned on the justice's warrant until he paid the fine and costs. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction to take a deposition to be used in another state, and to impose a fine for neglect to appear and give a deposition, upon a witness duly summoned and neglecting to attend, and that a summons to testify was sufficient, and, though the proceedings were irregular, the justice was not liable until they were set aside.—Burnham v. Stevens, 33 N. H. 247.

[ii] (N. J. 1881) No action will lie against a justice, acting in a judicial capacity, for any errors which he may commit in a matter within his jurisdiction.—Loftus v. Fraz, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 667.

[j] (N. Y. 1810) A justice of the peace is not liable to be sued by witnesses for their fees. They must look to the party who subpœnaed them.—Andrews v. Bates, 5 Johns. 351.

[k] (N. Y. 1831) A justice of the peace acting without jurisdiction is a trespasser, but where he has jurisdiction an error of judgment does not subject him to an action, as he is entitled to the protection afforded to a judge of a court of record.—Horton v. Auchmoody, 7 Wend. 200.

[l] (N. C. 1828) Under the act of 1790, justices of the peace are liable to an action of debt only when they take no bond from the sheriff, and not when they commit an honest mistake in the form of it.—Governor v. McAffee, 13 N. C. 15.

[m] (N. C. 1839) No action can be supported against a justice of the peace, acting judicially and within the sphere of his jurisdiction, however erroneous his decision or malicious the motive imputed to him; and, if he does not so act, he is still not liable, if he acted bona fide and according to his best information.—Cunningham v. Dillard, 20 N. C. 485.

[n, o] (Ohio) A justice is not liable for judicial acts done within his jurisdiction.—(1817) Carothers v. Scott, Tapp. 227; (1818) Masters v. Johnson, Id. 238.

[p] (Pa. 1884) The chief burgess of a borough is a judicial officer, and where he has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and acts within the limits of his jurisdiction, action will not lie against him, though he act through an erroneous or mistaken judgment.—Reid v. Wood, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 513.

[q] (S. C. 1796) A justice of the peace is not liable in a special action on the case for what he does in his judicial capacity, though he may be prosecuted criminally for oppressive acts.—Lining v. Bentham, 2 Bay, 1.

[r] (S. C. 1802) A magistrate is not liable for what he does in his judicial capacity, unless he acts corruptly or oppressively.—State v. Johnson, 2 Bay, 385.

§ 34. —— Acts in civil proceedings.

[a] A justice of the peace, while acting within the limits of his jurisdiction, is not liable for a mere error of judgment, without any malicious or improper design.
—(Ky. 1815) Gregory v. Brown, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 28, 7 Am. Dec. 731; (1855) Bullitt v. Clement, 55 Ky. (16 B. Mon.) 193;
(S. C. 1825) Peake v. Cantey, 3 McCord, 107.

[b] (Conn. 1790) In the absence of a charge of partiality or corruption, a justice of the peace is not liable for refusing to call an action for trial at the time fixed by the writ.—Ambler v. Church, 1 Root, 211.

[c, d] (Conn. 1831) A justice of the peace is not answerable, in a civil suit, for an erroneous judgment rendered by him in his judicial capacity, provided he had jurisdiction.—Holcomb v. Cornish, 8 Conn. 375.

[f] (Ind. 1892) A justice of the peace is not liable to one of two joint makers of a note for failure to enter up a judgment showing that such maker signed the note only as surety, where neither the note itself nor the pleadings in the action thereon show the fact of such suretyship, and the alleged surety failed to file a complaint against his comaker to try and determine the question of suretyship, as provided by Rev. St. 1881, § 1212.—State v. Wanee, 4 Ind. App. 1, 30 N. E. 161.

[g] (Ky. 1815) If a justice of the peace acts within his jurisdiction, he is not responsible for an erroneous judgment, and such judgment is a justification to the officer in carrying the judgment into execution.—Walker v. Floyd, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 237.

[h, i] (Md. 1855) Where a justice of the peace having jurisdiction of a suit renders a wrong judgment, resulting from an erroneous conclusion as to the law governing the case, neither he nor the plaintiff in the action can be held liable for trespass in enforcing the judgment, which has remained unreversed and unpaid.—Deal v. Harris, 8 Md. 40, 63 Am. Dec. 686.

[j, k] (Mass. 1885) A justice who, in violation of Pub. St. c. 183, § 88, declaring that in trustee process plaintiff shall not recover costs if he recovers no more than $10, renders judgment for costs when the recovery is $10 only, and issues execution for such costs, is not liable to a civil action for damages.—White v. Morse, 139 Mass. 162, 29 N. E. 539.

[l, m] (N. J. 1818) Where, in an action against two defendants before a justice, one appears and confesses judgment, and the justice erroneously enters judgment, and issues execution against both defendants, he is not liable to an action by the judgment defendant not served.—Little v. Moore, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 74, 7 Am. Dec. 574.

[n] (N. J. 1838) Trespass will not lie against a justice for the taking of property under execution issued by him on a judgment fraudulently rendered by him against the plaintiff.—Taylor v. Doremus, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 473.

[o] (N. Y. 1805) An action will not lie before one justice to recover back the amount of a fine imposed on a witness by another, for a contempt in a suit before him.—Moor v. Ames, 3 Caines, 170.

[q] (N. Y. 1819) Where a justice has no jurisdiction and undertakes to act, his acts are coram non judice, and void. If he has jurisdiction, and errs in the exercise of it, his acts are voidable only,—as where a justice, in a cause of which he had cognizance, gave more costs than the statute allowed him to give, it was held that the judgment and execution thereon were voidable only, and that the justice was not liable at the suit of the defendant, who had been imprisoned under the execution.—Butler v. Potter, 17 Johns. 145.

[r] (N. Y. 1831) Where a justice of the peace grants an adjournment to a plaintiff who is not entitled to it, and subsequently renders judgment and issues execution thereon, and the property of defendant is sold, he cannot be sued as a trespasser.—Horton v. Auchmoody, 7 Wend. 200.

[t] (Wis. 1851) A justice of the peace is not liable for erroneously refusing to set off one judgment against another rendered before him, and for issuing execution on the latter judgment, on which plaintiff's property was seized and sold.—Keeler v. Woodward, 4 Chand. 34, 3 Pin. 306.

Liability of justices of the peace for false imprisonment, see "False Imprisonment," vol. 23, cc. 522–534, §§ 17–28.

[a] (Ill. 1857) No error committed by a magistrate in a criminal prosecution in which he has jurisdiction both of the offense and the defendant can make him a trespasser.—Lancaster v. Lane, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 242.

[b] (Iowa, 1880) Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a prosecution for violating a city ordinance, he is not liable to a civil action for his proceeding therein by reason of the fact that the ordinance was void for want of authority to pass it.—Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 378, 7 N. W. 623.

[c] (Kan. 1870) Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the defendant in a criminal case, and of the offense intended to be charged, and the information states facts sufficient to show what offense is intended to be charged, and facts sufficient to require the exercise of judgment to decide whether any offense has been charged or not, and where the justice judicially determines that such information does state facts sufficient to constitute an offense, and proceeds in an action to a trial, conviction, and sentence under such information, he does not thereby render himself liable to an action, although he may have erred in his decision, and although the information does not state facts sufficient to constitute any offense.—Clark v. Spicer, 6 Kan. 440.

[d] (Ky. 1848) Where a justice of the peace, upon his own view, issues a warrant for the apprehension of an individual, to require surety for the peace, returnable to another justice, and the latter justice, without further evidence, requires the surety to be given, it is a judicial act for which he is not liable in a suit, without evidence of a malicious purpose.—Robinson v. Ramey, 47 Ky. (8 B. Mon.) 214.

[e] (Ky. 1894) A justice of the peace is not liable in an action for malicious prosecution for an erroneous judgment in binding over for trial on insufficient evidence one examined before him on the charge of forgery, where there are no facts showing that the judgment was malicious or corrupt.—Hagerman v. Sutherland, 27 S. W. 982.

[f] (Me. 1867) Where a person has been convicted of an offense punishable by law by fine and imprisonment, and has been sentenced to pay the statute fine only, he cannot, after payment thereof, recover the same from the magistrate who imposed the sentence and to whom he paid it.—Bragdon v. Somerby, 55 Me. 92.

[g] (Mass. 1848) In an action on the case, it was alleged in the declaration that the defendant, who was a justice of the peace, willfully and maliciously received a false and groundless complaint against the plaintiff, for a criminal trespass, and thereupon willfully and maliciously issued his warrant, upon which the plaintiff was arrested and carried before the defendant for trial, and was by him willfully and maliciously tried and convicted, without being allowed an opportunity to obtain witnesses and counsel; that, upon such conviction, the defendant maliciously sentenced the plaintiff to pay a fine of two dollars and costs; and that, upon his refusing to pay the same, the plaintiff was committed by the order and warrant of the defendant to the common jail, where he remained imprisoned for one day, until, to obtain his discharge therefrom, he was obliged to and did comply with the defendant's order to pay the fine and costs imposed upon him by the sentence. It was held, on general demurrer, that the action could not be maintained.—Pratt v. Gardner, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 63, 48 Am. Dec. 652.

[h] (Mass. 1854) The record of a conviction by an inferior court must show, in order to protect the justice from liability to a person imprisoned pursuant to such conviction, that the case was within the limits of his jurisdiction.—Piper v. Pearson, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438.

[i] (Mass. 1865) It seems that an action of tort cannot be maintained against a magistrate, when acting judicially and within his jurisdiction in a criminal case, on the charge that he has fraudulently altered the complaint and warrant after service and return. He is answerable to the government only, and not to individuals whose cases he is obliged to try.—Kelley v. Dresser, 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 31.

[j] (Mich. 1896) Where a justice issuing a warrant for the arrest of a person for a criminal offense has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, an action against him will not lie by one claiming to have been injuriously affected by his judicial action, either on the ground that he acted maliciously or that his judgment was erroneous.—Curnow v. Kessler, 110 Mich. 10, 67 N. W. 982.

[k] (Neb. 1895) A police justice, acting within his jurisdiction, is not liable in a civil action for false imprisonment because the proceedings under which the person was imprisoned were void for irregularities.—Atwood v. Atwater, 43 Neb. 147, 61 N. W. 574.

[m] (N. H. 1856) A magistrate is not liable to the penalty, who has rendered judgment in a criminal proceeding for costs, including an attorney fee; the same being taxed and claimed by the attorney who conducted the prosecution, as compensation for his services, although the costs were paid upon the order of the magistrate to hold the respondent in custody till they were paid, and the magistrate receipted to the respondent for the costs upon their being so paid.—Fox v. Whitney, 33 N. H. 516.

[n] (N. J. 1868) A justice of the peace, having cognizance of a criminal complaint, is not liable to the party implicated, for any act done by him within his jurisdiction.—Mangold v. Thorpe, 33 N. J. Law (4 Vroom) 134.

[o] (N. J. 1881) Where an order for a warrant made by a justice of the peace fails to state the amount for which the warrant is to be issued, and the contemporaneous order for bail indorsed by the justice on the warrant supplied the omission, the two together will be a substantial compliance with the provision of the statute, and hence the justice was not liable.—Loftus v. Fraz, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 667.

[p] (N. Y. 1839) Where a magistrate issued a warrant, on which a person was arrested and fined, for a violation of the statute for the observance of Sunday, it was held that he was not guilty of a trespass, though the facts alleged may not have been an offense within the statute.—Stewart v. Hawley, 21 Wend. 552.

[q] (N. Y. 1870) No action will lie to recover back from a justice of the peace the amount of a fine imposed by him in his judicial capacity in excess of the amount which he is authorized by law to inflict, after it has been actually paid, until the judgment is avoided by reversal, notwithstanding it may have been paid in order to escape imprisonment.—Clark v. Holdridge, 58 Barb. 61, 40 How. Prac. 320.

[r] (N. Y. 1891) The mayor of a city, having by virtue of his office judicial authority to conduct examinations on criminal charges, refused to proceed with such an examination when the accused was brought before him, and adjourned the hearing to the following day, and held the accused to bail for his appearance on that day. He also refused to accept bail tendered by the accused, or to accept any bail until after 24 hours, and directed that he be locked up until the following day. Held, that the mayor was not liable in damages to the accused for such conduct, having acted in a judicial capacity, with jurisdiction of the person and the subject-matter.—Hommert v. Gleason, 60 Hun, 579, 14 N. Y. Supp. 568, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 349.

[s] (Ohio, 1817) Where it appears in an action against a justice for false imprisonment that the defendant acted as a judicial officer in imprisoning plaintiffs, it will be sufficient justification for the acts done if they are within his jurisdiction.—Carothers v. Scott, Tapp. 227.

[t] (Pa. 1870) A justice of the peace, having jurisdiction of assault and battery with intent to kill, is not answerable in trespass for an error in holding the prisoner and committing him in default of bail, for malicious or wanton injury case is the remedy.—Kennedy v. Barnett, 64 Pa. (14 P. F. Smith) 141.

[u] (R. I. 1855) Justices of the peace, where the forms of law are substantially complied with, though the precision proper to be observed in indictments may be wanting in complaints before them, ought not to be held liable in damages for acts done in the performance of their official duties.—Alexander v. Card, 3 R. I. 145.

[v] (Tex. 1858) Where a justice of the peace convicted a party for assault and battery, when the facts would have warranted a conviction for an offense beyond his jurisdiction, the justice was held not liable to the party convicted for this mistake of judgment.—Bumpus v. Fisher, 21 Tex. 561.

[w] (Vt. 1881) A justice of the peace and town grand juror are not liable for their judicial acts, done in good faith, when they have jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the process, and the person of the party dealt with.—Kibling v. Clark, 53 Vt. 379.

[x] (Vt. 1891) A justice of the peace, before whom one is being tried for assault and battery, has a right to interrogate witnesses offered by the accused, or to exclude them, and reject their evidence, if being within his judicial discretion, and he is not answerable in a civil action for such acts.—Banister v. Wakeman, 64 Vt. 203, 23 Atl. 585, 15 L. R. A. 201.

[a] (Ky. 1820) A justice of the peace is liable to an action for exercising authority where he has none, though such act is a judicial act.—Ely v. Thompson, 10 Ky. (3 A. K. Marsh.) 70.

[b] (Me. 1851) A. was selected by the principal in a debtor's relief bond to act as a magistrate in an adjudication upon the debtor's disclosure, and, upon such disclosure, united with B., the other magistrate, in giving a discharge certificate to the debtor, when in fact A. had no authority to act as such magistrate, and thereby the surety in the relief bond was compelled to pay the same. Held, that the surety could not sustain an action against A. for wrongfully assuming to act as submagistrate in the case.—Brookings v. Cunningham, 33 Me. 103.

[c] (Me. 1876) A justice of the peace, disqualified by reason of his relation to one of the parties to the cause, is liable in trespass for committing a witness for refusing to testify in such cause.—Call v. Pike, 66 Me. 350.

[d] (Mass. 1854) A justice of the peace, who acts in a case of which he has no jurisdiction, or who exceeds his jurisdiction, knowing the facts which constitute the defect of jurisdiction, is liable in damages to any party injured.—Piper v. Pearson, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438; Clarke v. May, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 410, 61 Am. Dec. 470.

[e] (Mass. 1854) Thus, a justice of the peace, who, in the course of the trial of a case of which a police court has exclusive jurisdiction, commits a witness to prison for contempt, is liable to an action by the witness.—Piper v. Pearson, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438.

[f] (Mass. 1854) A justice of the peace, who, after finally disposing of a cause tried before him, commits a witness to prison for contempt at the trial, is liable to an action by the witness.—Clarke v. May, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 410, 61 Am. Dec. 470.

[ff] (Ohio, 1818) A justice of the peace who exceeds his jurisdiction is a trespaser.—Masters v. Johnson, Tapp. 238.

[g] (Wis. 1851) Where a justice of the peace rendered judgment in an attachment suit, in which the return had not been returned, and in which the defendant did not appear, and defendant's property was taken and sold by virtue of an execution thereunder, the justice was liable for the value thereof.—Selby v. Platts, 3 Chand. 183, 3 Pin. 170.

§ 37. —— In civil proceedings.

[b] (La. 1885) A justice is liable in damages for an erroneous judgment rendered without his jurisdiction.—Estopinal v. Peyroux, 37 La. Ann. 477.

[c] (Mich. 1844) A. and B. were duly summoned to answer to C., before a justice of the peace, at his residence. They appeared there on the return day, but neither the justice, who was absent from home, nor C., appeared, and no proceedings were had in the case. Three days afterwards, B., in the presence of C. and a witness, but in the absence of the justice, indorsed on a joint and several note of A. and B., found in the office of the justice, his individual confession of judgment thereon, upon which the justice, on the same day, without any continuance of the cause from the return day of the summons, or any declaration filed, rendered judgment for C. against A. and B. for the amount of the note, and execution was issued thereon, upon which the property of A. was seized and sold. A. thereupon brought trespass against the justice. Held, that the justice had no jurisdiction over the person of A. at the time the judgment was rendered, the summons having spent its force on the return day, the parties being out of court, and the cause discontinued, and that he was liable to A. in the action.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 Doug. 390.

[cc] (Minn. 1894) A justice is not liable for damages because of the rendition of a judgment after the time allowed by law, when no further proceedings on his part are shown.—Murray v. Mills, 56 Minn. 75, 57 N. W. 324.

[d] (Mo. 1881) For excess of jurisdiction a justice of the peace is liable as a wrongdoer, nor is it a defense that he had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the complaint for a different purpose.—Patzack v. Von Gerichten, 10 Mo. App. 424.

[e] (N. H. 1843) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace in Vermont, in a cause in which he is interested, is void, and no justification in trespass brought against him.—Russell v. Perry, 14 N. H. 152.

[f] (N. H. 1843) If a justice of the peace in Vermont render judgment in a cause over which he has no jurisdiction, the judgment will be void, and be no justification in an action of trespass brought against him.—Russell v. Perry, 14 N. H. 152.

[g] (N. Y. 1818) A justice tried an action of assault and battery, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for $15, and issued execution thereon, under which the constable levied on and sold property of the defendant. In an action of trespass against the justice and constable, by the defendant in the former action, he recovered a verdict for $270. A new trial was refused, although there was reason to believe that the justice had acted under a mistake as to the extent of his jurisdiction, and there were strong circumstances to show that the party himself had, through his agent, purchased the goods sold under the execution at a price about equal to the amount of the judgment against him, so that he could have sustained no greater injury than the amount of the judgment; the case admitting of doubt, and the question being fairly submitted to the jury.—Woodward v. Paine, 15 Johns. 493.

[h] (N. Y. 1824) Trespass will lie against a justice of the peace who acts without jurisdiction, and, in so doing, injures a party in his property or person.—Adkins v. Brewer, 3 Cow. 206, 15 Am. Dec. 264.

[i] (N. Y. 1895) In an action before a justice of the peace, the constable neglected to serve the venire for a jury, issued on defendant's demand; and on the day before the venire was returnable the justice, at plaintiff's request, issued another venire, returnable several days later, and the trial was adjourned to that day. Defendant did not appear on the return day of the second venire, and the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff, and the justice issued execution thereon. Held, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3013, providing that, if plaintiff in a justice's court fails to appear within one hour after the time to which the trial has been adjourned, judgment of nonsuit must be rendered against him, that the action was, ipso facto, discontinued by the failure of plaintiff to appear on the return day of the first venire, and the subsequent acts of the justice were without jurisdiction, and he was liable to defendant for damages sustained by the issuance of the execution.—Handshaw v. Arthur, 89 Hun, 179, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1034.

[j] (N. C. 1844) Where a magistrate gives a judgment against a defendant for a sum beyond his jurisdiction, the defendant may have an action for any acts done under it.—Morgan v. Allen, 27 N. C. 156.

[k] (Ohio, 1834) If the return of the officer show that the court has no jurisdiction, the plaintiff and the justice proceed at their peril.—Harmon v. Gould, Wright, 709.

[l] (Tex. 1895) A justice of the peace is liable in damages for injuries inflicted under color of a judgment rendered by him with knowledge that he was so related to one of the parties as to render the judgment void.—McVea v. Walker, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 46, 31 S. W. 839.

§ 38. —— In attachment, garnishment, or replevin proceedings.

[b] (Ind. 1838) A justice of the peace who issues a writ of domestic attachment, by which the goods of an absconding debtor are attached, without requiring a bond to be previously filed according to the statute, and the party who procures such writ to be issued without first filing the bond, are trespassers, and as such liable to the party injured.—Barkeloo v. Randall, 4 Blackf. 476, 32 Am. Dec. 46.

[c] (Kan. 1878) Under Gen. St. p. 791, § 70, a justice is liable in damages to a party injured by issuance of a replevin writ, without the filing of the prescribed undertaking; and this, although the plaintiff, after the seizure, deposits with the justice a sufficient amount of money to secure the defendant, and thereupon executes and files what would have been a sufficient undertaking, if seasonable.—Hannum v. Norris, 21 Kan. 114.

[d] (Neb. 1885) Where the cause of action against a nonresident is a claim for damages arising through the delay of the vendor in delivering goods sold, the claim is founded on tort, and the writ of attachment cannot issue, under Code Civ. Proc. § 198, providing that an attachment shall not be granted, on the ground that defendant is a nonresident of the state, for any claim other than "a debt or demand arising upon contract, judgment, or decree," and the justice issuing the attachment is liable to the defendant.—Wright v. Rouss, 18 Neb. 284, 25 N. W. 80.

[e] (R. I. 1880) Where an attachment suit has lapsed through failure to return the writ in time, but the justice has nevertheless ordered a sale of the goods attached, the defendant is entitled to a verdict against the justice, who so acted without jurisdiction, and against the party and his counsel, who procured him so to do, but not against the party appointed to keep the goods until the sale, nor against the officer selling the same, where the order under which he sold them was regular on its face.—Brown v. Carroll, 16 R. I. 604, 18 Atl. 283.

Liability of justices of the peace for acts without jurisdiction, see "False Imprisonment," vol. 23, cc. 524–527, § 18.

[a] (Conn. 1821) Where a justice of the peace, before whom an offender against the riot act, arrested on view, is brought to be further proceeded against, makes an order without a previous complaint or information in writing, requiring such offender to be recognized for trial, and, on his refusal to comply with such order, commits him to prison, he is liable in trespass for false imprisonment.—Tracy v. Williams, 4 Conn. 107, 10 Am. Dec. 102.

[bb] (La. 1827) A justice of the peace, having no power to try free persons of color for alleged disrespect towards whites, cannot be protected in an action for false imprisonment, by a plea that he acted in his official capacity.—Bore v. Bush, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 1.

[c] (Mass. 1861) A justice of the peace has authority to entertain a complaint, under St. 1846, c. 244, concerning hawkers and peddlers, and, after examination of the defendant, to require him to recognize with sureties to appear at the higher court, but not to require him to recognize with sureties to keep the peace and be of good behavior in the meantime; and for an excess of jurisdiction in the latter respect he is liable in damages.—Knowles v. Davis, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 61.

[d] (N. Y. 1821) Where a statute requires a justice of the peace "to cause the party to be brought before him," and he proceeds to commit the party in his absence, and enforce the sentence against him, he will be liable as a trespasser; and the party affected by the conviction may, in an action of trespass against the justice, when the conviction is set up as a defense, show that the magistrate had no jurisdiction of the person convicted.—Bigelow v. Stearns, 19 Johns. 39, 10 Am. Dec. 189.

[e] (N. Y. 1871) An overseer of the poor commenced bastardy proceedings before a justice of the peace, who was his son-in-law, and whose wife was living. The justice associated another with himself, and after the usual proceedings the justices made an order of affiliation, and committed the party charged to jail for neglect to comply with the order. Held, that the overseer was a party to the proceedings in such sense that the proceedings were void and the justices liable to an action for false imprisonment.—Rivenburgh v. Henness, 4 Lans. 208.

[a] (Iowa, 1895) A justice of the peace is not civilly liable for entering in good faith a judgment void for want of jurisdiction.—Thompson v. Jackson, 93 Iowa, 376, 61 N. W. 1004.

[b] (Kan. 1884) A justice of the peace is not liable in damages for having issued an attachment in a suit on a note not yet due. The plaintiff, however, who in his affidavit stated that the note was due, is liable.—Connelly v. Woods (Kan.) 2 Pac. 773.

[c] (Me. 1893) A justice of the peace who erroneously, but in good faith, excludes persons from attendance at a criminal trial as spectators, is not liable therefor.—Williamson v. Lacy, 86 Me. 80, 29 Atl. 943.

[d] (N. J. 1882) A magistrate is not liable to an action in consequence of a decision made by him in a matter which was colorably, though not really, within his jurisdiction.—Grove v. Van Duyn, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 654, 43 Am. Rep. 412.

[e] (Tex. 1896) A justice of the peace is not liable for rendering a judgment and issuing an order of sale thereunder, in an action in which he has no jurisdiction, unless he knowingly acts outside of his jurisdiction.—Anderson v. Roberts (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 416.

(D) LIABILITIES FOR MINISTERIAL ACTS.

IN CIVIL PROCEEDINGS, § 41.
—— ISSUANCE OF EXECUTION OR PROCESS, § 42.
IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS, § 43.

Liabilities on official bonds for ministerial acts, see post, § 58.
Authority to call meeting of members and stockholders of corporation, see "Corporations," vol. 12, cc. 855, 856, § 736.
Liability of justices of the peace for wrongful issuance of warrant, see "False Imprisonment," vol. 23, cc. 528–531, §§ 20–23.

§ 41. In civil proceedings.

[a] (Ala. 1847) A justice of the peace who takes insufficient surety upon an appeal bond is not individually responsible, unless it be shown that he acted from corrupt or impure motives.—Lester v. Governor, 12 Ala. 624.

[b] (Del. 1888) The refusal of a justice of the peace to approve an appeal bond is a ministerial act, for which an action will lie against him if he acted corruptly or maliciously.—Legates v. Lingo (Super.) 8 Houst. 154, 32 Atl. 80.

[c] (Ind. 1828) If satisfaction of a judgment be entered by a justice of the peace on his docket, he and his sureties are liable for the amount to the judgment creditor, no matter for what consideration the satisfaction was entered, unless the creditor was a party to the arrangement.—Modisett v. Governor, 2 Blackf. 135.

[d] (Ind. 1881) The failure of a justice to attest the entry of replevin bail, not relieving the bail from liability, is not such a breach of his official bond as to authorize the recovery of substantial damages.—State v. Trout, 75 Ind. 563.

[e] (Me. 1854) A justice is not liable, in a civil suit, for any act done by him in his judicial capacity; but when acting ministerially and in the use of his discretion,—e. g., in refusing an appeal and issuing execution,—he is amenable to the party injured, if he act corruptly.—Tyler v. Alford, 38 Me. 530.

[ee] (Mass. 1849) An action on the case will not lie against a justice of the peace for an error of judgment in taking a recognizance to prosecute an appeal in a form not authorized by law, and therefore invalid.—Chickering v. Robinson, 57 Mass. (3 Cush.) 543.

[f] (Mass. 1853) A justice of the peace is not liable to an action for not sending up the recognizance of an appellant from his decision in a civil case, if the same is not demanded of him and his fees tendered therefor.—Jones v. Werden, 66 Mass. (12 Cush.) 133.

[ff] (Mass. 1862) No action lies against a magistrate to recover damages sustained by reason of his taking an invalid recognizance.—Way v. Townsend, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 114.

[g] (Mich. 1847) A justice of the peace, who receives uncurrent or depreciated bank bills of an officer, and receipts the amount on the back of an execution held by the officer, is liable, after demand and refusal, for the nominal amount to the judgment creditor in an action for money had and received; the remedy at common law not being restricted by the statutory action on the justice's bond.—Welch v. Frost, 1 Mich. (Man.) 30, 48 Am. Dec. 692.

[h] (Mich. 1879) In order to make a justice of the peace liable to a judgment creditor on a judgment which the justice had marked "Judgment discharged," it must be shown that money had been paid the justice on the judgment, and that the justice had refused to pay it over.—Dane v. Holmes, 41 Mich. 661, 3 N. W. 169.

[i] (Mich. 1879) Where money is paid into justice's court, to be applied upon a certain judgment, the justice's docket entry that the money is in satisfaction of a different judgment cannot make him liable to the holder of the latter judgment—McDonald v Lewis, 42 Mich. 135, 3 N. W. 300.

[j] (N. Y. 1832) Case lies against a justice of the peace who corruptly refuses to take the security required to be given on the prosecution of an appeal, such proceeding being of a ministerial and not a judicial character.—Tompkins v. Sands, 8 Wend. 462, 24 Am. Dec. 46.

[k] (N. Y. 1845) A justice of the peace, in making a return to the court of common pleas upon an appeal, acts ministerially, and is responsible to the party injured for an error in such return.—Houghton v. Swarthout, 1 Denio, 589.

[m] (N. Y. 1869) The entry of a judgment by a justice of the peace, in his docket, is a ministerial and not a judicial act; and an action may be maintained against a justice who, having rendered judgment for the plaintiff, through mistake, enters up judgment for the defendant, which the former is obliged to satisfy.—Christopher v. Van Liew, 57 Barb. 17.

§ 42. —— Issuance of execution or process.

[a] (Ala. 1890) Where the issuance of a writ of restitution within three days from the rendition of the judgment in forcible detainer, notwithstanding defendant's notice of intention to appeal, was premature, it was merely error, and did not render the writ void; and an action for damages will not lie against the justice for wrongfully issuing the writ.—Olmstead v. Brewer, 91 Ala. 124, 8 South. 345.

[b] (Cal. 1861) Judgment was rendered by a justice against two codefendants, over one of whom he had acquired no jurisdiction. Execution issued thereon, in its terms leviable on the individual property of either defendant. Held, that the justice was liable in damages for a levy upon the property of the defendant who was not bound by the judgment.—Inos v. Winspear, 18 Cal. 397.

[c] (Conn. 1874) Where a complaint and summons, in a summary process for obtaining possession of leased premises, were dated one day before the right of action accrued, but were in fact issued and served on the day following, and the defendant did not object thereto, held, that the judgment was a protection to the justice issuing the execution thereunder.—Taylor v. Judd, 41 Conn. 483.

[d] (Ind. 1844) A constable, appointed by a justice of the peace to levy an execution on the goods of A., levied the same on goods of B. A trial of the right of property was claimed by B., who gave bond, etc., but the constable refused to deliver the goods to B. Held that, for this misconduct of the constable, the justice was, under the statute, liable to B., in an action on the case.—Dugan v. Melogue, 7 Blackf. 144.

[e] (La. 1868) Where a justice of the peace caused executions to issue in several suits against a person not a party to the suits, and, at the sale thereunder, purchased the property seized, both the justice and the constable levying the writs were liable to the owner, for the restoration of the property or its value.—Terrail v. Tinney, 20 La. Ann. 444.

[f] (Me. 1840) A justice of the peace is liable in trespass for an arrest under an execution issued by him in a case after his jurisdiction has ceased.—Spencer v. Perry, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 413.

[g] (Mass. 1813) Where a justice of the peace issues execution three hours after judgment, the law providing for its issuance 24 hours after judgment, he is liable in trespass to defendant imprisoned thereon.—Briggs v. Wardwell, 10 Mass. 356.

[h] (Mass. 1814) Trespass will lie against a magistrate issuing void process, although not maliciously.—Hayden v. Shed, 11 Mass. 500.

[i, j] (Mass. 1854) A justice of the peace, who issues an execution, commanding an arrest of the body of the debtor, in a case in which he knows that the law prohibits such arrest or the issuing of such an execution, is liable in damages to the debtor arrested on such execution.—Sullivan v. Jones, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 570.

[k] (Mich. 1848) A judgment in a justice's court was stayed six months, instead of three, as the statute required. At the expiration of the six months, the justice issued execution against both defendant and the stayer, on which the property of the stayer was taken and sold. Held, that the execution was illegally issued, and that the justice was liable in trespass to the stayer for the property sold.—Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 Mich. (Man.) 85.

[l] (Mo. 1860) Where a justice issued an execution, but, by a mistake, made it returnable in 60 instead of 90 days, as required by law, whereby the plaintiff lost his debt, it was held that the act was one for which the justice was not responsible, in an action to the plaintiff.—Wertheimer v. Howard, 30 Mo. 420, 77 Am. Dec. 623.

[m] (N. J. 1881) A justice of the peace having jurisdiction is not liable to an action for error in issuing a warrant for the arrest of a debtor, for when an application is presented to him, and he is satisfied, it is his duty to issue the warrant.—Loftus v. Prior, 5 N. J. Law J. 24.

[n] (N. Y. 1831) A justice of the peace, who issues a second execution after the first is satisfied, is a trespasser; and it is no excuse that such second execution issued through the false representation of the plaintiff that the first was lost. A constable, acting under such second execution, is not liable as a trespasser.—Lewis v. Palmer, 6 Wend. 367.

[o] (N. Y. 1848) A magistrate who issues a void process is only liable for the injury inflicted upon the party against whom it issued, where it is executed according to its mandate, and where such process was directed to "any constable of the county," but the party who sued it out placed it in the hands of a deputy sheriff, with directions to execute it, which he accordingly did, it was held in trespass by the party against whom it issued that the justice was not liable.—Merritt v. Read, 5 Denio, 352.

[p] (N. C. 1855) The warrant of a justice of the peace, who had no jurisdiction of the matter, is void; and the magistrate is liable for damages.—Cohoon v. Speed, 47 N. C. 133.

[q] (S. C. 1823) A justice of the peace, acting without jurisdiction in issuing an execution for costs, under which the plaintiff's horse was sold, was held liable to an action of trespass.—Rembert v. Kelly, Harp. 65.

[r] (Wis. 1851) A justice of the peace is not liable in an action for damages sustained by reason of his issuing an execution upon a judgment before the proper time.—Keeler v. Woodward, 4 Chand. 34, 3 Pin. 306.

§ 43. In criminal proceedings.

[a] (Conn. 1836) Where process issues on the complaint of a grand juror for an offense of which he is not cognizant, the magistrate who issues the warrant is liable in trespass.—Allen v. Gray, 11 Conn. 95.

[b] (Ill. 1826) If a justice of the peace officiously, and without any complaint on oath or of his own knowledge, issues his warrant to apprehend a person, he will be liable in an action of trespass.—Flack v. Harrington, 1 Ill. (Breese) 213, 12 Am. Dec. 170.

[c] (S. C. 1808) A justice of the peace, from a mistaken notion of duty, wrote his name on the back of a warrant issued by a justice of the peace, in Georgia, against a person complained of as a felon; and an arrest was made in South Carolina, under the pretended warrant of the indorsing magistrate. Held, that the indorsing magistrate was to be considered in the light of a principal trespasser, though he might be acting legally.—Perrin v. Calhoun, 2 Brev. 248.

(E) LIABILITIES FOR NEGLIGENCE AND MISCONDUCT.

NEGLIGENCE, § 44.
MISCONDUCT, § 45.
— WRONGFUL ISSUANCE OF WRITS OR WARRANTS, § 46.
— TAXATION OF ILLEGAL FEES, § 47.

Liabilities on official bonds for negligence and misconduct, see post, § 59.
Refusal to accept recognizance for appeal as affecting liability for false imprisonment, see "False Imprisonment," vol. 23, c. 581, § 71.

§ 44. Negligence.

[a] (Ga. 1886) Under Code 1882, § 3961, providing that a justice of the peace may be ruled by the superior court for refusal or neglect "to collect or to pay over any money," a justice may be ruled for his failure to collect, though the enactment, as worded by the legislature in Act Feb. 25, 1876, incorporated in section 3961 by the compilers, omitted the disjunctive "or," so that the section as enacted provided that a justice might be ruled for his refusal or neglect "to collect to pay over any money."—Barrett v. Pulliam, 77 Ga. 552.

[b] (Ill. 1863) If the justice neglects to make the entry on his docket, of the inventory required by law, where he has taken an acknowledgment of a personal mortgage, he is, it seems, liable to any one who is thereby injured, for the damage occasioned by such neglect.—Harlow v. Birger, 30 Ill. (20 Peck) 425.

[c] (Ind. 1837) Where, after a justice has rendered judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff directed him not to issue execution until the time for taking an appeal from the judgment had expired, the justice was not liable for failure to issue the execution on the expiration of such time, nor until he was requested to do so.—Tingle v. Pullium, 4 Blackf. 442.

[d] (Ind. 1844) A justice of the peace is not authorized, in the absence of special instructions, to receive anything except gold and silver coin of the United States, in satisfaction of a judgment rendered before him; and if he receive bank bills current as money at the time, from a constable who has collected the same on the execution, and entered satisfaction on the judgment, he will be liable to the judgment creditor for the amount, even though he afterwards tender him the bills received, and they become depreciated or worthless.—Hooker v. State, 7 Blackf. 272.

[e] (Mass. 1817) Where a justice of the peace had neglected to return a recognizance taken by him until the second day of the term at which it was returnable, the court ordered that he pay a fine for his neglect.—Ex parte Neal, 14 Mass. 205.

[f] (Mass. 1863) If, upon an application by a debtor, who has been arrested on execution, to take the oath for the relief of poor debtors, the magistrate issues a notice to the creditor by a wrong name, whereby the discharge of the debtor is invalidated, the surety in his recognizance, who has subsequently been compelled to pay the amount of the execution, cannot maintain an action against the magistrate to recover damages for the mistake.—Van Kuran v. May, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 466.

[g] (Minn. 1861) The statute (Comp. St. c. 63, § 33), imposing a penalty on a justice for neglecting to post up a fee bill in his office, is limited in its operation to officers in office, and to come into office within six months after its passage.—Kennedy v. Raught, 6 Minn. 235 (Gil. 155).

[h] (N. Y. 1834) A justice of the peace was held not to be liable for negligence and carelessness in giving erroneous information, as to the amount of a judgment rendered by him, to a party about to prosecute an appeal, by means whereof the appeal is lost.—Wickware v. Bryan, 11 Wend. 545.

[i] (N. Y. 1844) After execution returned by a constable, judgment was recovered against him for neglect, the justice not having entered the return in his docket and the constable being unable to prove it aliunde. Held, that the neglect of the justice did not render him liable to the constable.—James v. Hartney, 6 Hill, 487.

[j] (N. Y. 1886) A justice of the peace is not liable for failure to enter a judgment, unless it is first shown that he rendered such a judgment.—Evarts v. Kiehl, 102 N. Y. 296, 6 N. E. 592.

[k] (N. C. 1855) A record showing that "A. was appointed a guardian to B., upon entering into bond with C. and D. as sureties," and that A. only executed the bond, on the strength of which he took charge of the ward's estate, is a sufficient "committing of an orphan's estate to the charge or guardianship" of a person to render the magistrate making such entry liable for not taking good and sufficient security for the default of A. The said entry does not mean that A. was to be guardian, if he gave C. and D. as sureties, but that he was appointed guardian, and was to give the persons named as sureties.—Davis v. Lanier, 47 N. C. 307.

[l] (Ohio, 1831) A justice of the peace is liable for negligently entering a recognizance so as to be ineffectual.—Kerns v. Schoonmaker, 4 Ohio (4 Ham.) 331, 22 Am. Dec. 757.

[m] (Ohio, 1833) Where money has been paid to a justice, on a judgment in his docket, and he places it for safe-keeping in the same place with his own money, and it is stolen, without his default, he is not liable unless guilty of gross neglect.—Monteith v. Bissell, Wright, 411.

[n] (Ohio, 1856) The neglect of a justice of the peace to affix a proper date to a recognizance for appeal, or an act of postdating or antedating it, thereby preventing an appeal, are not matters in his discretion; and he is liable for damages to a person injured thereby.—Cohen v. Marchant, 1 Disn. 113.

[o] (Ohio, 1877) A justice of the peace is liable to a judgment creditor for money received officially in satisfaction of a judgment, if he deposits the same in bank to his own private account, and the bank fails before the deposit is withdrawn.—Shaw v. Bauman, 34 Ohio St. 25.

[p] (Ohio, 1880) Under Rev. St. § 6619, providing that a constable shall be responsible if he take an insufficient bond for the return of property taken by him under a writ of replevin, a justice of the peace is liable for the value of property returned by a special constable appointed by him to execute a writ of replevin, where the constable did not take a sufficient bond.—Dummick v. Howitt, 8 Ohio Dec. 196.

[r] (Pa. 1884) Where a magistrate allows his clerk to receive money paid in on judgments, he cannot avoid liability for money paid to the clerk in satisfaction of a judgment, on the ground that the clerk failed to account to him therefor.—Commonwealth v. Ziegler (Com. Pl.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 772.

[s] (S. C. 1808) Trespass on the case lies against a justice of the peace for neglecting to pursue the plain directions of the act of assembly respecting estrays, in which he acts rather as a ministerial than a judicial officer, although he may err from mere ignorance.—Armstrong v. Campbell, 2 Brev. 259.

[t] (S. C. 1815) A woman of color was convicted before a magistrate and two freeholders for slandering and insulting a white woman, and sentenced to pay a fine of $10 and costs of prosecution, which fine was received by the magistrate, but not paid over by him within the time prescribed by the act of 1787. Held that, as there was no evidence that the magistrate intended to keep the fine fraudulently, its nonpayment within the time limited could only be imputed to negligence.—State v. Porter, 3 Brev. 175.

Liability for false certificate, see "Acknowledgment," vol. 1, c. 999, § 243 [f].

—— of justices of the peace for false imprisonment, see "False Imprisonment," vol. 23, cc. 522–534, §§ 17–28.

Wrongfully assuming jurisdiction, right of action for, see "Action," vol. 1, c. 1106, § 10 [k].

[a] (Ala. 1876) For corrupt official misconduct on the trial of a cause within his jurisdiction, a justice of the peace is not liable to a civil action, but can only be punished criminally.—Irion v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 190.

[b] (Ill. 1859) If a justice acts corruptly, he can be made to answer both criminally and civilly.—Garfield v. Douglass, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 100, 74 Am. Dec. 137.

[c] (Ind. 1845) If, after the issuing of a fi. fa. by a justice of the peace, and before its execution, the plaintiff die, and the justice afterwards prevent its execution, he may, for any loss thereby caused to the estate of the deceased, be sued in case by the administrator of such estate.—Murray v. Buchanan, 7 Blackf. 549.

[d] (Ind. 1878) The rule that judicial officers cannot be held responsible to parties injured by their corrupt acts applied to a suit against a justice of the peace, alleging fraudulent entry of a judgment for too small an amount.—Kress v. State, 65 Ind. 106.

[e] (N. J. 1837) Case lies against a justice of the peace, for that, after taking time to consider a case, he rendered judgment against the plaintiff, and deceitfully concealed the fact from him until it was too late to appeal.—Neighbour v. Trimmer, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 58.

[f] (N. Y. 1800) If a justice of the peace proceeds to judgment after a certiorari has been delivered to him, an action of trespass lies.—Case v. Shepherd, 2 Johns. Cas. 27.

[g] (N. Y. 1817) An action will lie against a justice of the peace for a false return to a certiorari, though the party bringing such action suffered judgment by default in the court to which the certiorari was returned.—Kidzie v. Sackrider, 14 Johns. 195.

[h] (N. Y. 1828) In an action for a false return to a certiorari, the officer making it is not liable in damages, though the return be untrue on its face, if the facts of the case truly stated would have produced the same results to the party complaining as the return made.—Ford v. Smith, 1 Wend. 48.

[i] (N. Y. 1832) A justice rendered a verdict near midnight of the 19th day of the month, and entered judgment the next day as of the 20th. The party against whom judgment was rendered appealed, reciting in his appeal bond the judgment as rendered on the 20th. The justice subsequently, in his return to the common pleas, stated that the judgment was rendered on the 19th, in consequence of which the appeal was quashed. Held that, there being no evidence of a fraudulent intent, an action against the justice for a false return, or for fraudulently misleading the party, would not lie.—Millard v. Jenkins, 9 Wend. 298.

[j] (N. C. 1803) Justices are liable to an action on the case for refusing to grant an appeal.—Hardison v. Jordan, Conf. R. 454.

[k] (S. C. 1815) A magistrate, on the advice of another magistrate as to the construction of a statute, refused to admit to bail one charged with bastardy, unless he would give bond for the support of the child. He appeared willing to avoid committing accused, but thought it was his duty. He afterwards offered to accept bail, if a note for $50 for benefit of mother and child were given by accused, which was refused. Held, that malice was not shown, making him liable for his erroneous decision.—Young v. Herbert, 2 Nott & McC. 172, note.

[l] (Vt. 1876) Where receipts and the leaf of an open account book are used in evidence before a justice of the peace, on a question of payment, the justice is liable in trover for not delivering them on demand, made after the rendition of final judgment in the cause.—Yates v. Pelton, 48 Vt. 314.

Liability of justice for issuing execution after prohibition from court, see "Prohibition," II.

[a] (U. S. 1833) If a justice of the peace issues an order or warrant of arrest contrary to the provisions of the constitution of the state, or for a matter over which he has no jurisdiction, and the party is arrested, the justice is liable in trespass; nor is any notice requisite, before such suit, by any act of that state.—Johnson v. Tompkins, Fed. Cas. No. 7,416 (1 Baldw. 571].

[b] (Ky. 1808) If a justice of the peace, under color of his office, issues an illegal warrant, an action of trespass will lie against him.—Kennedy v. Terrill, 3 Ky. (Hardin) 490.

[c, d] (La. 1858) As the mayor of the town of Jackson is, by law, ex officio justice of the peace, and has the power to issue warrants for the arrest of criminals, he is not liable in damages for an alleged illegal arrest, where he acted in good faith.—Maguire v. Hughes, 13 La. Ann. 281.

[e] (Mass. 1853) An action will not lie against a justice of the peace for issuing a writ, in favor of a third person, upon a false claim against the plaintiff, and secreting and destroying the writ after service thereof, and refusing to enter it, or to allow the defendant his costs.—Raymond v. Bolles, 65 Mass. (11 Cush.) 315.

[f] (Mass. 1854) A justice of the peace, who issues an execution containing a command to arrest the body of the judgment debtor, in a case in which he knows that the law prohibits such arrest or the issuing of such an execution, is liable to the debtor in trespass.—Sullivan v. Jones, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 570.

[g] (N. Y. 1817) An attachment was issued, under Twenty-Five Dollar Act, § 23, on the oath of a party to the attachment, by which the constable was directed to attach the goods and chattels of the defendant, his arms and accoutrements excepted. In trespass against the justice by the defendant for issuing the attachment, he cannot recover damages for the constable's taking his arms and accoutrements.—Collins v. Ferris, 14 Johns. 246.

[h] (N. Y. 1852) Where a justice of the peace issues an attachment, under the act to abolish imprisonment for debt, without the proof required by the statute, and without a bond, his acts are void, and he is answerable as a wrongdoer.—Davis v. Marshall, 14 Barb. 96.

[i] (Ohio, 1833) If a magistrate proceed unlawfully in issuing process, he, and not the executive officer, is liable, but the law does not invoke the aid of courts to punish the officers of justice for trifling errors in drawing up legal process.—Taylor v. Alexander, 6 Ohio (6 Ham.) 144.

[j] (Pa. 1855) An action for maliciously issuing a warrant, and holding defendant to bail, without probable cause, will lie against a magistrate.—Gault v. Mitchell, 12 Leg. Int. 238.

Criminal responsibility for demanding illegal fees, see post, § 66.

Effect of custom as to charging exorbitant fees, see "Customs and Usages," vol. 15, c. 1296, § 37 [i].

Taxation of illegal fees as extortion, see "Extortion," vol. 23, cc. 266–267, § 10.

[a] (Ky. 1845) A justice of the peace is liable only for a single penalty, for one fee bill in which are several items of illegal charge.—Briston v. Sullivan, 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 143.

[b] (Pa.) Where a magistrate charges more fees than allowed by the fee bill, he is liable for the penalty.—(1827) Clark v. Alderman, 3

Clark, 414; (1859) Simmons v. Kelly, 33 Pa. (9 Casey) 190.

[d] (Pa. 1831) A justice cannot escape the statutory penalty for taxing more than legal fees, by showing that they were taxed on a compromise, since an agreement to pay costs can only mean legal costs; and, if the justice demands and receives on such a compromise more fees than are allowed by law, he is as responsible as if they were collected never so adversely.—Wallace v. Coates, 1 Ashm. 110.

[e] (Pa. 1832) Where a justice charges an illegal fee, which is indorsed on the execution and collected by the constable, the justice is liable for the penalty prescribed by Act March 28, 1814, although they were not actually paid over to him.—Jackson v. Purdue, 3 Pen. & W. 519.

[f] (Pa. 1836) In an action against a justice for taking illegal fees, an overcharge for one item of service will not be compensated by omission to charge as much as he was entitled to for another item.—Curry v. Carrol, 5 Watts, 477.

[g] (Pa. 1838) A tender of $50 by a justice who has taken illegal fees is the only amend.—McConahy v. Courtney, 7 Watts, 491.

[h] (Pa. 1879) Taxation of legal fees by a justice, in an action over which he had no jurisdiction, is not an overcharge, within Act March 28, 1814, imposing on justices a penalty for overcharge of fees.—Watrous v. Davis, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (O. S.) 161.

[i] (Pa. 1879) Act March 28, 1814, imposing upon justices a penalty for an overcharge of fees, was repealed by Act May 22, 1893, regulating the fees of justices.—Watrous v. Davis, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (O. S.) 161

[j] (Pa. 1896) Where a justice of the peace in Allegheny county, elected before the passage of Act May 23, 1893 (P. L. 117), relating to the taking of fees by justices of the peace, and therefore subject to the prior act of Feb. 3, 1865 (P. L. 92), makes an illegal charge for unperformed services, the fee will be considered as having been received under the act of 1865, and the justice will be subject to the penalty provided in Act March 28, 1814, of which the act of 1865 is a part.—Lyons v. Means, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 608, judgment affirmed (Com. Pl. 1896) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 382, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 291.

[k] (Pa. 1896) The penalty provided by Act March 28, 1814, against justices of the peace, for charging illegal fees, is limited to illegal fees taken under or referable to the statute itself, and cannot be inserted into the subsequent act of May 23, 1893 (P. L. 117), forbidding generally the taking of illegal fees, and providing no penalty, but providing for punishment through indictment.—Lyons v. Means, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 608, judgment affirmed (Com. Pl. 1896) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 382, 26 Pittsb. Leg. (N. S.) 291.

Liability, remedy by action on the case, see "Action on the Case," vol. 1, c. 1522, § 25 [e].

[a] (Del. 1852) It seems that the superior court has power to attach a justice of the peace for flagrant official misconduct affecting private rights.—King v. Reading, 5 Har. 399.

[b] (Del. 1852) On a rule for an attachment against a justice of the peace for official misconduct, if he deny the alleged facts on oath, the superior court will dismiss the attachment and remit the parties to an action at law or an indictment.—King v. Reading, 5 Har. 399.

[c] (N. H. 1851) An action for the recovery of a penalty for taking unlawful fees, founded on Rev. St. c. 229, § 25, cannot be maintained in the names of two persons suing as copartners.—Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 9.

[d] (N. Y. 1832) To entitle plaintiff, in an action against a justice for a false return on an appeal from a judgment rendered by him, by reason of which the appeal is quashed, to sustain his action, he must show that had such appeal not been quashed, he would have gotten rid of the judgment against him.—Millard v. Jenkins, 9 Wend. 298.

[f] (N. C. 1855) One of the several justices of the peace, who are on the bench when an appointment is made of a guardian, without taking security, may be sued alone, under the act of assembly (Rev. St. c. 54, § 2).—Davis v. Lanier, 47 N. C. 307.

[g] (Ohio, 1876) A constable levied execution on property worth $600, which was replevied before a justice of the peace, and it was appraised at over $300. The justice did not certify the case to the common pleas, as he was required by law to do, nor did he make any record of his proceedings, and the constable sued him and his bondsmen for the amount of the appraisement. Held, that such constable, being the real party in interest, was the proper party to maintain such action.—Deuble v. Kolbe, 7 Ohio Dec. 177, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 234.

[h] (Pa. 1851) An employer voluntarily paid to an alderman illegal fees charged by him in a criminal proceeding against persons who were in his employ, and committed the act in obedience to his instructions, in the course of his business. Held, that he was the party injured, and entitled to recover the penalty for taking such fees; the presumption being, in the absence of rebutting testimony, that he paid the fees out of his own money.—Evans v. Harney, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 460.

[i] (Pa. 1856) Where the court erred in committing for contempt, in an action of trespass against the justice, but admitted evidence of the circumstances of the alleged contempt, the error was cured.—Albright v. Lapp, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 99, 67 Am. Dec. 402.

[j] (Va. 1817) Trespass, and not case, is the proper form of action against a justice of the peace, "for maliciously and corruptly, with intent to injure and oppress the plaintiff, and without probable cause," issuing a search warrant, by virtue of which one N. S., a constable, "did forcibly enter the close of the plaintiff and take and carry away certain negro slaves."—Muse v. Vidal, 6 Munf. 27.

§ 49. Defenses.

[a] (Ill. 1857) A conviction, by a magistrate having jurisdiction, valid on its face until set aside, is a complete bar to any action against him for any act of his in the prosecution in which the conviction was had.—Lancaster v. Lane, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 242.

[b] (N. Y. 1811) The record of a conviction, under Acts 11th Sess. c. 6, § 1, to prevent forcible entries and detainers, if it show that the justice had jurisdiction and proceeded regularly, is a bar to any suit against the justice.—Mather v. Hood, 8 Johns. 44.

[c] (Ohio, 1876) A constable levied an execution on property worth $600, which was replevied before a justice of the peace, and it was appraised at over $300. The justice did not certify the case to the common pleas, as he was required by law to do, nor did he make any record of his proceedings, and the constable sued him and his bondsmen for the amount of the appraisement. Held, that it was no defense to such action that, without any fault of the justice, the papers were stolen, so that he could not make any record of the case or certify the pleadings to the common pleas.—Deuble v. Kolbe, 7 Ohio Dec. 177, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 234.

[d] (Pa. 1859) It is no defense, to an action by the father for the penalty given by the act of 1729 against a justice for marrying his minor child without his consent, that the father by reason of moral degradation was unfit to take care of such child.—Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 324.

[e] (S. C. 1845) In an action against a magistrate, issuing a warrant for the arrest of a person for an offense committed without his jurisdiction, the plaintiff need only show that the defendant knew such fact when he issued the warrant. Want of malice or corrupt motive, and error of judgment as to the defendant's jurisdiction, though they may be used in mitigation of damages, will not justify him.—Miller v. Grice, 2 Rich. Law, 27, 44 Am. Dec. 271.

[f] (Vt. 1861) A justice of the peace, in an action against him for an arrest under a warrant issued by him, cannot justify, if he had not, before such arrest, taken the oath of office prescribed by the constitution of the state.—Courser v. Powers, 34 Vt. 517.

§ 50. Limitations.

[a] (Pa. 1822) Act March 21, 1772, § 7, limiting suits against justices of the peace to six months, may be taken advantage of by the justice, though not specially pleaded.—Prather v. Connelly, 9 Serg. & R. 14.

[b] (Pa. 1851) Under Act March 21, 1772, § 7, an action will not lie against an alderman for maliciously entering judgment against plaintiff in a suit, in which he had no jurisdiction, unless such action be commenced within six months after the defendant was cognizant of the entry of such judgment.—Killion v. Davis, 8 Leg. Int. 124.

§ 51. Notice or demand.

[a] (U. S. 1833) Notice of action against a justice of the peace for trespass for issuing order of arrest contrary to the constitution of the state, or without jurisdiction, is not necessary.—Johnson v. Tompkins, Fed. Cas. No. 7,416 [1 Baldw. 571].

[b] (Ga. 1881) The statute of 24 Geo. II., c. 44, § 1, requiring one month's written notice to be given to a justice before bringing suit against him for any act done by him virtute officii, is in force; and a declaration failing to show such notice is demurrable.—Collins v. Granniss, 67 Ga. 716.

[c] (Ind. 1841) The statute requiring a demand at the office or residence of a justice of the peace, to support an action against him, does not apply to suits against him to recover money collected by him.—State v. Harding, 5 Blackf. 504.

[d] (Md. 1853) St. 24 Geo. II., c. 44, § 1, which requires notice to be given to a justice of the peace before suit brought against him for his official acts, is not in force.—Day v. Day, 4 Md. 262.

[e] (Pa. 1813) Under the act of March 21, 1772, it is not necessary that a notice to a justice of the peace should state what kind of writ will be issued.—Litle v. Toland, 6 Bin. 83.

[f] (Pa. 1824) The notice required to be given to a justice of the peace prior to commencing an action against him for the penalty for marrying a minor without the consent of parent or guardian, under Act Feb. 14, 1729, need not state that there was no publication of banns; Act March 21, 1772, directing that such notice shall clearly and explicitly set forth merely the cause of action against such justice.—Miller v. Smith, 12 Serg. & R. 145.

[g] (Pa. 1825) Under Act March 21, 1772 (1 Smith's Laws, p. 364) § 1, providing that no writ shall be sued out against a justice of the peace for anything done by him in the execution of his office until notice in writing of such suit shall have been delivered to him, or left at the usual place of his abode, by the party, his attorney or agent, at least 30 days before the issuing of the same, a notice to the justice of the peace of the intention to bring suit, signed by an agent or attorney, need not be served by such agent or attorney personally, but may be served by any person.—Bates v. Shaw, 13 Serg. & R. 420.

[h] (Pa. 1838) The notice of suit to a justice, required by the act of March 21, 1772, before he can be sued, must state the cause of action with reasonable precision.—Hansel v. Spoul, 7 Watts, 297.

[i] (Pa. 1838) A notice of action against a justice should state substantially the cause of action.—McConahy v. Courtney, 7 Watts, 491.

[j] (Pa. 1844) A notice to a justice of the peace that he may tender amends before suit brought must specify the nature and circumstances of the injury to be redressed; and if it undertakes to set out the title of a statute which has been violated, although unnecessary, a variance will be fatal.—Stansbury v. Bertron, 7 Watts & S. 362.

[k] (Pa. 1848) A notice of action against a justice, delivered to him by the plaintiff in person, who is known to the justice, is not sufficient, unless signed by the plaintiff.—Grimes v. Percival, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 135.

[l] (Pa. 1859) The notice required by Act March 21, 1772, to be given to a justice of the peace of an intended action against him, need not possess the technical formality of a declaration, provided it be explicit enough to indicate the injury complained of and sought to be redressed.—Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 324.

[m] (Pa. 1879) Under the act of March 21, 1772, providing that no suit shall be brought against a justice for anything done in the execution of his office until notice in writing has been given to him at least 30 days before bringing the suit, the notice must contain a sufficient reference to the case, where the illegal fees were taken, and show the cause of action, so that the defendant may tender amends, if he desires.—Bechtel v. Hause, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 239.

[n] (Pa. 1879) Where a notice to a justice of the peace, to make amends for taking illegal fees, gives the location of the office of plaintiff's attorney, but fails to state the attorney's abode, it is insufficient to entitle plaintiff to maintain an action for the penalty for taking illegal fees, under Act March 28, 1814.—Watrous v. Davis, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (O. S.) 161.

[o] (Pa. 1880) Where the notice to a justice of the peace that an action will be brought against him states that it is an action for false imprisonment, and the action is for trespass and false imprisonment, the notice is fatally defective.—Kennedy v. Shoemaker, 1 Browne, 61.

[p] (Pa. 1880) Under Act March, 1772, requiring a notice of action to be brought against a justice of the peace to state the place of abode of the party sending it, a notice signed "J. L., Attorney for T. K., No. 79 So. Fifth Street," is insufficient.—Kennedy v. Shoemaker, 1 Browne, 61.

[q] (Pa. 1884) Where a justice of the peace is sued for an act done in the execution of his office, and not for a penalty, the notice required by Act 1772 is not required to be given to him previous to suit being brought.—Bair v. Harple, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 265.

§ 52. Pleading.

[a] (Del. 1854) Where the evidence of the plaintiff, in an action against a justice of the peace for trespass and false imprisonment, shows that the only trespass complained of was the act of defendant in issuing process on a complaint and holding plaintiff to bail, the defendant may, under the general issue, introduce evidence that he acted in his official character.—Bailey v. Wiggins, 5 Har. 462, 60 Am. Dec. 650.

[b] (Ga. 1886) Where, in a rule against a justice of the peace under Code, § 3961, providing that he may be ruled for his refusal or neglect to collect or to pay over money, there is no allegation of loss to plaintiff on account of such neglect or refusal, plaintiff cannot recover.—Barrett v. Pulliam, 77 Ga. 552.

[c] (Ind. 1836) In an action against a justice of the peace for neglect to transmit the papers in a case in which he had rendered a judgment against the defendant, from which there was an appeal to the appellate court, it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege that he had a good defense to the original action.—Crews v. Sheets, 4 Blackf. 275.

[d] (Ind. 1838) A defendant, against whom a justice of the peace had rendered judgment, and who had appealed, sued the justice for not filing the papers in the appeal in time. The declaration averred that the plaintiff before the justice had no just cause of action against the now plaintiff. Held, that it was no objection to the averment that the subject-matter of the demand or defense in the first suit was not set out.—Peters v. Land, 5 Blackf. 12.

[e] (Ind. 1841) In an action against a justice of the peace, for failing to issue an execution in time, an allegation that judgment was rendered on the 1st of April, and that execution issued the 16th of May was returned unsatisfied, is equivalent to an averment that, up to the time of the return, the judgment was not paid nor replevied.—State v. Brown, 5 Blackf. 494.

[f] (Ind. 1889) In an action against a justice of the peace, plaintiff alleged that he had been summoned as garnishee, and that judgment had been rendered against him on a note, the property of defendant therein, which he paid, but that the justice failed to enter judgment against him, and he was compelled to pay the note twice, and that the justice had promised to reimburse him. Held, that the allegations of the complaint that the justice informed plaintiff that he had rendered a judgment against him, and that plaintiff could not read, but relied on the statement of the justice, do not show facts amounting to a fraud on plaintiff, excusing his negligence, and, the payment being voluntary, plaintiff must bear the loss.—Emery v. Royal, 117 Ind. 299, 20 N. E. 150.

[g] (Iowa, 1893) A petition stated that on presentation of an appeal bond by plaintiff to defendant, a justice of the peace, defendant approved same, and agreed to send up proper transcript, expressly waiving any right to payment of fees in advance; that in making up the docket defendant omitted any mention of the appeal, wrote plaintiff he must pay, or the transcript would not be sent, and afterwards entered in the docket that plaintiff was to pay before the appeal was taken, and, not having done so, the appeal was not taken; which entry, it was alleged, was false, and made with intent to injure plaintiff, and prevent his appeal. Held, in an action for damages on account of such acts, to show not merely a mistake in judgment, but that the acts were malicious and corrupt; and a demurrer, therefore, should have been overruled.—Horne v. Pudil, 88 Iowa, 533, 55 N. W. 485.

[h] (Md. 1879) A plea, in justification to a complaint alleging that defendant "unlawfully, wickedly, and maliciously" seized plaintiff's boat, merely alleging that defendant held the boat as a justice of the peace, it having been delivered to him by an officer who seized it for violation of the oyster laws, is insufficient, for failure to deny that defendant unlawfully, etc., took the boat.—Willing v. Bozman, 52 Md. 44.

[i] (Mass. 1821) In action against justice of the peace for the penalty of St. 1795, c. 41, for receiving greater fees for copies than are allowed, the declaration must allege that the money was received from him on whom the extortion is practiced, and evidence that it was paid by another person for him, from whom it is alleged to have been received, if it were paid without his request or knowledge, does not support the declaration.—Lincoln v. Shaw, 17 Mass. 410.

[j] (N. Y. 1814) In an action against a justice of the peace for a false return to a certiorari, the declaration, after stating the falsity of the return, averred that "by pretext whereof the plaintiff was not only prevented from obtaining any redress or reversal of the judgment and proceedings aforesaid, but was also compelled to suffer imprisonment and endure great pain, both of body and mind, and to pay and expend divers large sums of money," etc. Held, that this was a sufficient averment, after verdict, of the affirmance of the judgment, and the loss or damage consequent thereon.—Pangburn v. Ramsay, 11 Johns. 141.

[k] (N. Y. 1845) In case brought against a justice, for a false return to an appeal, corrupt motives need not be charged.—Houghton v. Swarthout, 1 Denio, 589.

[l] (Pa. 1849) In a suit against a justice of the peace, for the penalty for taking illegal fees, the previous notice to the defendant, prescribed by law, stated the penalty to have been incurred under "the twenty-sixth section of the act of 1814, which said section is reenacted by the act of 1821"; but the declaration was upon the act of 1814. Held, that there was a fatal variance.—Apple v. Rambo, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 9.

[m] (Tex. 1896) In an action against a justice, on the ground that he had exceeded his jurisdiction, the petition must show that the question of jurisdiction was not before the justice for determination and passed on by him.—Anderson v. Roberts (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 416.

§ 53. Evidence.

[a] (Ill. 1857) In an action against a justice of the peace for trespass which he sought to justify, as being an official act, his docket is admissible in his favor.—Lancaster v. Lane, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 242.

[b] (Iowa, 1858) Where the docket, in a prosecution by information before a justice, was put in evidence by the defendant, in an action brought by him against the justice for wrongfully issuing execution for the fine imposed in favor of the informed, when the judgment imposed it in favor of the state, the burden of proof was thereby thrown on the defendant (the justice) to show another suit, if any there was, in which the execution might have been lawfully issued.—Dupont v. Downing, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 172.

[c] (Md. 1878) In an action for damages against a justice of the peace, for malicious, fraudulent, and corrupt conduct in office, it was shown that defendant, in a case before him, had rendered judgment against plaintiff, and had subsequently refused an appeal bond of $200, tendered by plaintiff, demanding one for $800. There was evidence that in a prior conversation between plaintiff and defendant, relative to another bond which plaintiff refused to sign, defendant said to him, "I will get even with you, and you know I can." Neither the character of the bond nor the case in which it was to be given was shown. Plaintiff testified that he had not dealt with defendant since the occurrence, and that an unfriendly feeling had since existed between them. Held insufficient to warrant a finding that the justice had been guilty of official misconduct as charged.—Knell v. Briscoe, 49 Md. 414.

[d] (N. Y. 1830) The minutes of a justice are not competent evidence in justification of his acts. He must show affirmatively facts giving him jurisdiction.—Evertson v. Sutton, 5 Wend. 281, 21 Am. Dec. 217.

[e] (N. Y. 1874) In an action against a justice, to recover damages for the alleged wrongful issue of an execution against plaintiff after the latter had taken an appeal from the judgment, one of the issues being whether the proper fees had been paid to the justice within the time prescribed by law, the justice testified that the judgment was rendered on May 30th, for $52.98 damages and $4.50 costs. There was evidence on the part of plaintiff that on June 2d he paid the justice $2 for "appeal papers" and $2 for costs, and that the justice said that was all he claimed. Held, that it was proper to inquire of the justice, upon cross-examination, how the $4.50 was made up, as it might have been made to appear that the legitimate costs were not more than the amount paid by plaintiff.—Whitman v. Seaman, 61 N. Y. 633.

[f] (Pa. 1822) In a suit against a justice for not certifying a recognizance entered into by plaintiff, in consequence of which plaintiff's appeal from the judgment of the justice was dismissed, evidence is admissible that plaintiff tendered bail to the justice more than six months before the suit against the justice, because, though this was before the six months had expired within which, under the act of March 21, 1772, suit can be brought against the justice, the neglect to certify the recognizance may have been within that period.—Prather v. Connelly, 9 Serg. & R. 14.

[g] (Pa. 1845) In an action by a father against a justice for marrying his minor daughter without his consent, where a witness testifies that he heard plaintiff read a notice of action against the justice in the latter's presence, but cannot say when it was or that a paper offered in evidence was the notice read, proof of notice within the required period fails.—Minor v. Neal, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 403.

[h] (Pa. 1855) Malice in a magistrate issuing a warrant and holding defendant to bail may be inferred from want of probable cause.—Gault v. Mitchell, 12 Leg. Int. 238.

[i] (S. C. 1819) A justice of the peace issued an attachment for an amount in excess of his jurisdiction, and, on being told that defendants would sue him, he said he thought he might be doing wrong, but he was safe, as he had taken a bond from plaintiff to indemnify himself. Held not sufficient to show willful wrong.—Reid v. Hood, 2 Nott & McC. 168, 10 Am. Dec. 582.

[j] (Tex. 1891) In an action against a justice of the peace for illegally issuing a writ of restitution, the evidence showed that defendant issued the writ of restitution in good faith, believing that, because of the defect in the appeal bond, the jurisdiction of the county court had not attached, and that the case was still in his court. Held, that a verdict for exemplary damages was error.—Smith v. Holland (App.) 16 S. W. 424.

[k] (Vt. 1840) In an action against a justice of the peace for nonfeasance in being absent at the time set for a certain trial, so that the plaintiff who was one of the trial parties was compelled to pay witness fees and extra costs, the records of such trial, though made by the justice himself, were properly admitted in evidence in his own favor.—Barnard v. Flanders, 12 Vt. 657.

[l] (Vt. 1861) In an action against a justice for an arrest under a warrant issued before he had taken his official oath, it can be shown that, though the oath was taken the same day, it was after the warrant was issued.—Courser v. Powers, 34 Vt. 517.

[a] (Neb. 1883) An instruction, in an action against a justice of the peace for wrongfully issuing an attachment, that "there is no evidence introduced tending to show that defendant acted negligently, wantonly, and corruptly in issuing said order of attachment," should not have been given, where the attachment was issued against a nonresident on a claim for unliquidated damages, and not for a debt arising upon contract, judgment, or decree, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 198.—Rouss v. Wright, 14 Neb. 457, 16 N. W. 765.

[b] (Neb. 1889) In an action to recover the penalty from a justice of the peace, under Comp. St. c. 28, § 34, for taking illegal fees for making out and certifying to certain transcripts of judgments, the testimony showed that eight of the transcripts were demanded at one time, and were received together, and paid for in one sum, although separately itemized in the bill. Held, that an instruction which, in effect, directed the jury to find that there were eight separate causes of action was properly refused.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Bohman, 28 Neb. 251, 44 N. W. 111.

[c] (Tex. 1891) In an action against a justice of the peace for illegally issuing a writ of restitution, whereby certain cattle which plaintiff had replevied were taken from his possession, and for exemplary damages, it appeared that plaintiff had leased the cattle, and had consented to a transfer by his lessee to a third person; that, without authority, he took them from such third person, who sued and recovered judgment for the possession of such cattle, both in the justice's court and in the county court; and that plaintiff had appealed from the judgment of the justice, who afterwards, becoming convinced that the appeal bond was insufficient, and that the jurisuction of the county court had not attached, issued the writ of restitution complained of. Held, that it was error to refuse to charge the jury that, if they found the right of possession of the cattle was not in the plaintiff, they would not find for him the value of the cattle during the time he was deprived of them.—Smith v. Holland (App.) 16 S. W. 424.

[d] (Tex. 1891) There was evidence that plaintiff had sold the cattle to his son before the writ of restitution was levied. Held, that refusal to instruct that, if plaintiff did not own the cattle at the time the writ of restitution was levied, the jury should find a verdict for defendant, was error.—Smith v. Holland (App.) 16 S. W. 424.

[a] (Mass. 1861) A magistrate who has rendered judgment for the plaintiff in an action pending before him, and, on request for an execution, has issued one which is invalid on its face, is liable for such damages as are the natural, necessary, and proximate consequences of his wrongful act.—Noxon v. Hill, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 215.

[aa] (Mass. 1861) A magistrate who has rendered judgment for the plaintiff in an action pending before him, and, on request for an execution, has issued one which is invalid on its face, is liable for such damages as are the natural, necessary, and proximate consequences of his wrongful act, but not for the costs of levying the execution, or losses to which the plaintiff has been subjected by reason of attempting to enforce it.—Noxon v. Hill, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 215.

[b] (Mass. 1861) In an action against a magistrate to recover damages for his wrongful act in issuing an execution which was invalid on its face, he may show in mitigation that the condition and circumstances of the judgment debtor was such that nothing could have been collected upon a valid execution.—Noxon v. Hill, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 215.

[c] (Mo. 1881) Where a justice of the peace has usurped power, good faith may be shown in mitigation of damages.—Patzack v. Von Gerichten, 10 Mo. App. 424.

[d] (N. Y. 1881) In an action against a justice for making a false return, whereby appellant's appeal was heard on the law, and not on the facts, as desired by him, and the justice's judgment affirmed, plaintiff's measure of damage is the costs paid by him in the county court and expense of applying for a new trial.—Brooks v. St. John, 25 Hun, 540.

[e] (Ohio, 1856) In an action against a justice of the peace, by the plaintiff taking the appeal, for the erroneous dating of a recognizance, the jury may consider the amount plaintiff was compelled to pay, the loss of time he was compelled to employ in attending to it, and reasonable counsel fees, in determining the amount of damages.—Cohen v. Marchant, 1 Disn. 113.

[f] (Ohio, 1861) The rule of damages, in an action by an indorsee and owner of a promissory note against a justice for negligence, whereby the collection of the note intrusted to the justice for collection was lost, is the actual loss occasioned by such neglect.—Dehn v. Heckman, 12 Ohio St. 181.

[g] (Pa. 1831) Where a suit was instituted against a justice to recover the excess of fees taken by him, in the execution of his office, beyond what the act of assembly allows, judgment may be rendered for the excess and costs, including the fee of 20 shillings to the plaintiff's attorney, for preparing and serving the notice, under the act of March 21, 1772.—Collins v. Hunter, 1 Ashm. 60.

[a] (Ala. 1861) Where the intendant of an incorporated town executed a bond with sureties, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties as justice of the peace, by virtue of his election as intendant (although no bond is required of the intendant under the statutes), and it appeared that he performed the duties of a justice de facto, and received business and patronage as such, on the credit of the bond, held, that the bond was valid, as a common-law obligation, and founded on a sufficient consideration.—Williamson v. Woolf, 37 Ala. 298.

[c] (Ill. 1855) The official bond of a justice is binding upon the principal and his sureties from the time of the delivery of the bond to the county clerk, although not formally approved by him.—Green v. Wardwell, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 278, 63 Am. Dec. 366.

[d] (Ill. 1855) The official bond of a justice of the peace de facto is binding on the sureties.—Green v. Wardwell, 17 Ill. 278, 63 Am. Dec. 366.

[e] (Ind. 1835) One commissioned as a justice of the peace executed a bond with surety to the governor, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties. At the time the bond was executed there was no statute in force authorizing the execution of such a bond by a justice of the peace. Held that, as the bond was not warranted by law, no action could be sustained thereon.—Silver v. Governor, 4 Blackf. 15.

[f] (Ind. 1881) The failure of the principal and sureties on the official bond of a justice of the peace to acknowledge the same, as required by Act Dec. 21, 1865, does not impair its validity, if it be accepted and approved without such acknowledgment.—Brown v. State, 76 Ind. 214.

[g] (Iowa, 1866) A justice of the peace and his sureties are liable upon his bond for notes left with him for collection, but the sureties are not liable for any default occurring before they became sureties, unless the bond was specially drawn with that view.—Bessinger v. Dickerson, 20 Iowa, 260.

[h] (Ohio, 1861) Where the bond of a justice was approved by a majority of the trustees, though not at a special or regular meeting of the board, and the officer entered upon the discharge of his official duties, and enjoyed the benefits and emoluments of his office during his official term, his sureties are concluded from claiming their discharge from liability, for the reason that the bond was not formally approved.—Buell v. Parke, 2 Ohio Dec. 524.

§ 57. Acts in official capacity in general.

Liabilities for official acts, see ante, §§ 32–40.

[a] (Ill. 1878) Under Rev. St. §§ 108, 109, providing that the docket, statutes, and all papers relating to the business transactions before an outgoing justice of the peace shall be turned over to his successor, and that the functions of the outgoing justice shall entirely cease, and those of the new one commence, and page 638, § 5, providing that said outgoing justice shall pay over all moneys collected on any judgment or otherwise by virtue of his office, the responsibility is the same, whether the incumbent succeeds himself or another, and his official bond to pay over all moneys that might come into his hands under any judgment or otherwise, by virtue of his office, covers moneys whether received before or after the beginning of his term.—People v. Price, 3 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 15.

[b] (Ill. 1879) An action cannot be maintained against the sureties on the official bond of a justice of the peace merely because he died without paying over money collected by him. There must have been a demand and refusal to pay, or some omission of official duty.—Price v. Farrar, 5 Ill. App. 536.

[c] (Ind. 1837) The death of a justice of the peace does not relieve his sureties from liability for breach of the condition of his official bond.—State v. Houston, 4 Blackf. 201.

[e] (Ind. 1871) A constable having executions in his hands, the return day of which had passed, and money having been collected upon some of them, was required, by the justice of the peace who had issued them, to return them, but, declining to do so, immediately he was committed to the county jail by the justice, for contempt, though the trial of no cause was in progress. Held, that the justice had no jurisdiction or power to cause the arrest and imprisonment of the constable, and therefore, as the surety was only bound that he should faithfully discharge his duties as justice of the peace, and as this was not a duty which he did or could legally do as justice, the surety was not responsible for the commitment of the constable.—Doepfner v. State, 36 Ind. 111.

[f] (Ind. 1879) No action can be maintained on the official bond of a justice of the peace for his refusal to tax the regular fee in favor of a prosecuting attorney.—State v. Jackson, 68 Ind. 58.

[g] (Iowa, 1881) Where, in proceedings for contempt, a justice rendered a judgment against the offender, and subsequently, without authority, upon his failure to pay the sum, committed him to prison, he was liable therefor in an action on his bond.—Lanpher v. Dennell, 56 Iowa, 153, 9 N. W. 101.

[h] (Minn. 1862) A justice of the peace has no authority to receive a deposit of money in lieu of a recognizance for the appearance of a prisoner held for examination before him, and his refusal to return such deposit is not a breach of his official duty, for which his sureties are liable, though he is liable to an action to recover the same.—Cressey v. Gierman, 7 Minn. 398 (Gil. 316).

[i] (Minn. 1896) The words "judicial duties," in a bond given by a justice of the peace for the faithful performance of his duty, mean "official duties."—Larson v. Kelly, 64 Minn. 51, 66 N. W. 130.

[j] (Neb. 1880) Plaintiffs, nonresidents, by their agent, placed in the hands of a justice of the peace a lot of notes for collection, almost half of which were in amounts in excess of his jurisdiction. Gen. St. p. 705, § 1100, provides that the note, bond, etc., sued on before a justice of the peace shall be filed with him. Held, in the circumstances, it would not be considered that the notes were left with the justice in his official capacity, and the sureties on his official bond were not liable for moneys collected by him on such notes without suit, and not paid over.—McCormick v. Thompson, 10 Neb. 484, 6 N. W. 597.

[k] (Ohio, 1834) Money paid to a justice on a demand in his hands, before due, is not paid to him in his official capacity, and he is not liable on his official bond.—Stevens v. Breatheven, Wright, 733.

[l] (Ohio, 1891) Rev. St. §§ 6513–6522, provides that an attachment by a justice of the peace may be discharged by the giving of a proper undertaking with sureties, or by motion based on proper grounds and supported, if necessary, by evidence. Held that, where the bond of a justice of the peace recited the obligation of the sureties to be that the justice should pay over according to law all moneys received by him by virtue of his office, and a justice of the peace before whom an attachment suit was pending informed defendants that the only means of discharging the attachment was by the deposit of $50, which defendant deposited, the sureties on the justice's bond were not liable for such amount on the failure of the justice to repay the same to defendants, since such sum was not received by virtue of his office, since such method of discharging an attachment was not authorized by law.—Fritch v. Douglass, 5 O. C. D. 695.

[m] (Pa. 1846) A surety of a justice is liable for all claims received by him on suits, or claims to be put in suit, or on execution, or received from a constable on execution, but not for anything received on claims to be collected as an agent, and without suit.—Commonwealth v. Kendig, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 448.

[n] (Pa. 1848) Where proceedings were commenced before a justice to recover a debt less than $100, and the defendant confessed judgment for a sum exceeding $100, and consequently beyond the justice's jurisdiction, and the amount was paid to the justice without execution issued, it was held that the sureties of the justice were responsible for it to the plaintiff.—Hale v. Commonwealth, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 415.

[o] (Pa. 1864) A surety on an official bond of a justice of the peace is liable for money collected by him in his official capacity, though without suit.—Ditmars v. Commonwealth, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 335.

[p] (Wis. 1878) Where a justice's bond binds him and his sureties to pay to persons entitled all sums of money which may come into his hands "by virtue of his office," the sureties will not be liable, in an action by the injured party, for money paid to the justice upon an execution sale under a void judgment.—Barnes v. Whitaker, 45 Wis. 204.

§ 58. Ministerial acts.

Liabilities for ministerial acts, see ante, §§ 41–43.

[a] (Ala. 1847) Whether the sureties of a justice of the peace upon his official bond are bound for the official malversation of their principal, and whether the bond was not intended as a security for the performance of his ministerial duties only, quære.—Lester v. Governor, 12 Ala. 624.

[b] (Ala. 1851) The sureties of a justice of the peace on his official bond are only bound for the faithful performance of his ministerial duties, and not for errors, mistakes, and omissions of a judicial character.—McGrew v. Governor, 19 Ala. 89.

[c] (Ill. 1892) An action will not lie on the bond of a justice of the peace for the loss of a debt by his attempt to acknowledge and certify a mortgage given by himself to one of his creditors.—People v. Scott, 45 Ill. App. 182.

[d] (Ind. 1880) Where a justice of the peace appoints a special constable in a case, he and the sureties on his bond become, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 638, § 111, liable for said constable.—Hood v. Sennett, 70 Ind. 329.

[e] (Md. 1889) Where judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace in an action of replevin, requiring the return of the chattel to defendant, the writ of retorno habendo is the proper form of execution, and its issuance by the justice, where no appeal has been taken, is a ministerial act, for refusal to perform which a liability accrues on his official bond.—State v. Carrick, 70 Md. 586, 17 Atl. 559, 14 Am. St. Rep. 387.

[f] (Minn. 1896) Where a justice of the peace neglects to enter a judgment in his docket within three days after the action is submitted to him for decision, and damages thereby result to the prevailing party to the action, the justice and the sureties on his bond are liable therefor.—Larson v. Kelly, 64 Minn. 51, 66 N. W. 130.

[g] (Ohio, 1869) Neglect of a justice to render judgment on a verdict within the time required by law is merely an omission of judicial duty, and not a breach of his official bond, conditioned that he will "well and truly perform every ministerial act enjoined upon him by law and by virtue of said office."—Stallcup v. Baker, 18 Ohio St. 544.

[h] (Ohio, 1872) The issuance of an order of arrest in a civil action, without the plaintiff's undertaking of indemnity required by Swan & C. St. p. 774, is such a neglect well and truly to perform a ministerial act as constitutes a breach of the justice's official bond, wherefor the person wrongfully arrested may maintain an action.—Place v. Taylor, 22 Ohio St. 317.

[i] (Ohio, 1876) Where a justice has entered upon his docket a memorandum, showing that he has considered and determined upon the judgment to be rendered, the subsequent duties of entering the judgment in full and in suing an execution are ministerial duties, for the nonperformance of which an action on his official bond will lie.—Fairchild v. Keith, 29 Ohio St. 156, affirmed Keith v. Fairchild (1876) 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 227, 7 Ohio Dec. 176.

[j] (Ohio, 1876) In an action on the official bond of a justice of the peace, the petition stated that, in an action pending before the justice, the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant for $90, and that, on the rendition of the judgment, the plaintiff requested the justice to issue execution thereon immediately, and the breaches assigned were that the justice had neglected to make any entry on his docket, except the words, "Judgment $90," and had also neglected to issue execution. Held, that the entry, "Judgment $90," was sufficient to complete the judicial action of the justice.—Fairchild v. Keith, 29 Ohio St. 156.

§ 59. Neglect or misconduct.

Liabilities for misconduct, see ante, §§ 45–47. —— for negligence, see ante, § 44.

[a] (Ala. 1882) A notary public acting as justice of the peace, under pretense that he had rendered judgment against a garnishee, condemning its indebtedness to the payment of the judgment against the principal defendant, received the money, and gave the garnishee a discharge. Held, that he and his sureties were liable on his official bond.—Mason v. Crabtree, 71 Ala. 479.

[b] (Ind. 1832) If a justice of the peace, in the discharge of any of his ministerial or judicial duties, act corruptly to the injury of a party, his conduct is a breach of the condition of his official bond.—State v. Flinn, 3 Blackf. 72, 23 Am. Dec. 380.

[c] (Ind. 1835) The sureties on a justice's bond are liable for his willful and corrupt breaches of duty, but not for errors of judgment or unintentional mistakes.—State v. Littlefield, 4 Blackf. 129.

[d] (Ind. 1873) Where a justice of the peace receives a note for collection, in his official capacity, and collects the same, and appropriates the proceeds to his own use, the sureties on his official bond are liable therefor to the party injured.—Widener v. State, 45 Ind. 244.

[e] (Iowa, 1861) A justice of the peace is not liable on his official bond for errors of judgment committed by him while acting in a judicial capacity; but where he acts through favor, fraud, or partiality, or knowingly commits a wrong by virtue of his office, he will be liable.—Gowing v. Gowgill, 12 Iowa, 495.

[f] (Iowa, 1864) The sureties on the bond of a justice of the peace are liable for a conversion by him of notes placed in his hands for collection.—Latham v. Brown, 16 Iowa, 118.

[g] (Kan. 1873) The sureties on the official bond of a justice of the peace, as well as the justice himself, are liable to the owner of a judgment rendered by such justice and entered upon his docket, for money paid to and collected by said justice in satisfaction of said judgment, where the justice afterward fails and refuses to pay over said money to said owner of the judgment.—Brockett v. Martin, 11 Kan. 378.

[h] (Ohio, 1854) The sureties on a bond of a justice, conditioned that he would well and truly pay over, according to law, all moneys which might come into his hands by virtue of his commission, are liable thereon, on failure of his personal representative, after his death, to pay over, on demand, money which came into his hands officially during his term of office.—Peabody v. State, 4 Ohio St. 387.

[i] (Ohio, 1884) A demand made on the administrator of a justice of the peace for payment of funds received by the justice in his official capacity for the benefit of another, and the administrator's refusal to pay, constitute a breach of the justice's bond, since the administrator is liable, in the management of the estate, to distribute trust funds in the hands of the justice at the time of his death.—Lindeman v. Ziegler, 9 Ohio Dec. 401, 12 Wkly. Law Bul. 319.

[j] (Pa. 1895) Where a clerk of a justice of the peace receives money from a defendant in execution, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the justice, the justice and the sureties are liable on the official bond for failure to deliver over said moneys to the creditor.—Walter v. Ziegler (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 25.

[k] (Pa. 1895) Act June 21, 1839 (P. L. 378) § 6, provides that a justice shall give bond, with sureties, conditioned, inter alia, "for the faithful application of all moneys that come into his hands." Held, that where a justice receives money on a judgment rendered by him, and fails to pay it over to the judgment plaintiff, the proper remedy is on his official bond.—Fery v. Schutter (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 64.

§ 60. Actions on bonds.

[a] (Ala. 1847) The act which gives a summary remedy against justices of the peace for failure to pay over on demand money received or collected by virtue of office does not extend to their sureties, so as to authorize a judgment to be rendered against them, with their principals, on motion. Consequently, a motion for judgment in such case against a justice and his sureties is unauthorized, and may be denied in toto.—Ledbetter v. Castles, 11 Ala. 149.

[b] (Ill. 1857) When a justice of the peace has absconded, no demand for money collected by him need be made, in order to maintain a suit upon his official bond.—Warren County v. Jeffrey, 18 Ill. 329.

[c] (Ind. 1844) A judgment of a justice of the peace may be assigned, by statute, so as to authorize the assignee to be the relator, in a suit on the justice's bond for the money collected by the justice on the judgment.—Hooker v. State, 7 Blackf. 272.

[d] (Ind. 1846) The demand required to be made on a justice of the peace, before a suit for money collected by him can be sustained on his bond, may be made at any time before the commencement of the suit.—Parker v. State, 8 Blackf. 292.

[e] (Iowa, 1861) The right to sue a justice upon his bond, for improper conduct in the discharge of the duties of his office, is not waived by an appeal from his decision, but only the right to raise any question upon the erroneous rulings in that case.—Gowing v. Gowgill, 12 Iowa, 495.

[f] (Miss. 1875) Where suit is brought upon an official bond of a justice of the peace, for damages for a breach of the conditions thereof, the amount of the damages claimed, and not the penalty of the bond, is the criterion of jurisdiction.—State v. Luckey, 51 Miss. 528.

[g] (Ohio, 1873) Act March 11, 1853, § 11 (Swan & C. St. p. 746), provides that the liability on the bond of a justice shall be enforced in the same manner as on bonds given by sheriffs. Code Civ. Proc. § 566, provides that when an officer, by misconduct, forfeits his bond or renders his sureties liable, any person injured thereby may bring an action against the officer and his sureties. Held, that the action on a justice's bond against the principal and his sureties must be joint.—Aucker v. Adams, 23 Ohio St. 543.

[h] (Ohio, 1876) A constable levied executions on property worth about $600, and it was replevied from him, and appraised before a justice at over $300, but he did not certify the case up to the common pleas, nor make any record of his proceedings, as required by law. Held, that the constable was entitled, as the real party in interest, to sue on the justice's bond for the sum total of the executions in his hands.—Deuble v. Kolbe, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 234.

[i] (Pa. 1871) The law of 1772, requiring 30 days' notice of suits against justices, construed not to apply to suits on their official bond.—Commonwealth v. Frailey, 69 Pa. (19 P. F. Smith) 260, distinguishing Wise v. Wills (1828) 2 Rawle, 208.

[a] (Ohio, 1876) A constable levied executions on property worth about $600, and it was replevied from him, and appraised before a justice at over $300, but he did not certify the case up to the common pleas, nor make any record of his proceedings, as required by law. Held, that the fact that, without the justice's fault, the papers in the replevin case were stolen, so that he could not make any record of the case or certify it up, was no defense to an action by the constable on his bond, for the sum total of the executions in his hands.—Deuble v. Kolbe, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 234.

[b] (Ohio, 1876) A constable levied executions on property worth about $600, and it was replevied from him, and appraised before a justice at over $300, but he did not certify the case up to the common pleas, nor make any record of his proceedings, as required by law. Held, that where, without the justice's fault, the papers in the replevin case were stolen, so that he could not make out any record or certify it up, it was no defense to an action by the constable on his bond, for the sum total of the executions in his hands, that the plaintiff in the replevin case is and was willing to consent to the substitution of such papers as would give jurisdiction to the common pleas.—Deuble v. Kolbe, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 234.

[a] (Ill. 1876) Rev. St. c. 59, § 138, making bonds of justices of the peace void after five years, while in the nature of a statute of limitations, is not such a statute as must be specially pleaded.—People v. Herr, 81 Ill. 125

[b] (Ohio, 1850) An action on the bond of a justice of the peace, for failure of the justice to pay over money received in his official capacity, is not barred in one year.—State v. Chenoweth, 1 Ohio Dec. 369.

[a] (D. C. 1876) In an action against the sureties on the official bond of a justice of the peace, on the alleged ground that the justice issued a writ without authority of law, by virtue of which certain goods were seized and taken away by the constable, it is necessary to aver that the justice knowingly, willfully, or wrongfully omitted to do what ought to have been done, or that, in doing what he did by way of issuing process, he knowingly, willfully, or corruptly instituted the proceedings to the injury of the plaintiff.—Holtzman v. Robinson, 2 MacArthur, 520.

[b] (Ill. 1857) Where a declaration upon the official bond of a justice of the peace recites that he was twice elected, but alleges a breach for nonpayment of money collected during his first term of office, it will be sufficient to maintain the action upon the bond first given. It will not be presumed that the justice held the money by virtue of his second office.—Warren County v. Jeffrey, 18 Ill. 329.

[c] (Ind. 1835) In an action on a justice's bond by the state, on the relation of a private citizen, the complaint must show a breach of some duty embraced in the covenants of the bond for which relator has a cause to complain; hence an averment that the justice did not faithfully perform his duty as required by law is insufficient.—State v. Littlefield, 4 Blackf. 129.

[d] (Ind. 1841) In an action in the name of the state on the official bond of a justice of the peace, it is not necessary that it should appear from the declaration that the relator is beneficially interested in the suit.—State v. Harding, 5 Blackf. 504.

[e] (Ind. 1842) A declaration in debt on a justice's bond set out the condition, and assigned as a breach that the justice had failed to discharge his duty, by failing to issue an execution on a certain judgment. The plea was that the justice had not failed to discharge his duty, as alleged in the declaration. Held, on general demurrer, that the plea was good, but that it might have been specially demurred to, as argumentative.—State v. Scott, 6 Blackf. 263.

[f] (Ind. 1843) In a suit by the state, on the relation, etc., on a justice's bond, the breach assigned was that the justice had rendered judgment in an action of debt in favor of the relator against one R., for $95.87 and costs; that the justice had improperly taken replevin bail, etc., and neglected to issue execution, etc. Held, that the declaration sufficiently showed that the justice had jurisdiction of the suit against R.; it appearing that the action was debt, and the amount recovered less than $100. —State v. Hook, 6 Blackf. 515.

[g] (Ind. 1843) In a suit on a justice's bond for neglecting to issue an execution, a plea that at the time of the judgment, and ever since, the execution defendant was insolvent, is insufficient; but such insolvency may be proved in mitigation of damages.—Noel v. State, 6 Blackf. 523.

[h] (Ind. 1843) In debt by the state, on the relation, etc., on a justice's bond, against him and his surety, the plea was general performance; and the replication assigned as a breach the justice's failure to pay over money collected. The rejoinder was that the relator had recovered a judgment against the justice for the same money. Held, that the rejoinder was a departure.—Bell v. State, 7 Blackf. 33.

[i] (Ind. 1843) In an action on a justice's bond for failure to pay over money collected, though the bond was conditioned for payment on demand of such money, a general averment in the replication of nonpayment, though often demanded, was sufficient on general demurrer. —Bell v. State, 7 Blackf. 33.

[j] (Ind. 1846) A declaration in a suit on a justice's bond, where the breach assigned was the justice's failure to pay over money collected on a judgment, which states that the justice, by virtue of his office, had collected and received the money, substantially avers that the money was received by the justice while he was in office.—Parker v. State, 8 Blackf. 202.

[k] (Ind. 1847) Where suit is brought to recover damages for the nonperformance of a duty of a justice of the peace, and there are exceptions contained in the enacting clause of the statute which prescribes the duty, the declaration must negative the exceptions.—Weaver v. State, 8 Blackf. 563.

[l] (Ind. 1847) The declaration should have expressly averred, or have stated facts amounting to an averment, that the judgment had not been replevied, and that the judgment creditor had not directed that an execution should not issue.—Weaver v. State, 8 Blackf. 563.

[m] (Ind. 1847) In debt on a justice's bond for his failure to issue an execution, the relator's statement that the justice might, could, and should have issued an execution is only a conclusion of law.—Weaver v. State, 8 Blackf. 563.

[n] (Ind. 1847) In debt on the bond of a justice of the peace, the breach assigned was that on June 21, 1841, the relator recovered a judgment before the justice, for $51.25, against one A.; that the justice failed to issue execution on the judgment during his term of office, though he might, could, and should have issued it; that no execution issued on the judgment until December 6, 1841, when one was issued by the successor of the justice, and when A. had no property subject to execution; and that the judgment had not been paid. Held, that the assignment of the breach was insufficient.—Weaver v. State, 8 Blackf. 563.

[o] (Ind. 1871) A justice of the peace received money from a garnishee in an attachment proceeding against whom there was an order made to pay the money. Afterwards, in a suit against the justice and the sureties on his official bond, on the relation of said garnishee, the complaint alleged that the money was paid to the justice, "to be held by him as such justice of the peace, until the final determination and adjudication of the rights of the respective parties connected with said cause, for the person entitled to said money and authorized to receive the same," and that the relator appealed from the judgment within 30 days, and the judgment was reversed, and the relator demanded the money from the justice, who refused to pay. Held, that the complaint did not show a cause of action against the justice and his sureties. It should have been alleged that the justice had not paid over the money, and that it remained in his hands at the date of the appeal from his judgment, after which he could not legally pay over the money on the judgment.—State v. Woodman, 36 Ind. 511.

[r] (Iowa, 1881) In an action upon a justice's bond for damages for illegal commitment after conviction, the petition alleged that, when the justice gave the plaintiff notice of his privilege of appeal, the plaintiff "offered security and bond for appeal," which the justice refused to allow, and willfully and maliciously committed him to jail. Held, that the petition was insufficient, as it failed to show proper steps taken to stay the judgment by putting in bail in the amount and form required by Code 1873, § 4698.—Anderson v. Park, 57 Iowa, 69, 10 N. W. 310.

[s] (Ohio, 1859) In an action upon a justice's bond, a petition which avers that two of the township trustees, as such, approved it, without averring that it was done at a meeting of the trustees, is insufficient.—Slicer v. Elder, 2 Ohio Dec. 218.

[a] (Ind. 1848) In debt on the bond of a justice of the peace to recover money collected by him on a judgment, it was held that evidence of the acknowledgment by the justice that the judgment had been paid, and that he receipted for the money, was proper for the consideration of the jury, in determining whether the justice received the money.—State v. Daily, Smith, 153.

[b] (Ind. 1854) In a suit on the official bond of a justice of the peace, for his refusal to account for the proceeds of a note collected by him, for which note he has receipted as justice of the peace, it will be presumed that he had power to give the receipt as such, and that the act was legal, until the contrary is shown. —State v. Carter, 6 Ind. 37.

[c] (Ohio, 1882) In an action against a justice and his sureties to recover damages on account of his failure to issue execution, where it is shown that the execution debtor had certain property which might have been levied on, if the debtor did not claim it as exempt, the presumption is that he would not have claimed it as exempt.—Carpenter v. Warner, 38 Ohio St. 416.

§ 65. —— Damages.

[a] (Ill. 1878) In an action on a justice's bond for his failure to deliver up, in compliance with Rev. St. p. 653, § 110, securities left with him for collection, the measure of damages is the owner's loss; if, when he received a note, and ever since, the maker was wholly insolvent, they are merely nominal.—Hays v. People, 8 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 57.

[b] (Ohio, 1861) Where a justice has neglected to put to judgment and execution notes left with him for collection, the rule of damages, in a suit against the sureties of the justice, is the actual loss sustained.—Dehn v. Heckman, 12 Ohio St. 181.

[c] (Ohio, 1872) In an action by a judgment creditor on the official bond of a justice of the peace for failure to issue an execution, the damages may include the loss incurred by the neglect, though exceeding the amount of the execution.—Gaylor v. Hunt, 23 Ohio St. 255.

[d] (Ohio, 1882) In a suit against a justice and his sureties to recover damages on account of his failure to issue an execution, the measure of damages is, prima facie, the amount of the execution; but this amount may be reduced by showing that a part only of the execution could have been collected.—Carpenter v. Warner, 38 Ohio St. 416.

Duties of justices as conservators of the peace, see ante, § 21.

[a] (U. S. 1808) A justice of the peace is not liable criminally for discharging on bail a prisoner committed for a felony, unless the justice acted contemptuously, and willfully, and with evil intent.—United States v. Faw, Fed. Cas. No. 15,078 [1 Cranch, C. C. 486].

[b] (U. S. 1836) Where the indictment does not describe an indictable offense, the magistrate has a discretion as to the amount of bail, and is not criminally liable for taking insufficient bail.—United States v. Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 16,330 [4 Cranch, C. C. 727].

[c] (U. S. 1844) It is an indictable offense for a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia knowingly to demand, by color of his office, in any case, civil or criminal, payment of any other fees than those established by law.—Mattingly v. United States, Fed. Cas. No. 9,295 [1 Hayw. & H. 195].

[d] (U. S. 1880) The willful and corrupt violation of an act of congress by a justice of the peace, in the exercise of his office, will render him liable to indictment in a federal court.—United States v. Kindred (C. C.) 5 Fed. 43.

[e] (Ala. 1859) On the trial of an indictment of a justice of the peace, under Code, § 3225, for receiving illegal fees, held, that service and summons of a garnishment on a person indebted to defendant in attachment is a levy of the attachment, within the meaning of the act (Sess. Acts 1845–46, p. 103), regulating the fees of constables in Mobile.—Cleaveland v. State, 34 Ala. 254.

[f] (Ark. 1881) Under Act Feb. 11, 1875, providing that any justice of the peace guilty of certain breaches of duty shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined a certain sum, "to be recovered in a suit before a justice of the peace," a justice violating its provisions must be prosecuted criminally.—McClure v. State, 37 Ark. 426.

[g] (Ark. 1881) It is a violation of Act Feb. 11, 1875, relative to the duties of justices of the peace, if the justice's abstract of misdemeanors, required of him thereby, omits any item of information which the act requires; and he is liable to the penalty and to removal from office, although he might have honestly thought that the imperfect abstract filed by him was sufficient.—McClure v. State, 37 Ark. 426.

[h] (Ark. 1890) Under Mansf. Dig. § 5925, the justice has a choice between paying the penalty and accepting the appointment, under section 5922, to apportion the persons in the township liable to work the roads, and no absolute duty to accept is imposed.—State v. Lewis, 53 Ark. 340, 13 S. W. 925.

[i] (Ark. 1890) Under Mansf. Dig. §§ 1755, 1757, imposing a penalty on any justice of the peace who fails to file an abstract, giving the style of each criminal case, whether the defendant was acquitted or convicted, and, if convicted, the amount of the fine imposed, this penalty is incurred if cases are omitted from the abstract, though from no improper motive, but because the fines were not collected, and under the belief that they were not to be reported.—Bishop v. State, 14 S. W. 88.

[j] (Ark. 1890) A justice of the peace is not indictable for failure to file an abstract of the misdemeanors tried before him with the clerk of the county court, as required by Mansf. Dig. § 1755, if he has tried no such cases.—State v. Smith, 53 Ark. 325, 14 S. W. 95.

[k] (Ill. 1834) Acts of official misconduct by justices of the peace, done with corrupt motives, are indictable offenses.—Wickersham v. People, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 128.

[l] (Ky. 1859) A justice of the peace of Ohio solemnized a marriage upon a ferry boat, midway on the Ohio river, between Newport and Cincinnati, illegally, according to the laws of the state of Kentucky. It did not appear that Ohio had ever, by its legislation, assumed, or claimed, or asserted jurisdiction, exclusive or concurrent, over the place where the marriage was solemnized. Held, that the justice was guilty of an offense against and punishable under the laws of Kentucky.—McFall v. Commonwealth, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 394.

[m] (Md. 1866) Where a justice of the peace received bank notes during the trial of a cause before him, and afterwards refused to deliver up such notes to the person legally entitled to them, it was held that the justice of the peace was guilty of a misdemeanor, for which he was indictable and punishable at common law.—Hiss v. State, 24 Md. 556.

[n] (Minn. 1869) It is not the official duty of a justice of the peace to advise parties in regard to selling their judgments, and misbehavior in office cannot be predicated upon corrupt advice in such matters.—State v. Coon, 14 Minn. 456 (Gil. 340).

[o] (Minn. 1869) A justice of the peace is not liable criminally for failing to pay over money collected, or withholding information in regard to a judgment recovered before him, until after demand for such money, and request for such information.—State v. Coon, 14 Minn. 456 (Gil. 340).

[oo] (N. Y. 1829) A justice of the peace is liable to indictment for a misdemeanor, if he denies an adjournment, because a defendant refuses to pay his fees for drawing a bond, on the defendant's demanding an adjournment.—People v. Calhoun, 3 Wend. 420.

[p] (N. Y. 1836) A justice of the peace is indictable for discharging an offender, without requiring sufficient securities for his reappearance, corruptly, and with intent to pervert the course of justice.—People v. Coon, 15 Wend. 277.

[pp] (N. Y. 1845) A justice of the peace before whom a cause is pending is bound, on the defendant's request, to swear him to an affidavit, prepared for the purpose of procuring the cause to be discontinued, on the ground of the justice being a material witness for the defendant; and his refusal to do so is a misdemeanor, whether the affidavit, as drawn, is sufficient for the purpose or not.—People v. Brooks, 1 Denio, 457, 43 Am. Dec. 704.

[q] (N. Y. 1856) A police justice was indicted for having willfully taken bail of and discharged a person committed by another magistrate, on charge of larceny, without notice to the district attorney, as provided by session laws of 1846. Held, that these facts constituted a misdemeanor.—People v. Bogart, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 143.

[qq] (N. Y. 1856) A police justice in the city of New York, who intentionally and willfully takes bail and discharges from custody a person committed on a criminal charge by another magistrate, without notice to the district attorney, as required by Laws 1846, p. 408, cannot defend a prosecution for a misdemeanor, under 2 Rev. St. p. 696, § 39, on the ground that his acts were judicial.—People v. Bogart, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 143.

[r] (N. C. 1853) It is a misdemeanor in office for a justice of the peace to sell or transfer a judgment rendered by himself or by any other justice, if in his possession virtute officio; the law making it his duty to keep and preserve such judgments.—State v. Zachary, 44 N. C. 432.

[rr] (N. C. 1872) Where a forcible trespass—such as turning a defendant out of his house—is committed in the execution of process issued by a justice, an indictment therefor cannot be sustained against the justice, unless he acted without jurisdiction, or corruptly, or at least maliciously, and without probable cause.—State v. Ferguson, 67 N. C. 219.

[s] (Pa. 1794) Criminal information lies against a justice of the peace for taking very insufficient bail.—Respublica v. Burns, 1 Yeates, 370.

[ss] (Pa. 1795) A justice of the peace is indictable for not attempting to suppress a riot.—Respublica v. Montgomery, 1 Yeates, 419.

[t] (Pa. 1823) Under Act March 20, 1810, § 23, providing that the justice, on demand of either party, must make out a copy of his proceedings, and that a refusal shall constitute a misdemeanor in office, a refusal by a justice to deliver a copy of his proceedings to either party on demand is a violation of the act.—Wilson v. Commonwealth, 10 Serg. & R. 373.

[tt] (Pa. 1844) A magistrate who, when either present on the occasion of an unlawful assembly or when called on such an occasion, neglects or refuses to do his utmost for the suppression of such unlawful assemblies, subjects himself to an indictment and conviction for a criminal misdemeanor.—King's Charge to Grand Jury, 4 Pa. Law J. 36.

[u] (Pa. 1872) In acting as local magistrate, an alderman taking other or greater fees than are allowed by the fee bill is guilty of an indictable offense.—Commonwealth v. Hagan, 9 Phila. 574.

[uu] (Pa. 1885) Since the passage of Act April 2, 1868, the only remedy against a justice of the peace for taking illegal fees is by indictment under Act March 31, 1860, § 11.—Derrick v. Litsch, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 494.

[v] (Pa. 1896) Act May 23, 1893 (P. L. 117), relating generally to punishment of justices of the peace for taking illegal fees, repeals all other local and general acts on the subject of fees legally chargeable by justices of the peace, except in so far as they are, in whole or in part, kept temporarily in force by Const. art. 3, § 13, which provides that "no law shall extend the term of any public officer or increase or diminish his salary or emoluments, after his election or appointment."—Lyons v. Means, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 608, judgment affirmed (Com. Pl. 1896) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 382, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 291.

[vv] (S. C. 1802) A justice is not indictable for oppression in office, although he mistake the law, unless it appear that he acted from corrupt motives, and was influenced by malice, ill will, or resentment, and not by a sense of duty.—State v. Johnson, 1 Brev. 155.

[w] (S. C. 1815) A justice is not answerable criminally for error of judgment, but is answerable for corruption.—State v. Porter, 3 Brev. 175, 2 Tread. Const. 694.

[ww] (S. C. 1838) Where two justices, under the habeas corpus act, had admitted a person to bail who was charged with murder in the warrant, they were guilty of an escape, and might very properly be indicted.—State v. Arthur, 1 McMul. 456.

[x] (Tex. 1873) The failure of a justice of the peace to attend the sittings of the county court will not render the justice liable to indictment.—State v. Baldwin, 39 Tex. 75.

[xx] (Tex. 1873) Failure of a justice of the peace to report to the district court the number of causes which he has tried and determined, together with the disposition made of them, as required by Pasch. Dig. art. 3772, will render the justice liable to an indictment for a misdemeanor.—State v. Baldwin, 39 Tex. 155.

[y] (Vt. 1802) An indictment does not lie against a justice of the peace for maladministration. The proceeding is by impeachment.—State v. Campbell, 2 Tyler, 177.

[yy] (Va. 1808) A justice of the peace may be amerced and removed from office upon an information against him in a superior court of criminal jurisdiction, for misbehavior in office.—Commonwealth v. Alexander, 4 Hen. & M. 522.

[z] (Va. 1818) Where a justice of the peace maliciously issued a warrant commanding a person to appear before him and answer the complaint of another person, and adjudged him to pay costs, when in fact said complaint was never made to him, he was guilty of malfeasance, and was indicted and fined.—Wallace v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 130.

[zz] (Va. 1825) A corrupt agreement between two justices of the peace, A. and B., to the effect that A. will vote for C. as commissioner of the revenue, in consideration that B. will vote for D. as clerk, and the actual voting in pursuance thereof is a misdemeanor at common law, for which an information or indictment will lie.—Commonwealth v. Callaghan, 2 Va. Cas. 460.

§ 67. Indictment and information.

[a] (U. S. 1835) In an indictment against a justice of the peace for taking insufficient bail in a criminal case, it is not necessary to state in what respects the bail was insufficient, nor to set out the security taken, nor to aver that the defendant ordered the offender to be discharged from the arrest.—United States v. Clark, Fed. Cas. No. 14,803 [4 Cranch, C. C. 506].

[aa] (Ark. 1882) An indictment against a justice for failing to proceed against one for carrying a pistol should allege that the justice had information of the offense from the oath of some person, or that he had personal knowledge of it.—State v. Graham, 38 Ark. 519.

[b] (Ark. 1890) Mansf. Dig. § 5922, provides that the county court shall appoint a justice of the peace, who shall apportion the persons in the township liable to work the roads; and section 5925, that any justice who shall refuse to accept and discharge the duties of such appointment shall be fined in the county court. Held, that an indictment at common law for nonfeasance in office, in failing to make the apportionment, charging that the accused was the apportioning justice, having been appointed and duly notified, is fatally defective unless it also show an acceptance of the appointment.—State v. Lewis, 53 Ark. 340, 13 S. W. 925.

[c] (Cal. 1890) An indictment which avers that a justice of the peace took jurisdiction of a prosecution for the sole purpose of making the acquittal of accused a bar to another pending prosecution for the same offense, but does not aver that he intended to acquit accused, or that he acted from corrupt or partial motives, is not sufficient, under Pen. Code, § 758, punishing "district, county, township, or municipal officers" for willful or corrupt "misconduct in office."—People v. Ward, 85 Cal. 585, 24 Pac. 785.

[d] (Fla. 1879) An indictment, under Thomp. Dig. p. 497, c. 5, § 18, charging a justice of the peace with malpractice in office, which does not allege that the malpractice was committed by the defendant "in the administration and under color of his office," is so defective as to cause an arrest of judgment.—Snowden v. State, 17 Fla. 386.

[e] (Ga. 1875) A justice of the peace cannot be arraigned on a presentment for malpractice in office. An indictment as prescribed by Code, § 4504, is the proper method of charging him with such offense.—Hawkins v. State, 54 Ga. 653.

[f] (Ga. 1875) A presentment is demurrable which charges a justice of the peace with "malpractice," without the addition of the words "in office," or which charges him with malpractice, and does not show, by the entry of the solicitor general or the sheriff, that a copy thereof had been served on him before it was laid before the grand jury, and that he had been notified to appear with his witnesses, or which simply charges him with being drunk while presiding in his court. In the latter case it should set forth the wrong done by some official act or omission to act, resulting from such drunkenness.—Hawkins v. State, 54 Ga. 653.

[g] (Ga. 1876) An indictment against a justice of the peace, for malpractice in office, alleged that, upon the trial before the justice of a possessory warrant, possession of the property was awarded to the plaintiff, and an execution issued against the defendant therein for costs, but that the justice had refused to deliver the property to the plaintiff upon demand, and had an entry of nulla bona entered on the execution and a levy made upon the property in dispute, although the plaintiff offered to point out property belonging to the defendant. Held, that the indictment was sufficient.—Russell v. State, 57 Ga. 420.

[h] (Ill. 1834) An indictment, charging that the defendant, a justice of the peace, took up certain estray animals, specifying the number and kind, and corruptly caused the same to be appraised before himself as such justice, is substantially good.—Wickersham v. People, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 128.

[i] (Ill. 1840) An indictment against a justice of the peace, for malfeasance in office, in refusing to issue subpœnas, should charge that he "willfully and corruptly refused to issue the subpœnas."—Jones v. People, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 477.

[j] (Ind. 1844) An indictment against a justice, under Act 1842, p. 131, for failure to pay over, on the first Monday in August, moneys which have come into his hands at any time prior to the preceding first Monday in August, alleging that the fees were not paid over, must allege that they were received prior to the first Monday in August of the year preceding the first Monday in August on which he failed to pay over.—State v. Boyles, 7 Blackf. 90.

[k] (Ind. 1847) An indictment alleged that the defendant, being a justice of the peace, as such justice, charged A. with committing an assault and battery on B., upon the justice's view, without complaint or affirmation having been made; that the justice verbally required A. to appear before him to answer the offense; that A. appeared, without consenting to do so; that the justice thereupon, without a plea of guilty, and without proof, fined him, A., $3, and collected the fine; that the justice, in the administration and under the color of his office, unlawfully and oppressively took cognizance of said offense, and unlawfully and oppressively rendered said judgment, and collected the money, contrary to the form of the statute, etc.

Held, that the indictment was insufficient.—State v. Odell, 8 Blackf. 396.

[l] (Ind. 1850) It is not necessary to state the names of the persons against whom the fines had been assessed, in an indictment against a justice for failing to make out and file in the clerk's office a list of all the fines, etc., assessed by him.—State v. McCormack, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 305.

[m] (Ind. 1853) An indictment against a justice of the peace, under Rev. St. 1843, c. 53, § 83, charging the corrupt rendering of an unlawful judgment, unless it allege that he knew his decision to be contrary to law, is bad.—State v. Ross, 4 Ind. 541.

[n] (Ind. 1857) In an information against a justice of the peace, under 2 Rev. St. p. 442, § 63, for a violation of 2 Rev. St. p. 500, § 21, requiring them to pay over all moneys received on account of fines for the use of common schools, it is not necessary to state from whom the moneys were received.—Alexander v. State, 9 Ind. 337.

[o] (Mo. 1895) Rev. St. 1889, § 4370 et seq., requires a justice of the peace before whom parties may be adjudged guilty of misdemeanors and fined, to report to the clerk of the county court the amount of the fine, and the name of the "constable" charged with the collection thereof, and makes the failure of the justice to perform this duty a misdemeanor. Held, that an indictment thereunder, merely stating that the "execution was delivered to the proper officer," is defective for failure to allege that such officer was a constable.—State v. Latshaw, 63 Mo. App. 496, 620; Id., 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 861.

[q] (N. C. 1838) An indictment against a justice of the peace, for refusing to issue his warrant for the arrest of a felon, must charge either that the felony was committed in his presence, or the tender to him of an affidavit of its commission. It should also charge that the felon was in the magistrate's county when the refusal took place.—State v. Leigh, 20 N. C. (3 & 4 Dev. & B.) 126.

[r] (N. C. 1887) Code, § 906, provides "that it shall be the duty of each justice of the peace to furnish the clerk of the superior, criminal, or inferior court of his county with a list of the names and offenses of all parties tried and finally disposed of by such justice, together with the papers in each case, in all criminal actions since the last term of the superior, criminal, or inferior court." An indictment against a justice alleged that he did on certain days try and finally dispose of certain criminal actions, and did willfully and unlawfully fail to furnish the clerk of the superior court of the county with a list containing the names of all parties tried in such actions. Held, that such indictment sufficiently advised accused of the particulars of the criminal neglect imputed, so as to protect him against any further prosecution for the same offense, and should not be quashed because it omitted to state the names of the persons tried, or that their names were unknown.—State v. Foy, 98 N. C. 744, 3 S. E. 524.

[s] (Pa.) An indictment against a justice of the peace for refusing a copy of his proceedings, as required by Act March 20, 1810, § 23, should allege a tender of his fee for that service.—(1824) Wilson v. Commonwealth, 10 Serg. & R. 373; (1846) Commonwealth v. Beerbrower, 3 Clark, 404, 5 Pa. Law J. 426.

[t] (Pa. 1846) An indictment, under Act March 20, 1810, § 23, against a justice of the peace, for refusing on demand to make out and deliver to a party in an action pending before him a certified copy of his proceedings, must aver the tender or payment of the fee to which the justice is entitled for such service, and an averment that the demandant pay the justice the full amount of the money which the justice required, is insufficient; and proof that the sum paid was the precise sum fixed by the fee bill will not cure the defect.—Commonwealth v. Beerbrower, 3 Clark, 404, 5 Pa. Law J. 426.

[u] (Tenn. 1849) An indictment of a justice of the peace, under Act 1835, c. 17, for failing to deliver over to his successor the books and papers of his office, which shows that a period of time elapsed between the expiration of his term and the qualification of his successor, must negative the idea that defendant delivered the books and papers in the interval to the nearest justice, as he would have been authorized to do in such case, under the statute.—State v. Jones, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 41.

[v] (Tenn. 1849) An indictment of a justice of the peace, under Act 1835, c. 17, for failing to deliver over to his successor the books and papers of his office, should aver that the successor demanded the books and papers of defendant.—State v. Jones, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 41.

[w] (Va. 1795) In an information against a justice of the peace for bribery in the election of a clerk, it must appear that an election was held, and that a vote was given at that election.—Newell v. Commonwealth, 2 Wash. 88.

[x] (Va. 1830) In an indictment against a justice of the peace for misbehavior in office, it is necessary that the act imputed as misbehavior should be distinctly and substantially charged to have been done corruptly, etc., and should also charge a scienter.—Jacobs v. Commonwealth, 2 Leigh, 709.

§ 68. Evidence.

[a, b] (Ga. 1876) On trial of an indictment charging a justice of the peace with malpractice in office in a particular proceeding, it is competent to require the defendant to produce his docket and such official papers as may be relevant to the issue.—Russell v. State, 57 Ga. 420.

[c] (N. Y. 1856) On trial of a city police justice for willfully discharging from custody, on bail, a person committed for larceny by another magistrate, without notifying the district attorney, as required by Laws 1846, p. 408, it is not necessary to prove that the act was done corruptly.—People v. Bogart, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 143.

[d] (N. Y. 1856) On trial of a city police justice for discharging on bail a person committed on a criminal charge by another magistrate, without notifying the district attorney, as required by Laws 1846, p. 408, the state may show that, after bail had been taken, search was made for the surety in the recognizance at the place stated as his residence, and at other places, and that he could not be found.—People v. Bogart, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 143.

[e] (N. C. 1887) Evidence that a justice appeared as agent for a plaintiff in an action, and managed his case at the trial before another justice of his county as an attorney would do, nothing appearing to show that he practiced as an attorney at any other time, or that he received or asked compensation for his services, is not sufficient to convict under Code, §

27, forbidding his practicing as an attorney.—State v. Bryan, 98 N. C. 644, 4 S. E. 522.

§ 69. Instructions.

[a] (Cal. 1890) Pen. Code, § 1385, provides that "the court may, either of its own motion or on the application of the district attorney, and in furtherance of justice, order an action or indictment to be dismissed." Section 1386 provides that "neither the attorney general nor the district attorney can discontinue a prosecution except as provided in the last section." Held, that on an indictment of a justice for taking jurisdiction of a criminal proceeding after it has been dismissed before another justice of the same township by order of the prosecuting attorney, and brought before a justice of another township, it is error to instruct that the district attorney has authority to dismiss a criminal prosecution before a justice of the peace.—People v. Ward, 85 Cal. 585, 24 Pac. 785.

[b] (Kan. 1875) In a trial upon an information, under section 207 of the crimes act, against a justice of the peace, charging willful and malicious oppression, partiality, misconduct, and abuse of authority, "in requiring an excessive bond on an appeal from a judgment rendered by him, and in refusing to approve a surety on such bond, who was in fact sufficient," held error to instruct the jury that "gross ignorance of law in a case like this amounts to criminal intent."—State v. Reeves, 15 Kan. 396.

[c] (N. C. 1881) On a prosecution against a justice for unlawfully and maliciously issuing a warrant for the arrest of four persons, where it is shown that after they had been tried before two justices, under a warrant issued by defendant on a certain affidavit, and two bills had been found by the grand jury, defendant, upon the same affidavit, issued another warrant against the same parties for the same offense, it is not error to refuse an instruction that as the affiant in such affidavit swore to four distinct offenses, and the indictment covered only two of them, defendant's act in issuing the second warrant was lawful.—State v. Sneed, 84 N. C. 816.

§ 70. Punishment.

[a] (Ill. 1895) A fine of $1,000 is not an excessive punishment for assuming the powers of a justice of the peace, without having even color of title to the office.—Becker v. People, 156 Ill. 301, 40 N. E. 944; Wilmott v. Same, Id.

§ 72. Constitutional provisions.

Power of legislature to authorize issuance by justice of attachment returnable to circuit court, see "Constitutional Law," vol. 10, c. 1405, § 124 [h].

[a] (Ala. 1868) A constitutional provision (Const. 1865, art. 6, § 9) that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases "shall be limited to causes in which the amount in controversy shall not exceed $100" does not vest in justices jurisdiction to that extent, but leaves it with the legislature to determine to what extent this jurisdiction shall be exercised in the class of cases named.—Pearce v. Pope, 42 Ala. 319.

[b] (Ala. 1875) Const. art. 6, § 13, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of all civil cases wherein the amount in controversy does not exceed $100, is not an express grant of civil jurisdiction to justices of the peace, but was intended to limit their jurisdiction to controversies involving a sum not exceeding $100, leaving it to the general assembly to determine the class of cases in which it shall be extended to or reduced below that point.—Taylor v. Woods, 52 Ala. 474.

[c] (Ala. 1880) That part of Act 1874–75, § 47, establishing a new charter for the city of Selma, which authorizes a purchaser of lands sold for unpaid city taxes to maintain an action of unlawful detainer, before a justice of the peace, against a person who refuses to surrender the possession on demand, "for the recovery of the possession of the premises, and damages for the detention thereof," is unconstitutional, as attempting to confer on justices the jurisdiction to try and determine the value of real estate regardless of its value.—Webb v. Carlisle, 65 Ala. 313.

[d] (Ala. 1881) The statute conferring on justices of the peace jurisdiction in proceedings of unlawful detainer is not unconstitutional.—Beck v. Glenn, 69 Ala. 121.

[e] (Ala. 1888) As Code 1886, § 839, limits the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in actions sounding in tort to $50, section 1149, extending the jurisdiction in suits against a railroad company for killing stock to $100, is unconstitutional, as an unjust discrimination.—Brown v. Alabama G. S. R. Co., 87 Ala. 370, 6 South. 295.

[f] (Ark. 1841) All writs returnable to a court of record must, under the constitution, be issued by the clerk of that court, signed by him, and be sealed with the seal of the court. A statute, therefore, authorizing a justice of the peace to issue writs of attachment returnable to the circuit court is unconstitutional and void.—Toby v. Bowen, 3 Ark. (3 Pike) 352.

[g] (Ark. 1842) As the constitution expressly takes from justices of the peace all jurisdiction in matters which are not matters of contract, an act giving justices of the peace jurisdiction in actions of forcible entry and detainer is unconstitutional; such actions not being matters of contract.—McLain v. Taylor, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 147.

[h] (Ark. 1843) If a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a case by the constitution, he cannot be prevented from exercising it because the legislature has neglected to prescribe any method by which it can be exercised and suits commenced.—More v. Woodruff, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 214.

[i] (Ark. 1846) By the constitution, justices of the peace have jurisdiction only of actions on contracts. Held, that it is incompetent for the legislature to give them jurisdiction of actions for the invasion of the privileges of licensed ferries.—Gibson v. Emerson, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 172.

[ii] (Ark. 1882) Act Jan. 23, 1875, providing that "when a constable to whom an attachment is directed by a justice of the peace can find no personal property * * * he shall levy the writ on any lands," is not repugnant to Const. 1874, art. 7, § 40, providing that "a justice of the peace shall not have jurisdiction where a lien on land or title or possession thereto is involved."—Bush v. Visant, 40 Ark. 124.

[j] (Cal.) Const. art. 6, § 6, providing that the district court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases of law and equity, where the amount in dispute exceeds $200, gives the legislature power only to provide for the disposition of cases where the amount does not exceed $200; and the law vesting in justices of the peace jurisdiction of cases where the amount exceeds $200 is void.—(1855) Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 230; (1856) Small v. Gwinn, 6 Cal. 447.

[jj] (Cal. 1856) Though by the constitution the legislature cannot confer jurisdiction on justices over cases where the amount in dispute exceeds in value the sum of $200, it can confer jurisdiction on them in forcible entry and detainer cases, because of the quasi criminal nature of those cases, whereby they fall under the head of special cases in the constitution, of which the legislature has a right to dispose of the jurisdiction.—Small v. Gwinn, 6 Cal. 447.

[k] (Cal. 1867) The act of April 14, 1863, conferring on justices of the peace exclusive jurisdiction over actions to recover forfeitures imposed on railroad companies, for charging a passenger an excess of fare, held not unconstitutional.—Reed v. Omnibus R. Co., 33 Cal. 212.

[kk] (Cal. 1877) Act 1874, p. 50, giving a landowner an action in rem against trespassing animals, "any overplus of the proceeds of such sale, after satisfying the judgment and costs," to be paid by the justice to the owner of the property, upon demand, if demanded within six months from the date of sale, and, "if not so demanded," to "be paid into the county treasury for the benefit of the county school fund," is unconstitutional in attempting to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction of a proceeding in equity to enforce a lien, make distribution, etc.—Young v. Wright, 52 Cal. 407.

[l] (Ga. 1842) Parties cannot, with a view of giving justices' courts jurisdiction of a debt exceeding $30, in Georgia, divide it into smaller sums, though payable on different days. The act of 1811, which authorizes it, is in violation of the constitution of 1798, under which it was passed, and is void.—Planters' & Mechanics' Bank v. Chipley, Ga. Dec. pt. 1, p. 50.

[ll] (Ga. 1882) Code of Augusta, pp. 252, 259, under Acts 1834 and 1839, allowed justices to hold their courts in any part of the city, and gave them jurisdiction over the entire city. Const. 1877, art. 6, § 7, par. 2, provides that justices shall sit monthly at fixed times and places. Section 9, par. 1, provides that the jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all courts of the same grade or class, so far as regulated by law, shall be uniform, and that such uniformity should be established by the general assembly. Held, that the local laws of Augusta in regard to justices remained in force until the passage of Act July 21, 1879, making uniform the jurisdiction of justices.—Harbig v. Freund, 69 Ga. 180.

[m] (Ga. 1882) The constitution of 1877, depriving a justice of jurisdiction to try an action involving damages to realty, did not affect an action wherein an appeal was pending when the constitution was adopted.—City of Cartersville v. Lyon, 69 Ga. 577.

[mm] (Ga. 1890) Const. 1877, art. 6, § 7, par. 2, gives justices' courts jurisdiction in "civil cases arising ex contractu, and cases of injuries or damages to personal property." Held, that Act 1887, conferring on justices' courts jurisdiction over actions to recover a penalty imposed on telegraph companies for undue delay in the transmission and delivery of messages, is unconstitutional.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Taylor, 84 Ga. 408, 11 S. E. 396.

[n] (Ill. 1872) The special charter jurisdiction of police magistrate of city of Centralia was abrogated by constitution of 1870.—Phillips v. Quick, 63 Ill. 445.

[o] (Ill. 1873) Const. 1870, art. 6, § 21, declaring that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace and police magistrates shall be uniform, reduced the jurisdiction of all justices of the peace and police magistrates to the uniform jurisdiction conferred on such officers by the general law of the state, and thus rendered their jurisdiction uniform, and abrogated the special jurisdiction conferred by the local and special laws.—Markham v. Heffner, 67 Ill. 101.

[oo] (Iowa, 1857) Const. art. 1, § 11, does not limit the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to cases cognizable before that officer, at the time of its adoption, but has a prospective sense, and embraces such causes as may be made so cognizable.—Bryan v. State, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 349.

[p] (Ky. 1818) It is within the constitutional power of the legislature to enlarge the jurisdiction of justices of the peace by giving them exclusive jurisdiction of all debts not exceeding a specified amount.—Head v. Hughes, 8 Ky. (1 A. K. Marsh.) 372, 10 Am. Dec. 742.

[pp] (Ky. 1896) Const. § 142, providing that jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall be equal and uniform throughout the state, supplemented by Act June 10, 1893 (St. § 1093), for carrying such provision into effect, and defining the jurisdiction of justices, operates as a repeal of the provisions of special laws, in force at the time of the adoption of the present constitution, conferring special jurisdiction in different localities.—McTigue v. Commonwealth, 35 S. W. 121.

[q] (La. 1880) Acts 1878, No. 10, giving justices of the peace in Orleans parish exclusive jurisdiction over the territory of their respective districts within the limits of the jurisdiction conferred on them by law, is not unconstitutional.—State ex rel. Sinnott v. Falls, 32 La. Ann. 553.

[qq] (Mass. 1826) St. 1821, c. 109, § 6, providing that justices of police courts of Boston shall have exclusive jurisdiction of civil suits which might before have been heard by any justice of the peace of that county, is not unconstitutional as abridging the powers of justices of the peace, since there is no color for the objection that the legislature cannot abridge or annul the power of courts and magistrates.—Wales v. Belcher, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 508.

[r] (Minn. 1872) Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 5, providing that a justice shall have jurisdiction in actions for the recovery of money only, if "the sum claimed" does not exceed $100, is not in contravention of the constitutional provision that no justice shall have jurisdiction in any civil action in which "the amount in controversy" exceeds $100. The words "the sum claimed" and "the amount in controversy" are synonymous.—Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196).

[rr] (Miss. 1875) The provision of Const. art. 6, § 23, limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to causes in which the principal of the amount in controversy does not exceed $150, is not a limitation to actions ex contractu; and it is competent for the legislature to confer jurisdiction in all cases where the subject of controversy is susceptible of pecuniary measurement within the constitutional limitation. Code 1871, § 1302, therefore, giving jurisdiction to a justice of the peace of actions for the recovery of personal property or damages, etc., is not unconstitutional.—Bell v. City of West Point, 51 Miss. 262.

[s] (Miss. 1884) Code 1880, § 1585, extending to justices' courts jurisdiction over issues made under Code 1880, § 1767, which provides that where execution is returned unsatisfied, and plaintiff shall suggest that defendant has conveyed his property to defraud creditors and avoid the execution, the person into whose hands such property has passed shall be summoned, and an issue made up and tried by a jury, and that, "if the jury shall find the conveyance fraudulent or without a valuable consideration, the property thus fraudulently conveyed shall be subject to the execution," is not unconstitutional on the ground that the title to real estate exceeding in amount the constitutional limit of a justice's jurisdiction might be involved, since the issue to be tried is the issue of fraud, and any issue of title is merely collateral.—Smith v. Newlon, 62 Miss. 230.

[ss] (Miss. 1892) Under Const. 1869, art. 6, § 23, providing that "a competent number of justices of the peace * * * shall be chosen in each county by the qualified electors thereof, by districts," a provision of the town charter making the mayor ex officio justice of the peace for the whole district of which the town is a part is void as to that part of the district outside of the town.—Heggie v. Stone, 70 Miss. 39, 12 South. 253.

[t] (Mo. 1884) Rev. St. 1879, § 2835, giving to justices jurisdiction of actions against railroad companies for injury to animals without regard to their value, is constitutional.—Steele v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 84 Mo. 57.

[tt] (Nev. 1865) The constitution does not give justices' courts jurisdiction of causes founded on money claims not exceeding $300, by the provision that such court shall not have jurisdiction when the claim exceeds said sum, nor by implication from the fact that it confers upon no court jurisdiction of claims over $100, and not exceeding $300.—Paul v. Beegan, 1 Nev. 327.

[u] (N. Y. 1823) The statute of April 11, 1823, created the county of Wayne out of certain towns in the counties of Ontario and Seneca, with a proviso that justices of the peace who had been appointed for those towns, while they belonged to Ontario or Seneca, pursuant to Const. art. 4, § 7, should, by virtue of the statute, be and remain justices of the new county, etc. Held, that this provision was constitutional; the legislature having power to enlarge or contract the territorial jurisdiction of justices as an incident to their power to create new counties.—Ex parte McCollum, 1 Cow. 550.

[uu] (N. Y. 1860) A statute chartering a village, and giving to a police justice, to be chosen by the inhabitants thereof, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace of the town, within the village limits, is constitutional.—Brandon v. Avery, 22 N. Y. 469.

[v] (N. Y. 1861) The constitution provides that justices of the peace, to be designated by the legislature, shall assist in the court of sessions. A statute provided that no justice should so sit unless he had certain qualifications. A subsequent statute provided that R., who in fact was not qualified, should sit in the court of O. in the current year. Held, that the designation of R. was good.—Nelson v. People, 23 N. Y. 293.

[vv] (N. C. 1871) Where the constitution confers on a particular court exclusive original jurisdiction of all civil actions in which the title to real estate may be called in question, a statute which gives to justices of the peace jurisdiction of a summary proceeding in ejectment by a purchaser at sheriff's sale against the defendant in execution to obtain possession of the land, is unconstitutional, because, in such an action, the title to the land is necessarily involved.—Credle v. Gibbs, 65 N. C. 192.

[w] (N. C. 1871) Those sections of Acts 1868-69, c. 156, which give summary proceedings before justices of the peace in favor of landlords to recover possession of lands from their tenants who hold over after the expiration of their leases, are not unconstitutional, because, in consequence of the doctrine of estoppel, the title to the real estate cannot come in question.—Credle v. Gibbs, 65 N. C. 192.

[ww] (Or. 1863) Act Oct. 11, 1862, increasing the jurisdiction of justices' courts in civil actions from $100 to $250, is constitutional. Article 7, § 1, of the constitution, providing that the jurisdiction shall be "limited in accordance with the constitution," does not inhibit any change in the original restriction.—Noland v. Costello, 2 Or. 57.

[x] (Pa. 1836) Act March 23, 1877 (P. L. 25; Purd. Dig. p. 385), giving justices jurisdiction of actions for official fees due from persons living out of the county in which such actions are brought, extends the jurisdiction of justices in violation of Const. art. 3, § 7.—Stine v. Foltz, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 130.

[xx] (Pa.) Act July 7, 1879, enlarging the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to sums not exceeding $300, except in cases involving the title to land, is constitutional.—(1880) Wissler v. Becker, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 103; (1886) Johnson v. Beacham, Id. 108.

[y] (Tex. 1894) Rev. St. art. 2049, which declares that executors and administrators who fail to make payments ordered by the county judge shall be liable on their official bonds for the amount of such payments, together with damages thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per month, to be recovered "before any court having jurisdiction of the amount claimed exclusive of interest and such damages," is unconstitutional in so far as it attempts to give justices of the peace jurisdiction of controversies which involve, including damages, more than the constitutional limit of $200.—Russell v. Woessner, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 281, 26 S. W. 1112.

[yy] (Wash. 1891) The article of the constitution relating to superior courts gives them original jurisdiction in all civil cases where the value of the property in controversy amounts to $100; and it further declares that part of the judicial power of the state shall be vested in justices of the peace, whose jurisdiction shall be fixed by the legislature, but shall not trench on that of the superior courts. Prior to the adoption of the constitution, justices had jurisdiction of civil cases to the amount of $300. Held that, under the constitution, justices have no jurisdiction in excess of $100.—Moore v. Perrot, 2 Wash. St. 1, 25 Pac. 906.

[z] (Wis. 1847) The legislative assembly of Wisconsin territory had authority under the organic act to regulate and limit the jurisdiction of justices' courts within the restrictions it contains, and to provide, where, in an action for the recovery of less than $50 for trespass upon lands, if the defendant justified by a plea of title, that the case and all proceedings therein should be certified and returned to the district court, which will thereupon entertain jurisdiction of the case and proceed with the same to final judgment.—Lybrand v. Carson, 2 Pin. 33.

[zz] (Wis. 1859) Under the constitutional provision that justices "shall have such civil and criminal jurisdiction as shall be prescribed by law," it is competent for the legislature to give justices jurisdiction in forcible entry cases, though the title to land may be brought in question.—Savage v. Carney, 8 Wis. 162.

[b] (Ga. 1846) St. 24 Geo. II. c. 44, § 1, relative to suits against justices of the peace, is in force in Georgia.—Warthen v. May, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 602.

Laws 1875, c. 2, § 25, establishing a municipal court in the city of St. Paul, and providing that after its passage justices of the peace in the city should not take cognizance of any cause, but that the jurisdiction of such municipal court should be exclusive, is controlled by section 26 of such chapter, enacting that the term of each existing justice in the city shall cease at the end of the two years for which he was elected, and is not applicable to justices of the peace in said city in office at the time of its passage.—Marsh v. Smith, 22 Minn. 46.

[h] (N. J. 1880) The third proviso of P. L. 1879, p. 115, § 1, to increase the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, merely prevents the justices mentioned in the proviso from acquiring the increase of jurisdiction which the enactment confers on justices generally.—Sloat v. McComb, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 484.

[i] (N. Y. 1845) The title of the Revised Statutes relating to justices' courts, and the subsequent acts amending the same, do not affect the special provisions contained in the several acts respecting the justices' courts in the cities of Albany, Hudson, and Troy (e. g., the provisions defining their jurisdiction).—Bryan v. Cain, 1 Denio, 507.

[j] (N. Y. 1857) Code, § 53, specifying distinctly the causes of action and particular cases of which justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction, has no general words or terms, like trespass, assumpsit, or trespass on the case, within which other causes of action may be embraced.—Worden v. Brown, 14 How. Prac. 327.

[k] (Ohio, 1859) Act May 1, 1854, § 1, amending Act March 14, 1853, in regard to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases, and providing that "under the restrictions and limitations herein provided" justices of the peace shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the court of common pleas in any sum over $100 and not exceeding $300, the words "under the restrictions and limitations herein provided" referred to the restrictions and limitations in the original act as amended.—McKibben v. Lester, 9 Ohio St. 627.

[l] (Ohio, 1859) St. May 1, 1854, § 2, does not restrict, but enlarges, the class of cases in which enlarged jurisdiction is previously conferred.—McKibben v. Lester, 9 Ohio St. 627.

C. 1887) Under the act of 1876 (Code, § 887), providing that "justices of the peace shall have concurrent jurisdiction of civil actions, not founded on contract, wherein the value of the property in controversy does not exceed fifty dollars," justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court in actions of tort wherein the damages claimed do not exceed $50.—Harry v. Hambright, 98 N. C. 446, 4 S. E. 187.

[k] (Ohio, 1862) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction, concurrent with the courts of common pleas, in suits for injuries to personal property, where damages claimed exceed $100 and do not exceed $300.—Job v. Harlan, 13 Ohio St. 485.

[l] (Pa. 1874) The jurisdiction of the common pleas in trover and trespass is not taken away by the act of 1814, which gives to justices jurisdiction of such actions.—Devers v. Gething, 21 Pittsb. Leg. J. (O. S.) 115.

[m] (S. C. 1839) Under Acts 1824, p. 25, the justice of the peace has exclusive jurisdiction in contracts for £20 and less.—Allen v. Singleton, 1 Rice, 289.

§ 75. Election of remedy as affecting jurisdiction.

[a] (Ark. 1846) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction where the amount in controversy does not exceed $100, except actions of covenant; but, though debt and covenant will both lie on a bond for the payment of money, yet, if the amount of it be less than $100, a party must bring debt thereon before a justice, and cannot elect to bring covenant, and thereby oust the justice of his jurisdiction.—Crabtree v. Moore, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 74.

[b] (Kan. 1890) Where defendant occupies plaintiff's property without his consent, and so is a trespasser, plaintiff may waive the trespass, and sue before a justice of the peace to recover for the use and occupation of the land any sum less than $300; the limit fixed by Comp. Laws, c. 81, § 2, to justice's jurisdiction in actions for the recovery of money, though the limit to his jurisdiction in cases of trespass on land is fixed, by section 6, at $100.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Atchison, 43 Kan. 529, 23 Pac. 610.

[c] (Mo. 1848) A party injured has his election of remedies within the statutes; and, where he brings an action on the official bond of the officer by whose neglect he has been injured, the circuit court and justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction where the amount claimed does not exceed the limit of the latter's jurisdiction.—Pollock v. Hudgens, 12 Mo. 67.

[d] (Mo. 1860) Plaintiff, in an action for injuries to personal property, where the damages claimed exceed the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, cannot confer jurisdiction by waiving the tort and suing in assumpsit.—Webb v. Tweedie, 30 Mo. 488.

[e] (N. C. 1835) On a covenant to pay $60 annually for two years for the hire of a slave, and also to furnish him with food and drink, plaintiff may elect either to bring covenant in a court of record or debt before a justice for $60.—Hamilton v. McCarty, 18 N. C. 226.

[f] (N. C. 1888) Under Code, § 887, giving justices jurisdiction of civil actions not founded on contracts wherein the value of the property in controversy does not exceed $50, a person, having trespassed on the lands of another by cutting timber and selling it, has committed a tort; and, in an action therefor, the jurisdiction of the justice is confined to $50; and, where the amount sued for is above that sum, the jurisdiction cannot be supported on the ground that the trespass was waived, the agency of the trespasser in selling the timber ratified, and that the claim is therefore for money due on a contract.—Edwards v. Cowper, 99 N. C. 421, 6 S. E. 792.

[g] (N. C. 1891) By Code, § 834, justices of the peace have jurisdiction of all actions founded on contract where the sum demanded does not exceed $200, and where title to land is not in controversy; and by Code, § 887, they have jurisdiction of actions not founded on contract where the value of the property in controversy does not exceed $50. Held, in an action where it is alleged that plaintiff's property to the value of $200 was tortiously converted by defendant, that plaintiff may waive the tort, and sue in a justice's court to recover the value of the property.—Scottish Carolina Timber & Land Co. v. Brooks, 109 N. C. 698, 14 S. E. 315.

Validity of act creating police magistrate and giving him a justice's jurisdiction, see ante, § 2.

[a] (U. S. 1806) The mayor of Georgetown, D. C., may in that town do any act which justices of the peace of a county can do.—Hodgson v. Mountz, Fed. Cas. No. 6,569 [1 Cranch, C. C. 366.]

[b] (Ind. 1859) A mayor has the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Cluggish v. Rogers, 13 Ind. 538.

[c] (Iowa, 1887) Under Code 1873, § 506, providing that "the mayor of each city or incorporated town shall be a magistrate and conservator of the peace, and, within the same, have the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in all matters civil and criminal, * * * but the criminal jurisdiction shall be coextensive with the county in which such city or town is situated," held, that the mayor is given the same jurisdiction in civil cases as a justice of the peace, and therefore his jurisdiction extends to a case brought before him by a resident of his incorporated town, against a resident of the county, but not of the corporation nor of the township in which it is situated, by a notice served on the defendant within his township, but outside the limits of the corporation, and of the township wherein it is situated.—Weber v. Hamilton, 72 Iowa, 577, 34 N. W. 424.

[d] (Miss. 1896) The mayor of a town, who is ex officio justice of the peace within its limits, is a "justice of the county," within the meaning of Code 1892, §§ 4461–4469, and authorized to sit as one of the trial justices in an action for unlawful entry and detainer.—Nickles v. Kendricks, 73 Miss. 711, 19 South. 582.

[e] (Mo. 1888) The charter of the city of Kansas (Acts 1875, p. 252, art. 8, § 4) provided that suits on tax bills, not exceeding $300, might be brought before the city recorder, "or any justice of the peace in said city, as in other civil cases." The city of Kansas had been, and was at the time of the suit on the tax bill in question, a part of Kaw township, and had no justices of the peace, except the justices elected for the township, who had their offices in the city. Held, that such justices were the justices contemplated by the charter.—Harris v. Hunt, 97 Mo. 571, 11 S. W. 236.

[f] (Or. 1871) Laws 1870, pp. 130, 131, give the police judge of the city of Portland the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace for the county in which Portland is situated, but limits his jurisdiction to criminal cases. Held that, the provision attempting to limit his jurisdiction to criminal cases being unconstitutional, the police judge possesses the authority of a justice of the peace in both criminal and civil cases.—State v. Wiley, 4 Or. 184.

[g] (Pa. 1874) The design of the eighth section of the act of March 20, 1818 (incorporating the city of Lancaster), providing for the appointment by the governor of one recorder and two aldermen, who should severally have the jurisdictions of justices of the peace and of oyer and terminer, was to give a distinct appropriation of jurisdiction to each,—to the recorder and to the aldermen, taliter qualiter, viz., the aldermen to have the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, and the recorder, with the aldermen, all the jurisdiction of the justices of oyer and terminer and jail delivery.—Locher v. King, 5 Lanc. Bar, No. 49, p. 2.

[h] (Pa. 1892) A city recorder and aldermen are justices of the peace, within Act March 21, 1772, which provides for the trial before such officers of certain actions between a landlord and tenant.—Wilmington S. S. Co. v. Haas, 151 Pa. 113, 25 Atl. 85, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 79.

[i] (S. C. 1846) The recorder of the town of Camden is a magistrate ex officio, and invested with all the power of magistrates, except for the trial of small and mean causes.—State v. Harrison, 1 Strob. 153.

[j] (Tex. 1874) A mayor of a city has no jurisdiction to try civil causes, unless conferred upon him by the act of incorporation of the city.—Smith v. Deweese, 41 Tex. 594.

§ 77. Nature of subject-matter in general.

[a] (Ala. 1844) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace in libels by material men against coasting steamboats under the statutes of 1824 and 1841 is not taken away when such steamboats carry the United States mail.—Monroe v. Brady, 7 Ala. 59.

[b] (Ala. 1844) Under the statutes of 1824 and 1841, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction, in libel suits by material men, against a coasting steamboat to the amount of $50.—Monroe v. Brady, 7 Ala. 59.

[c] (Ala. 1852) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a suit against the commissioners of the sixteenth section for a refusal on their part to pay over to a legal voter of the township his proportionate share of the school fund.—Jeffries v. Harbin, 20 Ala. 387.

[d] (Ala. 1852) Justices of the peace had no admiralty jurisdiction previous to the act of 1836, and, doubts having arisen whether that act gave them any such jurisdiction, the act of 1841 was passed, conferring on them the same jurisdiction, on claims less than $50, which had been granted to the circuit courts, where the demands arise from "furnishing materials, labor, or stores for the use of any steamboat or other water craft."—The Louisiana v. Fettyplace, 21 Ala. 286.

[e] (Cal. 1886) Under Const. art. 6, § 5, where the legality of a toll is in issue, in an action brought to recover a penalty for collecting an alleged excessive toll, a justice's court is without jurisdiction.—Culbertson v. Kinevan, 68 Cal. 490, 9 Pac. 455.

[f] (Ga. 1831) St. 1799, entitled "An act to regulate the pilotage of vessels to and from the several ports of this state," by section 5, which vests the commissioners of pilotage with power to decide, adjust, and regulate any damage, dispute, complaint, or difference arising against or between master or pilot for pilotage, or any other matter relating to the business of a pilot, does not deprive the justice's court of jurisdiction over a demand for pilotage where the same does not exceed $30.—Taylor v. Thomas, Dud. 59.

[g] (Kan. 1884) Justice's Code, § 185, providing that the provisions of the Civil Code, "which are in their nature applicable to the jurisdiction and proceeding before justices and in respect to which no special provision is made by statute, are applicable to proceedings before justices of the peace," does not make Civ. Code, §§ 230, 231, authorizing a creditor who suspects his debtor of fraudulently conveying property to bring suit before his claim is due, applicable to justices' courts.—Lyons v. Insley, 32 Kan. 174, 4 Pac. 150.

[j] (N. J. 1809) Under Act 1774, giving an action of debt for a legacy in the supreme court or any other court of record if the legacy amounts to £15, and in any court where the same may be cognizable if under that sum, the courts of justices of the peace (declared courts of record by an act of assembly) have jurisdiction to recover a legacy for $100.—Woodruff v. Woodruff, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 552.

[k] (Pa. 1823) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in an action of account rendered.—Wright v. Guy, 10 Serg. & R. 227.

[l] (Pa. 1843) Under Act March 16, 1816, declaring that the mayor and aldermen of Pittsburg shall have the same jurisdiction in all civil cases as justices of the peace of the county, etc., aldermen of the city of Pittsburg have jurisdiction to hear and determine the rights and liabilities of the townships of Alleghany county respecting the support of paupers.—Overseers of Poor of St. Clair Tp. v. Overseers of Poor of Moon Tp., 6 Watts & S. 522.

[m] (Pa. 1873) Magistrates have no jurisdiction in an action brought by a witness for his fees in a criminal case.—Zink v. County, 1 Leg. Chron. 191.

[n] (Tex. 1896) The failure to prove a claim against a county for a bounty on wolf scalps before the commissioners' court, as required by statute, does not affect the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to entertain an action thereon.—Dimmit County v. Salmon (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 752.

[b] (U. S. 1833) A justice of the peace for the county of Washington, D. C., has jurisdiction of suits for penalties under the by-laws of the corporation of Washington, though the amount of the penalty be discretionary within certain limits.—Washington v. Eaton, Fed. Cas. No. 17,228 [4 Cranch, C. C. 352].

[c] (U. S. 1835) Fines, penalties, and forfeitures, under by-laws of the corporation of Washington, not exceeding $50, are recoverable before a justice of the peace.—Ex parte Reed, Fed. Cas. No. 11,634 [4 Cranch, C. C. 582].

[d] (U. S. 1836) A justice of the peace in Washington, D. C., has jurisdiction of penalties under by-laws, not exceeding $50.—Hall v. Washington, Fed. Cas. No. 5,953 [4 Cranch, C. C. 722].

[e] (Ala. 1830) A justice of the peace may give judgment in debt for penalty of $20, under the act of 1811, for marking the hogs of another without his consent; and it is no objection to his jurisdiction that his court is not provided with a jury, the offense being merely penal, and not criminal.—Reagh v. Spann, 3 Stew. 100.

[f] (Ark. 1886) Under Const. 1874, art. 7, § 40, which restricts the civil jurisdiction of justices to actions arising on contract, actions of replevin, and actions for injuries to personal property, a justice has no jurisdiction over an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty.—Baltimore & O. Tel. Co. v. Lovejoy, 48 Ark. 301, 3 S. W. 183.

[g] (Ark. 1894) Act March 25, 1889, § 1, which provides that if the wages of a discharged employé be not paid to him on the day of his discharge, "then, as a penalty for nonpayment," the wages of the employé shall continue at the same rate until paid, was intended to compensate the employé for the delay, and to punish his employer for failure to pay; and hence, though expressly termed a penalty, the additional compensation is exemplary damages, within the decisions that a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of actions for exemplary damages, but not for statutory penalties.—Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 58 Ark. 407, 25 S. W. 75, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109, 23 L. R. A. 264.

[h] (Cal. 1889) A penalty imposed by statute for transacting an insurance business without obtaining a certificate of authority to do so from the insurance commissioner is recoverable before a justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 112, giving justices jurisdiction of actions for penalties less than $300, given by statute or by municipal ordinance, where no issue is made as to the legality of a "municipal fine," tax, assessment, or toll, as such a penalty does not come within the exception mentioned; and the jurisdiction thus given is authorized by Const. art. 6, § 11, limiting powers of justices to cases not within the jurisdiction of courts of record.—In re Thomas, 80 Cal. 40, 22 Pac. 80.

[hh] (Ill. 1847) A supervisor may institute proceedings to recover the penalties for obstructing roads, given by the road law of 1841, before a justice of the peace.—Ferris v. Ward, 9 Ill. (4 Gilman) 499.

[i] (Ill. 1857) Act June 22, 1852, authorizes a qui tam action before a justice of the peace to recover the penalty for the obstruction of a public road imposed by Rev. St. c. 93, § 16, which imposes one penalty for the obstruction of a public road and a separate one for continuing the obstruction. Held, that a qui tam action will not lie before a justice of the peace to recover the penalty imposed for continuing an obstruction.—Crosby v. Gipps, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 309.

[j] (Ill. 1859) A justice of the peace has not jurisdiction of an action to recover a penalty for continuing an obstruction to a highway.—Bickerdike v. Dean, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 199.

[k] (Ill. 1865) The ordinance of the city of Chicago of August 24, 1863, imposing a penalty of $5 per barrel for selling flour without an inspection thereof, being repugnant to the charter of the city, so far as it operates to impose a penalty beyond $100, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction under the ordinance of an action to collect such penalty, as it can never exceed said sum.—City of Chicago v. Quimby, 38 Ill. 274.

[m] (Ind. 1883) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 1433, limiting the jurisdiction of a justice in civil actions to cases where the amount of recovery does not exceed $200, a justice has jurisdiction of an action to recover a penalty of $100 for violating a town ordinance, since such action is a civil one.—Clevenger v. Town of Rushville, 90 Ind. 258.

[n] (Miss. 1892) The jurisdiction which a justice of the peace has, under Code 1871, § 1302, of suits for the recovery of "debts or damages or personal property" embraces every subject of recovery other than realty, including suits "founded on any penal statute," though the express mention made of such suits in the Code of 1857 is omitted.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sullivan, 70 Miss. 447, 12 South. 460.

[o] (Mo. 1841) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a suit to recover a fine for the violation of a by-law of a private corporation.—O'Brien v. Union Fire Co., 7 Mo. 38.

[p] (N. Y. 1842) Under the charter of Utica, providing that "penalties imposed by the common council may be recovered in an action of debt in any court having cognizance," the suit may be brought in a justice's court.—Walker v. Cruikshank, 2 Hill, 296.

[q] (N. Y. 1885) The jurisdiction of a justice, defined as extending to an action for a penalty, embraces an action for several penalties, if the amount claimed in the aggregate does not exceed the jurisdictional amount.—Prussia v. Guenther, 16 Abb. N. C. 230.

[r] (N. C. 1881) An action to recover the penalty imposed on a railroad company for failure to forward freight by Laws 1874–75, c. 240, is an action ex contractu; and when the sum demanded does not exceed $200 a justice of the peace has jurisdiction.—Katzenstein v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 84 N. C. 688.

[s] (Pa. 1825) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action for the penalty imposed by the act of April 13, 1791 (Laws 7th Sess. p. 32), for not entering satisfaction of a judgment.—Zeigler v. Gram, 13 Serg. & R. 102.

[t] (Pa. 1833) A justice of the peace of the Northern Liberties has jurisdiction of an action, instituted under an ordinance of said district, to recover a penalty imposed on any person who should place or cause to be placed on the foot pavement any package, etc., and should suffer it to remain for a longer time than two hours.—Ellmore v. Hoffman, 2 Ashm. 159.

[u] (Pa. 1833) Act May 4, 1832, did not devest a justice of the Northern Liberties of jurisdiction of an action instituted under the act of 1819 to recover a penalty imposed by an ordinance.—Ellmore v. Hoffman, 2 Ashm. 159.

[v] (Pa. 1838) A justice has jurisdiction in an action to recover the penalty for taking illegal fees.—McConahy v. Courtney, 7 Watts, 491.

[vv] (Pa. 1844) A justice has jurisdiction of a suit for the penalty for exposing to sale foreign goods.—Commonwealth v. Winchester, 4 Pa. Law J. 371.

[w] (Pa. 1881) Under Gen. Act June 26, 1849, § 19, a justice has jurisdiction of an action of debt for statutory penalty against a person who drives through the gate of a turnpike company without paying the toll demanded.—Turnpike Co. v. Singer, 13 Lanc. Bar, 107.

[x] (S. C. 1822) The penalty imposed by Act 1740 on a free negro who harbors a slave cannot be recovered before a justice of the peace and two freeholders, since the act of 1791, which confines their jurisdiction to cases of debt and contract.—State v. Marshall, 2 McCord, 63.

[y] (S. C. 1833) Where a debt is created by a penal statute, and no mode of recovery is prescribed, the proceeding must be in the superior courts of law, and not in the justices' courts.—Anderson v. Fowler, 1 Hill, Law, 226.

[yy] (Tenn. 1857) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a suit to recover the penalty given by Acts 1782, c. 29, § 1, for unlawfully firing wood, since jurisdiction is not conferred on them by the act.—Duncan v. Maxey, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 114.

[z] (Tenn. 1881) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a suit for the recovery of the forfeiture imposed by Act March 23, 1875, on one guilty of turbulent conduct within or about a public house or theater. Such suit should be brought in the circuit court.—Stover v. Lasater, 76 Tenn. (8 Lea) 631.

[zz] (Va. 1889) Code, § 3799, provides that "if a person on a Sabbath day be found laboring at any trade or calling, or employ his apprentices or servants in labor or other business, except household or other work of necessity or charity, he shall forfeit two dollars for each offense." Section 2939 provides that any claim to a fine not exceeding $20, which would be recoverable by an action at law, shall be cognizable by a justice; the proceeding to be by civil warrant, as in the case of other small claims therein enumerated. Section 717 provides that, "when any fine is imposed by a justice, he may commit the defendant to jail until the fine and costs are paid, or until the costs are paid, where there is no fine, but he shall not issue any execution therefor." Held, that the fine prescribed for violation of the Sabbath is recoverable before a justice, and by a civil warrant.—Ex parte Marx, 86 Va. 40, 9 S. E. 475.

§ 79. Actions for taxes, assessments, and license taxes.

[a] (Cal. 1864) When the illegality of a tax is set up in the answer to an action to recover it, brought before a justice of the peace, his jurisdiction is ousted.—People v. Mier, 24 Cal. 61.

[b] (Cal. 1886) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action to recover a sum of money less in amount than $300, due on an assessment for street work in a municipality, unless the legality of the assessment is questioned, when the superior court acquires judicial jurisdiction.—Williams v. Mecartney, 69 Cal. 556, 11 Pac. 186.

[c] (Cal. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 838, providing that in actions in justice's court, if it appears from defendant's answer, verified by his oath, that the determination of the action will necessarily involve the legality of any tax, the justice must suspend all further proceedings, and certify the pleadings to the clerk of the superior court, the justice, in an action to recover a license tax, properly certified the proceedings, where the answer alleged that there was no law authorizing the ordinance imposing the tax; that such ordinance had been repealed; that the county had no power to assess the tax; and that the tax was unauthorized by law, and contrary to the federal constitution.—Monterey County v. Abbott, 77 Cal. 541, 18 Pac. 113, 20 Pac. 73.

[d] (Mo. 1882) Act 1877, § 5, as amended by Act 1879, § 4, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of suits to enforce payment of delinquent taxes, repealed the charter of the city of Hannibal so far as such charter conferred exclusive jurisdiction of such suits upon the city recorder.—State v. Van Every, 75 Mo. 530.

[e] (Mo. 1885) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of suits to enforce the state's lien for back taxes.—State v. Hopkins, 87 Mo. 519.

[f] (Mo. 1894) Kansas City Charter 1889, art. 9, § 18, providing that, "when the amount due on any tax bill shall not exceed $250, suit may be brought thereon * * * before any justice of the peace of the city," does not confine the jurisdiction of such justice to special tax bills issued by the board of public works, but includes any special tax bill issued under either the old or the new charter.—Kansas City v. Summerwell, 58 Mo. App. 246.

[g] (Mo. 1894) A justice of the peace has no statutory jurisdiction in an action to enforce a tax bill lien for the expense of constructing a sewer.—Kansas City v. Summerwell, 58 Mo. App. 246.

[h] (Mo. 1894) The jurisdiction expressly conferred on justices of the peace by Kansas City Charter 1889, art. 9, § 18, over the subject-matter of tax bills, where the amount does not exceed $250 for expenses of a sewer, may be exercised in an action commenced since the adoption of such charter.—Kansas City v. Summerwell, 58 Mo. App. 246.

[i] (Mo. 1894) Under the Kansas City charter of 1889, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of cases founded on a special tax bill for street and sewer improvements issued prior to the adoption of such charter.—Kansas City ex rel. Pryor v. Winner, 58 Mo. App. 299.

[j] (Pa. 1864) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action brought in the name of the county to recover from a purchaser of unseated lands at a treasurer's sale for taxes the amount of the bid, or such part as is necessary to pay taxes and costs; Act March 13, 1815, expressly providing for a suit in the name of the county "in such courts as debts of equal amount are by law recoverable."—Fulton County v. Tate, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 532.

[k] (Pa. 1882) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of actions for the recovery of claims against property owners arising out of paving by borough authorities.—Dougherty v. Borough, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 11.

[l] (Pa. 1887) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action for the recovery of a claim against a property owner arising out of paving by municipal authority, though the general ordinance directs that such suits be brought before magistrates.—Borough v. Johns, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 522.

[m] (Tex. 1846) Under Acts 1846, p. 298, §§ 13, 28, giving justices jurisdiction of actions on written instruments, and replevin under $100, and for torts and trespasses under $100, a justice has no jurisdiction for the recovery of sums due for license tax.—Aulanier v. Governor, 1 Tex. 653.

§ 80. Enforcement of awards.

Jurisdiction by consent, see post, § 217 [e].

Reduction to writing by justice of agreement to refer matters in controversy to third persons as common-law submission, see "Arbitration and Award," vol. 4, c. 10, § 2 [y].

Submission of matters in controversy to justice as arbitration, see "Arbitration and Award," vol. 4, c. 10, § 2 [r].

[a] A justice of the peace has no authority to enter judgment and issue execution on an award.
—(Mass. 1808) Worthen v. Stevens, 4 Mass. 448; (1812) Kingsley v. Bill, 9 Mass. 198; (Ohio, 1832) Hubbel v. Baldwin, Wright, 86.

[b] (Ill. 1855) A justice of the peace can render judgment on an award only in cases pending before him, on a reference by the parties.—Weinz v. Dopler, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 111.

[c] (Ind. 1872) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to render judgment on an award.—Richards v. Reed, 39 Ind. 330.

[d] (Pa. 1791) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction when damages occasioned by the biting of a dog have been ascertained by reference to arbitrators, and may enforce the award.—Weidimor v. Drissel, 1 Yeates, 77.

[e] (Pa. 1847) An action on award may be brought before a justice of the peace.—Scott v. Barnes, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 134.

[f] (Pa. 1890) Where arbitrators annulled a lease, and directed the vacation and surrender of certain premises, and the payment of a sum of money by one of the parties to the other, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to enforce the money part of the award, being without jurisdiction to enforce the other provisions thereof.—Yates v. Demmer (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 80.

§ 81. Abatement of nuisances.

Actions to abate liquor nuisance, see "Intoxicating Liquors," vol. 29, c. 1316, § 406 [b].

[a] (Ga. 1869) Justices of the peace for the county have no jurisdiction to abate a nuisance in a town or city which is under the government of a mayor, etc. The power to abate such nuisance is in the city government alone.—South Carolina R. Co. v. Ells, 40 Ga. 87.

[b] (Ga. 1873) Justices of the peace have not jurisdiction, under the provisions of section 4023, Code, to abate as a nuisance a bridge constructed by a railroad company over a navigable stream.—Macon & B. R. Co. v. State, 50 Ga. 156.

[c] (Ga. 1878) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace, under Code, § 4094, to abate nuisances, extends to all such as are detrimental to the citizens in general, other than as specially excepted, and includes the case of a dam, causing overflow and destruction of rice crops.—Wetter v. Campbell, 60 Ga. 266.

[d] (Ga. 1878) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction to abate the stopping of a way, claimed as an easement, by piling up dirt and building fences.—Hart v. Taylor, 61 Ga. 156.

§ 82. Actions for mesne profits.

[a] (N. J. 1816) A justice cannot try trespass for mesne profits after a recovery in ejectment.—Pickle v. Covenhoven, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 319.

§ 83. In general.

[a] A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a cause where the title to land is in dispute.
—(Mich. 1845) Stout v. Keyes, 2 Doug. 184, 43 Am. Dec. 465;
(N. J. 1793) Smith v. Layton, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 177; (1794) Harvey v. Drummond, Id. 217;
(N. Y. 1858) Fredonia & S. Plank Road Co. v. Wait, 27 Barb. 214;
(Pa. 1856) Rhoades v. Patrick, 27 Pa. (3 Casey) 323; (1872) Stevens v. Sarver, 29 Leg. Int. 46.

[b] A question as to a right of way involves title to real property, which a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to try.
—(N. H. 1860) Bartlett v. Prescott, 41 N. H. 493;
(N. J. 1857) Osborne v. Butcher, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 308;
(N. Y. 1864) Little v. Denn, 34 How. Prac. 68; (1867) Alleman v. Dey, 49 Barb. 641;
(Vt. 1847) Whitman v. Pownal, 19 Vt. 223;
(Wis. 1883) Lowitz v. Leverentz, 57 Wis. 596, 15 N. W. 842.

[c] (U. S. 1880) Where, in a civil suit before a justice of the peace of the territory of Idaho, it appears by defendant's answer, verified by his affidavit, that the question of title to real estate is necessarily involved, the justice should certify the case to the district court for trial.—Langford v. Monteith, 102 U. S. 145, 26 L. Ed. 53.

[d] (Ark. 1890) The question being whether a certain contract affecting lands is one of sale or lease, the status of the parties, not the title, is involved, and a justice has jurisdiction.—Quetermous v. Hatfield, 54 Ark. 16, 14 S. W. 1096.

[e] (Cal. 1869) Under that clause of the constitution which confers jurisdiction on justices of the peace in certain cases involving the "title or possession of real property," it is not enough to give jurisdiction that the possession is a fact in controversy or incidentally in question, but the right of possession must be involved in the action.—Pollock v. Cummings, 38 Cal. 683.

[f] (Conn. 1793) A justice of the peace cannot try a question of title to a highway.—Bundy v. Sabin, 2 Root, 54.

[g] (Conn. 1796) A justice of the peace has no more authority to judge of the plea of a title on demurrer than on the merits.—French v. Potter, 2 Root, 359.

[h] (Ga. 1891) An issue as to whether land is exempt from levy and sale under an execution as a homestead does not bring the title of the land in question.—Moore v. O'Barr, 87 Ga. 205, 13 S. E. 464.

[i] (Ind. 1834) Whenever, in a suit commenced before a justice of the peace, it appears, from the pleadings, or evidence, or agreement of the parties, that the title to real estate will come in question, the suit must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Parker v. Bussell, 3 Blackf. 411; Smith v. Harris, Id. 416.

[j] (Kan. 1860) Under section 27 of the organic act of the territory of Kansas, providing that justices of the peace shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy, when the title or boundaries of land may be in dispute, so soon as the title or bonndaries to lands come in dispute in any case before a justice of the peace, either on the pleadings or in the evidence, his jurisdiction ceases, and he should dismiss the case.—Burt v. Reyburn, McCahon, 97.

[k] (Mo. 1893) Where it appears that the question decisive of the case is whether or not plaintiff has title to real estate, the justice has no jurisdiction, notwithstanding the plea and affidavit setting up that title to real estate is involved is informal, and fails to comply with the statute.—State ex rel. Huston v. Ganzhorn, 52 Mo. App. 220.

[l] (Mo. 1894) In an action in justice's court, where defendant's statement shows that the title to real estate is involved, it is the duty of the justice to certify the case to the circuit court.—State ex rel. Huston v. Ganzhorn, 56 Mo. App. 519.

[m] (N. J. 1837) A right of way is a hereditament, and a justice of the peace has not jurisdiction of an action involving such right.—Randolph v. Montfort, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 226.

[n] (N. Y. 1813) An agreement to remove a fence, and open a road to its original width, has no reference to the title to land, so as to take it out of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Storms v. Snyder, 10 Johns. 109.

[o] (N. Y. 1829) A plea of title may be put in, in a justice's court, under St. 1824, c. 283, in any action wherein the title to land in any wise comes in question.—People v. Onondaga Common Pleas, 2 Wend. 263.

[p] (N. Y.) A justice may try a question of actual possession of land.—(1844) Ehle v. Quackenboss, 6 Hill, 537; (1858) Fredonia & S. Plank Road Co. v. Wait, 27 Barb. 214.

[q] (N. Y. 1857) Where it becomes necessary to establish title in order to recover before a justice of the peace, the objection that the title to land comes in question may be taken by defendant, and it is the duty of the justice, in whatever stage of the trial this shall appear, to dismiss the action.—Main v. Cooper, 26 Barb. 468, affirmed (1862) 25 N. Y. 180.

[r] (N. Y. 1864) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a cause, though the plaintiff introduces in evidence a deed of real estate to show the performance by him of a condition precedent to the defendant's liability.—Nichols v. Bain, 42 Barb. 353, 27 How. Prac. 286.

[s] (N. Y. 1866) The question where a stream ought to run does not necessarily involve title. —Bowyer v. Schofield, 1 Abb. Dec. 177.

[t] (N. C. 1880) The question of title, which arrests further proceedings before the justice, must be one between the original parties to the action; and jurisdiction once acquired cannot be devested by the intervention of a stranger to the suit, asserting a paramount title in himself.—Davis v. Davis, 83 N. C. 71.

[u] (Ohio, 1844) Under Swan's St. p. 525, where the plaintiff, in order to sustain his case, is compelled in the first instance to prove certain facts or to disprove them, and those facts, or either of them, is title to lands or tenements, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is excluded, except in trespass; but, where it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to introduce such proof, the defendant cannot, by its introduction, take away the jurisdiction.—Bridgmans v. Wells, 13 Ohio, 43.

[v] (Or. 1884) Where it appears by defense or plea in a justice's court that the title to real estate is involved, the jurisdiction of that court is ousted.—Sweek v. Galbreath, 11 Or. 516, 6 Pac. 220.

[vv] (Pa. 1832) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of contracts that concern the realty, where title to land may come in question.—Sechrist v. Connellee, 3 Pen. & W. 388.

[w] (Pa. 1850) An agreement to purchase a judgment which was a lien on real estate is not within Act March 20, 1810, § 1, excluding from the jurisdiction of justices of the peace "cases of real contract, where the title to lands or tenements may come in question."—Helfenstein v. Hurst, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 358.

[ww] (Pa. 1882) The fact that the title to real estate appears on the hearing to be involved in an action before a justice of the peace is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the justice.—Quay v. Hartman, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 543.

[x] (Vt. 1848) If a plaintiff, in order to sustain his action, is obliged to rely on and prove a possessory title, even, to premises described in his declaration, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of the suit.—Haven v. Needham, 20 Vt. 183.

[xx] (Vt. 1868) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, if, on a traverse of all the material facts alleged in the declaration, the title of land would be involved in the issue.—Flannery v. Hinkson, 40 Vt. 485.

[y] (Vt. 1884) Where the declaration is of such a character that under the general issue, or any other plea that puts plaintiff to the necessity of proving his declaration, he is bound either to prove or to disprove title to land, the justice has no jurisdiction.—French v. Holt, 57 Vt. 187.

[yy] (Wis. 1859) The provisions of chapter 88, Rev. St., restricting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace where the title to lands comes in question, do not apply to the cases provided for in chapter 117.—Savage v. Carney, 8 Wis. 162.

[z] (Wis. 1860) A plea of pre-emption right under the swamp act ousts a justice of his jurisdiction, if the defendant also files the bond required by the statute.—Manny v. Smith, 10 Wis. 509.

[zz] (Wis.) The question of user of the locus in quo as a highway is a question involving an issue of title to land, over which a justice has no jurisdiction.—(1868) Barteau v. City of Appleton, 23 Wis. 414; (1869) Ashbough v. Walter, 24 Wis. 466.

§ 84. Particular actions and proceedings.

Enforcement of liens on land in general, see post, § 185.

—— attachments on land in general, see post, § 177 [l, xx, zz].

[a] (Ala. 1831) Where an execution issued by a justice of the peace is levied on real estate claimed by a third person, the justice cannot award a venire to try title; the circuit court having exclusive jurisdiction in such case.—McDaniel v. Moody, 3 Stew. 314.

[b] (Ark. 1883) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to try the title to land, and therefore should refuse an interplea for land on which an attachment from his court has been levied.—Cunningham v. Holland, 40 Ark. 556.

[c] (Cal. 1885) Though a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction over a suit involving a question of title to land, he has jurisdiction of a suit to recover a deposit made by a vendor under a contract to purchase, if the title was good, the question of title being incidental to the right to recover back the deposit.—Schroeder v. Wittram, 66 Cal. 636, 6 Pac. 737.

[d] (Cal. 1894) An action to recover money paid to defendant under a contract to locate plaintiff on vacant government land, in which the issue is whether the land on which plaintiff was located was in fact vacant, is an action involving the possession of real estate, of which, by Code Civ. Proc. § 838, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co., 101 Cal. 160, 35 Pac. 638.

[e] (Ga. 1852) It is not competent for a justice's court to reopen a fi. fa., which has been entered satisfied by the sale of land, on the ground that the entry was a nullity; title to the property not having passed to the purchaser, and adjudication on questions of title to real estate being restricted exclusively by the constitution of the state to the superior courts.—Dougherty v. Marsh, 11 Ga. 277.

[f] (Ind. 1866) A proceeding before a justice of the peace for an assessment of damages, under the act authorizing the construction of plank, macadamized, and gravel roads, does not involve the title to real estate.—Norristown, H. & St. L. Turnpike Co. v. Burket, 26 Ind. 53.

[g] (Ohio, 1871) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction over actions against an owner or lessee for permitting sale of intoxicants thereon, against 67 Ohio Laws, p. 102. The title to real estate is there drawn in question. —Bowers v. Pomeroy, 21 Ohio St. 184.

[h] (Pa. 1864) A justice of the peace being expressly granted jurisdiction of an action brought under Act March 13, 1815, in the name of the county, to recover from the purchaser of unseated lands at a treasurer's sale for taxes the amount of the bid, or such part as is necessary to pay taxes and costs, it matters not whether the title to the land sold can come in question or not.—Fulton County v. Tate, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 532.

[i] (Tex. 1889) A suit to ascertain the amount justly due, for which there is a lien on land, and to reform the contract as to the amount secured by the lien, does not involve title, and a justice has jurisdiction.—Crawford v. Sandridge, 75 Tex. 383, 12 S. W. 853.

[j] (Vt. 1847) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of case against a town to recover for injuries sustained by reason of the insufficiency of a highway which the town was bound to maintain, unless defendants interpose such a plea as directly puts in issue the right of way; title to realty not being necessarily involved.—Whitman v. Pownal, 19 Vt. 223.

[k] (Vt. 1854) In an action of account between tenants in common of land, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, as the defendant may plead in bar that he was never bailiff and receiver of the plaintiff, and this puts the plaintiff on the proof of his whole declaration, which would bring in question the title to land.—Thayer v. Montgomery, 26 Vt. 491.

[l] (Vt. 1868) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action for breach of covenant, though the declaration alleges that the giving of a quitclaim deed by plaintiff was the consideration. It does not import "title to land" in either party.—Judevine v. Holton, 41 Vt. 351.

[m] (Vt. 1879) In an action brought under Gen. St. c. 24, § 7, to recover a penalty for tearing down gates and bars on a pent road, the necessity which the plaintiff is under of proving that he is interested in the lands so far involves the title to the land as to take the case beyond the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—French v. Holt, 51 Vt. 544.

[n] (Wis. 1863) Rev. St. c. 15, § 3, which confers on towns the authority to make by-laws to restrain animals from running at large, provides the means for their enforcement by the imposition of penalties on the owners. In an action to recover possession of a hog, the answer alleged that the animal was found running at large in the highway, contrary to the by-laws of the town, and had been taken up and sold under such by-laws, and the defendant became the purchaser. Held, that as the alleged sale was void, because unauthorized, the answer set up no defense, and the question of title to the land alleged to be a highway was not in issue.—Miles v. Chamberlain, 17 Wis. 446.

§ 85. —— Actions for trespass.

See post, § 128.

[a] Where the plaintiff can maintain his right to sue in trespass by proof of actual possession, the action is cognizable in a justice's court; but if the possession is merely constructive, and can be shown only by proof of title, a justice has no jurisdiction.

—(N. J. 1829) Gregory v. Kanouse, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 62; (1837) Hill v. Carter, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 87; (1847) Campfield v. Johnson, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 83; (1857) Osborne v. Butcher, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 308; (1869) Dickerson v. Wadsworth, 33 N. J. Law (4 Vroom) 357; (1879) Messler v. Fleming, 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 108; (1879) Jeffrey v. Owen, 41 N. J. Ely (Err. & App.) 21 Atl. 783;

(Or. 1885) Sweek v. Galbreath, 5 Pac. 749.

[b] In trespass before a justice of the peace, he may be ousted of jurisdiction by a plea of title.

—(Mass. 1835) Kelley v. Taylor, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 218;

(N. J. 1808) Ming v. Compton, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 345.

[c] (Colo. 1895) Where one of two adjoining tenants, each, respectively, in possession of land and buildings thereon up to a dividing fence, removes the fence onto the land of the other, an action by the other for damages for the taking of the lands and buildings thereon is not an action in which title or boundaries of lands are in dispute, of which a justice could not have jurisdiction, there being no dispute as to where the fence was, and it makes no difference that plaintiff introduced evidence to show that the true line was where the fence had stood.—Smith v. Schlink, 6 Colo. App. 228, 40 Pac. 478.

[d] (Conn. 1811) In trespass for disturbing the plaintiff in the use of his fisheries, the defendants justified under plea of title, wherein they stated that the locus in quo was a portion of the river used from time immemorial as a common fishing place, and by the defendants, in common with others, for more than 15 years, and that the acts complained of were done in the exercise of such common right. Held, that a title paramount to that of the plaintiff, within the meaning of the statute (title 165, c. 1, § 18), was alleged, and that the cause was properly removed to the county court.—Lay v. King, 5 Day, 72.

[e] (Del. 1865) An action against an adjacent lot owner for bricking into a party wall previously erected by the plaintiff held to pertain to the realty, and not to be within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Hawkins v. Mendenhall, 3 Houst. 216.

[f] (Ill. 1892) A justice of the peace may try a case for injury to real property, though the defense set up is that plaintiff has no interest therein.—Pitts v. Looby, 46 Ill. App. 54, affirmed Pitts v. Looby (1892) 32 N. E. 519.

[g] (Ind. 1860) The fact that, in a suit for trespass to land, defendant under a general denial gave evidence to show title in a third person, but did not show that he claimed under such person, does not bring in issue the title to real estate.—Beach v. Livergood, 15 Ind. 496.

[h] (Ind. 1881) In an action for trespass to real estate, a sworn answer that defendant is holding under a lease does not put in issue the question of title, so as to oust the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Melloh v. Demott, 79 Ind. 502.

[i] (Kan. 1874) A bill of particulars stated that the defendant set fire to prairie grass, and that the fire continued to burn and spread until it reached and burned the hay, posts, and rails, and growing peach trees of the defendant, and that such burning occasioned great damage to the defendant, to wit, the amount of $161.40, the value thereof. Held, that the justice of the peace erred in dismissing the action on the ground that the cause of action stated in the bill of particulars was one for trespass on real estate, and beyond his jurisdiction.—Loring v. Rockwood, 13 Kan. 178.

[j] (Me. 1825) In trespass quare clausum fregit before a justice of the peace, defendant's plea of title to the soil and freehold, without any replication from the plaintiff, puts an end to the magistrate's jurisdiction over the cause.—Low v. Ross, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 256.

[k] (Mass. 1806) Where, in trespass quare clausum before a justice of the peace, defendant pleads in bar that he entered his own close adjoining the locus in quo, and there committed the act complained of, but does not plead a title to the locus in quo in himself, the justice may proceed to try the action.—Wood v. Prescott, 2 Mass. 174.

[l] (Mass.) Where, in trespass qu. cl., defendant pleads that the locus in quo is a public highway, a justice cannot proceed to try the cause, but must order the defendant to recognize to enter the action at the next court of common pleas, because an easement for the public in the plaintiff's land is a real franchise holden by the commonwealth, which greatly affects the plaintiff's interest in the close.—

[m] (Mich. 1888) In an action for trespass to land, when plaintiff's evidence shows that the locus in quo is a public highway, and that he was not in actual possession, and he testifies that he owns the adjoining land, and his title to the locus in quo is not admitted, the case is within How. St. § 6895, providing that "if it appears on the trial, from the plaintiff's own showing, that the title to lands is in question, which title shall not be admitted by the defendant, the justice shall, without further proceeding, certify the cause to the circuit court."—Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44, 38 N. W. 670.

[n] (Mich. 1894) An action of trespass for disturbing the peaceable possession of land does not involve a question of title.—Dolahanty v. Lucey, 101 Mich. 113, 59 N. W. 415.

[o] (Mich. 1895) Where the declaration in trespass q. c. f. before a justice states that defendant entered "the lands and premises of the said plaintiff, situated," etc., and plaintiff, not having been in actual possession, seeks to prove title in himself, the issue of title is involved, and the justice cannot refuse to certify the case to the circuit court.—Orris v. Kempton, 105 Mich. 229, 63 N. W. 68.

[p] (Nev. 1875) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of actions for malicious injury to real estate, where the defendant claims an adverse title to the property.—State v. Rising, 10 Nev. 97.

[q] (N. H. 1834) Act July 2, 1831, to abolish special pleading, was not intended to enlarge the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, so as to authorize them to try actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, where the defendant sets up title in opposition to the title of the plaintiff. —Flagg v. Gotham, 7 N. H. 266.

[r] (N. J. 1794) In an action of trespass, a plea of liberum tenementum puts an end to the power of the justice.—Bispham v. Inskeep, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 231.

[s] (N. J. 1808) In an action of trespass for pulling down a house, a plea of title ousts the justice of jurisdiction.—Vanmater v. Real, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 64.

[ss] (N. J. 1818) A justice of the peace cannot try an action of trespass for a permanent injury to the freehold, since the title is involved.—Blackwell v. Leslie, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 112.

[t] (N. J. 1860) In trespass, a plea of public highway does not raise a question of title, so as to deprive the justice of jurisdiction.—Chambers v. Wambough, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 530.

[tt] (N. J. 1862) In trespass before a justice of the peace, a plea that there was a road across the locus in quo, to which the defendant had a title in common with all other citizens of the state, is not a plea of title, so that, on defendant's giving a title bond, the plaintiff can maintain an action in a court of record.—Yawger v. Manning, 30 N. J. Law (1 Vroom) 182.

[u] (N. J. 1880) In trespass, proof of the dedication of the locus in quo as a highway, by means of a transfer of title, from which the inference of dedication is sought to be drawn, involves a question of title to lands, etc., not capable of being tried in the court for the trial of small causes.—Vanatta v. Jones, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 561.

[uu] (N. J. 1885) In trespass cases in justices' courts, if the defendant offers not to prove title in himself, but to prove lack of title in plaintiff, the action, under section 25 of the small cause act, should be dismissed.—Edgar v. Anness, 47 N. J. Law (18 Vroom) 465, 2 Atl. 246.

[v] (N. J. 1885) In an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, brought in a justice's court, the evidence, from which constructive possession of lands was inferable, was such as ousted the court of jurisdiction, and a judgment of nonsuit was not erroneous.—Urian v. Dunn, 47 N. J. Law (18 Vroom) 565, 4 Atl. 650.

[vv] (N. J. 1886) In trespass quare clausum, before a justice, there was no evidence that plaintiff was in actual possession of the locus in quo, and the only evidence of possession was derived from a deed conveying the land to plaintiff, which she put in evidence. Held, that the title was involved, and the justice should have dismissed the suit for want of jurisdiction.—Hillman v. Stanger, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 191, 6 Atl. 434.

[w] (N. Y. 1831) In trespass in a justice's court, a plea of a right of way puts in question the title to lands, and deprives a justice of jurisdiction.—Striker v. Mott, 6 Wend. 465.

[ww] (N. Y.) A justice has no jurisdiction in an action of trespass quare clausum, where the defendant justifies on the ground that the locus in quo is a highway.—(1838) Whiting v. Dudley, 19 Wend. 373; (1844) Randall v. Crandall, 6 Hill, 342.

[x] (N. Y. 1838) Where an action of trespass quare clausum is prosecuted in a justice's court, all proceedings must be suspended when the title to the land is in question.—Willoughby v. Jenks, 20 Wend. 96.

[xx] (N. Y. 1838) Where a street is dedicated to the public, but the same has not been accepted or recognized by the officers as a public street, the question whether the owner of a lot bounding thereon may be considered as having title usque filum viæ, so as to entitle him to an action against another for digging in the street opposite to his lot and removing the earth therefrom, or whether he has merely a right of way in the street, presents a question of title to land, which cannot be tried by a justice court.—Willoughby v. Jenks, 20 Wend. 96.

[y] (N. Y. 1849) An executory contract for the purchase of land, with leave to the purchaser to enter and possess until default in the payment of the purchase money, without any fixed period or compensation, is a license, and not a lease, and does not draw the title into question, so as to exclude a justice from having jurisdiction of an action of trespass brought by the licensee against the licensor for entering and taking possession.—Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. 74.

[yy] (Or. 1885) In an action before a justice for trespass to real property, the court should exclude all testimony on the question of title, and try only the question of damages; a justice having no jurisdiction where title is concerned.—Sweek v. Galbreath, 5 Pac. 749.

[z] (W. Va. 1871) Under Code, c. 50, § 11, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to try actions for trespass involving the title to real estate.—Belcher v. Gaston, 4 W. Va. 639.

[zz] (Wis. 1869) In trespass to real property, brought by a married woman, in order to rebut the presumption, arising from the husband's occupancy, that the possession was in him, parol evidence was admissible to explain the nature of her possession, though the justice would have no jurisdiction to try the question of title.—Boos v. Gomber, 24 Wis. 490.

§ 86. —— Actions for cutting or carrying away fixtures or personal property from land.

[a] (Ill. 1892) Under Rev. St. 1891, c. 79, § 13, which gives justices of the peace jurisdiction "in actions for damages to real property," where the amount claimed does not exceed $200, they have jurisdiction of an action for damages for cutting down and carrying away growing trees, where the only controversy is whether the land on which the trees stood was in the possession of the plaintiff or of the defendant.—Pitts v. Looby, 142 Ill. 534, 32 N. E. 519.

[b] (Ind. 1877) An action by a guardian of minor owners of land to recover possession of timber cut and carried away from the land, chiefly litigated on the question whether the plaintiff has been appointed guardian as alleged, does not, of necessity, involve title to real property.—Deacon v. Powers, 57 Ind. 489.

[c] (Md. 1874) Code, art. 51, § 14, providing that no justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction in actions where the title to land is involved, has no application to an action of replevin to recover logs cut on land, since sections 13 and 16 expressly confer jurisdiction on justices in actions of replevin, where the amount involved is under $50.—Deitrich v. Swartz, 41 Md. 196.

[d] (Mass. 1826) St. 1783, c. 42, providing that an action of trespass brought before a justice of the peace may be removed into the court of common pleas by plea of title to real estate, comprehends all actions of trespass, as de bonis asportatis for cutting and carrying away timber, and not merely quare clausum fregit.—Blood v. Kemp, 21 Mass. (4 Pick.) 169.

[e] (Mich. 1882) In an action of trover before a justice of the peace for hoops, a party may, for the purpose of proving his title to personal property, show that it was taken off certain lands, and that he was the owner thereof, for this does not bring the matter of title to lands in question.—Hart v. Hart, 48 Mich. 175, 12 N. W. 33.

[f] (N. H. 1851) In debt by plaintiff to recover the penalty for cutting trees on his land, defendant pleaded that he was then in possession by lease from plaintiff. Plaintiff replied that the lease had been canceled. Held, that the plea raised a question of title and that the justice had no authority to proceed further.—Morse v. Davis, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 159.

[g] (N. J. 1829) Where plaintiff is in the actual possession of land, a justice of the peace may take jurisdiction of his action for trespass qu. cl. fr. for cutting down trees and growing grass, and digging up and removing the soil, since the title is not involved.—Gregory v. Kanouse, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 62.

[h] (N. J. 1887) Where, in trespass for cutting or destroying growing trees, defendant produces evidence that the plaintiff is entitled only to the temporary possession, and that the fee is in another, the question of title is presented in the case, and therefore the justice must dismiss the suit, because he has no jurisdiction to try it.—Bloom v. Stenner, 50 N. J. Law (21 Vroom) 59, 11 Atl. 131.

[i] (Vt. 1870) An action of trover for the removal from the plaintiff's farm of manure, which, previous to the conveyance of the farm to the plaintiff, had been sold by his grantor, and removed from the barnyard, and piled up for the purchaser, but had not been removed by him at the date of the conveyance, does not involve the title to land, so as to deprive a justice of the peace of jurisdiction.—French v. Freeman, 43 Vt. 93.

[j] (Wis. 1857) In an action for conversion of grain, a plea that the grain converted was on the defendant's land does not show that the title must necessarily be brought in question.—Verbeck v. Verbeck, 6 Wis. 159.

[k] (Wis. 1888) The title to land is in issue, so as to take the case out of the jurisdiction of the justice's court, where plaintiff, in an action for conversion of timber, alleges in his complaint title to the land on which the timber was cut in another, who gave him a license to cut the timber, and where defendant denies the allegations of the complaint, and asserts title in himself.—Huddleston v. Johnson, 71 Wis. 336, 37 N. W. 407.

§ 87. —— Actions for flowage.

[a] (N. J. 1819) A justice of the peace has not jurisdiction of an action on the case for overflowing land to the permanent injury of the freehold; the title of land necessarily coming in question.—Vantyl v. Marsh, 5 N. J. Law (2 South.) 507.

[b] (N. J. 1840) In an action for damages by overflowing the plaintiff's land, the plaintiff must necessarily show title to the land, and therefore a justice of the peace has not jurisdiction of the action.—Dixon v. Scott, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 430.

[c] (N. Y. 1877) In an action brought in justice court to recover damages occasioned by the negligent act of defendant in discharging waste water on plaintiff's lot, a motion by defendant to dismiss the proceedings because the evidence showed that plaintiff was not in possession of the premises did not bring in question plaintiff's title to the premises, so as to deprive the justice of jurisdiction.—Ryan v. Harrigan, 9 Hun, 520.

[d] (Ohio, 1886) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action brought to recover damages for injury to personal property, caused by the flow of water from the defendant's premises resulting from bursting of water pipes on said premises, since plaintiff in such action must prove that defendant had some title to the premises from which the water flowed.—Coles v. Reiger, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 50, 1 O. C. D. 355.

[e] (Vt. 1848) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action brought to recover damages for obstructing a water course, whereby the plaintiff suffered injury by the overflowing of his land; the title to land being involved.—Haven v. Needham, 20 Vt. 183.

[f] (Vt. 1885) Where, in an action on the case, the declaration alleges "that the plaintiff was damaged both in his cellar and tenement, and in his drugs and medicines in his cellar," by reason of a wrongful diversion of water into such cellar, held, that the title to land was concerned, so as to exclude the jurisdiction of a justice.—Burlington & L. R. Co. v. Brush, 57 Vt. 472.

§ 88. —— Actions for purchase price of land or easements.

[a] (Ind. 1844) To a suit on a promissory note, commenced before a justice of the peace, a plea that the note was given in consideration that the payee would convey certain land to the defendant, that the payee had no title to the land, and that he had failed to make the deed, does not oust the justice of jurisdiction.—Rogers v. Perdue, 7 Blackf. 302.

[b] (Md. 1877) Where suit is brought to recover the purchase money of land, and the contract of sale has not been performed by the execution and delivery of the deed, plaintiff must allege and prove that he has good title to the land, and consequently a justice has no jurisdiction.—Cole v. Hynes, 46 Md. 181.

[c] (Md. 1877) Where the cause of action before a justice of the peace is a balance of the purchase money for land, in order to oust him of jurisdiction, it must appear affirmatively on the face of the proceedings that the defendant has not accepted a deed of the property, but that the contract is still executory.—Cole v. Hynes, 46 Md. 181.

[d] (N. C. 1889) Under Const. art. 4, § 27, giving justices of the peace original jurisdiction of actions on contracts where the sum demanded does not exceed $200, and "wherein the title to real estate shall not be in controversy," justices of the peace have jurisdiction of suits on notes given for the price of land, where the amount does not exceed $200, and in which an issue of fact may be raised as to whether the notes were given for the price of the land; such an issue not involving any controversy as to the title to the land.—Durham v. Wilson, 104 N. C. 595, 10 S. E. 683.

[e] (Ohio, 1880) A justice of the peace may have jurisdiction of a suit to recover the consideration due on a conveyance of real estate, where the contract to convey has been executed, since it does not involve the title to land.—Green v. Sewell (Dist. Ct.) 8 Ohio Dec. 69, 5 Wkly. Law Bul. 440.

[f] (Pa.) An action by the indorsee of a promissory note given in part payment for land may be brought before a justice of the peace, since the title cannot come in question.—(1836) Camp v. Walker, 5 Watts, 482; (1892) Packer v. Taylor (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 521, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 443.

[g] (Pa.) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action by the payee on a note given as part consideration for the purchase of land, since the title to land may be involved.—(1836) Camp v. Walker, 5 Watts, 482; (1893) Hunsicker v. Miller (Com. Pa.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 261, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 107.

[h] (Pa. 1837) A justice has no jurisdiction of a suit on a promissory note, given in consideration of a right to dig a mill race and conduct water across plaintiff's land, as the title to real estate is liable to come in question.—Goddard v. McKean, 6 Watts, 337.

[i] (Pa. 1852) A justice of the peace has not jurisdiction to enforce the payment of the purchase money of land, either in the hands of the vendor or of his assignee.—Doud v. Truby, 2 Grant, Cas. 37.

[j] (Pa. 1856) A contract for coal or stone is not a real contract, involving title, and an action for the price of such articles is within the justice's jurisdiction.—Rhoades v. Patrick, 27 Pa. (3 Casey) 323.

[k] (Pa. 1872) Under Act March 20, 1810, § 1, providing that a justice of the peace shall have no jurisdiction of "cases of real contracts when the title of land may come in question," a justice has no jurisdiction of an action to recover a balance due on a conveyance of land.—Gruber v. Sheetz, 2 Woodw. Dec. 63.

[l] (Pa. 1892) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action to recover purchase money of real estate, since the title to land may come in question.—Packer v. Taylor (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 521, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 443.

§ 89. —— Actions and proceedings to recover rent or for use and occupation.

[a] (Ark. 1847) By the constitution "exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters of contract, where the sum in controversy is of one hundred dollars and under," is given to justices of the peace. By Rev. St. c. 87, § 4, it is expressly enacted that justices of the peace shall not have jurisdiction in any case where the title to land comes in question. Held, that a justice of the peace has not jurisdiction of an action for use and occupation, where the title to lands comes in controversy; and, on its appearing that such question must arise in a case, the justice should dismiss the suit and refuse to take further cognizance of it.—Fitzgerald v. Beebe, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 305, 46 Am. Dec. 285.

[b] (Ark. 1847) Justices of the peace possess no jurisdiction in actions for use and occupation, where the title to the land comes in controversy.—Thruston v. Hinds, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 118.

[c] (Ark. 1876) In an action before a justice of the peace on an alleged contract for rent, the defendant cannot defeat the jurisdiction by controverting the plaintiff's title to the land.—Matthews v. Morris, 31 Ark. 222.

[d] (Ark. 1880) In a suit for rent, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is not defeated by affidavits of defendant denying plaintiff's title.—Nolen v. Royston, 36 Ark. 561.

[e] (Ark. 1881) In suit for rent, the justice should not dismiss for want of jurisdiction merely on defendant's answer denying plaintiff's title to the land.—Jordan v. Henderson, 37 Ark. 120.

[f] (Cal. 1880) The title or possession of real estate is not put in issue, in an action to recover rent alleged to be due on a written lease, by an answer denying the plaintiff's title and right of possession, and alleging the title and right of possession to be in some one else, under whom defendant entered and held possession.—Ghiradelli v. Greene, 56 Cal. 629.

[g] (Md. 1875) An action before a justice of the peace on an alleged contract for rent does not involve the title to lands, within Code, art. 57, § 14, providing that such justices shall have no jurisdiction where title to lands is involved.—Randle v. Sutton, 43 Md. 64.

[i] (N. Y. 1893) In an action before a justice for rent, by one claiming title as heir of the lessor, where defendants dispute that the lessor was the owner of the premises at the time of his death, the title to the premises is in question, on plaintiff's own showing, within Code Civ. Proc. § 2956, and the complaint is properly dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Lane v. Young, 66 Hun, 563, 21 N. Y. Supp. 838.

[j] (N. Y. 1893) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2951, providing that in a justice's court the defendant may set forth in his answer facts showing that the title to real property will come in question, and section 2954, providing that, on the defendant delivering to the justice an undertaking relative to a new action in the proper court, the action before the justice is discontinued, where, in an action for rent, defendant pleaded that he was the owner in fee of the premises, and tendered a proper bond, it was error for the justice to refuse to dismiss the case.—Van Etten v. Van Etten, 69 Hun, 499, 23 N. Y. Supp. 711.

[k] (N. C. 1883) In an action to recover one-third of the crops due as rent under an alleged contract of lease, which the jury found to exist, a justice of the peace had jurisdiction, as the title to land was not involved.—Durant v. Taylor, 89 N. C. 351.

[l] (Pa. 1845) Where, under Act March 22, 1814, § 2, an action for rent is brought before a justice of the peace or alderman, and the defendant, before the trial is commenced, makes oath or affirmation that the title to land will come in question, it is the duty of the magistrate to dismiss the proceeding and remit the plaintiff to the court of common pleas.—Williams v. Smith, 3 Clark, 22.

[m] (Pa. 1852) A claim to rent, where the title to the real estate from which it issued comes in question, is not within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Jacobs v. Haney, 18 Pa. (6 Harris) 240.

[n] (Pa. 1853) In an action for rent, requiring proof that the relation has been changed by proper assignments is but requiring proof of the necessary allegations of the declaration, and such dispute does not oust the justice's jurisdiction, on the ground that it involves title.—Louer v. Hummel, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 450.

[o] (Pa. 1886) The magistrate's court has no jurisdiction over an action by a landlord against a tenant for rent, where the defense pleaded is title to the land in the tenant.—Mohan v. Butler, 112 Pa. 590, 4 Atl. 47.

[p] (Tex. 1881) The law precluding a justice from trying title to land does not preclude a plaintiff, suing for rent, from proving that he was the purchaser of the demised premises from the person whom defendant claims is his landlord.—Johnson v. Doss, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1075.

[q] (Vt. 1869) A declaration on a promise to pay money for use and occupation of land does not involve title to land, so as to defeat the jurisdiction of a justice. The permission and occupancy constitute a consideration for the defendant's promise, irrespective of the question of title.—Clough v. Horton, 42 Vt. 10.

§ 90. —— Actions and proceedings to recover possession of land or buildings in general.

[a] (Mo. 1870) An action of replevin brought before a justice of the peace for the recovery of a "frame building" does not disclose a want of jurisdiction on its face, since it may be a mere personal chattel.—Elliott v. Black, 45 Mo. 372.

[b] (N. Y. 1883) The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2951, 2952, relating to removal of causes from a justice's court where an answer is interposed which raises a question of title to real property, do not apply to summary proceedings for the removal of squatters under section 2232, subd. 4; in such proceedings the question being, not as to title, but as to the right to the possession of the property.—In re White, 12 Abb. N. C. 348.

[c] (N. C. 1881) Where, in a summary proceeding in ejectment before a justice of the peace, the testimony shows that title to the land is in controversy, the proceedings should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Parker v. Allen, 84 N. C. 466.

[d] (N. C. 1891) Under Code, § 834, which provides that justices of the peace shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all civil actions founded on contracts, except where the demand exceeds $200, or the title to real estate is in controversy, a justice has no jurisdiction in ejectment, where the issue is whether a contract to purchase the land was abandoned by defendant, and a suit for specific performance of the contract, instituted by defendant, is pending in the superior court.—Boone v. Drake, 109 N. C. 79, 13 S. E. 724.

[e] (N. C. 1895) Where a will devises all testator's land to his wife, remainder to plaintiff in fee, except 50 acres in some suitable place, on certain conditions, to defendant, and defendant, who was a tenant of the wife, during her life, of 50 acres, claims title to the same as being in a suitable place, and on conditions performed, an action by plaintiff for possession involves the title to land, and a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Wright v. Harris, 116 N. C. 460, 21 S. E. 693.

[f] (Or. 1893) As the rights of one locating lands as a mining claim under Rev. St. U. S. § 2319 et seq., are merely possessory, so long as the conditions entitling him to a patent are only partially performed, and do not constitute title, an action before a justice, under Hill's Code, §§ 2175–2183, to recover possession of a mining claim, based on such partial performance, does not involve an issue as to title to real estate.—Duffey v. Mix, 24 Or. 265, 33 Pac. 807.

[g] (Pa. 1880) Where, in a proceeding before the justice under Act June 13, 1836, to obtain possession of real estate purchased at sheriff's sale, the person in possession makes oath that he holds the premises in his own right, the justice should certify the record into court, where the proceedings will be continued as an ejectment.—Worman v. McCloskey, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 32, 12 Lanc. Bar, 42.

[h] (Pa. 1887) A purchaser of land at a sheriff's sale instituted a proceeding against the execution defendant, who was in possession, to recover the premises. The latter appeared and made affidavit that he did "not hold possession of the premises under the defendant in execution, under which they were sold, but under E." E. also appeared and made the same claim. Held that, on the entering of a proper recognizance, the justice had no power to render judgment.—O'Neil v. Soles, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 173.

§ 91. —— Forcible detainer and recovery of possession by landlord.

Forcible detainer in general, see "Forcible Entry and Detainer," vol. 23, cc. 1326, 1327, § 82.

Recovery of possession by landlord in general, see "Landlord and Tenant," vol. 32, §§ 1167–1348.

[a] (Ala. 1894) Title is not involved in an action of unlawful detainer before a justice of the peace, brought by a purchaser of lands at an administrator's sale for the payment of debts, to recover the possession thereof from decedent's heirs.—Cobb v. Garner, 105 Ala. 467, 17 South. 47, 53 Am. St. Rep. 136.

[b] (Colo. 1893) Where, in forcible detainer, the complaint alleges that plaintiff was peaceably in possession by virtue of certain deeds, an answer setting up that defendants were peaceably in possession by virtue of conveyances to them does not raise any issue as to title so as to deprive the justice of jurisdiction.—Kelley v. Andrew, 3 Colo. App. 122, 32 Pac. 175.

[c] (Colo. 1896) In a proceeding before a justice under Mills' Ann. St. § 1973, subd. 6, which declares that a person is guilty of unlawful detention who, after due demand, holds against the purchaser of real estate sold under mortgage or trust deed executed by such person, etc., a plea setting up that plaintiff, for whose security the trust deed was given, and who had purchased thereunder, had agreed to extend the time for payment of his debt beyond the date of the sale, and that foreclosure, when had, was to have been in a court of equity; and that, therefore, the property had not been duly sold, or plaintiff's title perfected,—does not involve a direct trial of title so as to oust the jurisdiction of the justice.

but merely raises the issue of right of possession.—Hamill v. Clear Creek County Bank, 22 Colo. 384, 45 Pac. 411.

[d] (Dak. 1889) Where, in forcible entry and unlawful detainer, defendant pleads ownership, and offers evidence to prove that fact, the justice is bound to cease all proceedings and certify the case to the district court.—Murry v. Burris, 6 Dak. 170, 42 N. W. 25.

[e] (Ind. 1844) Plaintiff filed a complaint against B. and C., as tenants of certain premises, for holding over, etc. The premises had been conveyed in fee simple by B. to plaintiff, and by a sealed instrument of the same date with the conveyance leased to B. and C. Plaintiff agreed to pay B. $100 at the end of the term, on condition that B. and C. should surrender the premises, and also that, should B., on or before that time, pay him a certain debt, he would permit B. to remain in possession, and would release to him all his interest in the premises. Defendants agreed that they would use the premises in a husbandlike manner, would commit no waste, and would, at the end of the term, deliver possession, if B. failed to pay said debt. Held, that the title to real estate was not involved, so as to deprive the justices of jurisdiction.—Dougherty v. Thompson, 7 Blackf. 277.

[f] (Ind. 1879) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover possession of land from a tenant, where defendant does not file a written answer, but a third party is admitted as a defendant and files an answer, verified by affidavit, alleging that he is the owner of the land and entitled to possession thereof, etc., if such third party is properly admitted and plaintiff makes no objection thereto, the title to the land is "put in issue by plea supported by affidavit," and the justice should certify the cause and papers to the circuit court.—Bibbler v. Walker, 69 Ind. 362.

[g] (Ind. 1893) Rev. St. 1881, § 1434, providing that if in an action before a justice of the peace the title to land shall be put in issue, the cause shall be certified to the circuit court, does not apply to an action begun before a justice under Rev. St. 1881, § 5237, for forcible entry and detainer, as such an action relates only to possession, and not to title.—Bridges v. Branam, 133 Ind. 488, 33 N. E. 271.

[h] (Iowa, 1879) In an action of forcible entry and detainer, brought in justice's court, the petition alleged absolute ownership in plaintiff by virtue of a deed from defendant, and also of a sheriff's deed on foreclosure; that defendant had been a tenant at will; and that plaintiff had terminated said tenancy by giving the proper notice. Held, that the petition did not show that the title to land was involved, so as to deprive the justice of jurisdiction, since plaintiff did not seek to recover on the ground that he held the title, but on the ground that defendant continued in possession after the termination of a tenancy at will.—Jordan v. Walker, 52 Iowa, 647, 3 N. W. 679.

[i] (Iowa, 1881) Where the petition in an action of forcible entry and detainer before a justice of the peace does not aver title in the plaintiff, an averment in the answer that the title is in the defendant, not being responsive, raises no issue as to title, and does not require the removal of the action to the circuit court.—Jordan v. Walker, 56 Iowa, 686, 10 N. W. 232.

[j] (Miss. 1876) Though justices of the peace cannot adjudicate the title to real property, yet they may take jurisdiction of cases of forcible entry and detainer, where the right to possession is established only by evidence of title.—Ragan v. Harrell, 52 Miss. 818.

[k] (Mo. 1886) In accordance with the express directions of section 2931, Rev. St. 1879, in an action against a tenant for possession, commenced before a justice of the peace, a motion made on affidavit by defendant, setting forth plea of title in and payment of rent to a third party as landlord, to transfer the case to the circuit court, should be granted.—Meier v. Thieman, 90 Mo. 433, 2 S. W. 435.

[l] (Mo. 1887) Where defendant in a landlord's summons files an affidavit denying that plaintiff had any title to the premises, or that he was defendant's landlord, or was entitled to collect any rent from him, but avers that the title was in one W., who was defendant's landlord, and recites that defendant put in issue the title to the premises, and requests that the papers be transmitted to the circuit, it is sufficient to bring the case within Rev. St. 1879, § 2931, providing that where an affidavit is filed in an action before a justice of the peace showing that title to real estate is in issue, the justice shall certify the cause, and transmit all the papers to the circuit court.—Bennett v. McCaffery, 28 Mo. App. 220.

[m] (Mont. 1889) Neither the title nor right of possession can be made an issue in an action under the forcible detainer act (Comp. St. § 723), and hence a justice of the peace properly refused to certify such action to the district court without trial, and that court, on appeal, properly refused to allow any question of title to be raised.—Sheehy v. Flaherty, 8 Mont. 365, 20 Pac. 687.

[n] (N. Y. 1854) An action of waste under Code, § 450, where forfeiture is alleged and recovery of possession sought from a tenant, involves the question of title to land, precluding a justice's court from exercising jurisdiction.—Snyder v. Beyer, 3 E. D. Smith, 235.

[o] (N. C.) The rule which estops a tenant to deny his landlord's title precludes all controversy as to the title in summary proceedings by the landlord, and thus gives a justice of the peace jurisdiction.—(1871) Credle v. Gibbs, 65 N. C. 192; (1880) Davis v. Davis, 83 N. C. 71.

[p] (N. C. 1874) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action in the form of forcible detainer, under Rev. Code, c. 49, by certain alleged directors of a railroad company against other contesting directors, for forcibly entering on and seizing the lands and other property belonging to the company, since the question of title is involved in such action.—Atlantic, T. & O. R. Co. v. Johnston, 70 N. C. 348.

[q] (N. C. 1874) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action of forcible entry and detainer under Rev. Code, c. 49, where the title to the property is involved, or is in any manner raised by the defendants, in which case the justice can only dismiss the suit.—Atlantic, T. & O. R. Co. v. Sharpe, 70 N. C. 509.

[r] (N. C. 1876) Where an equitable defense, set up by the tenant in summary proceedings against him before a justice under the landlord and tenant act, involves the title to real property, the justice cannot take jurisdiction, but should dismiss the proceedings.—Forsythe v. Bullock, 74 N. C. 135.

[rr] (N. C. 1882) In a proceeding under the landlord and tenant act, the question of jurisdiction is not to be determined by matter set up in the answer, but the court should hear the evidence as to the issue of tenancy, and, if the same be found for the landlord, an estoppel operates upon the tenant, and the title to the land is not drawn in controversy. The equitable title which serves to defeat the estoppel is only that which arises out of some peculiar relation between the parties as would make it inequitable on the part of the landlord to oust the tenant.—Hahn v. Guilford, 87 N. C. 172.

[s] (N. D. 1893) While plaintiff was living on the land, the sheriff, aided by defendant, and assuming to act under a writ out of a justice's court, entered on the land, and ousted plaintiff, and put defendant in possession. The writ was issued on a judgment by default in an action for unlawful detainer by defendant herein against plaintiff. The record in said action was excluded on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction. The complaint showed on its face that both parties claimed the fee. Held, that the ruling was correct.—Heger v. De Groat, 3 N. D. 354, 56 N. W. 150.

[ss] (Ohio, 1862) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in forcible entry and detainer of a case which involves the title to realty.—Bridwell v. Barcroft, 2 Ohio Dec. 697.

[t] (Ohio, 1862) As a mortgagee who has never been in possession, but who seeks by reason of a breach of the conditions of the mortgage to evict a lessee of the mortgagor, is compelled to prove title to the real estate, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of his action of forcible detainer.—Bridwell v. Barcroft, 2 Ohio Dec. 697.

[tt] (Ohio, 1874) It is no objection to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, in an action of forcible detainer, that plaintiff, in order to show his right to possession, had to prove his title as devisee by a certified copy of the will.—Brown v. Burdick, 25 Ohio St. 260.

[u] (Pa. 1861) In a proceeding by a landlord to recover possession of the demised premises, an affidavit by a third person that he claims a reversion cannot oust the justice of jurisdiction. As between the landlord and a party holding under him, no other title can come into question in the proceeding; but a person claiming title against the landlord must bring a direct proceeding against him to determine his rights.—Daly v. Barrett, 4 Phila. 350.

[uu] (Pa. 1879) Where, in proceedings under Act Dec. 14, 1863, for the recovery of leased premises, the tenant files an affidavit that the title of land will come in question, but it does not show that he acquired title by a conveyance, or such an equitable right to one as would sustain a decree for specific performance, the jurisdiction of the magistrate is not ousted.—Strohm v. Carrol, 11 Lanc. Bar, 62.

[v] (S. C. 1878) A petition by a landlord to eject his tenant is not an action, within Code, § 81 et seq., which excludes the justice from jurisdiction of civil actions involving title to land, and provides for the removal of proceedings from the jurisdiction of the justice.—State v. Fickling, 10 S. C. (10 Rich.) 301.

[vv] (S. C. 1886) In a forcible entry proceeding to dispossess a tenant, if the tenant sets up title in himself, this does not devest the jurisdiction of the trial justice. It does not make the proceeding an action involving the title to land.—State v. Marshall, 24 S. C. 507.

[w] (S. C. 1890) Under Gen. St. § 1819, providing for the institution of proceedings before justices of the peace for the ejection of tenants who either hold over after the expiration of their lease or fail to pay rent, the jurisdiction of the justice is not ousted by raising the question of title.—Swygert v. Goodwin, 32 S. C. 146, 10 S. E. 933.

[ww] (Tex. 1858) The action of forcible entry and detainer in a justice's court is brought to recover the inchoate possession, and is dependent on the right of possession, and not on the ultimate superiority of title; and it is therefore no objection to the jurisdiction of the justice's court that the defendant claims to be owner of the land.—Smith v. Ryan, 20 Tex. 661.

[x] (W. Va. 1883) Where, in a forcible entry and detainer suit, the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist, but the title to the land is shown to be in controversy, a justice has no jurisdiction and must dismiss the suit.—Hughes v. Mount, 23 W. Va. 130.

[xx] (Wis. 1853) Rev. St. c. 88, § 10, deny to a justice of the peace jurisdiction of any action in which the title to real estate shall come in question. A justice may, nevertheless, have jurisdiction of the process of forcible entry and detainer; that process not being resorted to for the determination of title to the premises detained.—Gates v. Winslow, 1 Wis. 650.

[y] (Wis. 1869) Where the defendant in forcible detainer before a justice is a lessee, the question whether the plaintiff has succeeded to the rights of the original lessor is not properly a question involving the title to land.—Winterfield v. Stauss, 24 Wis. 394.

[yy] (Wis. 1886) As fast as material is incorporated into a building, it becomes a part of the realty, and a contractor who is erecting a building, and has violated the terms of the contract, cannot resist an action for unlawful detainer, instituted by the owner of the property on which the building is being erected, in a justice's court, on the ground that the title to the property is in question.—City of Platteville v. Bell, 66 Wis. 326, 28 N. W. 404.

[z] (Wis. 1890) In an action under Rev. St. c. 145, for an alleged unlawful holding over after the expiration of a lease, brought before a justice of the peace, the complaint alleged a lease by plaintiff to defendant. The answer alleged that defendant entered into possession under a contract of purchase with third persons, and had paid the purchase money; that plaintiff had acquired title, subject to such contract, and that defendant was entitled to a deed; and continued "that, except as hereinbefore admitted or explained, the defendant denies each and every allegation" in the complaint. Held, that the answer raised the question whether the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, and not the question of title to the land, and that the justice had jurisdiction.—Menomonee River Lumber Co. v. Philbrook, 78 Wis. 142, 47 N. W. 188.

[zz] (Wyo. 1892) An action of forcible detainer cannot bring in question the title to land, within Rev. St. § 3435, providing that, if it shall appear on the trial of any case before a justice that the title to land is brought in question, the cause shall be certified to the district court.—Jenkins v. Jeffrey, 3 Wyo. 669, 29 Pac. 186.

§ 92. —— Actions for obstructing highways, water courses, and easements.

See post, § 128 [j, k].

Jurisdiction of prosecutions for obstruction of highways, see "Highways," vol. 25, cc. 1903, 1904, § 447 [c, e–g].

[a] (N. Y. 1850) Where, in an action on the case in a justice's court for obstructing a river, the plaintiff claims that such river was a public highway at common law, and has been declared such by statute, without making any other proof of his right, and no fact is shown by the defendant to controvert the right thus declared by law, but he pleads the general issue, and introduces in evidence a grant from the legislature authorizing him to erect and maintain a dam across the river of such construction as not to interfere with the public right of passage, the title to land does not come in question, so as to oust the justice of his jurisdiction to try the cause.—Browne v. Scofield, 8 Barb. 239.

[b] (N. Y. 1865) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action for penalty for obstructing a highway, as the plaintiff cannot be said to raise a question of title by proving the record of a road.—Chapman v. Swan, 65 Barb. 210.

[c] (Ohio, 1876) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover the statutory penalty for obstructing a public highway, the jurisdiction of the justice conferred by the statute is not affected by the fact that the right of the party to use the highway may involve to some extent the title of the land at the place of such obstruction.—Trustees of Burton Tp. v. Tuttle, 30 Ohio St. 62.

[d] (Pa. 1869) An action brought to recover damages for an obstruction to a right of way is not a case on real contract, within Act March 20, 1810, excepting from the jurisdiction of justices all cases of real contract where the title to land comes in question.—Leary v. Harter, 1 Leg. Gaz. R. 20.

[e] (Vt. 1870) An action for obstructing a public pent road, alleged to have been laid through the defendant's land, does not so involve title as to oust the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace thereof.—Bell v. Prouty, 43 Vt. 279.

[f] (Va. 1860) In a proceeding before a mayor or other justice against a party for obstructing a street, if a claim to the freehold is set up bona fide, the jurisdiction of the mayor or justice is ousted.—Warwick v. Mayo, 15 Grat. 528.

[g] (Wis. 1861) To a suit in a justice's court to recover a penalty for obstructing a highway, the defendant answered, denying the existence of the highway, alleging that the premises in question were his own close, land, and freehold, in his possession, and that no highway was open or running across the same or any part. Held, that the pleadings showed that the title to the land would be at issue sufficiently to allow the justice to certify the case up to the circuit court.—State v. Doane, 14 Wis. 483.

[h] (Wis. 1871) In an action under Rev. St. c. 19, § 103, to recover a penalty for an alleged encroachment on a highway, the question whether the highway had been laid out does not necessarily involve the question of title to land, and oust a justice of jurisdiction.—State v. Huck, 29 Wis. 202.

[i] (Wis. 1871) In an action under Rev. St. c. 19, § 103, to recover a penalty for an alleged encroachment on a highway, an oral answer alleging that the locus in quo was not a highway, but was the property of defendant, cannot be regarded as sufficient to raise an issue of title to lands, so as to oust the jurisdiction of the justice.—State v. Huck, 29 Wis. 202.

§ 93. —— Actions for breach of land contracts and covenants in deeds.

[a] (Mass. 1807) An action of covenant broken on a deed to convey land, in which a breach is assigned that the defendant was not seised, or had no right to convey the land, brings the title to real estate directly in question, and is therefore not within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Bickford v. Page, 2 Mass. 455, 462, note.

[b] (Mo. 1876) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on a covenant of warranty contained in a conveyance of land.—Birks v. Russell, 1 Mo. App. 335.

[c] (Mo. 1882) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction over an action for breach of warranty of title to real estate under Rev. St. § 2837, providing that he shall not have jurisdiction "of any action where the title to any lands or tenements shall come in question."—Bredwell v. Loan & Investment Co., 76 Mo. 321.

[d] (Mo. 1886) Under Rev. St. § 2837, providing that "no justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction to hear or try any action where the title to any lands or tenements shall come in question or be in issue," a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action for a breach of covenant in a warranty deed.—Hillhouse v. Houts, 1 S. W. 752, reaffirming Bredwell v. Loan & Investment Co. (1882) 76 Mo. 321, and Patterson v. Yancy (1884) 81 Mo. 379.

[e] (Mo. 1891) In an action for breach of a contract to pay a certain sum for the right to enter upon plaintiff's land, and cut and remove tie timber therefrom, partly performed by defendant, title to the realty is not drawn in question, and a justice has jurisdiction.—Woodson v. Hubbard, 45 Mo. App. 359.

[f] (Neb. 1895) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action by a grantee against a grantor to recover the amount of taxes paid on the land to prevent the same from being sold, for which the grantor was liable under his covenant against incumbrances; such an action not drawing the title to real estate into question.—Campbell v. McClure, 45 Neb. 608, 63 N. W. 920.

[g] (Ohio, 1892) A covenant against incumbrances in a conveyance of real estate runs with the land, and an action founded on a breach thereof, under Rev. St. § 591, cl. 6, is not within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, for it necessarily draws in question the title of the real estate to which the covenant is attached.—Van Dyke v. Rule, 49 Ohio St. 530, 31 N. E. 882.

[h] (Vt. 1868) In an action for breach of covenants in a deed, brought before a justice of the peace, the declaration, after specifically alleging one breach, alleged that "defendant has broken all of said covenants, and has refused to perform his covenants aforesaid, and the plaintiff in consequence thereof has been obliged to pay large sums of money to prevent being ejected from said land, which it was the duty of the defendant to pay." Held, that this was but a conclusion of law on facts previously stated, and not an allegation of fact, and did not involve title.—Flannery v. Hinkson, 40 Vt. 485.

[i] (Vt. 1868) In an action for breach of covenant in a deed, the fact that the deed which the declaration describes, and which plaintiff would be bound to prove if the execution were denied, contains, among other covenants, a covenant of seisin and warranty of title, is no objection to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, unless the allegation of the breach tenders an issue as to title.—Flannery v. Hinkson, 40 Vt. 485.

§ 94. —— Actions for deceit in sale of land.

[a] (Mich. 1848) In an action in a justice's court against defendant for falsely representing himself to have title to a piece of land, which plaintiff was induced to purchase of him, title to the land must necessarily be drawn in question, and the justice, therefore, has no jurisdiction.—Brooks v. Delrymple, 1 Mich. (Man.) 145.

[b] (Vt. 1891) Where, in an action for deceit in the sale of land, plaintiffs allege that defendant, to induce them to buy, falsely represented that the acreage was greater than it was, and ask damages for the fraud, the issue does not involve the title to land, to take the action out of the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace.—Dano v. Sessions, 63 Vt. 405, 21 Atl. 922.

§ 95. —— Actions by vendee to recover purchase price of land or growing timber.

[a] (Ark. 1886) An action to recover money paid on a parol contract to purchase land, which defendant concedes has been rescinded, does not involve title to or right to possession of the land.—Benton v. Marshall, 47 Ark. 241, 1 S. W. 201.

[b] (Minn. 1892) Where one has orally sold growing timber, and, after receiving the purchase price, has made it impossible to allow the purchaser to cut and remove it by selling the land, an action by the purchaser to recover the price, where the real issue is as to what time was agreed on for the removal of the timber, involves no issue as to the title to real estate, so as to withdraw the action from the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Herrick v. Newell, 49 Minn. 198, 51 N. W. 819.

[c] (Pa. 1833) Where a justice has jurisdiction in all cases where the sum demanded is not over $100, except in cases of real contract, where the title to land may come into question, a justice has no jurisdiction to recover back money paid on a contract for the sale of land afterwards rescinded because of a defect of title in the party who covenanted to convey.—Campbell v. Gallagher, 2 Watts, 135.

§ 96. —— Actions respecting boundaries and division fences.

[a] (Mich. 1883) In a proceeding by a highway commissioner before a justice of the peace to remove encroachments from a highway, the justice has no jurisdiction to determine disputes concerning private boundaries.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61, 14 N. W. 700.

[b] (Minn. 1887) In an action to recover damages for unlawful entry and detention of certain land, there was some dispute about boundary lines, and plaintiff introduced evidence of his ownership of the land in question. Held that, title to real estate being in controversy, the justice before whom the action was brought lost jurisdiction.—Tordsen v. Gimmer, 37 Minn. 211, 34 N. W. 20.

[c] (Mont. 1888) In an action before a justice to recover ore, plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that defendants took the ore from within the limits of plaintiff's mining claim. Defendants' evidence tended to show that the apex of the vein from which the ore was taken lay outside said claim, and within the limits of another claim. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction, the question being one of boundary, and not of title.—Driscoll v. Dunwoody, 7 Mont. 394, 16 Pac. 726.

[d] (N. Y. 1866) In an action in a justice's court to recover expenses of making a line or division fence on the boundary between the lands of the parties, an answer alleging that the fence in question was not built on the true line, but on the defendant's land, sufficiently involves the question of title to oust the jurisdiction of the justice.—Hinds v. Page, 6 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 58.

[e] (Pa. 1855) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, under the fence law, to enforce contribution, is not ousted by raising a question of title to land, since the duty of contribution to maintain the fence nevertheless exists, and a dispute as to the line does not excuse it.—Stephens v. Shriver, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 78.

[f] (Tex. 1849) Justices of the peace still have jurisdiction with six jurors to determine the location of the field notes of a survey, where the same is disputed.—Cannon v. Hendrick, 5 Tex. 339.

[g] (Tex. 1849) Land Law 1837, § 17, provides that conflicting claims to land, in case there be more occupants than one, shall be tried by the nearest justice of the peace and six jurors, and on their decision the surveyor shall grant to the successful party the field notes of the tract of land. Held, that the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace is confined to cases of conflict before the field notes have been delivered to either party.—Prewitt v. Farris, 5 Tex. 370.

[h] (Vt. 1850) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on the case by a landowner against the owner of adjoining land to recover the expense of building that part of the division fence between them which the fence viewers have assigned to the defendant as his proportion thereof; proof of ownership of the adjoining land being essential.—Shaw v. Gilfillan, 22 Vt. 565.

[i] (Vt. 1800) An action to recover the defendant's share of the expenses of building a division fence between his own land and that of the plaintiff necessarily involves the title of land, and is not within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Foster v. Bennett, 33 Vt. 66.

[j] (Vt. 1872) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action by a landowner against an adjoining proprietor to recover damages for neglecting to build or maintain a proportion of the division fence, to the amount of $200, irrespective of the question whether the title to land may be involved or not.—Hall v. Niles, 44 Vt. 439.

[k] (Wis. 1869) A fence is part of the realty, and if, in an action before a justice, there is a dispute between adjoining lot owners as to the title to a division fence, it is a question as to the title of land, within Rev. St. c. 120, § 51, which deprives the justice of jurisdiction.—Murray v. Van Derlyn, 24 Wis. 67.

§ 97. Title admitted or not necessarily involved.

[a] (Ark. 1894) Plaintiff sued defendant before a justice for rent of land, and attached the crops raised on it to enforce his landlord's lien. Appellant filed an interplea, setting up a mortgage on the crops, and alleging that plaintiff was not defendant's landlord, and did not own the land. Held, that such interplea, though alleging plaintiff's want of title to land, did not itself oust the jurisdiction of the justice, without evidence on the trial tending to bring the title in question.—Jansen v. Strayhorn, 59 Ark. 330, 27 S. W. 230.

[b] (Iowa, 1893) Where a railroad engine scatters fire, thereby injuring timber land, and the owner brings suit for damages before a justice, his petition alleging ownership of the land, the point that the justice has no jurisdiction because the question of title to the land may arise is not raised by demurrer, since the demurrer admits that plaintiff owns the land, and tenders no issue on that question.—Delzell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 89 Iowa, 208, 56 N. W. 433.

[c] (Mich. 1845) Where the title to the land is admitted, as by demurrer to a declaration alleging it, the justice has jurisdiction.—Stout v. Keyes, 2 Doug. 184, 43 Am. Dec. 465.

[d] (Minn. 1863) The fact that a question of title to real estate is involved in the pleadings in a suit before a justice is not of itself alone sufficient to deprive the court of jurisdiction, and to authorize the certification of the case up to the district court. Such title must be disputed on the evidence, to warrant its removal.—Goenen v. Schroeder, 8 Minn. 387 (Gil. 344).

[e] (Minn.) To oust a justice of the peace of jurisdiction, and make a case for certification to the district court, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 37, on the ground that title to real estate is involved in proceedings before him, a controversy as to title must appear from the evidence.—(1863) Goenen v. Schroeder, 8 Minn. 387 (Gil. 344); (1886) Radley v. O'Leary, 36 Minn. 173, 30 N. W. 467.

[f] (Neb.) In an action of forcible entry and detainer, a denial by the defendant of the plaintiff's title, or a claim of title or interest in himself, does not necessarily raise the question of title, so as to oust a justice of the peace of jurisdiction; and he may proceed with the trial until it is clear from the evidence that the question of title is involved.—(1882) Pettit v. Black, 13 Neb. 142, 12 N. W. 841; (1885) Smith v. Kaiser, 17 Neb. 184, 22 N. W. 368; (1888) Lipp v. Hunt, 25 Neb. 91, 41 N. W. 143.

[g] (N. J. 1892) Since Revision, p. 573, § 14, provides that in a proceeding before a justice to oust a tenant the facts authorizing his removal shall be shown if required by him, and section 15 provides that the action shall be dismissed if on the trial it shall be necessary to prove title to the land, there was no trial, and consequently no question involving title to the land, where on the return day the tenant did not appear and demand proof of such jurisdictional facts.—Watson v. Idler, 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 467, 24 Atl. 554.

[h] (N. Y. 1852) In an action for disturbing a right of way, the defendant having established the title of the plaintiff by his own evidence, and having answered by a general denial, the title to real estate cannot be said to come in question, so as to oust a justice's court from jurisdiction.—Hastings v. Glenn, 1 E. D. Smith, 402.

[i] (N. Y. 1853) Where title to real estate is not pleaded before the justice, he is not ousted of his jurisdiction because it may be necessary to prove title, unless such title shall be disputed by the defendant.—Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. 96.

[j] (N. Y. 1857) Plaintiffs and defendants owned adjoining lots, and plaintiffs by mistake paid the tax due on defendants' lots. Defendants, on being informed of the fact, promised to pay the money. Held, in an action for its recovery, the title to the land not being in dispute, a justice of the peace was not deprived of jurisdiction.—Nixon v. Jenkins, 1 Hilt. 318.

[k] (N. Y. 1866) In an action in a justice's court for injuries to real property, if the title of neither party is disputed, evidence given concerning title does not oust the justice of jurisdiction.—Bowyer v. Schofield, 1 Abb. Dec. 177.

[l] (Pa. 1868) To oust the jurisdiction of a justice under the justices' act of 1810, it is not enough merely to allege a claim of title to land. It must appear that such claim may be a defense.—Heritage v. Wilfong, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 137.

[m] (Pa. 1895) Where defendant in an action before an alderman makes affidavit, before hearing, that the title to real estate "may" come in question, the magistrate has no jurisdiction to hear the case.—Shober v. Henry (Com. Pl.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 505.

[n] (Vt. 1847) A justice of the peace is not excluded from taking jurisdiction of an action, merely because, under the plea of the general issue or a plea in bar, the title of land may be drawn into controversy, but only when the action necessarily involves such an inquiry, as ejectment and other real actions, or when, by the course of pleading, the title to land is actually contested.—Whitman v. Town of Pownal, 19 Vt. 223.

[o] (Vt. 1865) Where the declaration in an action is such as not to require the proof of title to land to sustain it, and such question of title only comes into the case by reason of some special line of defense, a justice of the peace is not ousted of his jurisdiction to try the action.—Jakeway v. Barrett, 38 Vt. 316.

[p] (Wis. 1863) In an action in a justice's court to recover damages for breaking and entering the close of the plaintiff, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to aver that he was in possession, and to show under that averment that he was rightfully in possession as against the defendant; and if, in alleging his possession, he unnecessarily sets out the character or extent of his title, a general denial of the allegations of the complaint does not put the title to real estate in question, so as to oust the jurisdiction of the justice.—Watry v. Hiltgen, 16 Wis. 516.

[q] (Wis. 1867) Though a right of way, contested or denied, raises a question of title to lands, over which a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, an allegation of a right of way, demurred to by the defendant, does not raise such question.—Stoppenbach v. Zohrlaut, 21 Wis. 385.

[r] (Wis. 1874) The mere fact that the plaintiff's title to land was asserted in the complaint, held not to deprive the justice of jurisdiction, the same not being put in issue by the answer.—Coffee v. City of Chippewa Falls, 36 Wis. 121.

[s] (Wis. 1878) Under Rev. St. 1858, c. 120, § 51, enabling a defendant in a justice's court to oust the justice's jurisdiction by pleading facts showing that title to land will come in question, and by having the case thereupon certified to the circuit court, it is not sufficient, in replevin for grain, for defendant to allege in his answer that plaintiff claimed title to the land on which the grain was raised, and that therefore the title might come in question, but it must appear that the question of title is necessarily involved.—Ohse v. Bruss, 45 Wis. 442.

[a] (Ala. 1839) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action upon a contract which does not itself point out the measure of damages.—Cavender v. Funderburg, 9 Port. 460.

[b] (Ark. 1892) An action for unliquidated damages for breach of a contract is a matter of contract, within Const. 1874, art. 7, § 40, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction in "matters of contract," where the amount involved does not exceed $300.—Koch v. Kimberling, 55 Ark. 547, 18 S. W. 1040.

[c] (Ill. 1881) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action on contracts of one deceased, after the expiration of a year from the decease, where no administration has been taken out.—Dodds v. Walker, 9 Ill. App. (9 Bradw.) 37.

[d] (Ky. 1830) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction over an action for breach of contract, where the damages are indeterminate.—Huling v. Rife, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 587.

[e] (Ky. 1847) Under the act of 1828 (2 St. Law, p. 902), justices of the peace have jurisdiction of cases for breach of contract, where the damages are laid at $50 or under.—Howke v. Buford, 47 Ky. (8 B. Mon.) 38.

[f] (N. C. 1825) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace extends only to cases of debts and demands where there is a balance due ascertainable by legal computation, and not where the claim lies in general damages for nonperformance of an assumpsit.—State v. Alexander, 11 N. C. 182.

[g] (N. C. 1828) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction in actions on executory contracts.—Tyer v. Harper, 12 N. C. 387.

[h] (Pa. 1851) An alderman has jurisdiction in an action for damages for breach of contract.—Shannon v. Madden, 8 Leg. Int. 162, 1 Phila. 254.

[i] (S. C. 1814) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in all cases ex contractu for any sum not exceeding £20.—Debruhl v. Parker, 3 Brev. 406, Tread. Const. 475.

§ 99. Land contracts and leases.

[a] (Kan. 1890) Where there has been a sale of real estate, and everything connected with the sale and conveyance has been completed, an action against the grantee for the costs of an abstract of title and of recording the deed, which he agreed to pay, but which were paid by the grantor, who now seeks to recover them, is not an "action on a contract for real estate" of which a justice has no jurisdiction under Gen. St. 1889, par. 4854, subd. 4.—Duff v. Morrison, 44 Kan. 562, 24 Pac. 1105.

[b] (N. C. 1884) As an action by a landlord against a tenant for the recovery of rent, the sum demanded not exceeding $200, is an action on the contract of lease, it is cognizable by a justice of the peace.—Deloatch v. Coman, 90 N. C. 186.

[c] (Ohio, 1844) Contracts to clear lands, to repair tenements, to build a house, to leave land in good tenantable repair, to pay rent, and the like, are not real contracts within the meaning of the statute, so as to oust the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Bridgmans v. Wells, 13 Ohio, 43.

[d] (Ohio, 1880) Under the statute providing that no suit shall be brought in the "magistrate's court on a contract for the conveyance of real estate," an action for damages for breach of a contract to sell real estate is not within the justice's jurisdiction.—Blackburn v. Sewell, 6 Ohio Dec. 962.

[e] (Ohio, 1894) Actions for the purchase price of land are actions "on contracts for real estate," within Rev. St. § 591, and not within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Crafts v. Prior, 51 Ohio, 21, 36 N. E. 1070.

[f] (Ohio, 1896) An action to recover money paid on a verbal land contract, which has been repudiated by the vendor, is not an action on a contract for the sale of land, but for money had and received, and may be brought before a justice of the peace.—English v. Brooks, 4 Ohio Dec. 120, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 43.

[g] (Ohio, 1896) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in an action in which it is sought to recover a payment due on a land contract.—McNickle v. Hickox, 4 Ohio Dec. 240, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 149.

[h] (Pa. 1883) Under Act July 7, 1879, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of actions for rent up to $300.—Reckless v. Charnley, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 207.

[i] (Tenn. 1850) A justice of the peace may have jurisdiction of an action of debt for the price of land due plaintiff on his performance of the conditions of a bond for title.—McFadgen v. Eisensmidt, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 567.

§ 100. Building contracts.

§ 101. Bills and notes.

See post, § 102.

Actions on lost notes, see post, § 184 [d, r].

Amount or value as determining jurisdiction, see post, §§ 150, 152.

[a] (Conn.) An arbitration note for £10, and vouched by two witnesses, is not cognizable by a justice of the peace.—(1785) Mills v. Borroughs, 1 Root, 99; (1789) Desborough v. Desborough, Id. 126.

[b] (Mo. 1860) A justice has jurisdiction of a suit on a note: "Due B. one hundred and fifty dollars. [Signed] A."—Brady v. Chandler, 31 Mo. 28.

[c] (Mo. 1877) An action by indorsee against indorser is on a contract which the law implies, and not on the note, within the meaning of the statute defining a justice's jurisdiction.—Meis v. Geyer, 4 Mo. App. 404.

[d] (N. C. 1847) A contract not under seal, whereby A. bound himself to pay B. $75, if B. could prove that A. had certain notes left with him for collection, is not a "note," within the act giving justices jurisdiction of debts due on notes, etc.—Spencer v. Hunsucker, 30 N. C. 9.

[e] (N. C. 1887) An action on a draft against the drawees is founded on contract, and not in tort, and is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Nimocks v. Woody, 97 N. C. 1, 2 S. E. 249, 2 Am. St. Rep. 268.

[f] (Tenn. 1838) Acts 1837, c. 22, § 1, does not confer on a justice of the peace jurisdiction in any case where the writing which evidences the contract creates a liability which is indirect and collateral, as the liability of an indorser.—Mitchell v. Miller, 19 Tenn. (Meigs) 510.

[g] (Tenn. 1872) An unconditional acceptance is a note of hand, within the meaning of Code, § 4123, prescribing the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Powers v. Nahm, 54 Tenn. (7 Heisk.) 583.

§ 102. Obligations payable otherwise than in money.

[a] (Ky. 1823) The statute giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of all sums not exceeding $50 gives no jurisdiction over a contract payable in other property than money.—Farrow v. Summers, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 460.

[b] (N. C. 1837) Under Battle's Revisal, cc. 414, 627, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of demands "for specific articles" to the value of £30, a single justice has jurisdiction of a valid obligation "to pay the sum of 100 bushels of corn."—Hamilton v. Jervis, 19 N. C. 227.

[c] (N. C. 1849) A note payable in current bank notes, though it be not negotiable, yet comes within the jurisdiction of a single justice, under the statutes.—Dowdle v. Corpening, 32 N. C. 58.

[d] (Tenn. 1843) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction, to the extent given by the legislature over money demands, in all cases where by the terms of the contract specific articles are to be delivered or services performed, if such contract ascertain the money value of such services or articles.—Marrigan v. Page, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 247.

§ 103. Bonds and recognizances.

Amount or value as determining jurisdiction, see post, § 161.

[a] (Ky. 1820) A justice of the peace, having jurisdiction where the claim does not exceed $50, has jurisdiction of the money part of a bond for less than that sum, though the bond contains other collateral covenants, not necessarily connected with the payment of the money.—Thomas v. Thomas' Adm'r, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 430.

[b] (Mo. 1841) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of actions on penal bonds, except constables' bonds, where the demand does not exceed $90.—Wimer v. Brotherton, 7 Mo. 264.

[c] (Mo. 1847) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of actions on recognizances for appeals.—Cockrill v. Owen, 10 Mo. 287.

[d] (Mo. 1869) The special act of March 23, 1863, gives justices in Buchanan county concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court upon bonds under $250 for the payment of money, and this act has never been repealed.—Howard v. Clark, 43 Mo. 344.

[e] (N. Y. 1860) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action to recover on an undertaking of bail.—Shackelton v. Hart, 20 How. Prac. 39, 12 Abb. Prac. 325.

[f] (Pa. 1884) An alderman has jurisdiction of an action for breach of a bond to take the benefit of the insolvent law.—Hunter v. Keller, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 249, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 617.

[g] (Tenn. 1844) A penal bond for $100 being dischargeable under Acts 1801, c. 6, § 66, by the payment of damages, to be assessed by a jury, and cost of suit, is not embraced by Acts 1835, c. 17, giving a justice of the peace jurisdiction to the extent of $100 over all debts and demands evidenced by specialty, note, agreement, or account, signed by the party to be discharged, etc.—Collins v. Oliver, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 439.

§ 104. —— Official bonds.

[a] (Ill. 1849) Probate justices of the peace have jurisdiction of suits on official bonds of constables.—Robertson v. Marshall County Com'rs, 10 Ill. (5 Gilman) 559.

[b] (Ill. 1853) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action against the constable and his sureties for the recovery of single damages for the former's malfeasance in taking property not subject to levy.—Vaughan v. Thompson, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 39.

[c] (Kan. 1883) Under Comp. Laws 1879, c. 81, cl. 7, § 2, giving a justice jurisdiction to proceed against constables failing to make true return, or to pay over money collected on execution issued by such justice, he has jurisdiction of an action on constable's bond, for moneys collected on an execution issued by such justice, and not paid over on demand to the person entitled thereto.—Dodge v. Kincaid Bros., 30 Kan. 346, 1 Pac. 107.

[d] (Md. 1874) Code, art. 51, § 13, giving to justices of the peace jurisdiction in suits on bonds with penalty, does not embrace a sheriff's bond; or bonds with collateral condition for the discharge of official duty. It only includes such bonds as are conditioned for the payment of money.—State v. Tabler, 41 Md. 236.

[e] (Mo. 1857) A suit on a constable's bond for neglect to pay over money collected on execution is cognizable by a justice of the peace.—State v. Muir, 24 Mo. 263.

[f] (N. Y. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2865, providing that "an action cognizable by a justice of the peace may be brought * * * by or against a town or county officer in his official character," a justice has jurisdiction of an action on the official bond of a constable to recover damages for an insufficient levy of an attachment.—Sutherland v. McKinney (Co. Ct.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 876, 18 Civ. Proc. R. 216.

[g] (Ohio, 1859) A justice has no jurisdiction of an action on an official bond of a sheriff to recover money collected by such sheriff which he has refused to pay over to the party entitled thereto.—Hall v. Strong, 2 Ohio Dec. 168.

[h] (Ohio, 1859) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action against a surety on a constable's bond, where the breach assigned is misconduct in office, though judgment has been recovered against the constable for the same misconduct in the common pleas.—Burrows v. Bliss, 2 Ohio Dec. 228.

[i] (Ohio, 1859) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action against a surety on a constable's bond, where the breach assigned is misconduct in office of the constable.—Burrows v. Bliss, 2 Ohio Dec. 228.

[j] (Ohio, 1881) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, under 1 Swan & C. St. p. 770, of an action on a constable's bond.—Hornbuckle v. State, 37 Ohio St. 361.

[k] (Pa. 1828) Under Act March 20, 1810, providing that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction "in all causes of action arising from contract, either express or implied, where the sum demanded is not above $100, except on real contracts, where the title to land may come in question, or action on promise of marriage," a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a suit on a sheriff's bond, either against the principal or the sureties, since the nature of the demand and the mode of investigation provided therefor by statute and the whole system of jurisprudence of the state equally forbid the exercise of such power by a justice.—Commonwealth v. Reynolds, 17 Serg. & R. 367.

[l] (Va. 1846) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to give judgment against a constable and his sureties for the failure by the constable to pay over money collected on execution.—Hendricks v. Shoemaker, 3 Grat. 197.

§ 105. —— Fiduciary bonds.

[a] (Del. 1876) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on a guardian's bond.—Green v. Clawson, 5 Houst. 159.

[b] (N. Y. 1852) The justice court has jurisdiction over an action against an administrator on his bond, as it is a personal action, and has no reference to the administrator in his official capacity.—O'Neil v. Martin, 1 E. D. Smith, 404.

[c] (Ohio, 1877) Under section 185 of the act to provide for the settlement of the estate of deceased persons (Swan & C. St. p. 601), providing that an action on an executor's or administrator's bond shall be brought in the court in which the bond is filed, and section 10 of the justice's act (Swan & C. St. p. 772), providing that justices shall not have cognizance of actions against officers for misconduct in office, except in cases provided for in the act, an action on the bond of an administrator cannot be brought before a justice of the peace.—Hackworth v. Robinson, 31 Ohio St. 655.

§ 106. Covenant and warranty.

[a] (Del. 1834) An action of covenant may be brought before a justice of the peace in some cases.—Colesberry v. Stoops, 1 Har. 448.

[b] (Ill. 1859) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to render judgment for a breach of covenant.—Kennedy v. Pennick, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 597.

[c] (Ill. 1885) Where a deed contained such covenants as to make it the duty of the grantor to pay certain taxes, which the grantee paid, the latter can recover the amount, if within his jurisdiction before a justice of the peace.—Martin v. Murphy, 16 Ill. App. (16 Bradw.) 283.

[d] (Ky. 1830) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of actions for breach of covenant, where the damages claimed do not exceed $50. —Fortune v. Howard, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 171.

[e] (Mo. 1884) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a suit on a warranty for the recovery of taxes paid by the grantee in the deed.—Patterson v. Yancy, 81 Mo. 379.

[f] (Ohio, 1859) Under Act March 14, 1853, § 4, as amended by Act May 1, 1854, § 1, justices have jurisdiction to give damages for breaches of warranties in the sale of horses, where the damages claimed do not exceed $300. —McKibben v. Lester, 9 Ohio St. 627.

[g] (Pa. 1873) An action of covenant for breach of conditions in the lease is within the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace.—Sharpless v. Hibberd, 2 Lanc. Law Rev. 68.

[h] (S. C. 1822) Damages arising ex contractu, as for a breach of warranty, may be recovered before a magistrate, if the amount be within his jurisdiction.—Cohen v. Saddler, 2 McCord, 239.

[i] (S. C. 1836) A justice of the peace has exclusive jurisdiction of an action on a contract for the breach of a warranty of soundness on the sale of a horse, where the proof is that he is entitled to less than $20.—Caldwell v. Garmany, 3 Hill, Law, 202.

[j] (Tenn. 1834) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to try an action of covenant arising out of a mortgage, which recites that defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $89.22, which should have been paid at a prior date.—Couger v. Lancaster, 14 Tenn. (6 Yerg.) 477.

§ 107. Guaranty and indemnity.

[a] (N. C.) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a suit on a guaranty.—(1827) Dwyer v. Cutler, 12 N. C. 312; (1846) Wall v. Nelson, 28 N. C. 300; (1864) Johnson v. Olive, 60 N. C. 218.

[b] (N. C. 1850) A. was surety for B., and B. gave him a lien on certain swine for indemnity. B. sold the swine to C., and A. and C. agreed, if A. would deliver the swine to C., he would pay the debt for which A. was surety. Held, that a single justice had no jurisdiction of the contract.—Cogle v. Hamilton, 33 N. C. 231.

[c] (Wis. 1876) Laws 1872, c. 119, § 10, as amended by Laws 1873, c. 246, § 1, relative to the liability of a railroad company to persons employed by its contractor to perform work in the construction of the road, makes such companies guarantors, on conditions specified, of the payment for such work by the contractor; and therefore the employé's action against the company, as one "growing out of contract," may be brought in justice's court for an amount not exceeding the justice's jurisdiction. —Redmond v. Galena & S. W. Ry. Co., 39 Wis. 426.

§ 108. Hiring services.

[a] (Kan. 1877) A justice may take jurisdiction of an action for damages for breach of a contract to render services, if the sum claimed does not exceed $300.—Hanson v. Lawson, 19 Kan. 201.

[b] (N. Y. 1857) St. March 26, 1819, forbidding justices to entertain suits for seamen's wages, does not apply to actions on a written promise by a shipping agent to pay a specified advance, provided the sailor goes to sea according to the shipping articles, especially where the defendant is neither master nor owner.—Loftus v. Clark, 1 Hilt. 310.

§ 109. Bailment.

[a] (Ala. 1830) Under the act giving to justices of the peace jurisdiction of all debts not exceeding $50, or for money lent, or for specific articles, or for any sum or balance due either by written or verbal contract or assumpsit, in any case not sounding in damages merely, a justice has jurisdiction of an action for the value of articles bailed and not redelivered according to the contract of bailment, as such action is in form ex contractu.—Spann v. Boyd, 2 Stew. 480.

[b] (Ill. 1841) Under the act providing that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine civil suits for any debts or demands due on a verbal contract or promise, not exceeding $100, a justice's court has jurisdiction of an action brought to recover the value of an article, not exceeding $100, lost by one who had possession thereof, pursuant to an oral contract to transport and deliver the same to plaintiff.—Dowling v. Stewart, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 193.

[c] (Pa. 1838) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in a contract arising out of bailment. —McCahan v. Hirst, 7 Watts, 175; Todd v. Figley, Id. 542.

§ 110. Shipping contract.

[a] (Mo. 1872) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction over contracts of affreightment made by railroad companies to the extent of $90.— Williams v. North Missouri R. Co., 50 Mo. 433.

§ 111. Sales.

[a] (Del. 1848) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction in an action against a vendee for not accepting goods bought.—Barr v. Logan, 5 Har. 52.

[b] (Ind. 1884) A constable may sue in a justice's court, by notice and motion, for the price of goods sold by him on execution, with 10 per cent. damages, if the demand do not exceed $100.—Steepleton v. McNeely, 6 Blackf. 76.

(N. Y. 1820) Rickey v. Bowne, 18 Johns. 131.

[b] (Mo. 1824) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action "on an account," for by that is understood book account.—Floyd v. Wiley, 1 Mo. 430.

[c] (N. C. 1847) A contract not under seal, whereby A. bound himself to pay $75 to B., if B. could prove that A. had certain notes left with him for collection, is not a liquidated account within the act giving justices jurisdiction of liquidated accounts.—Spencer v. Hunsucker, 30 N. C. 9.

[d] (Pa. 1840) A justice of the peace has not jurisdiction of an action of account rendered.—Steffen v. Hartzell, 5 Whart. 448.

[e] (Tenn. 1867) Under the Code, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction over an action on an account where the amount does not exceed $250.—Ayres v. Moulton, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 154.

[f] (Vt. 1864) In an action of account brought before a justice of the peace, an allegation in the declaration that A. and B. were receivers of the moneys of the plaintiff, for the common use, benefit, and profit of the plaintiff and A. and B., does not show that the accounting is necessarily between more than two parties (as A. and B. may have been copartners), so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the justice, and therefore the action will not be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—La Point v. Scott, 36 Vt. 633.

[g] (Vt. 1864) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in actions of account, where the accounting is between more than two parties.—La Point v. Scott, 36 Vt. 633.

§ 113. Enforcement of stockholder's liability.

[a] (Cal. 1891) The personal liability of a stockholder of a corporation, for his proportion of the indebtedness of the corporation, is an obligation arising on contract, within Code Civ. Proc. § 112, giving original jurisdiction to justices' courts in actions on contract for the recovery of money when the amount claimed is less than $300.—Dennis v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 91 Cal. 548, 27 Pac. 1031.

§ 114. Implied contracts.

See ante, § 101 [c].

[a] (Ark. 1847) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in an action for the use and occupation of land, where the title to the land does not come in controversy, though there may have been no express agreement or contract for rent.—Thruston v. Hinds, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 118.

[b] (Del. 1865) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of assumpsit on a landlord's demand for rent, not exceeding $100, against a constable, payable out of the proceeds of a sale of the goods of a tenant in the hands of the constable, which had been levied on the demised premises and sold under execution at the suit of another against the tenant.—Dougherty v. Thompson, 3 Houst. 128.

[c] (N. C. 1829) Under the act of 1794, a single justice of the peace has jurisdiction of implied contracts.—Ferrell v. Underwood, 13 N. C. 111.

[d] (N. C. 1848) Plaintiff executed a note to a third person, with defendant as his surety. The sum for which the note was given was paid by A., and the third person thereupon gave up the note to defendant, who held it for nine years and then sent it to plaintiff, stating that he had been compelled to pay the note, whereupon plaintiff paid it, and, on discovering that A. had paid the amount of the note, sued defendant before a justice of the peace to recover back the money. Held that, the money being paid under a mistake of fact, the justice of the peace had jurisdiction of the implied contract to recover the same.—Mitchell v. Walker, 30 N. C. 243.

[e] (Pa. 1854) Where one undertakes to perform work for another, the law implies a contract to do it with care and skill, and an action of assumpsit for a breach of such contract, claiming damages under $100, is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Conn v. Stumm, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 14.

§ 115. Contract or tort.

See post, § 119.

[a] (Ark. 1887) An action by the vendee of a farm to recover damages, based on the fact that the farm was smaller than represented, may be regarded as on an implied promise to pay the sums wrongfully received, and not in tort for the deceit, and therefore is within a justice's jurisdiction.—Harris v. Simpson, 50 Ark. 422, 8 S. W. 177.

[b] (Ga. 1869) An action against an innkeeper to recover the value of personal property left in his charge by a guest, and subsequently stolen, is founded on contract, and not on tort, and a justice's court has jurisdiction.—Rockwell v. Proctor, 39 Ga. 105.

[c] (S. C. 1832) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a special action on the case by a sheriff to recover the jail fees of a defendant in execution from the plaintiff; the form of the action not necessarily rendering it tortious, and hence not within his jurisdiction.—Hyams v. Michel, 3 Rich. Law, 303.

Amount or value as determining jurisdiction, see post, §§ 151, 158.

Exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction, see ante, § 74 [g, j, k, l].

Involving title to land, see ante, §§ 84 [j], 92, 94 [a, b].

§ 116. In general.

[a] (N. C.) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action founded on tort.—(1876) Heptinstall v. Rue, 75 N. C. 78; (1877) Nance v. Carolina Cent. Ry. Co., 76 N. C. 9.

[b] (Pa. 1893) Where a justice has issued a warrant for the arrest of one charged with crime, the justice cannot convert the case into an action for damages, and enter judgment for plaintiff, as in an ordinary action of trespass.—Clader v. Shepowich (Com. Pl.) 3 Lack. Jur. 124; 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 459, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 824.

§ 117. Trespass in general.

[a] (Ky. 1850) Previous to Act Feb. 12, 1840, justices of the peace had no jurisdiction of cases of trespass and trespass on the case.—Waggener v. Highbaugh, 49 Ky. (10 B. Mon.) 196.

[b] (Pa. 1790) A trespass which might be made the foundation of an action of trover is not within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Lawrence v. Doublebower, 2 Dall. 73, 1 L. Ed. 294.

[c] (Pa. 1844) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action of trespass, where the action sounds in damages merely, but only where the trespass has occasioned a loss to the plaintiff, capable of ascertainment and compensation.—Brown v. Quinton, 2 Clark, 169, 3 Pa. Law J. 425.

[d] (S. C. 1881) Damages, indefinite in amount, given by statute for a trespass, cannot be sued for in a trial justice's court.—State v. Weeks, 14 S. C. 400.

§ 118. Trover and conversion.

[a] A justice of the peace has cognizance of trover.

—(Ga. 1879) James v. Smith, 62 Ga. 345;
(N. J. 1812) Anonymous, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 930.

[b] (Ala. 1840) Justices of the peace have not jurisdiction of actions of trover, though the property converted may be of less value than $50.—Williams v. Hinton, 1 Ala. 297.

[c] (Ark. 1885) Const. 1874, art. 7, § 40, provides that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction in matters of damage of personal property where the amount in controversy does not exceed $100. Held, that a justice had jurisdiction of an action against a railroad company for $66, the value of wood which plaintiff had delivered on defendant's right of way, under a contract of sale made with a third person, and which defendant used by burning it in its engines.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Briggs, 47 Ark. 59, 14 S. W. 464.

[d] (Ark. 1886) Const. art. 7, § 40, conferring on justices of the peace jurisdiction in all matters of damage to personal property, where the amount in controversy does not exceed $100, includes all injuries which one may sustain in respect to his ownership of personal property, and therefore embraces damages for trover and conversion.—Parkes v. Webb, 48 Ark. 293, 3 S. W. 521.

[e] (Mo. 1848) Under Rev. Code 1845, p. 635, § 3, subd. 3, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of trespass or case for injury to person or to personal or real property, wherein the damages claimed shall exceed $20 and shall not exceed $50, a justice has jurisdiction of an action in trover, where the amount claimed is not more than $50.—Smith v. Grove, 12 Mo. 51.

[f] (Mo. 1874) Under Wag. St. p. 807, §§ 2, 3, giving justices jurisdiction of actions for injuries to persons or property, where the damage does not exceed $50, a justice has jurisdiction of an action to recover damages for the taking and detention of personal property, where no claim is made for the recovery thereof.—Alley v. Gamelick, 55 Mo. 518.

§ 119. Actions for torts growing out of contracts.

[a] (N. C. 1829) Where defendant promised to pay a debt as soon as he had collected certain notes, a special action on the case was the only remedy for neglect in the collection, and a single magistrate had no jurisdiction, without proof of the receipt by defendant of the money due on the notes.—Fentress v. Worth, 13 N. C. 229.

[b] (N. C. 1874) The provision of Const. art. 4, § 33, that justices of the peace shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all civil actions founded on contract, wherein the sum demanded, with certain limitations, does not include an action ex delicto, though the cause thereof grew out of a contract.—Bullinger v. Marshall, 70 N. C. 520.

[c] (Pa. 1835) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action to recover damages for a failure to execute a work, employment, trust, or duty, under a contract, in a proper and workmanlike manner; it being substantially an action for a tort, though a tort deducible from the existence of a contract.—Henion v. Morton, 2 Ashm. 150.

§ 120. Actions for consequential damages.

[a] (Del. 1879) In an action for damages in cutting the belt of a wheat thresher and for loss of the use of the machine, the principal claim was evidently for consequential damages, and therefore a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction.—Guenford v. Loose, 5 Houst. 596.

[b] (Del. 1887) An action for the destruction of fruit in baskets, by being run over and crushed by the wheels of defendant's wagon, does not involve consequential damages, and may be tried as an action of trespass before a justice of the peace.—Conner v. Reardon (Super.) 8 Houst. 19, 31 Atl. 878.

[c] (Ill. 1885) "Injury to real property" over which justices have jurisdiction embraces all injuries, whether direct or consequential.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Calkins, 17 Ill. App. (17 Bradw.) 55.

[d] (Ill. 1892) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action for damages for an injury to personal property, though such injury happened in consequence of a trespass on real property.—Kellar v. Shippee, 45 Ill. App. 377.

[e] (Pa. 1813) Act March 1, 1799, which extends the power of justices to suits brought for the recovery of damages for any trespass, wrong, or injury done or committed against the real or personal estate of the plaintiff, etc., only comprehends cases where the damages arise by an actual or immediate injury operating on the body of the property, and does not include such a thing as cheating in a bargain concerning a house.—Masteller v. Trimbly, 6 Bin. 33.

[f] (Pa. 1818) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on the case for consequential damages for the value of property destroyed by fire from a railroad locomotive.—Hasbrouck v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 1 C. P. Rep. 156.

[g] (Pa. 1856) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action for consequential damages for loss of services.—Heineke v. Kohler, 2 Phila. 44.

[h] (Pa. 1873) Where an action is brought for consequential damages, sounding in tort, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Dormer v. Handwick, 1 Leg. Chron. 293.

[i] (Pa. 1886) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action of trespass on the case for consequential damages, based on Act 1875, § 7, for furnishing intoxicating liquors to the husband of plaintiff.—Irvine v. Henry, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 336.

[j] (Pa. 1887) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in actions for trespass on the case for consequential damages arising from the obstruction of a right of way.—Coulson v. Chronister, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 521.

[k] (Pa. 1892) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's property caused by the negligence of defendant in allowing a bull to go on the public highway unattended.—Sisco v. Miller (Com. Pl.) 2 Lack. Leg. N. 143.

[l] (Pa. 1894) Act March 22, 1814, conferred no jurisdiction on justices of the peace of actions of trespass on the case for consequential damages due to negligence.—Thilow v. Philadelphia Traction Co. (Com. Pl.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 83.

[m] (Pa. 1895) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a claim in trespass to recover the value of a colt killed by "negligence" of defendant, since actions for consequential damages can only originate in the common pleas court.—Ripple v. Keast (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 109, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 548, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 31, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 205.

[n] (Pa. 1896) Act March 22, 1814, giving justices jurisdiction of actions of trespass for injuries to real or personal property, does not extend to an action against the township for injuries to a horse, due to a defective culvert; the damages in such action being consequential, and recoverable in an action on the case.—Freedom Tp. v. Snowden (Com. Pl.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 73.

§ 121. Actions for assaults.

[a] (Del. 1838) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in an action of trespass for an assault and battery.—Hollis v. Williamson, 2 Har. 391.

[b] (Ill. 1883) Where an action is in substance one of trespass, brought by a father whose child was beaten by defendant, there is no element of an action of contract, and consequently a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Horne v. Mandelbaum, 13 Ill. App. (13 Bradw.) 607.

[c] (N. J. 1806) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of actions on the case for special damage by a master for an assault and battery on his servant.—Carman v. Smock, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 111.

[d] (N. Y. 1847) Trespass cannot be maintained in a justice's court for tearing and injuring plaintiff's clothes, if it appear that the assault was done in connection with an assault on his person, a justice having no jurisdiction of the latter.—Rich v. Hogeboom, 4 Denio, 453.

[e] (Pa. 1804) 6 St. Laws, p. 3, excepts actions for damages for assault and battery from the jurisdiction of justices.—Donaldson v. Maginnis, 4 Yeates, 127.

§ 122. Actions for personal injuries due to negligence.

[a] (Ohio, 1884) Under Rev. St. § 585, giving justices of the peace, "under the restrictions and limitations herein provided," original jurisdiction of any sum not exceeding $100, and concurrent with the court of common pleas of any sum over $100 and not exceeding $300, held, that notwithstanding section 591, providing that "justices shall not have cognizance of any action to recover damages for an assault or an assault and battery," a justice had jurisdiction over an action for negligent injury in running over a person.—Schmulbach Brewing Co. v. Archer, 42 Ohio St. 213.

§ 123. Actions for slander and libel.

[a] (N. J. 1811) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action for slander.—Sparks v. Holston, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 844.

[b] (Tex. 1863) Old. & W. Dig. § 1100, does not include actions of slander and libel within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Engelking v. Von Wamel, 26 Tex. 469.

§ 124. Action for enticing away wife.

[a] (N. Y. 1811) A justice of the peace has cognizance of an action of trespass on the case for enticing away the wife of the plaintiff.—Chase v. Hale, 8 Johns. 461.

§ 125. Actions for malicious prosecution and wrongful attachment, garnishment, or distress.

[a] An action for malicious prosecution is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.

—(N. J. 1820) Mathews v. Ferguson, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 822.

(Wis. 1854) Baldwin v. Hamilton, 3 Wis. 747.

[b] (Ga. 1886) Under Const. art. 6, § 7, and Code, § 4130, providing that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction in all civil cases arising ex contractu, and in cases of injuries or damages to personal property, where the principal sum does not exceed $100, a justice has no jurisdiction of an action for suing out a garnishment maliciously and without probable cause.—Williams v. Sulter, 76 Ga. 355.

[c] (Neb. 1892) An action for falsely and maliciously suing out an attachment under which plaintiff's property was seized is one for malicious prosecution, and therefore, under Code, § 907, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Rice v. Day, 34 Neb. 100, 51 N. W. 464.

[d] (N. Y. 1815) Since justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of actions for malicious prosecution, the act conferring on the assistant justices in the city of New York the power possessed by justices of the peace gives them no jurisdiction of actions for malicious prosecution.—Edwards v. Elbert, 12 Johns. 466.

[e] (Pa. 1831) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action under the third section of the act of 1772 for the recovery of double the value of goods taken on a distress for rent in arrear, when no rent is in arrear.—Shetsline v. Keemle, 1 Ashm. 29.

§ 126. Actions against officers for negligence or misconduct.

Actions on official bonds, see ante, § 104.

[a] (Ark. 1892) Under Const. art. 7, § 40, limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to certain matters of contract only, a justice has no jurisdiction in an action against a constable, where he has made a false return on an execution in his hands, and has neglected to sell property of defendant on which he had levied, and which was of sufficient value to have satisfied plaintiffs' debt, for the reason that such an action arises ex delicto.—Merfield v. Burkett, 56 Ark. 592, 20 S. W. 523.

[b] (Ill. 1852) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action against a constable for nonfeasance, where the sum demanded is not over $100.—Briley v. Copeland, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 88.

[c] (Ill. 1853) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in an action against a constable for taking property not subject to levy.—Vaughan v. Thompson, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 39.

[d] (Ill. 1886) Under Rev. St. 1872, c. 79, § 13, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction in actions for damages for injury to realty or personalty, a justice has jurisdiction of an action to recover for an injury to personalty caused by the negligent performance of their duties by highway commissioners.—Skinner v. Morgan, 21 Ill. App. 209.

[e] (Mo. 1822) Under Act Dec. 23, 1818, giving justices jurisdiction of trespass and other actions to recover damages for injury to person or property, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction against an officer for an escape.—Lockhart v. Hays, 1 Mo. 271.

[f] (Neb. 1880) R. brought an action against a sheriff and an attachment creditor in the district court to recover the sum of $300, the value of certain property levied upon by the sheriff under an order of attachment against her husband, and recovered judgment for the sum of $52.58. Held not an action against an officer for misconduct in office, and that a justice of the peace had jurisdiction, the amount recovered being less than $100.—Miller v. Roby, 9 Neb. 471, 4 N. W. 65.

[g] (Neb.) Code Civ. Proc. § 907, prohibiting actions against a sheriff and his sureties before justices of the peace, does not deprive a justice of jurisdiction in an action of trover and conversion against a sheriff in his individual capacity, for taking chattels of a value within the justice's jurisdictional limit of $200, though it appear that defendant took such goods in his official capacity.—(1881) Neihardt v. Kilmer, 12 Neb. 35, 10 N. W. 531; (1886) Spielman v. Flynn, 19 Neb. 342, 27 N. W. 224.

[h] (Neb. 1896) After plaintiff had paid his taxes, the county treasurer caused a distress warrant to issue for collection of the same; and, in order to prevent a sale thereunder, plaintiff was obliged to repay the taxes, together with costs. Thereafter the treasurer repaid plaintiff the amount of the taxes, and subsequently plaintiff sued him for the amount of the costs. Held, that the action was based on defendant's misconduct as a public officer, and hence a justice of the peace was without jurisdiction.—Warren v. Sadilek, 47 Neb. 53, 66 N. W. 15.

[i] (N. Y. 1849) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to try an action of trespass on the case for willfully neglecting or refusing to issue an execution on a judgment recovered before the defendant as a justice of the peace.—Van Vleck v. Burroughs, 6 Barb. 341.

[j] (N. Y. 1857) Code, § 53, conferring and defining the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, confers no authority on a justice to try an action for a false return of a justice of the peace.—Worden v. Brown, 14 How. Prac. 327.

[k] (Pa. 1849) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction in an action of tort against a constable for not paying rent in arrear out of the proceeds of an execution levied on goods upon the premises.—Seitzinger v. Steinberger, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 379.

[l] (Pa. 1853) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a cause of action by a defendant against a constable for selling property which he had claimed to hold under the $300 exemption law.—Stamer v. Nass, 3 Grant, Cas. 240.

[m] (Pa. 1884) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action of trespass brought against a constable for wrongfully retaining exempt goods under an execution.—McDevitt v. Frame, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 378.

[n] (Pa. 1891) An alderman has jurisdiction of an action in trespass against a constable to recover damages for the wrongful seizure and sale of property.—Pressel v. Bice, 142 Pa. 263, 21 Atl. 813.

[o] (S. C. 1830) A justice of the peace cannot take cognizance of a suit against a constable for neglect in collecting executions delivered to him. His jurisdiction is limited to cases arising out of contract.—Davenport v. Corley, 1 Bailey, 594.

[p] (S. C. 1884) Gen. St. § 1824, provides that no goods on any leased lands, etc., shall be taken on execution, unless the execution plaintiff, before removal of the goods, pays to the landlord such sum or sums as are or shall be due for rent at the time of such taking, provided the rent does not exceed the amount due for one year. Held that, where a constable levies on and sells the goods of a tenant in violation of such statute, an action against him by the landlord is an action for damages for injury to rights pertaining to personal property, within the meaning of Code, § 71, par. 2, relating to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Sullivan v. Ellison, 20 S. C. 481.

§ 127. Action against public corporation for nonperformance of statutory duty.

[a] (S. D. 1890) Comp. Laws, § 6042, not having conferred on a justice of the peace authority to try an action for the nonperformance of an official or statutory duty, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action by a county attorney against the county to recover office expenses; such an action sounding in tort.—Pyle v. Hand County, 1 S. D. 385, 47 N. W. 401.

§ 128. Actions for injuries to real estate, easements, and rights of way.

Involving consequential injuries, see ante, § 120 [c].

to growing corn; jurisdiction being disputed on the ground that the corn belonged to the realty.—Reed v. Johnson, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 257.

[g] (Ill. 1866) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of actions brought to recover damages to real estate by cattle illegally at large. —Ames v. Carlton, 41 Ill. 261.

[h] (Ill. 1878) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action for damages to real estate by a lessee.—Taylor v. Koshets, 88 Ill. 479.

[i] (Ill. 1888) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction in all cases of injury to real property, whether the damages arising from such injury are actual or merely nominal.—Bischmann v. Boehl, 30 Ill. App. 455.

[j] (Ill. 1889) Under Rev. St. c. 79, § 13, cl. 2, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of "actions for damages for injury to real property," a justice has jurisdiction of a suit for damages for obstructing a private way, to which plaintiff has title by prescription.—Keyser v. Mann, 36 Ill. App. 596.

[k] (Mich. 1883) Trespass quare clausum fregit consisting in allowing logs to accumulate upon the premises of another, in consequence of the choking up of a stream upon which they were floating, is not an action for the obstruction of a public easement, within the meaning of Comp. Laws 1871, § 5250, and is cognizable by a justice of the peace.—Williamson v. Haskell, 50 Mich. 364, 15 N. W. 512.

[l] (Mo. 1891) The fact that an action for an injury to land affects the inheritance does not deprive a justice of the peace of jurisdiction. His jurisdiction, within the prescribed pecuniary limits, extends to all actions founded on torts, the only exception being actions in which the title to land is in issue.—Polhans v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 45 Mo. App. 153.

[m] (N. J. 1808) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of trespass to land, except in cases where the defendant ousts them of jurisdiction by a plea of title.—Ming v. Compton, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 345.

[n] (N. Y. 1878) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, if the damages claimed do not exceed $200.—Brady v. Smith, 1 City Ct. R. 175.

[o] (Pa.) Under Act March 22, 1814, conferring jurisdiction on justices in all actions of trover and conversion and trespass for injury done to real or personal property, where the value of the property claimed or the damage alleged to have been sustained shall not exceed $100, a justice has jurisdiction in all cases where there is an immediate injury done to the body of the property; and every entry into the close of another without his permission, unless justified and authorized by law, is a trespass for which suit may be brought before a justice for any sum not exceeding that named.—(1826) Hobbs v. Geiss, 13 Serg. & R. 417; (1855) Atkinson v. Russman, 13 Leg. Int. 29.

[p] (Pa. 1859) An alderman has jurisdiction of an action of trespass vi et armis for $100 for forcible trespass and keeping possession of plaintiff's home for 18 months.—Curry v. Gilroy, 3 Phila. 424.

[q] (Pa. 1892) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action of trespass qu. cl. fr. to recover damages for injuries done by cattle. —House v. Ziegler (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 159.

[r] (Wis. 1881) A complaint by a landlord against a tenant charged that the tenant maliciously threw on the walls and windows of the dwelling house greasy and offensive matter, and maliciously destroyed a waste pipe, allowing offensive matter to accumulate under a sink, from which emanated an offensive ordor, rendering the premises unfit for occupancy, and injuring them. Held, that the action was one for malicious and willful injury to real property, different from waste, and was maintainable in a justice's court, under Rev. St. § 3572, subd. 7.—Bandlow v. Thieme, 53 Wis. 57, 9 N. W. 920.

§ 129. Actions for nuisances.

[a] A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on the case for a nuisance.

[b] (Mich. 1859) Since the justice's act of 1855, justices of the peace have no jurisdiction to issue attachments against foreign corporations.—Brigham v. Eglinton, 7 Mich. 291.

[c] (Mich. 1874) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction over foreign insurance companies, especially since the enactment of Laws 1873, p. 206, authorizing a service of process in all cases against such companies by delivery to the state commissioner of insurance, who is required to send duplicates to the company or its agents within the state. Such a provision could not be designed to apply to any court proceeding under summary process, as it could allow no time to prepare for defense, or even to appear.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 Mich. 441.

[d] (Mich. 1880) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action for wages against a corporation and stockholders jointly, under Acts 1877, No. 113, § 35.—Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Min. Co., 43 Mich. 231, 5 N. W. 287.

[e] (Mich. 1885) Under How. Ann. St. § 6861, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of actions against corporations in like manner as if against individuals, and section 3723, providing that foreign express corporations shall be deemed residents of the county in which they do business, for the purposes of actions and service of process, foreign express companies may be sued before a justice of the peace.—Gallagher v. American Exp. Co., 56 Mich. 13, 22 N. W. 96.

[f] (Mo. 1859) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction under the charter of the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Company of an action against the company to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of the construction of a culvert.—Fatchell v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co., 28 Mo. 178.

[g] (Mo. 1859) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of actions against railroad corporations brought under section 12 of the general railroad act.—Mooney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 28 Mo. 570.

[h] (Mo. 1860) An action by a laborer against a railroad under section 12 of the general railroad act (Rev. Code 1855, p. 414), is within the jurisdiction of a justice.—Grannahan v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 30 Mo. 546.

[i] (N. J. 1891) The provision of the justice's court act (Revision, p. 539, § 7) that "any body politic or corporate in this state may sue or be sued in any court for the trial of small causes," etc., applies to domestic corporations only, and a justice's court has no jurisdiction of a suit against a foreign corporation.—Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Carty, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 336, 21 Atl. 851.

[j] (N. Y. 1811) A corporation may bring an action before a justice of the peace.—Hotchkiss v. Trustees of First Religious Soc., 7 Johns. 356.

[k] (Ohio, 1861) The term "foreign corporation," as used in section 28, Act March 14, 1853, entitled "An act of the jurisdiction and procedure before justices of the peace," etc., does not include a corporation created by the laws of this state, and located therein.—Boley v. Ohio Life Ins. & Trust Co., 12 Ohio St. 139.

[l] (Tenn. 1838) Though a justice of the peace cannot issue a distringas, and so cannot enforce the appearance of a corporation, he may render judgment against the corporation for default of appearance to his summons.—Union Bank v. Lowe, 19 Tenn. (1 Meigs) 225.

§ 136. Public corporations.

Jurisdiction as dependent on nature of remedy, see post, §§ 176–188.

[a] Municipal corporations cannot be sued before a justice.

[c] (La. 1889) A justice of the peace, whose jurisdiction is limited to part of a parish which is subject to the jurisdiction of a police jury, has jurisdiction in a suit against the police jury for an amount not exceeding $100.—State ex rel. Police Jury v. Judge of First Justice's Court, 41 La. Ann. 403, 6 South. 653.

[d] (Mich. 1863) The clause in the act incorporating the city of St. Clair, that it may sue and be sued in all courts of law and equity, intends all courts of law and equity having jurisdiction in the case, and does not confer on justices jurisdiction of actions against the city.—Gurney v. City of St. Clair, 11 Mich. 202.

[e] (Mich. 1881) A justice can hear a suit brought by a municipal corporation.—Hart v. Port Huron Tp., 46 Mich. 428, 9 N. W. 481.

[f] (Mich. 1886) Under How. Ann. St. § 6814, giving justices of the peace original jurisdiction of all civil actions where the amount involved does not exceed $100, an action by a municipal corporation against a pound master for fees which he has collected, is cognizable by a justice of the peace, though, under Id. § 6861, a justice has no jurisdiction of actions against municipal corporations.—City of Eaton Rapids v. Houpt, 63 Mich. 371, 29 N. W. 860.

[g] (Mich. 1889) How. Ann. St. c. 283, authorizes commissioners of highways to sue in their name of office, and in providing for the prosecution and defense, abatement and discontinuance, of such suits, treats the officers as a corporation. Section 6861 provides that all actions against corporations, except municipal corporations, shall be cognizable before a justice of the peace. Held, that a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action against a commissioner of highways.—Commissioner of Highways v. Commissioner of Highways, 77 Mich. 228, 43 N. W. 870.

[h] (Mich. 1896) Under How. Ann. St. § 6861, which provides that all actions against corporations, except municipal corporations, shall be cognizable before a justice of the peace, an action against a city for trespass in laying a sewer through plaintiff's land must be brought in the circuit court.—Mason v. City of Muskegon, 109 Mich. 456, 67 N. W. 692.

[i] (N. J. 1875) Though a municipal corporation is subject to garnishment under the New Jersey attachment act, yet in such case a scire facias cannot issue out of a justice's court.—City of Jersey City v. Horton, 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 88.

[j] (N. J. 1880) The trustees of a school district, in their corporate capacity, are not liable to suit in a justice's court.—Trustees of School Dist. No. 28 v. Stocker, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 115.

[k] (Ohio, 1827) An individual can sustain a suit against a township, as well before a justice of the peace as in other courts.—Harding v. Trustees of New Haven Tp., 3 Ohio (3 Ham.) 227.

[l] (Pa.) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in an action against the county to recover fees for which the county has become liable in criminal prosecution, tried in the court of quarter sessions.—(1855) Walton v. Lerch, 2 Lanc. Law Rev. 374; (1885) Id., 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 117.

[m] (Pa. 1880) A magistrate has jurisdiction of a suit against the city of Philadelphia to recover the compensation allowed by law to an overseer of the election.—Wentz v. City of Philadelphia, 14 Phila. 194.

[a] (U. S.) A justice of the peace in the District of Columbia has jurisdiction against executors and administrators.—(1838) Ennis v. Holmead, Fed. Cas. No. 4,492 [5 Cranch, C. C. 509]. CONTRA, see (1821) Ritchie v. Stone, Fed. Cas. No. 11,864 [2 Cranch, C. C. 258]; (1823) Adams v. Kincaid, Fed. Cas. No. 58 [2 Cranch, C. C. 422]; (1837) Foy v. Talburt, Fed. Cas. No. 5,020 [5 Cranch, C. C. 124].

[b] (Del. 1841) A justice of the peace cannot issue a sci. fa. on a judgment against an administrator to try the question of assets subsequently acquired.—Robinson v. Prince, 3 Har. 389.

[c] (D. C. 1888) Act Cong. March 1, 1823, provides that justices of the peace in the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction, "where the real debt and damages do not exceed the sum of $50, * * * to try, hear, and determine the matter in controversy, between the creditor and debtor, their executors and administrators, * * * in the same manner, and under the same rules and regulations, to all intents and purposes, as such justices of the peace are now authorized and empowered to do when the debt and damages do not exceed the sum of $20." At the time the statute was enacted justices' jurisdiction was confined to matters in which the amount involved did not exceed $20, and did not extend to actions against executors and administrators. Held, that the act of March 1, 1823, extended the jurisdiction only in respect to the amount in controversy.—Newmeyer v. Cowling, 6 Mackey, 504.

[d] (Ill. 1836) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action to recover a sum exceeding $20, in which an administrator is a party, except for debts due for property purchased at the administrator's sale.—Leigh v. Mason, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 249.

[e] (Ill. 1865) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction, under clause 10, § 17, of the act in regard to justices of the peace, in suits brought by administrators against a person not an executor or administrator, where the amount claimed does not exceed $100.—Miller v. McCray, 37 Ill. 428.

[f] (Ill. 1895) Under 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 79, § 13, which gives justices of the peace jurisdiction "in all cases where the action of debt or assumpsit will lie if the damages claimed do not exceed $200," justices have jurisdiction of actions against administrators on debts due from

[a] (N. C. 1886) A feme covert may be sued in the court of a justice of the peace for a debt due by her, or on a contract made by her before marriage, or for a debt contracted by her as a free trader.—Neville v. Pope, 95 N. C. 346.

[b] (N. C. 1890) Under Code, § 1823, providing that the liability of a feme sole shall not be altered or impaired by her marriage, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action against a feme covert for a debt contracted before her marriage.—Hodges v. Hill, 105 N. C. 130, 10 S. E. 916.

[c] (N. C. 1890) Where a feme sole employs a servant for a definite period, and marries before the expiration of such period, compensation for the whole time can be recovered in a justice's jurisdiction, if under $200.—Beville v. Cox, 107 N. C. 175, 12 S. E. 52, 11 L. R. A. 274.

[d] (N. C. 1891) Where suit is brought against a firm before a justice of the peace, and after appeal to the superior court it appears that the defendants are husband and wife, the action cannot be maintained, since the justice could have no jurisdiction of a feme covert.—Patterson v. Gooch, 108 N. C. 503, 13 S. E. 186.

[e] (Pa. 1862) It seems that a justice has no jurisdiction in a case arising on the contract of a married woman, unless the contract shall appear to be within the provisions of Act April 11, 1848.—Hunter v. Weidner, 1 Woodw. Dec. 6.

§ 142. Partners.

See post, § 187.

[a] (Kan. 1887) Where an action at law will lie by a partner against his copartner, all their partnership affairs being settled except an accounting, it can be maintained before a justice of the peace, the amount claimed not exceeding $300, and there being only a limited number of transactions, involving no complications, to be inquired into.—Clarke v. Mills, 36 Kan. 393, 13 Pac. 569.

a nonresident of the county, and that the action did not accrue in the county where the suit is pending.—Melvin v. Latshaw, 2 Colo. 81.

[c] (Ga. 1895) Under Code, § 3406, as amended by Act Dec. 20, 1892, providing that railroad companies shall be sued for torts to personal property in the county wherein the tort was committed if the company has an agent therein, the county becomes the residence of the company for the purpose of the suit, and if the action is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, it may be brought in the justice court of any militia district in which the company's road is located.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Ga. 655, 23 S. E. 836.

[d] (Ind. 1863) Actions of replevin may be instituted before any justice of the peace in the county, without reference to the fact that the defendant may reside in a different township from that in which the justice resides.—Test v. Small, 21 Ind. 127.

[e] (Ind. 1881) An action on contract against a resident of Indiana, before a justice, unless commenced by capias, must be brought in the township of defendant's residence, if there is a competent justice in such township.—Wilkinson v. Moore, 79 Ind. 397.

[f] (Iowa, 1882) Under Code 1873, § 3507, providing that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall not "embrace suits for the recovery of money against actual residents of any other county," a justice has no jurisdiction to render judgment against a nonresident partner served with notice in another county, in an action against the members of a firm as individuals, though, by section 2553, he has jurisdiction of a partnership existing in his own county, and can render judgment against the firm as such.—Ebersole v. Ware, 59 Iowa, 663 13 N. W. 844.

[g] (Iowa, 1884) Where one rents and keeps a house with his family in one county, designing to remain until he has completed a certain job, he becomes an "actual resident" there for the purposes of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, though he has a domicile in another county, whither he intends to return on the completion of the job.—Fitzgerald v. Arel, 63 Iowa, 104, 16 N. W. 712, 18 N. W. 713, 50 Am. Rep. 733; Bleedner v. Same, 63 Iowa, 727, 17 N. W. 183, distinguishing Bradley v. Fraser (1880) 54 Iowa, 289, 6 N. W. 293.

[h] (Iowa, 1884) Code 1873, § 2585, which provides that "where a corporation, company, or individual has an office or agency in any county for the transaction of business, any suits growing out of or connected with the business of such agency" may be brought in that county, applies to justices of the peace as well as to the superior courts.—Fitzgerald v. Gimmell, 64 Iowa, 261, 20 N. W. 179.

[i] (Iowa, 1895) Code 1873, § 3507, makes the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace coextensive with the county, unless specially restricted. Sections 3509, 3510, provide that suits may be brought in the township where plaintiff or defendant resides, or in any other township of the same county, if actual service on the defendant is made in such township. Held, that a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to enter judgment in an action by a nonresident of the county against a defendant who was not served with original notice in the township where the action was brought.—Thompson v. Jackson, 93 Iowa, 376, 61 N. W. 1004.

[j] (La. 1887) The provision of article 165, No. 9, Code Prac., making corporations committing trespass or doing damage "liable to be sued in the parish where such damage is done or trespass committed," does not confer jurisdiction of such action on justices of the peace away from the corporate domicile. The article (165) is found under a particular title of the Code of Practice, the first article of which restricts the application of the provisions under said title to district courts, and declares that "special rules are hereafter established for justices of the peace." Such special rules are found in the following title 4 of said Code, articles 1069 and 1070 of which expressly forbid them from exercising jurisdiction over defendants domiciled in the state, outside of their territorial limits.—State ex rel. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Huft, 39 La. Ann. 990, 3 South. 180.

[k] (Me. 1851) A judgment rendered on a default by a justice of the peace of one county when the defendant's residence is an another county may be reversed on error.—Jewell v. Brown, 33 Me. 250.

[l] (Mich. 1885) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction only in those cases in which the plaintiffs, or some one of them, or the defendants, or some one of them, are resident in the county where the suit is brought.—Hall v. Shank, 57 Mich. 36, 23 N. W. 478.

[m] (Mich. 1893) Acts 1887, No. 229, §§ 5, 9, providing that loggers' liens may be enforced by attachment in justices' courts of the county in which such products may be situated, and justices of the peace, within their respective counties, shall have jurisdiction of all such cases where the amount claimed does not exceed $300, does not enlarge the jurisdiction of justices given by How. Ann. St. § 6818, as amended by Acts 1885, No. 118, providing that every action commenced in such court shall be brought before some justice of the peace of the township where the parties, or any of them, reside, or before some justice of another township in the same county, next adjoining the residence of one of the parties, so that such action may be brought before a justice in a township in which neither of the parties reside, and which does not adjoin their places of residence.—Burlingame v. Marble, 95 Mich. 5, 54 N. W. 695.

[n] (Mich. 1896) How. Ann. St. § 6819, relating to actions in justices' courts, provides that if plaintiffs be all nonresidents of the county, or if the defendant be a nonresident of the county, then such action may be brought before any justice of the township or city where such plaintiffs or defendants, or either of them, may be. Held, that where a nonresident brings an action before a justice in the county, but not in the township, in which defendant resides, plaintiff need not be present in the township when the summons is taken out.—Weaver v. Rix, 109 Mich. 697, 67 N. W. 970.

[o] (Mo. 1883) Under Rev. St. § 2839, prescribing the territorial jurisdiction of justices of the peace, such justices have no jurisdiction of causes in which both plaintiff and defendant are nonresidents of the county in which the suit is brought.—Smith v. Simpson, 80 Mo. 634.

[p] (N. Y. 1831) A suit in a justices' court must be brought in the town or next adjoining town wherein either the plaintiff or the defendant to the record resides; the fact that the instrument declared on belongs to an assignee, a nonresident of the county, but not a party to the record, does not justify a departure from this requirement.—Hardy v. Rowe, 7 Wend. 452.

[q] (N. Y. 1833) 2 Rev. St. p. 226, §§ 8, 9, limiting suits before justices to particular towns in regard to the residence of parties, do not extend to nonresident plaintiffs, and where a warrant issues in favor of a nonresident plaintiff, the action may be brought before any justice of the county, and need not be brought before a justice of the town where defendant resides, or of the next adjoining town.—Hunter v. Burtis, 10 Wend. 358.

[r] (N. Y. 1857) A justice does not have jurisdiction by long summons over all persons residing in his county, but only over those who, residing in the county, also reside in his own town or in a town adjoining, or where the plaintiff resides in the same town with the justice or in an adjoining one.—Cooper v. Ball, 14 How. Prac. 295.

[s] (N. Y. 1882) Under Code, §§ 2869, 2876, an action by a nonresident plaintiff in a justice's court may be brought anywhere in the county of the defendant's residence.—Bird v. Crane, 26 Hun, 531.

[t] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 2869, provides that "an action must be brought before a justice of a town or city wherein one of the parties resides, or a justice of an adjoining town or city in the same county, except, * * * where the defendant is a nonresident of the county, it may be brought before a justice of the town or city in which he is at the time of the commencement of the action." Held, that the latter provision is not exclusive, and that a justice of the town where plaintiff resides has jurisdiction, though defendant is a nonresident, and was in another town in the same county when the action was commenced.—Bennett v. Weaver, 50 Hun, 111, 3 N. Y. Supp. 776.

[u] (N. Y. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2861, providing that a justice of the peace has only the civil jurisdiction given him by statute, a justice has no jurisdiction of the person of defendant in an action brought in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 2869, providing that an action must be brought before a justice of the town or city wherein one of the parties resides, or of an adjoining town or city in the same county.—Larocque v. Harvey, 57 Hun, 366, 10 N. Y. Supp. 576, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 109.

[v] (N. Y. 1894) Code Civ. Proc. § 2869, provides, that "an action must be brought before a justice of the town or city wherein one of the parties resides, or a justice of an adjoining town or city in the same county, except, * * * where the defendant is a nonresident of the county, it may be brought before a justice of the town or city in which he is at the time of the commencement of the action." Held, that an action may be brought against a nonresident defendant in a town adjoining the city in which plaintiff resides, though defendant was not in such town when the action was commenced.—Slavin v. Mansfield, 77 Hun, 535, 28 N. Y. Supp. 921.

[w] (N. C. 1878) Acts 1876–77, c. 287, ousting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil actions where none of the defendants reside in the justice's county, applies only to actions commenced after the passage of the act.—Lilly v. Purcell, 78 N. C. 82.

[x] (Ohio, 1861) Under Act Jan. 17, 1840, § 15, regulating inclosures, an action of trespass before a justice of the peace must be brought in the township in which the defendant resides.—Place v. Welch, 2 Ohio Dec. 542.

[y] (Tex. 1890) Rev. St. art. 1198, subd. 3, provides that where defendants reside without the state, or their residence is unknown, actions may be brought against them in the county where plaintiff resides. Subdivision 4 provides that several defendants, resident in different counties, may be sued in any county wherein one of them resides. Article 1556, subd. 8, provides that suits before a justice of the peace against nonresidents of the state, or persons whose residence is unknown, may be brought in the county and precinct where plaintiff resides. Held, that under these provisions a justice of the peace does not acquire jurisdiction of the person of a defendant, resident in another county, by virtue of service by publication on a codefendant whose residence is unknown, but such defendant can only be sued in the county of his residence.—Claiborne v. Pickens (App.) 16 S. W. 867.

[z] (Utah, 1890) Comp. Laws 1888, § 3021, provides that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction in their respective precincts or cities; and therefore it is no objection to a justice's jurisdiction that the person served with summons as defendant's agent resided in a different precinct from that in which the justice held his court.—Saunders v. Sioux City Nursery & Seed Co., 6 Utah, 431, 24 Pac. 532.

[zz] (Vt. 1845) In trespass on the freehold, before a justice of the peace, the writ must be made returnable in the town where one of the parties resides, if both parties are citizens of this state.—June v. Conant, 17 Vt. 656.

§ 144. —— Adjoining counties and towns.

[a] (Conn. 1811) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in a qui tam action upon the statute for selling spirituous liquors without a license, where both parties reside in an adjoining town.—Humphreville v. Perkins, 5 Day, 117.

[b] (Conn. 1841) Where there is no justice of the peace in either of the towns wherein the plaintiff or defendant dwells, the plaintiff may bring his action before a justice residing in one of the towns next adjoining the place of his abode, though in a different county, especially if it be in the county wherein the defendant dwells.—Town of Lyme v. Town of East Haddam, 14 Conn. 394.

[c] (Mich. 1887) Plaintiff owned 40 acres of land in Climax township, Kalamazoo county, Michigan, through which a railroad company had a right of way, which it neglected to keep properly fenced, and plaintiff's animals got upon the track and were killed. Plaintiff sued the railroad company, which was a resident of Pavilion township, through which its road ran, and which cornered on Kalamazoo township, bringing the suit before a justice of the peace in Kalamazoo city, which was entirely within the limits of Kalamazoo township. Climax township, where plaintiff resided, did not adjoin either the city or township of Kalamazoo. Held that, under How. Ann. St. § 6818, providing that suit may be brought "before some justice of a city formed from a township or townships next adjoining the residence of the plaintiff or defendant, or one of the plaintiffs or defendants," and act No. 118, Laws 1885, which further provides that the action may be brought before a justice of a city lying in a township which adjoins the township where the plaintiff or the defendant or either of them reside, the justice had jurisdiction.—Jebb v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 67 Mich. 160, 34 N. W. 538.

[d] (Minn. 1872) Under Laws 1870, c. 79, providing that in actions arising on contract the summons issued by a justice of the peace may be served in any county adjoining the county in which the justice resides, it is not necessary, to authorize a justice to issue a summons to an adjoining county, that either party should be a resident of the county wherein such summons was issued.—Tyrrell v. Jones, 18 Minn. 312 (Gil. 281).

[e] (N. Y. 1865) Two towns contiguous at either of their corners are "adjoining," within the statute which gives jurisdiction to justices of the peace in actions, the parties to which reside in towns adjoining that of the justice's residence.—Holmes v. Carley, 31 N. Y. 289, affirming (1860) 32 Barb. 440.

[f] (N. Y. 1894) Code Civ. Proc. § 2869, provides that "an action must be brought before a justice of a town or city wherein one of the parties reside, or a justice of an adjoining town or city in the same county, except in one of the following cases." Subdivisions 1–4 of said section enumerate four exceptions enlarging the jurisdiction of the justice. Subdivision 5 provides that no justice of a town adjoining an incorporated city "shall have jurisdiction of any action brought by or against a resident of such adjoining city unless at least one of the parties to the action is a resident of such town." Held, that subdivision 5 was an exception to the main clause of the section, and not to the other subdivisions, and did not affect the right given by subdivision 3 to a resident of a city to sue a nonresident of the county in a town adjoining the city.—Head's Iron Foundry v. Sanders, 77 Hun, 432, 28 N. Y. Supp. 808.

§ 145. —— Nonresidents found within jurisdiction.

See ante, § 143 [g].
Attachment, see post, § 177 [r].

[a] (Ind. 1856) A debtor going from the county of his residence into another county may be there sued before a justice of the latter county.—Maxwell v. Collins, 8 Ind. 38.

[b] (Ind.) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in a suit commenced by capias ad resp. extends over all persons found in his county, whether residents thereof or not.—(1863) Harris v. Knapp, 21 Ind. 198; (1868) Graham v. Klyla, 29 Ind. 432.

[c] (Iowa, 1877) A justice of the peace cannot acquire jurisdiction in an action for the recovery of money against a resident of another county, even though the party may have been served with notice in the township where the action is commenced.—Hamilton v. Millhouse, 46 Iowa, 74.

[d] (Iowa, 1880) Under Code 1873, § 3507, which provides that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall not "embrace suits for the recovery of money against actual residents of any other county," a justice has no jurisdiction of such an action against a person who removed with his family into such justice's county for a temporary purpose, with the intention of returning when that purpose should be accomplished.—Bradley v. Fraser, 54 Iowa, 289, 6 N. W. 293.

[e] (N. Y. 1833) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 226, § 9, providing that if the plaintiffs be all nonresidents of the county, or if the defendant be a nonresident of the county, then such action may be brought before any justice of the town in which such plaintiff or defendant may be, a suit against a nonresident defendant must be brought before a justice of the town in which defendant may be at the time of the commencement of the suit, but a nonresident plaintiff need not be personally in county at the time of the application for process.—Hunter v. Burtis, 10 Wend. 358.

[f] (N. Y. 1888) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a suit where defendant is served within the county in which the justice has jurisdiction, though in the complaint neither the residence of plaintiff nor defendant is alleged.—Hoffman v. Barton, 47 Hun, 409.

[g] (Or. 1884) Under Civ. Code, § 883, as amended, if either party to an action before a justice resides in the precinct where the action is commenced, and personal service is had on the defendant in any precinct of that county, the court acquires jurisdiction.—Taylor v. Jenkins, 11 Or. 274, 8 Pac. 681.

§ 146. Territorial extent of jurisdiction.

Constitutionality of law affecting territorial jurisdiction, see ante, § 72 [u].
Place for taking proceedings or holding court, see post, § 233.

[a] A justice of the peace has jurisdiction throughout his county in a case of forcible entry and detainer.
—(Iowa, 1849) Wright v. Phillips, 2 G. Greene, 191;
(Mo. 1844) Keim v. Daugherty, 8 Mo. 498.

[b] (Colo. 1887) Gen. St. § 1495, being section 9 of the forcible entry and detainer act, which provides that "the district courts in their respective districts, and county courts and justices of the peace in their respective counties, shall have jurisdiction of cases arising under this chapter," gives jurisdiction to justices of the peace, in actions of forcible entry and detainer, coextensive with the boundaries of their respective counties, and is not restricted in its operation in that respect by section 1932, which, in general terms, limits the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to the townships in which they reside.—Reynolds v. Larkins, 10 Colo. 126, 14 Pac. 114.

[c] (Conn. 1789) In civil actions the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is limited to the town in which he resides.—Palmer v. Palmer, 1 Root, 202.

[d] (Ga. 1883) Act July 21, 1879, limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, does not repeal Act Dec. 22, 1834, giving to certain justices in Richmond county civil jurisdiction over the whole corporate limits of the city of Augusta.—Thomas v. Lawton, 71 Ga. 244.

[e] (Iowa, 1862) Under Revision 1860, the jurisdiction of a justice in suits begun by attachment is coextensive with his county.—Leversee v. Reynolds, 13 Iowa, 310.

[f] (Iowa, 1863) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is coextensive with his county, in actions of replevin and suits commenced by attachment.—Biddle v. Allender, 14 Iowa, 410.

[g] (Iowa, 1877) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, in actions of attachment and replevin, is not limited to the township in which either of the parties reside or the property is found, but is coextensive with the county.—Knowles v. Picket, 46 Iowa, 503.

[h] (Iowa, 1894) Code 1873, § 3507, provides that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, when not especially restricted, shall be coextensive with their respective counties. Held, that Acts 20th Gen Assem. c. 198, which establishes a circuit court for the east half of Pottawattamie county, with the jurisdiction and powers of circuit courts of the state, does not limit the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in such county.—Coffman v. Trimble, 90 Iowa, 737, 57 N. W. 603.

[i] (Mass. 1855) St. 1852, c. 94, § 22, which provides that the police court of Springfield "shall have original jurisdiction of all suits and actions which may now, or at any time hereafter, be heard, tried, and determined before any justice of the peace in the county of Hampden, and exclusive jurisdiction whenever all the parties reside in Springfield, and service of the writ is had on the defendant in said county, and no writ, in any such action or suit, shall be made returnable before any justice within said city of Springfield, but to said police court only," takes away the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to try any civil action whatever within the limits of Springfield.—Elder v. Dwight Mfg. Co., 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 201.

[j] (Minn. 1880) Gen. St. 1878, c. 84, provides that any justice of the peace may, within his county, entertain proceedings in forcible entry and detainer. Chapter 64, § 104, provides that the municipal court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of such proceedings within the city of St. Paul. Held, that a justice of the peace in a town in Ramsey county, outside the city of St. Paul, may entertain proceedings in his town in unlawful detainer, though the parties reside, and the property is situate, within such city.—Hoffman v. Parsons, 27 Minn. 236, 6 N. W. 797.

[k] (Minn. 1886) Under Sp. Laws 1885, c. 74, giving the municipal court of Minneapolis exclusive jurisdiction of all civil actions and proceedings previously cognizable before a justice of the peace, the defendant or garnishee in which resides within the city of Minneapolis, and providing that no justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction to issue any summons or process in any civil action excepting executions to be served within said city, no jurisdiction is acquired by a justice of the peace by the service of a summons upon a defendant within the city of Minneapolis.—Higgins v. Beveridge, 35 Minn. 285, 28 N. W. 506.

[l] (Mo. 1886) A justice's jurisdiction in the city of St. Louis, in all civil cases except landlord's summons cases, is coextensive with the boundaries of the city.—Clarkson v. Guernsey Furniture Co., 22 Mo. App. 109.

[m] (Neb. 1883) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction coextensive with his county.—Jones v. Church of the Holy Trinity, 15 Neb. 81, 17 N. W. 362.

[n] (Nev. 1865) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Utah extends to the limits of their respective counties only.—Mallett v. Uncle Sam Gold & Silver Min. Co., 1 Nev. 188, 90 Am. Dec. 484.

[o] (N. H. 1852) Justices of the peace throughout the state have civil jurisdiction in any county in the state.—Young v. Bride, 25 N. H. (5 Fost.) 482.

[p] (N. Y.) The legislature has power to enlarge or contract the territorial jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—(1823) Ex parte McCollum, 1 Cow. 550; (1827) People v. Garey, 6 Cow. 642.

[q] (N. Y. 1832) A justice of the peace, except in the trial of civil actions, is not limited to the town in which he is chosen, if he be authorized to perform the act.—Gurnsey v. Lovell, 9 Wend. 319.

[r] (N. Y. 1833) A justice of the peace may issue process and make it returnable at any place in the county in which he is a justice; his jurisdiction being coextensive with the county.—Schroepel v. Taylor, 10 Wend. 196.

[s] (N. Y. 1878) Under Acts 1849, c. 125, § 35, conferring the same jurisdiction on justices of the peace in Brooklyn, "in said city," as the justices of towns have by law, "in respect to the towns," restricts the territorial jurisdiction of justices in Brooklyn to the city itself.—Geraty v. Reid, 13 Hun, 313, affirmed (1879) 78 N. Y. 64.

[t] (Or. 1868) Under the charter of the city of Salem, declaring that the recorder shall be ex officio a justice of the peace, his jurisdiction extends only within the city limits.—Craig v. Mosier, 2 Or. 323.

[u] (S. C. 1838) There is no difference between justices of the quorum and of the peace as to the territorial extent of their jurisdiction.—State v. Ferguson, Dud. Eq. 152.

§ 147. —— Exercise of jurisdiction beyond territorial limits.

Issuance of warrant on complaint for offense committed in another county, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 1092, 1093, § 440.

Solemnizing marriage out of county, see "Marriage."

[a] (U. S. 1836) A justice of the peace cannot issue process beyond the confines of his township, except in two certain cases; when he does, the act is absolutely void.—Leadbetter v. Kendall, Fed. Cas. No. 8,157a [1 Hemp. 302].

[b] (U. S. 1843) Process issued by a justice of the peace, under laws, giving the inhabitants of a town the exclusive right to oyster fishing in certain waters, cannot be executed beyond the limits of the county.—The Martha Anne, Fed. Cas. No. 9,146 [Olcott, 18].

[c] (Ala.) A justice of the peace of one county is not authorized to issue an attachment returnable into another.—(1843) Caldwell v. Meador, 4 Ala. 755; (1846) Dew v. Bank of State, 9 Ala. 323.

[d] (Ga. 1880) In Code, § 4077, the words "any justice of the peace" import that a justice in one county may administer the oath and issue the warrant to dispossess a tenant holding over in another county.—Du Bignon v. Tufts, 66 Ga. 59.

[e] (Iowa, 1887) Defendant executed to K. a nonnegotiable promissory note. An action was brought against K., in Cerro Gordo county, and a judgment rendered against him by a justice of the peace. An execution was issued on such judgment, and a constable of Cerro Gordo county went therewith into another county where defendant resided, and summoned him as garnishee to appear before the justice in Cerro Gordo county, and answer as to his indebtedness to K. Defendant appeared, and admitted his indebtedness to the amount of the note. Before defendant appeared, the note had been assigned to plaintiff. Judgment was rendered against defendant as garnishee. Held that, as the constable had no right to levy on the indebtedness evidenced by the note out of his own county, the justice acquired no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, and the judgment was void.—Gage v. Maschmeyer, 72 Iowa, 696, 34 N. W. 482.

[f] (Kan. 1886) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is limited, in civil actions, to the county in which he resides, and for which he has been elected, and where an action is brought before him, and service obtained upon one defendant, he has no authority to issue a summons in such action to an officer of another county, there to be served upon another defendant.—State v. Brayman, 35 Kan. 714, 12 Pac. 111.

[g] (Kan. 1886) The provisions of the Civil Code authorizing the issuance of a summons to a county other than the one in which the action is brought are not applicable to proceedings before a justice of the peace.—State v. Brayman, 35 Kan. 714, 12 Pac. 111.

[h] (Ky. 1877) The action of two justices of the peace of one of several counties through which a turnpike road passes, in determining that the whole road is out of repair, is extrajudicial; their jurisdiction being confined to their own county.—Russell v. Muldraugh's Hill, C. & C. Turnpike Road Co., 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 307.

[i] (Mich. 1874) Under our justice's act, process from a justice's court in civil cases is not authorized to run into another county, or to be served beyond the bailiwick.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 Mich. 441.

[j] (Mich. 1876) Comp. Laws, § 6463, making foreign corporations other than municipal corporations subject to be garnished in justices' courts, and directing on whom service may be made, does not authorize service beyond the limits of the county.—Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co., 33 Mich. 400.

[k] (Miss. 1881) An attachment issued by a mayor who was ex officio a justice of the peace in the First district of a certain county returnable to the circuit court for the Second district of that county, is not void on the ground that a justice of the First district has no power to issue a writ to the Second district.—Baldwin v. Flash, 58 Miss. 593.

[l] (Mo. 1891) A justice of the peace cannot issue summons to be served in a county other than the one for which he was elected or appointed.—United States Mut. Acc. Ins. Co. v. Reisinger, 43 Mo. App. 571.

[m] (N. Y. 1880) Laws 1879, c. 101, merely enlarged the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in summary proceedings to remove a tenant, without abrogating Laws 1877, c. 187, § 1, prohibiting such justice from exercising such jurisdiction unless the premises are situated in his judicial district.—People v. Campbell, 22 Hun, 574.

[n] (N. Y. 1883) The jurisdiction of the justice's court of the city of Albany depends on the construction of Code, § 3223, which by implication, repeals former laws. The term "within the city" restricts the jurisdiction to the city limits, and no jurisdiction can be acquired by the service of a summons outside of the city.—Conor v. Hilton, 66 How. Prac. 144.

[o] (N. C. 1875) Under Battle's Revisal, c. 63, § 50, a justice of the peace has authority to issue a summons to any county in the state and bring the defendant before his court for trial.—Sossamer v. Hinson, 72 N. C. 578.

[p] (N. C. 1880) Under Acts 1874, c. 33, a justice of the peace, not being a court of record, has no power to amerce the sheriff of a county other than that in which he holds his court, for failure to make due return to process issued by such justice.—Boggs v. Davis, 82 N. C. 27.

[q] (Pa. 1872) A Maryland justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in attachment against a resident of Pennsylvania for a debt contracted in Pennsylvania; the debtor not being personally present in Maryland, nor having property there.—Neville v. Morgan, 10 Phila. 522.

[r] (Vt. 1827) One who is ex officio a justice of the peace for the whole state may sign a county court writ to be served out of the county where it issues and is returnable.—Sinclair v. Gadcomb, 1 Vt. 32.

1. IN GENERAL.

§ 148. Amount or value in general.

[a] (Ala. 1890) Code 1886, § 3391, provides that double the annual rent accruing to the landlord on the unlawful holding over of his tenant, and also such other special damages as he thereby sustains, may be recovered in an action for unlawful detainer or by an action at law for damages. Held that, though section 3378 gives justices of the peace exclusive original jurisdiction of actions for unlawful detainer, yet where double the annual rent and the special damages claimed exceed the sum fixed as the limit of his jurisdiction by Const. art. 6, § 26, they cannot be recovered in an action for unlawful detainer before the justice, but must be sued for in an action at law for damages, and in a court having jurisdiction of the amount in controversy.—Lykes v. Schwarz, 91 Ala. 461, 8 South. 71.

[b] (La. 1889) The fact that a sum claimed exceeds the lower limit of the jurisdiction of the district court does not devest the justice of the peace of jurisdiction and render him incompetent to decide the case before him.—State ex rel. Police Jury v. Judge of First Justice's Court, 41 La. Ann. 403, 6 South. 653.

[c] (N. C. 1882) Jurisdiction of a county claim cannot be entertained by a justice of the peace where it exceeds the amount of his jurisdiction.—Meneely v. Craven, 86 N. C. 364.

[cc] (Tenn. 1879) Where a constable collects a note on which the amount due exceeds that for which a justice of the peace has jurisdiction, said constable and his sureties cannot be made liable for failure to pay over the proceeds of the note to the owner, by motion before a justice of the peace, as provided in Code, §§ 3600, 4167, though he gave his receipt as constable for the note.—Kiggin v. Sharkey, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea) 707.

[d] (Wis. 1849) A justice cannot take jurisdiction of an action when the plaintiff, in his declaration, demands more than the sum over which the law gives the justice jurisdiction.—Elderkin v. Spurbeck, 1 Chand. 69, 2 Pin. 129, 52 Am. Dec. 148.

[a] A suit before a justice of the peace cannot be sustained if the amount claimed exceeds $100.
—(Ind. 1843) Chandler v. Davidson, 6 Blackf. 367;
(Pa. 1858) Butler v. Urch, 2 Grant, Cas. 247.

[b] (Cal. 1850) The jurisdiction of a second alcalde is limited by law to causes in which the amount claimed is $100 or under.—Horrell v. Gray, 1 Cal. 133.

[c] (Cal. 1857) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace is limited by the constitution to cases in which the value of the thing in controversy does not exceed the sum of $200, except in forcible detainer.—Freeman v. Powers, 7 Cal. 104.

[d] (D. C. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 1006, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of actions between creditors and debtors, "their executors and administrators," in all cases within their jurisdiction, that court has no jurisdiction of suits against administrators and executors for the recovery of demands of less than $100.—Newmeyer v. Cowling, 6 Mackey, 504.

[e] (Ill. 1850) Justices of the peace, in actions by or against executors or administrators, have jurisdiction to the amount of $20 only.—Williams v. Blankenship, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 122.

[f] (Miss. 1870) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is limited to actions where the amount in controversy does not exceed $150.—Randall v. Kline, 44 Miss. 313.

[g] (N. Y. 1845) The jurisdiction of "the justice's court in the city of Hudson," prior to the act of May 13, 1845, was limited in amount to $50.—Bryan v. Cain, 1 Denio, 507.

[h] (N. Y. 1852) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction where the damages claimed are $200, and a judgment where that sum was claimed was reversed.—Bellinger v. Ford, 14 Barb. 250.

[i] (N. C. 1880) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action where the "principal sum demanded" exceeds $200, unless the plaintiff remits the excess, and the same is entered of record.—Dalton v. Webster, 82 N. C. 279.

[j] (Ohio, 1834) A justice has no jurisdiction above $100 without the consent of both parties.—Deming v. Austin, Wright, 717.

[k] (Ohio, 1876) Under Act 1853, § 5, giving justices jurisdiction in certain actions where the balance claimed was less than $300, they had jurisdiction where the balance claimed equaled, but did not exceed, that sum.—Butcher v. Smith, 29 Ohio St. 604.

[l] (Pa. 1862) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of claims exceeding $100, unless, in the absence of any process, the debtor voluntarily appears before him.—Borland v. Ealy, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 111.

[m] (Pa. 1894) An alderman has no authority to enter judgment on a claim exceeding $300, unless the debtor voluntarily appears without process, and confesses judgment.—McDonnell v. Hodgins (Com. Pl.) 3 Lack. Jur. 285.

[n] (S. C. 1806) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace extends to $20, but not beyond that sum.—Collier v. Rogers, 2 Brev. 41.

[o] (Tenn.) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to render judgment for an amount over $100.—(1827) Morrow v. Calloway, 8 Tenn. (Mart. & Y.) 240; (1836) Dixon v. Caruthers, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 30.

[p] (Tex. 1895) A justice has jurisdiction where the amount in controversy is $200, or less, exclusive of interest, where exclusive original jurisdiction is not given to the district or county courts.—Loyd v. Capps (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 505.

§ 150. Particular actions and proceedings.

Actions on judgments, see post, § 418 [f, n, p]. Determination of amount or value, see post, §§ 158–165.

[a] (Ala. 1868) Acts 1865–66, p. 60, conferred on justices of the peace jurisdiction "of all acts founded on any contract where the sum claimed does not exceed $100," but did not change its extent in the other classes of civil suits as fixed by the Code.—Pearce v. Pope, 42 Ala. 319.

[b, c] (Ga. 1855) Under the act of 1852, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the justices' courts in Macon, said courts have jurisdiction of $50 cases against joint promisors, some of whom reside in Macon, and some in districts outside of Macon.—Freeman v. Carhart, 17 Ga. 348.

[d] (Ill. 1852) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action brought for the penalty for the seizure of property taken on execution, where treble the value of the property taken is over $100.—Casey v. Harvey, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 45.

[e] (Ky. 1838) A justice of the peace had no jurisdiction, prior to the act of 1835, of a motion against a constable for failing to return execution when the amount collectible exceeded five pounds.—Howard v. Jones, 41 Ky. (2 B. Mon.) 526.

[f] (Ky. 1859) A justice of the peace of the city of Louisville has no jurisdiction of an action for the recovery of $100 for unliquidated damages claimed for a breach of a contract of partnership, to be assessed either by a court of equity upon a settlement of the partnership accounts, or by a jury upon issues of fact formed by the parties.—Fleming v. Limebaugh, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 265.

[g] (Mass. 1867) A petition under Gen. St. c. 151, § 21, to enforce a lien for work done and money expended in the manufacture of certain machinery, is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, even though the claim exceed $100.—Busfield v. Wheeler, 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 139.

[h] (Miss. 1889) The question of the liability of property to the satisfaction of an execution on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace is triable before the justice, however great may be the value of the property levied on.—Bernheimer v. Martin, 66 Miss. 486, 6 South. 326.

[i] (Mo. 1829) The fine of $100, imposed by an ordinance of the corporation of St. Louis on persons keeping tippling houses, and retailing wines, etc., without licenses, has, by a subsequent ordinance, been reduced to $90, and justices of the peace have jurisdiction of an action to recover it.—City of St. Louis v. Smith, 2 Mo. 113.

[j] (Mo. 1894) A justice has no jurisdiction of an action to enforce a mechanic's lien when the amount claimed exceeds $250.—Mitchell Planing Mill Co. v. Short, 58 Mo. App. 320.

[k] (N. Y. 1871) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 54, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in matters of account where the sum of the accounts of both parties exceed $400.—Lund v. Broadhead, 41 How. Prac. 146.

[l] (Ohio, 1857) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace under the water craft law extends only to $100.—The Housatonic v. Kanawha Salt Co., 7 Ohio St. 261.

[m] (Tenn. 1823) Acts 1809, c. 54, § 1, raised the former jurisdiction of a justice from $50 to $100 where a balance is due on any note or agreement, in addition to the jurisdiction heretofore granted, and said nothing of "specific articles," as was done in former acts. Held, that the justice had no jurisdiction over a property contract exceeding $50.—Arnold v. Embree, 7 Tenn. (1 Peck) 134.

[n, o] (Tenn. 1844) Under Acts 1835, c. 17, conferring on justices of the peace jurisdiction over all debts and demands due on any specialty, note, or agreement signed by the party to be charged therewith, on which the judgment will not sound in damages, and over all settled accounts signed by the parties, when the amount claimed to be due on such specialty, note, agreement, or account does not exceed $100, and over all sums not exceeding $50, due by open account, or by contract in writing signed by the party to be charged therewith, on which the judgment would sound in damages, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on an award exceeding $50.—Collins v. Oliver, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 439.

[p] (Tex. 1881) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in case of a trial of a right of property worth more than $200.—Marx v. Carlisle, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 93.

[q] (Tex. 1894) A justice's court has no jurisdiction to foreclose a mortgage on personal property where the value of the property exceeds $200.—Cox v. Wright (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 294.

[r] (Tex. 1895) In suit to foreclose liens on property, if the value of the property is more than $200, the justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Schwartz v. Frees (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 214.

[s] (Vt. 1853) Under the license law of 1850 (Comp. St. p. 507, § 12), justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction with the county court, whatever the amount of penalty sued for.—Ex parte Tracy, 25 Vt. 93.

[t] (Va. 1891) Under Code, § 2939, providing, among other things, that a justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction of any claim to any fine if the amount thereof does not exceed $20, and of other claims where the amount does not exceed $100, a justice has no jurisdiction of an action for the $100 penalty imposed by section 1292 upon telegraph companies for failure to deliver a dispatch, since such penalty is a fine within the meaning of the statute.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pettyjohn, 88 Va. 296, 13 S. E. 431.

[u] (Wis. 1873) Rev. St. c. 120, § 9, provides that a justice shall have jurisdiction of actions on an account when the amount proved to the satisfaction of the justice does not exceed $250, and when the sum shall be reduced to not exceeding $100 by credits given, or by the set-off or demand of the opposite party. Laws 1870, c. 30, amending Rev. St. c. 120, § 5, declaring that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction of actions arising on contracts expressed or implied where the debt or balance due shall not exceed $200, made provision also for the jurisdiction of justices of other classes of actions, but no specific reference was made to actions on accounts. Held, that the act of 1870 did not affect Rev. St. c. 120, § 9, limiting the jurisdiction of justices in actions on account when the balance claimed did not exceed $100.—Nimmick v. Mathiesson, 32 Wis. 324.

[v] (Wis. 1876) A justice of the peace cannot take jurisdiction of an action on an express contract to pay a certain price for a certain amount of labor and materials exceeding, by computation, $600, and averred to be wholly unpaid.—Power v. Rockwell, 39 Wis. 585.

[w] (Wis. 1882) Under Rev. St. § 3672, subd. 4, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on an account amounting to $503.66, on which, after deducting all payments, etc., a balance of $287.66 is claimed.—Storm v. Adams, 56 Wis. 137, 14 N. W. 69.

§ 151. —— Actions for torts.

Determination of amount or value, see post, § 159.

[a] (Ill. 1861) In Peoria county, by special statute, justices have jurisdiction to the amount of $300, and suits brought for the recovery of three times the value of property wrongfully levied on by an officer are within the operation of this statute. In other counties the jurisdiction is limited to $100 in amount.—Campbell v. Conover, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 64.

[b] (Ind. 1838) An action against a constable for an escape sounds in tort, though brought as debt, and hence, where the damages claimed exceed $50, a justice has no jurisdiction, under St. 1834, p. 156, limiting the jurisdiction of justices in cases of tort to $50.—Forsha v. Watkins, 4 Blackf. 520.

[c] (Ind. 1848) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action for damages to the amount of more than $100, for a false and malicious attachment of a canal boat, and subsequent maltreatment of such boat.—White Water Val. Canal Co. v. Dow, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 141.

[d] (Ind. 1854) Where the damages claimed amounted to $100, justices of the peace, by Rev. St. 1843, had no jurisdiction of an action of tort.—Falkner v. Iams, 5 Ind. 200.

[e] (Ind. 1861) Under Act March 11, 1861, declaring that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction to try suits founded on contract or tort where the debt or damage claimed does not exceed $100, and concurrent jurisdiction to the amount of $200, a justice has jurisdiction of an action for injury to property in which the damages claimed are $200.—Leathers v. Hogan, 17 Ind. 242.

[f] (Md. 1874) Code, art. 51, § 13, prescribes that the civil jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall embrace all cases to obtain redress for wrongs "where the debt or damages claimed shall not exceed $100." In a suit before a justice for wrongful conversion of horses, plaintiff filed a claim for $100, and with such claim his attorney also filed a statement of the cause of action in which he claimed $99 as damages. There was judgment for defendant, and on appeal by plaintiff to the Baltimore city court there was a verdict in his favor for $100, and the judgment of the justice was reversed and judgment entered on the verdict. Held, that such verdict was not in excess of the justice's jurisdiction.—Herzberg v. Adams, 39 Md. 309.

[g] (Mich. 1856) Under Laws 1851, p. 204, providing that justices of the peace shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all civil actions wherein the debt or damage does not exceed $100, and conferring jurisdiction in all civil actions founded on contract where the debt or damages does not exceed $300, justices have no jurisdiction in actions founded on tort where the damages exceed $100.—Wells v. Scott, 4 Mich. 347.

[h] (Miss. 1888) Plaintiff filed with a justice three claims against defendant railroad company for damages for injuries to his stock on three different occasions. The justice docketed three actions, but issued only one writ. Defendant appeared to one action only, and moved to consolidate all the actions, which was denied, and after trial judgment was rendered for plaintiff for $35. Defendant refused to appear to the other actions. A single judgment by default was rendered against it for $135 in the other two cases.

Held that, if there was but one action, the amount in controversy exceeded the justice's jurisdiction.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McCollister, 66 Miss. 106, 5 South. 695.

[i] (Mo. 1860) Justices have no jurisdiction of actions for injuries to personal property where the damages claimed amount to more than $50.—Ahern v. Carroll, 30 Mo. 200; Webb v. Tweedie, Id. 488.

[j] (Mo. 1873) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of actions against railroads for killing and injuring live stock in their respective townships, irrespective of the value of the cattle or the amount of damages claimed.—Hudson v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co., 53 Mo. 525.

[k] (Mo. 1887) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in actions brought under Rev. St. 1879, § 809, giving double damages against a railroad corporation for stock killed by defendant's cars, though the damages claimed exceed $150.—Holloman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 92 Mo. 284, 5 S. W. 1.

[l] (N. Y. 1823) Section 13 of the act of April 5, 1813, for the recovery of debts of the value of $25, giving an action against a constable who neglects to return an execution, applies to all cases arising under the act of April 10, 1818, extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Gardner v. Jones, 20 Johns. 356.

[m] (N. C. 1880) An action for damages for converting a crop of greater value than $50 is not founded on an implied contract, but in tort, and hence is not within the cognizance of a justice's court.—Womble v. Leach, 83 N. C. 84.

[n] (Or. 1895) Laws 1892, p. 141, making counties liable for injuries sustained through defective county roads and bridges, and providing that compensatory damages for such injuries shall be recovered in the circuit court "or in a justice's court, if the amount of damages sued for be less than $1,000," does not limit the amount of damages recoverable for such injury to $1,000, but merely enlarges the jurisdiction of justices' courts in such cases to any sum less than $1,000.—McFerren v. Umatilla County, 27 Or. 311, 40 Pac. 1013.

[o] (Pa. 1809) Justices have not jurisdiction in trespass over $20.—Dunn v. French, 2 Bin. 173.

[p] (Pa. 1826) Under Act March 20, 1810, § 14, providing that justices of the peace shall take cognizance of controversies for any sum exceeding $100, if the parties voluntarily appear before him for that purpose, by entering judgment, and that such judgment shall be prosecuted to recovery as other judgments, where a justice of the peace has rendered judgment for the plaintiff for a sum exceeding $100, he has jurisdiction in an action against the constable for a false return to an execution issued in such suit, although the amount exceeds $100.—Delaney v. Brindle, 15 Serg. & R. 75.

[q] (Pa. 1885) Under Act June 6, 1879, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in an action on the case for damages, where the sum claimed exceeds $100.—Continental Brewing Co. v. Frame, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 379.

[r] (Vt. 1837) A justice has no jurisdiction of an action for "breaking and entering a close, and taking and carrying away a horse," where the ad damnum is laid at $100, an amount exceeding his statutory jurisdiction.—Prindle v. Cogswell, 9 Vt. 183.

[s] (Vt. 1874) In trespass qu. cl. before a justice of the peace, his jurisdiction is limited to $20.—Ohadwick v. Batchelder, 46 Vt. 724.

§ 152. —— Actions on bills and notes.

Determination of amount or value, see post, § 160.

[a] (Ky.) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of suits on notes where the principal due exceeds $50.—(1842) Hoskins v. Roberts, 41 Ky. (2 B. Mon.) 263; (1844) Florrance v. Goodin, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 111.

[b] (Neb.) Code Civ. Proc. § 1103, provides that "justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction in all cases where the sum in question does not exceed $200, except in cases limited in this title." Held, that the jurisdiction of justices in suits on promissory notes exceeding $100 in amount was not limited by section 1100, providing that the justice must indorse the judgment rendered by him on a bond or bill or note, etc., "provided the same shall in no wise exceed $100," since the later statute (section 1103) might be construed as enlarging the jurisdiction of the justice in such case to $200.—(1884) Bullock v. Jordan, 15 Neb. 665, 19 N. W. 508; (1884) Burton v. Manning, 15 Neb. 669, 19 N. W. 509; (1884) Bunker v. State Nat. Bank, 16 Neb. 234, 20 N. W. 256; (1885) Strang v. Krickbaum, 18 Neb. 365, 25 N. W. 364.

[c] (Tenn. 1829) Under Acts 1809, c. 54, restricting the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in cases of contracts for specified articles to $50, a justice has no jurisdiction of a suit on a note for more than $50, payable in current bank notes.—Bedford v. Hickman, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 165.

[d] (Tenn. 1832) A magistrate has no jurisdiction in a suit by the indorsee against the indorser of a bill single, where the amount due on the bill is more than $50.—Smith v. Wallace, 12 Tenn. (4 Yerg.) 572.

[e] (Tenn. 1835) Acts 1831, c. 59, gives jurisdiction to justices of the peace to render judgments on notes to the amount of $100, whether payable in money or property.—Hay v. Lea, 16 Tenn. (8 Yerg.) 89.

[f] (Tenn. 1841) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action against an indorser for any sum exceeding $50.—Crocket v. Wright, 21 Tenn. (2 Humph.) 322.

[g] (Tenn. 1858) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to render judgment in favor of the indorsee against the indorser of a promissory note above the sum of $50, unless demand and notice are expressly waived in the indorsement.—Mason v. Westmoreland, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 555.

[h] (Tenn. 1868) By section 4123 of the Code, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace extends to $500 in all cases of notes of hand, and in all other cases to $250.—White v. Buchanan, 46 Tenn. (6 Cold.) 32.

[i] (Tenn. 1879) Code, § 4123, gives to justices of the peace jurisdiction to $500 "upon all notes of hand indiscriminately, * * * and upon indorsements of negotiable notes when demand and notice are expressly waived in the indorsement"; and of "all unsettled accounts, obligations, contracts, or other evidences of debt, not embraced in the preceding section, when the amount claimed does not exceed $250." Held, that a justice has jurisdiction of an action on a note against an indorser, when demand and notice are not waived, to the extent of $250.—Redd v. Brown, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea) 615.

[j] (Tex. 1849) A note given for more than $100 cannot be sued before a justice, unless, by payments indorsed, the interest shall be discharged and enough of the principal paid to reduce the note to $100, or below.—Hampton v. Dean, 4 Tex. 455.

[k] (Wis. 1849) Where a suit is brought in a justice's court on a note exceeding $50, the justice has not jurisdiction under the statute.—McCormick v. Robinson, 1 Chand. 254, 2 Pin. 276.

§ 153. —— Actions to recover personal property.

See post, § 163.

Determination of amount or value, see post, § 163.

[a] (Ala. 1875) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action for the recovery of chattels in specie, where the value claimed exceeds $50.—Taylor v. Woods, 52 Ala. 474.

[b] (Ill. 1890) Where, on the trial of replevin before a justice of the peace, it for the first time appears that the property in question is worth more than $200, the limit of jurisdiction in actions of replevin, he has no power to award a writ of retorno.—Vogel v. People, 37 Ill. App. 388.

[c] (Ind. 1865) Under Act March 11, 1861, declaring that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction to try suits founded on contract or tort when the debt or damage claimed, or the value of the property sought to be recovered, does not exceed $100, and concurrent jurisdiction to the amount of $200, justices have jurisdiction in actions of replevin when the value of the property sought to be recovered, or the damages claimed, did not exceed $200.—Harrell v. Hammond's Adm'r, 25 Ind. 104.

[d] (Ind. 1872) Under section 10 of the act defining the powers and jurisdiction of justices of the peace, a justice has no jurisdiction over an action to recover possession of personal property, the value of which exceeds $200.—Caffrey v. Dudgeon, 38 Ind. 512, 10 Am. Rep. 126.

[e] (Ind. 1881) Under Act 1852, as amended in 1859, justices of the peace have jurisdiction in replevin suits where the property does not exceed in value $200.—Grubaugh v. Jones, 78 Ind. 350.

[f] (Ind. 1883) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 1433, in force since 1861, justices of the peace have jurisdiction in actions of replevin when the value of the property, or the damages claimed, does not exceed $200; and the jurisdiction is not governed by the provisions of Rev. St. § 1547, which are an earlier expression of the legislative will.—Fawkner v. Baden, 89 Ind. 587.

[g] (Kan. 1865) A justice of the peace, under Justices Act, § 131, has jurisdiction to try an action in replevin only when the property is of less value than $100.—Garrett v. Wood, 3 Kan. 231.

[h] (Kan. 1868) Under Comp. Laws, p. 640, § 137, giving justices jurisdiction of replevin where the value of the property is less than $100, and requiring them to certify such action to the district court where it exceeds $100, a justice has no jurisdiction where the property is worth $100.—Leslie v. Reber, 4 Kan. 315.

[i] (Minn. 1871) In an action of replevin in a justice's court the defendant may, if the facts warrant, plead in bar to the jurisdiction of the court that the property is of more than $100 in value.—Hecklin v. Ess, 16 Minn. 51 (Gil. 38).

[j] (Miss. 1873) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction only where the amount in controversy does not exceed $150. Therefore, where A. brought suit in the justice's court to recover a mule from B., and the justice gave judgment for the plaintiff for $150, and defendant appealed to the circuit court, and, on the trial there, the proof showed that the mule was worth $200, the circuit court dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction in the justice's court. Held, that the circuit court ruled correctly.—Askew v. Askew, 49 Miss. 301.

[k] (Miss. 1893) Under Const. 1890, § 171, providing that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall extend to causes in which the principal amount in controversy shall not exceed $200, a justice has jurisdiction in replevin where the property claimed is valued at $175 independently of any statute on the subject.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Brookhaven Mach. Co., 71 Miss. 663, 16 South. 252.

[l] (Mo. 1860) Justices have jurisdiction over actions for the recovery of specific personal property where its value does not exceed $50.—Butler v. Ivie, 30 Mo. 478.

[m] (Mo. 1889) Under Rev. St. § 2895, providing that in replevin "the value of the property, as set forth in the statement and affidavit, shall fix the jurisdiction of the justice so far as the value is concerned," when the value of the property and damages for its detention, as fixed by the statement and affidavit, is $245, the justice has jurisdiction, under Rev. St. § 2881, which provides that the justice shall have jurisdiction when the value of the property and damages for detention do not exceed in the aggregate $250.—Gottschalk v. Klinger, 33 Mo. App. 410.

[n] (Mo. 1895) Under Wag. St. p. 808, § 8, giving justices jurisdiction of actions for recovery of specific personal property not exceeding in value $100 alleged to be wrongfully retained, and damages for injuries thereto, or for taking and detention thereof, not exceeding $25, a justice has no jurisdiction of a suit to recover a horse alleged to be worth $75, and for $50 for damages for detention.—Godman v. Gordon, 61 Mo. App. 685.

[o] (N. C. 1886) Code, § 887, denies to justices jurisdiction of civil actions not founded on contract where the value of the property in controversy does not exceed $50. Held, that there is no jurisdiction of a claim and delivery case where the property exceeds $50 in value.—Noville v. Dew, 94 N. C. 43.

[p] (Ohio, 1895) Where, in replevin before a justice of the peace, the property is assessed at over $100, the justice has no jurisdiction to try the case.—Burlinson v. Roe, 4 Ohio Dec. 47, 1 Cleve. Law Rec. 61.

[q] (R. I. 1876) Where goods replevied exceeded $50 in value, justice courts had no jurisdiction in replevin prior to Gen. St. c. 224, § 12.—Howe Mach. Co. v. York, 11 R. I. 388.

[r] (Wis. 1875) Rev. St. c. 120, § 5, having given justice's courts jurisdiction of various classes of actions therein enumerated and defined, including actions to recover personal property wherein the value of the property claimed should not exceed $100, and section 132 having provided for an action in such courts to recover possession of personal property not exceeding $100 in value, with damages for its unjust caption or detention, and the practice in such actions being regulated by the sections immediately following, a subsequent act amending section 5 by substituting "$200" for the sum previously named extends by necessary implication to section 132, and confers jurisdiction of the action therein described, where the value of the property involved does not exceed $200.—Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216.

§ 154. —— Actions and proceedings to recover possession of realty.

Determination of amount or value, see post, § 158 [a].

[a] (Cal. 1856) The limitation of jurisdiction of justices in civil cases to actions where amount in dispute does not exceed $200 does not apply to actions in forcible entry.—Hart v. Moon, 6 Cal. 161.

[b] (Cal. 1862) In forcible detainer before a justice of the peace, under Forcible Entry and Detainer Act, § 13, providing that the justice shall proceed to hear, try, and determine, and section 12, providing that damages shall be for rents, profits, waste, and injury during the detainer, the amount recoverable does not affect the jurisdiction of the justice.—Howard v. Valentine, 20 Cal. 282.

[c] (Ill. 1892) In an action of forcible entry and detainer by a landlord against his tenant, a justice has jurisdiction, without regard to the amount of rent reserved in the lease; the right to possession being alone in question.—Hannigan v. Mossler, 44 Ill. App. 117.

[d] (Ind. 1844) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace, under the act of 1838, concerning tenants holding over, is not limited as to the amount of damages.—Ricketts v. Ash, 7 Blackf. 274.

[e] (Ind. 1864) In actions for forcible entry and detainer, the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is special, and unlimited as to amount.—Sturgeon v. Hitchens, 22 Ind. 107.

[f] (La. 1830) A justice has jurisdiction forcibly to remove a tenant remaining in a house, after due notice, whatever the value of the property or the improvements claimed by him.—Walker v. Vanwinkle, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 560.

[g] (La. 1842) Article 2683, Civ. Code, authorizes justices out of the city of New Orleans to expel tenants, whatever the value of the lease.—Kennedy v. Downey, 2 Rob. 284.

[h] (Mo. 1875) In actions of forcible entry and detainer, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is not limited, in the matter of damages, to $300.—Silvey v. Summer, 61 Mo. 253.

[i] (Mo. 1876) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to dispossess a tenant covers all cases of rent in arrear without reference to the amount claimed, though the additional power to render judgment for the sum due from the tenant is limited by the general law regulating the justice's jurisdiction in suits for the recovery of money.—January v. Stephenson, 2 Mo. App. 266.

[j] (Pa. 1879) The act of 1810, restricting the jurisdiction of justices to demands of $100, etc., does not apply to the summary process for obtaining possession of leased property under the landlord and tenant acts.—Graver v. Fehr, 89 Pa. 460.

[k] (Tex. 1858) The action of forcible entry and detainer being for the possession of land, and depending on the right of possession, and not on the ultimate superiority of title, the fact that the value of the land is greater than $100 cannot oust the justice's court of its jurisdiction to try the case.—Smith v. Ryan, 20 Tex. 661.

§ 155. —— Proceedings to recover rent.

Determination of amount or value, see post, § 164.

[a] (Ga. 1854) By the act to point out the mode for the collection of rents, a justice of the peace has power to issue a distress warrant for a sum exceeding $30.—Holland v. Brown, 15 Ga. 113.

[b] (Ind. 1843) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, under the act regulating distress for rent, is not limited to any amount.—Ezra v. Manlove, 6 Blackf. 454.

[c] (Pa. 1883) Under the act of 1879, extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to claims not exceeding $300, a justice has jurisdiction of an action for rent to that amount.—Reckless v. Charnley, 2 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 10.

[d] (Pa. 1888) The act of July 7, 1879, enlarging the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to $300, does not give a justice jurisdiction of an action for rent exceeding $100.—Fielbach v. Fielbach, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 517.

[e] (Pa. 1891) Act March 22, 1814, confers jurisdiction in case of rent upon justices of the peace to the extent of $100, which is enlarged to $300 by Act May 29, 1879.—Beatty v. Knoxville Land Imp. Co., 139 Pa. 358, 21 Atl. 74.

§ 156. —— Attachment and garnishment.

See post, § 165.

Action on forthcoming bond as incidental to attachment suit, see post, § 189 [c].

Interplea by third persons, see post, § 189 [d, e, k, l].

[a] (Ark. 1867) By the constitution justices have jurisdiction, concurrently with the circuit courts, of proceedings by attachment, where the sum demanded exceeds $100 and does not exceed $200.—Rogers v. Glascock, 25 Ark. 24.

[b] (Ga. 1842) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a case in which the plaintiff in attachment swears to a debt due by the defendant exceeding $30.—Mahone v. McDonald, Ga. Dec. 154, pt. 1.

[c] (Ga. 1858) Act March 5, 1856, enlarging the jurisdiction of justices' courts to demands not exceeding $50, includes demands sued for by attachment as much as demands sued for by ordinary process.—Barrett v. Black, 25 Ga. 151.

[d] (N. J. 1881) Act March 12, 1879, entitled "An act to increase the jurisdiction of justices of the peace," which gives them jurisdiction in suits where the debt, balance, or other matter in dispute does not exceed, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $200, applies only to their jurisdiction under the act constituting courts for the trial of small causes (Revision, p. 538). Their jurisdiction to issue attachments is conferred by section 62 of the attachment act (Revision, p. 53), and is limited by that section to actions in which the debt does not exceed $100.—Wright v. Moran, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 49.

[e] (N. Y. 1835) In a proceeding by attachment, under the act to abolish imprisonment, etc., a justice cannot render judgment for a demand exceeding $50.—Comfort v. Gillespie, 13 Wend. 404.

[f] (N. Y. 1844) An attachment issued by a justice of the peace for any sum over $100 is void.—Mattison v. Bancus, Hill & D. Supp. 321.

[g] (Pa. 1878) Act May 8, 1874 (P. L. 123), provides that a justice of the peace may issue an attachment for a claim against a nonresident not exceeding $100. Act July 7, 1879 (P. L. 194, § 1), provides that justices shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of common pleas in all actions arising on contract, where the sum demanded does not exceed $300. Held, that a justice may issue an attachment against nonresidents where the claim does not exceed $300.—Bumgardner v. Morris, 25 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 355.

[h] (Pa. 1884) Act May 29, 1879, enlarging the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to include cases where the sum demanded does not exceed $300, embraces attachment proceedings under the act of 1842, concerning fraudulent debtors as well as ordinary actions begun by summons. Such proceedings are not excepted expressly or by implication.—Jacoby v. Shafer, 105 Pa. 610.

[i] (Pa. 1886) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to the extent of $300 in cases of attachment execution.—Kuhn v. Warren Sav. Bank, 11 Atl. 440.

[j] (Pa. 1890) Act July 7, 1879 (Purd. Dig. p. 979), which confers on justices of the peace "concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of common pleas of all actions arising from contract, * * * where the sum demanded does not exceed $300," does not enlarge the jurisdiction which justices have under Act May 8, 1874 (Purd. Dig. p. 991), to issue an attachment against a nonresident debtor on a claim not exceeding $100.—Fair v. Hamlin (Com. Pl.) 0 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 8.

[k] (Pa. 1894) A justice of the peace, under Act July 7, 1879, has jurisdiction to issue attachments against nonresidents in claims amounting to $300 or less.—Enfield v. Squires Hardware Co. (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 498, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 349, 24 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 368.

[l] (S. C. 1821) In cases of domestic attachment, a magistrate's jurisdiction extends to $20.—Roberts v. Brown, 1 McCord, 498.

[m] (Tenn. 1853) By Acts 1852, c. 157, § 2, jurisdiction by attachment to the extent of $500 is expressly given to justices of the peace.—Apperson v. Looney, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 664.

[n] (Tenn. 1866) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in cases of attachment returnable before themselves in all actions arising out of tort, is limited to $100. Held, that section 4 of the schedule to the amended constitution does not extend their jurisdiction in attachment cases.—Stewart v. Vaughn, 43 Tenn. (3 Cold.) 22.

(N. Y. 1878) Brady v. Smith, 1 City Ct. R. 175.

[b] (Ill. 1841) In an action before a justice of the peace, the statement of claim by the plaintiff indorsed on the warrant, and entered in the docket, concludes him as to the amount.—Dowling v. Stewart, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 193.

[c] (Ill. 1845) Where the statute gave jurisdiction to a justice in cases not exceeding $20, and provided that, on appeal, the appellate court should give judgment according to the rights of the parties, "unless it shall appear from the evidence that the justice had no jurisdiction," etc., and an action was brought before a justice in which the declaration concluded "to the damage of the plaintiff not exceeding $100," but on the evidence the juries returned verdicts for less than $20, it was held that the justice had jurisdiction, and that the judgment should not be arrested.—Rogers v. Blanchard, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 335.

[d] (Ill. 1853) The jurisdiction of a justice does not depend on the amount of the claim filed. The real amount due is the true test, and that is to be ascertained from the evidence.—Clark v. Whitbeck, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 393.

[e] (Ind. 1881) Though a complaint prays for an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, if it clearly appears from the bill of particulars that only an amount within his jurisdiction can be recovered, he may take jurisdiction of the suit.—Second Nat. Bank v. Hutton, 81 Ind. 101.

[f] (Ind. 1894) The amount claimed in the complaint, and not the amount appearing by the bill of particulars to be due, controls the question of the justice's jurisdiction.—Elgin v. Mathis, 9 Ind. App. 277, 36 N. E. 650; Decker v. Graves, 10 Ind. App. 25, 37 N. E. 550.

[g] (Iowa, 1874) The test of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is the amount claimed.—Galley v. Tama County, 40 Iowa, 49.

[h] (Iowa, 1878) A petition, in an action before a justice, claiming $100, confers jurisdiction; and the fact that the notice states that unless defendants appear judgment will be rendered for the whole amount of the claim is immaterial.—Moran v. Murphy, 49 Iowa, 68.

[i, j] (Iowa, 1884) Where, by stipulation, a justice had jurisdiction in a suit to the extent of $300, and the judgment claimed by plaintiffs did not exceed that sum, jurisdiction attached, and could not be ousted by an error of the justice in taxing the fees so as to make the aggregate exceed $300.—Reed v. Shum, 63 Iowa, 378, 19 N. W. 254.

[k] (Iowa, 1894) Where the amount in controversy is shown by the pleadings to be only $100, the fact that judgment for a larger sum is inadvertently asked will not deprive a justice of jurisdiction.—Redfield v. Stocker, 91 Iowa, 383, 59 N. W. 270.

[l] (Ky. 1860) The new Code of Practice has left unchanged the old rule which fixed the amount in controversy, in actions before justices of the peace, at the sum demanded in the warrant; and if plaintiff, in his statement of facts filed with the justice, states any other sum, the statement will be disregarded as surplusage.—Burbage v. Squires, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 77.

[m] (Me. 1857) Whether an action should have been brought before a justice of the peace may ordinarily be determined by the amount of the judgment rendered by the justice.—Lawrence v. Ford, 44 Me. 427.

[n] (Miss. 1883) A plaintiff's honest mistake as to the value of the property in controversy will not exclude the suit from a justice's jurisdiction.—Ross v. Natchez, J. & C. R. Co., 61 Miss. 12.

[o] (Mo. 1880) Where two causes of action are originally united in one complaint, or where, under the statute, two suits against the same defendant are consolidated by the justice, if jurisdiction as to one of the causes of action is conferred without regard to the amount involved, and the amount claimed in the other does not exceed the jurisdiction of the justice in actions of that class, the amount involved in the cause of action of which the justice has jurisdiction, without regard to value and by reason of the nature of the injury, cannot be added to the amount claimed in the cause of action wherein the jurisdiction depends upon the amount involved, in order to oust the jurisdiction of the justice.—Fenton v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co., 72 Mo. 259.

[p] (Mo. 1888) Where the statement in an action in a justice's court contains two counts, each stating the same cause of action in somewhat different phraseology, and each concluding with a prayer for $100 damages, an objection that the damages sought to be recovered are $200, and thus the suit was one beyond the justice's jurisdiction, is without merit.—Colvin v. Sutherland, 32 Mo. App. 77.

[q] (N. J. 1790) Where the sum in dispute does not exceed £12, the justice has jurisdiction, whatever may be the amount of the accounts.—South v. Hall, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 29.

[r] (N. J. 1808) An affidavit that the plaintiff owes the defendant a sum beyond jurisdiction of the justice is not a ground to stay proceedings, since it would make the jurisdiction of the justice depend on the defendant's pleasure.—Montgomery v. Snowhill, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 361.

[s] (N. Y. 1812) If the plaintiff in proceedings before a justice of the peace states his demand at an amount above the sum within the jurisdiction of the justice, but claims damages in such sum, the justice has jurisdiction.—Bowditch v. Salisbury, 9 Johns. 866.

[t, u] (N. Y. 1849) The plaintiff in an action in a justice's court claimed in his declaration "$100 and over," but took judgment for less than that sum. Held, that there was no error; the words "and over" being void for uncertainty.—Rockwell v. Perine, 5 Barb. 573.

[v] (Vt. 1838) Where there are several counts in a declaration before a justice which may be for the same subject-matter, the aggregate of all which exceeds $100, if the ad damnum is but $100, the justice has jurisdiction.—Bell v. Mason, 10 Vt. 509.

[w] (Vt. 1864) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is determined by the amount of the claim due at the time of the commencement of the action, and not by the amount due when judgment is rendered.—McDaniels v. Johnson, 36 Vt. 687.

[x] (Vt. 1874) Where, in a suit before a justice, the ad damnum was within the limit of his jurisdiction as to one count in the declaration, but in excess of his jurisdiction as to another count, he could take no jurisdiction of the cause.—Chadwick v. Batchelder, 46 Vt. 724.

[y] (Wis. 1856) A justice has jurisdiction where the "damages claimed do not exceed $100," though the sums given in the declaration are more.—Keegan v. Singleton, 5 Wis. 115.

§ 158. Particular actions and proceedings.

Actions on judgments, see post, § 418 [u, v].
Requisite amount or value, see ante, §§ 150–156.

[a] (Cal. 1891) Under Const. art. 6, § 11, which provides that justices' courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the superior courts, in actions of forcible entry and detainer, where the rental value of the property detained does not exceed $25 per month, and the whole amount of damages claimed does not exceed $200, the allegation of a complaint that the rental value does not exceed $25 is not conclusive of the justice's jurisdiction, but the same must be determined by the evidence.—Ballerino v. Bigelow, 90 Cal. 500, 27 Pac. 372.

[b] (Ga. 1894) An action against an express company on a contract for the carriage of $1,100 in money, the breach alleged being a failure to deliver $100 of that sum, and the amount sued for being $100, with interest thereon, is a civil action, arising ex contractu, and within the jurisdiction of a justice's court.—Southern Exp. Co. v. Hilton, 94 Ga. 450, 20 S. E. 126.

[c] (Ind. 1857) In an action in a justice's court, the complaint set out a note for $93, a claim for goods sold amounting to $100, and a claim for work and labor amounting to $100. The damages demanded in conclusion were $100. Held, that the sum thus laid in the conclusion constituted the claim, and determined the jurisdiction.—Inhabitants of Congressional Tp. No. 11 v. Weir, 9 Ind. 224.

[d] (La. 1874) Under Act March 21, 1874, § 12, declaring that the mayor of the town of Homer shall receive a salary of $500 a year with no other fees or emoluments of office, and also authorizing said mayor to act as justice of the peace, a suit under the act relating to intrusion into office cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of the district court by alleging that, as justice of the peace, the mayor is entitled to fees, and thus showing that the amount in dispute, i. e., his salary and fees as justice, would exceed $500, and be without a justice's jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Cormick v. Richardson, 26 La. Ann. 631.

[e] (La. 1886) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, limited by Const. art. 125, to suits where the matter in dispute exceeds $100, does not embrace a suit against a town where the damages claimed for alleged illegal charges are laid at $90, although the petition also alleges that the town authorities "will daily enforce the illegal ordinance," etc., and prays an injunction.—Clerc v. Boudreaux, 38 La. Ann. 732.

Richardson, 9 Mass. 329.

[h] (Mo. 1847) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action of covenant where the damages claimed do not exceed $90, though from the covenant itself it appears that more might be claimed.—Joyce v. Moore, 10 Mo. 271.

[i] (N. J. 1808) In an action of debt, though the state of demand is a half cent over $100, the justice is not thereby ousted of jurisdiction where the plaintiff demands but $100.—Darnel v. Sheldon, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 113.

[j] (Tex. 1892) Where, in a statutory proceeding to try the right of property, the affidavit of claim alleged its value to be $169, and the body of the bond approved by the constable making the levy gave the same valuation, the statement of value in the affidavit, being within the jurisdictional amount of a justice, was sufficient to show that the justice had jurisdiction; and it was immaterial that the constable failed to indorse on the bond the value of the goods, as required by Rev. St. art. 4826.—Leman v. Borden, 83 Tex. 620, 19 S. W. 160.

[k] (Tex. 1894) Where, in a suit before a justice, one count of the complaint seeks partition of property worth $2,000, plaintiff's share being $145, and a second count alleges conversion of property worth $45, a special exception to the first count, as being beyond the jurisdiction of the justice ($200), is properly sustained.—Schulz v. Schulz (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 107.

[l] (Vt. 1834) Where a contract for services for a period of one year at $180 is broken at the end of six months, and an action is instituted for $100 for services and damages, the amount as claimed by plaintiff determines the jurisdiction of the justice court, and not the total amount under the contract.—Hair v. (W. Va. 1889) Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 33 W. Va. 88, 10 S. E. 26.

[b] (Cal. 1882) Plaintiff sought by his complaint to recover damages for the conversion of personal property of the value of $250, and also alleged $50 further damage. He prayed judgment for $299. Held, that the action was within the jurisdiction of the justice's court; that court having jurisdiction of controversies in which the amount claimed was less than $300.—Sanborn v. Contra Costa County Superior Court, 60 Cal. 425.

[c] (N. Y. 1882) An action for conversion of property whose value exceeds the limit of the justice's jurisdiction is within his jurisdiction, if the damages are laid at a sum within it.—De Camp v. Miller, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 617.

[d] (Pa. 1874) In an action ex delicto founded on negligence, the sum laid in the declaration is the criterion of the justice's jurisdiction.—McKinney v. Allen, 31 Leg. Int. 373.

§ 160. —— Actions on bills and notes.

Requisite amount or value, see ante, § 152.

[a] (Ind. 1857) Though in a suit by the assignee against the assignor of a promissory note the amount of the note is prima facie the price paid for the assignment, the assignor may show as the measure of damage the actual value which he received from his immediate assignee, and therefore, though the amount of the note in a suit before a justice of the peace exceeds the limit of his jurisdiction, if the ad damnum is within his jurisdiction, the action will not be dismissed, since the court cannot know until after the close of the evidence whether the claim is cognizable by him.—Bozell v. Hauser, 9 Ind. 522.

[b] (Md. 1878) In an action on a note, the jurisdiction of a justice depends on the amount proven to be due, and not the amount appearing on the face of the instrument.—Orme v. Williams, 47 Md. 552.

[c] (Mo. 1855) An action by the assignee on a note against the assignor, on failure to obtain payment from the maker, will not be regarded as an action on the note for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to a justice, when the amount sought to be recovered exceeds his jurisdiction in other actions of assumpsit.—Stone v. Corbett, 20 Mo. 350.

[d] (Vt. 1853) The final jurisdiction of a justice is determined by the amount of a note, without reference to the amount due.—Washington County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 26 Vt. 77.

[e] (Vt. 1863) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in an action brought by an insurance company to recover assessments on a premium note whose face is for over $100, even though the assessments sued for are less than that sum.—Windham County Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Pierce, 36 Vt. 16.

[f] (Wis. 1865) A justice of the peace, under our statute, cannot render judgment for $100 or less on a note for a larger amount, unless it has been "reduced by credits or payments indorsed thereon to an amount not exceeding $100."—Rev. St. c. 120, § 6.—Felt v. Felt, 19 Wis. 193.

[g] (Wis. 1874) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on a note purporting to be for more than $100, notwithstanding a defense that the note was "not given for the sum of $100," nor for any other sum, but was a forgery.—Butler v. Wagner, 35 Wis. 54.

§ 161. —— Actions on bonds.

Action on forthcoming bond as incidental to attachment suit, see post, § 189 [c].

[a] In a suit on a bond before a justice of the peace, the amount claimed, and not the penalty of the bond, determines the jurisdiction.

[b] (Ill. 1862) On other than official bonds a justice of the peace has not jurisdiction, where the penalty exceeds $100.—Snowhook v. Dodge, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 63.

[c] (Ind. 1843) In debt before a justice of the peace, a delivery bond in the penalty of $208 was filed as the cause of action, the value of the property to be delivered not being stated, and there being no statement limiting the demand to $100 or less. Held, that the justice had not jurisdiction.—Beard v. Kinney, 6 Blackf. 425.

[d] (Mich. 1880) In an action in a justice's court on a bond in the penal sum of $2,000, given to secure such indebtedness as might grow due from the principal to the obligee, the breaches assigned were failure to pay two judgments amounting to $300, the declaration being in form debt on bond. Held not assumpsit for the amount of the two judgments, $300, but debt on the bond, and being for an amount in excess of a justice's jurisdiction could not be sued in that court.—Bishop v. Freeman, 42 Mich. 533, 4 N. W. 290.

[e] (Mich. 1884) Since, under How. Ann. St. § 6003, the judgment for the penalty in an administrator's bond stands as security for further breaches, no action lies in the justice's court on a bond the penalty of which is greater than the jurisdictional limit therein.—Probate Judge v. Dean, 52 Mich. 387, 18 N. W. 118.

[f] (Mich. 1884) How. Ann. St. § 6820, conferring on justices jurisdiction of suits on bonds, however large the penalty, if the amount involved by the breach does not exceed $150, applies though the bond is not a money bond.—Gray v. Stafford, 52 Mich. 497, 18 N. W. 235.

[g] (N. J. 1889) Revision, p. 537, confers jurisdiction upon justices of the peace in certain cases when the matter in dispute does not exceed, exclusive of costs, $100, and further provides that whenever the amount really due on any bond shall not exceed, exclusive of costs, the sum of $100, at the time of the institution of suit, then such sum shall be recoverable without regard to the penalty expressed in the contract. Held that, under act approved March 12, 1879, increasing the amount in dispute cognizable before a justice to $200, an action is maintainable before a justice on a bond whereon the amount due is less than $200, though the penalty named exceeds $200.—Anderson v. Rose, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 471, 17 Atl. 956.

[h] (N. C. 1881) Two parties having agreed upon an interchange of lands executed a bond in $400 for title and possession and providing that in default of performance the disappointed party might sue the other and recover $200 and all damages. Held, that the instrument must be construed as a bond for the penal sum of $400, to be void upon certain conditions, and securing $200 and damages in case of nonperformance, and that as the holder had no option but to take judgment for the full penalty to be discharged upon the payment of $200 and damages, the sum demanded was beyond the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Morris v. Saunders, 85 N. C. 138.

[i] (Pa. 1835) Under Act March 29, 1824, § 8, providing that constable bonds shall be in a penalty of not less than $500 and not exceeding $3,000, and that they may be proceeded on as other official bonds, justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of actions on such bonds, as the penalty exceeds their jurisdiction.—Blue v. Commonwealth, 4 Watts, 215.

[j] (Wis. 1886) Where the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is limited to causes involving no more than $200, action may be had before a justice of the peace for installments, amounting to less than $200, on a bond, though the penalty of the bond is more than $200, and it is secured by a mortgage on real estate.—Buechel v. Buechel, 65 Wis. 532, 27 N. W. 318.

§ 162. —— Actions on accounts.

[a] (Mo. 1870) In an action before a justice of the peace, the account sued on and the specific items claimed, and not the amount named in the prayer for judgment, must be taken as showing the "debt or balance" sued for.—Stephenson v. Porter, 45 Mo. 358.

[b] (N. Y. 1857) Under Code, § 54, to oust a justice of his jurisdiction of a case pending before him, the excess of the sum of both accounts over $400 must be proved to his satisfaction by legal evidence.—Parker v. Eaton, 25 Barb. 122.

[c] (N. Y. 1868) Code, § 54, takes from a justice of the peace jurisdiction of causes where the total amount of the accounts of both parties exceeds $400. Subdivison 4 of the section invests the justice with power of adjudicating the question of jurisdiction, and fixes the time when he may decide it as "when the facts shall be proved to his satisfaction." Held, that until the trial has commenced, and the proof has been entered upon, the justice has jurisdiction to act.—Glackin v. Zeller, 52 Barb. 147.

[d] (N. Y. 1883) Under Code, § 2863, providing that a justice has no jurisdiction in a matter of account where the sum total of accounts of both parties exceeds $400, to oust a justice of jurisdiction the items of account must have arisen in a course of mutual dealing, and in themselves constitute an affirmative claim in the defendant's favor, and which have not been specifically appropriated as payments in reduction of plaintiff's claim.—Steele v. MacDonald, 4 Civ. Proc. R. 227.

[e] (N. Y. 1894) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2863, providing that a justice cannot take cognizance of civil actions where, in a matter of mutual accounts, the sum total of the accounts of both parties "proved to the satisfaction of the justice" exceeds $400, the justice is not ousted of jurisdiction because the amount claimed in the pleadings exceeds that sum, but it must be made to appear to him by the proofs that the amount exceeds his jurisdiction.—Bartlett v. Mudgett, 75 Hun, 292, 27 N. Y. Supp. 56, 31 Abb. N. C. 259, 23 Civ. Proc. R. 288.

[f] (Vt.) A charge on plaintiff's book which makes the debit side exceed the amount of a justice's jurisdiction, but which was made by mistake and which is corrected, does not deprive the justice of jurisdiction.—(1832) Catlin v. Al-ken, 5 Vt. 177; (1845) Sheldon v. Flynn, 17 Vt. 238.

[g] (Vt. 1837) In an action of book account, where the "debit side of the plaintiff's book" is made to exceed $100 by the entry of items which the party has no right to charge on book, and which he did not insist on as a ground of recovery, the jurisdiction of the justice is not affected by such entry.—Scott v. Sampson, 9 Vt. 339.

[h] (Vt. 1853) In an action on book account the debit side of the plaintiff's book affords the only rule by which the jurisdiction of the justice is to be determined, and it is not affected by the defendant's book, nor by any entries therein.—Beach v. Boynton, 26 Vt. 105.

[i] (Vt. 1860) If, in an action of book account appealed from the judgment of a justice, the debit side of the plaintiff's book and of his account as presented before the auditor is less than $100, the jurisdiction of the court is not defeated by such a mode of stating the account by the auditor as swells the debit side of the plaintiff's account to more than that sum.—Mason v. Hutchins, 32 Vt. 780.

§ 163. —— Proceedings to recover personal property.

Requisite amount or value, see ante, § 153.

[a] (Ala. 1873) Where the complaint in replevin before a justice does not allege the value of the property, the jurisdiction of the justice on appeal from the judgment is not determined by the amount of recovery before him.—House v. Lassiter, 49 Ala. 307.

[b] (Ala. 1879) By Code, § 757, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of "actions brought to recover specific property where the value does not exceed $50;" and where the value of the property exceeds $50, the plaintiff cannot, by averring in his complaint that the value is less than that sum, confer on the justice jurisdiction of the action.—Carter v. Alford, 64 Ala. 236.

[c] (Cal. 1880) Under Code, § 114, subd. 5, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction where the value of the property is less than $300, a justice has jurisdiction of a suit to recover specific personal property in which the value of the property is $299, and $50 is claimed as damages for the detention; the value being the test of jurisdiction.—Astell v. Phillippi, 55 Cal. 265.

[d] (Cal. 1886) The jurisdiction of justices' courts being limited to actions in which the sum sought to be recovered is not over $300, such a court cannot take jurisdiction of an action in which specific personal property is sought to be recovered, the value of which is fixed at $319; the judgment prayed being for the possession thereof, or for the sum of $299, in case possession cannot be had.—Shealor v. Amador County Superior Court, 70 Cal. 564, 11 Pac. 653.

[e] (Ind.) Rev. St. 1838, c. 364, § 18, provides that nothing contained therein shall be so construed as to give to a justice jurisdiction in any action for the recovery of damages for any trespass done against the property of a person, nor in any case founded on tort, where the damages demanded shall exceed $20; nor in any action of replevin where the value of the property claimed shall exceed $50. Held, that justices of the peace have jurisdiction in replevin where the value of the property sued for does not exceed $50, though the damages claimed for the detention exceeds $20.—(1837) Perkins v. Smith, 4 Blackf. 299; (1843) Middleton v. Harris, 6 Blackf. 397.

[f] (Ind. 1852) In replevin in a justice's court, the value of the property claimed by the declaration, and not by the affidavit, decides as to the jurisdiction of the court.—Markin v. Jornigan, 3 Ind. 548.

[g] (Kan. 1865) Under Justices Act, § 131, giving a justice jurisdiction in replevin only when the property is of less value than $100, the justice has jurisdiction to render a judgment in the alternative that the defendant have a return of the property and the damages found for its detention, if return can be had, though the aggregate value of the property and the damages for detention amount to more than $100, if each is less.—Garrett v. Wood, 3 Kan. 231.

[h] (Kan. 1868) A justice's jurisdiction in replevin is determined by the actual, not the appraised, value of the property.—Leslie v. Reber, 4 Kan. 315.

[i] (Mass. 1864) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in replevin depends on the actual value of the goods at the time of suing out the writ, and it is erroneous to dismiss such action for the reason that the goods replevined have been appraised at over $20.—Davenport v. Burke, 91 Mass. (9 Allen) 116.

[j] (Mich. 1873) Where the affidavit, writ, and declaration in replevin set forth the value of the property as less than $100, and the defendant has pleaded the general issue, the fact that the plaintiff's own testimony shows the value to be more than $100 does not oust the justice of jurisdiction; the question of jurisdiction, as depending on the value, if not closed by the affidavit for the writ, was not open under the general issue.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich 170.

[k] (Mich. 1881) A justice of the peace may render a judgment in replevin for more than $100, where the writ was sworn out for less.—Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 Mich. 565, 8 N. W. 556.

[l] (Mich. 1886) Where the affidavit in replevin before a justice makes out a case within his jurisdiction, the justice cannot dismiss the suit when it appears that the value of the property is $500, but may enter judgment for that amount.—Chilson v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 60 Mich. 235, 26 N. W. 859.

[m] (Mich. 1889) In replevin before a justice, a plea which prays judgment of the writ for want of jurisdiction, "for that the value of the property described in said writ exceeds in value $100," is properly stricken out. The jurisdiction does not depend on value in fact as it may ultimately appear, but the value alleged.—Addison v. Burt, 74 Mich. 730, 42 N. W. 278.

[n] (Minn. 1877) Where, in replevin, the complaint shows that the value of the property and the damages claimed, taken together, exceed the sum of $100, the limit prescribed by Const. art. 6, § 8, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Stevens v. Gunz, 23 Minn. 520.

[o] (Miss. 1877) The statute precluding a justice of the peace from exercising jurisdiction in replevin of property, the value of which exceeds $150, does not preclude a justice from exercising jurisdiction where the value of the property is less than $150, though its value when added to the damages assessed for the wrongful taking aggregate more than $150.—Higgins v. Deloach, 54 Miss. 498.

[p] (Mo. 1860) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action to recover specific personal property worth more than $50, though it is alleged in the plaintiff's writ not to be worth more than that amount.—Butler v. Ivie, 30 Mo. 478.

[q] (Mo. 1867) The law conferring jurisdiction on justices of the peace for the recovery of specific personal property limits the value of the property to an amount not exceeding $50, and when it is manifest that the value exceeds that amount, the justice is ousted of his jurisdiction, and the suit should be dismissed; but if the value of the property at the time of suit brought does not exceed $50, its enhancement in value at the time of the trial of the appeal is no cause for a dismissal of the suit.—Scott v. Russell, 39 Mo. 407.

[r] (Mo. 1890) Rev. St. § 6182, provides, with respect to the action of replevin, that "the value of the property, as set forth in the statement and affidavit, shall fix the jurisdiction of the justice, so far as the value is concerned." Held, that the testimony of the plaintiff at the trial, showing the value of the property to be greater than the jurisdictional amount, cannot affect the jurisdiction of the justice, which is absolutely fixed by the plaintiff's statement.—Malone v. Hopkins, 40 Mo. App. 331.

[s] (Neb. 1882) Code Civ. Proc. § 1069 (as in force July, 1881), provided that a justice of the peace should not have jurisdiction in replevin wherever the appraised value of the property (for the purposes of a bond) should exceed $200. Replevin bond was executed in the penalty of $110, but verdict was rendered in the action of replevin for $107, the value of the possession. The property had been returned to plaintiff, and the justice rendered judgment for costs only. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction; the appraised value of the property being $55, one-half of the penalty of the undertaking as required by section 1037 of the Code.—Lawrence v. Curtis, 13 Neb. 515, 14 N. W. 483.

[t] (Ohio, 1860) Under the statute precluding a justice from exercising jurisdiction "where the sum or matter in dispute exceeds" $100, it requires an addition of the value of replevied property to the damages claimed, in determining a justice's jurisdiction in replevin.—Dempsey v. Hill, 3 Ohio Dec. 260.

[u] (Tenn. 1858) In replevin, the plaintiff may fix whatever value he pleases on the property, and so bring it within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, but he will be bound by his own valuation.—Gray v. Jones, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 542.

[v] (Wis. 1851) Gen. St. p. 335, § 5, relating to actions of replevin in justice courts, requires the officer to ascertain the value of the property by the oath of disinterested witnesses, and provides that if on the return of any writ it should appear that the value of the goods had been assessed by the jury to be of a greater value than the amount over which the justice had jurisdiction, then the justice should certify the case to the district court. Held, that the value which was to determine whether the justice has jurisdiction was that certified and returned by the officer, and not the value found by a jury on a trial before the justice.—Williams v. McDonal, 4 Chand. 65, 3 Pin. 331.

[w] (Wis. 1877) In an action of replevin, the judgment of the justice must always determine the value of the chattels.—Darling v. Conklin, 42 Wis. 478.

[x] (Wis. 1877) Where the affidavit on which a writ of replevin issues from a justice's court fails to state the value of the property, or states it over $200, the justice takes no jurisdiction, whatever the value may be in fact.—Darling v. Conklin, 42 Wis. 478.

[y] (Wis. 1877) Where the affidavit on which a writ of replevin issues from the justice's court states the value of the property under $200, the justice has jurisdiction to issue the writ and try the action, since his jurisdiction rests on the affidavit independently of the value of the chattels in fact until his judgment determines their value.—Darling v. Conklin, 42 Wis. 478.

§ 164. —— Proceedings to recover rent.

Requisite amount or value, see ante, § 155.

[a] (Tex. 1895) Under Sayles' Civ. St. tit. 58, which provides that when the oath and bond required therein are filed a justice of the peace shall issue a distress warrant on behalf of a landlord, and the officer shall seize the property of defendant, or so much thereof as shall satisfy the demand, and, if the amount in a controversy exceeds a certain amount, make return to the county court, the jurisdiction depends upon the amount of the demand, and not the value of the property levied on.—Yelser v. Taylor (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 84.

[b] (Tex. 1895) In an action to enforce a landlord's lien given by statute generally on the crops of the tenant, the amount claimed determines the jurisdiction of the justice court, and not the value of the crops attached.—Lawson v. Lynch, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 582, 29 S. W. 1128.

§ 165. —— Attachment and garnishment.

Interplea by third person, see post, § 189 [d, e, k, l].

Requisite amount or value, see ante, § 156.

[a] The jurisdiction of a justice in garnishee proceedings is governed by the amount of the creditor's claim, and not by the amount in the hands of the garnishee.

[d] (Ga. 1842) Where a garnishee answers, in a justice's court, that he is indebted to the defendant in a sum exceeding $30, the court cannot take jurisdiction of the case.—Mahone v. McDonald, Ga. Dec. 154, pt. 1.

[e] (Ga. 1857) An attachment in a justice's court against a garnishee may be levied on a debt exceeding $30.—Welch v. Alligood, 22 Ga. 618.

paragraph 47, § 6, which directs the constable to "summon as garnishees" all persons whom plaintiff may direct, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to enter judgment against a garnishee whose indebtedness to the principal debtor exceeds the $200 limit of justices' jurisdiction.—Pomeroy v. Rand, McNally & Co., 157 Ill. 176, 41 N. E. 636, reversing Rand v. Pomeroy (1894) 54 Ill. App. 522.

[g] (Kan. 1880) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in the trial of the truth of a garnishee's answer, without regard to the amount of the supposed liability of the garnishee.—Fitch v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co., 23 Kan. 366.

[h] (Vt. 1844) Under Rev. Hopkins, 16 Vt. 618.

[c] (Ala. 1853) When suit is instituted before a justice of the peace on a promissory note, the amount of which, with the legal interest thereon accruing up to the rendition of the judgment, exceeds $50, the justice has no jurisdiction to render judgment for $50 or less, unless the plaintiff enters a credit for the excess, or otherwise releases it before, or at the time of, the rendition of judgment.—Crabtree v. Cliatt, 22 Ala. 181.

[d] (Ala. 1895) Code, § 1778, requires holders of nonnegotiable paper, in order to charge the indorsers or assignor, to sue the maker in the first court to which suit can be brought after the transfer. If the amount does not exceed $100, suit must be brought within 30 days after it can be properly brought. Held that, where a note for $97 provided for an attorney's fee of 10 per cent. if suit was brought for its collection, the assignee could not have rightfully demanded more than $97 before the suit, and the amount in dispute was less than $100, and within the jurisdiction of a justice.—Davis v. Jones, 109 Ala. 418, 19 South. 841.

[e] (Ark. 1852) The principal and interest of a covenant for the payment of money constitute the "amount claimed" within the amendment to the constitution, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of covenants, and the act passed in pursuance therewith (Dig. c. 95, § 3), and if the principal and interest amount to more than $100, the covenant is not within the jurisdiction of the justice.—Howell v. Milligan, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 40.

[f] (Ark. 1860) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction, where the sum in controversy is $100 or less, excluding interest, whether fixed by law or by agreement.—Chatten v. Heffley, 21 Ark. 313.

[g] (Colo. 1882) Accrued interest on the principal must be included in determining whether the amount due exceeds the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Cramer v. McDowell, 6 Colo. 369.

[h] (Ga. 1882) A statute giving a justice jurisdiction "when the principal sum does not exceed $100," does not apply to an action on a note promising to pay $100, with interest at 7 per cent., and 5 per cent. for attorney's fees.—Baxter v. Bates, 69 Ga. 587; Johnson v. Stephens, Id. 756.

[i] (Ga. 1884) Where a suit was brought in a justice's court on a note by which it was agreed to pay a specified amount as principal, with interest thereon, and expenses incurred in collecting the same, and the amount named as principal together with the expenses of collection exceeded $100, exclusive of interest, the justice had no jurisdiction.—Hill v. Haas, 73 Ga. 122.

[j] (Ga. 1884) Where suits were brought in a justice's court, and the notes attached to the summons were each for $100, with interest, the costs of collection and 10 per cent. attorney's fees, the justice has no jurisdiction.—Bell v. Rich, 73 Ga. 240.

[k] (Ga. 1891) Where the face of a note, with the attorney's fee provided therein, is in excess of the amount of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, he is without jurisdiction, and a judgment rendered therein by him is void.—Beach v. Atkinson, 87 Ga. 288, 13 S. E. 591.

[l] (Ga. 1894) A justice has no jurisdiction of an action on a note for $90, providing for attorney's fees and interest, where it appears that the principal, with attorney's fees and interest, amounted to more than $100, before the action was brought.—Almand v. Almand, 95 Ga. 204, 22 S. E. 213.

[m] (Ga. 1895) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on a note for the principal thereof and attorney's fees therein agreed to be paid, where the aggregate amount of the principal and fees exceeds $100.—Ashworth v. Harper, 95 Ga. 660, 22 S. E. 670.

[n] (Ga. 1895) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an attachment for the recovery of only the principal of a note amounting to $100 or less, though the note provide for the payment of attorney's fees in the event of collection by suit, and though the aggregate amount of principal and attorney's fees would exceed $100.—Pickett v. Smith, 95 Ga. 757, 22 S. E. 669.

[o] (Ill. 1886) A justice of the peace issuing garnishee process at the instance of a judgment creditor has jurisdiction to render judgment in favor of the garnishing creditor against the garnishee, for more than $200, when the original judgment was for that amount, but, by reason of interest and costs, exceeds it.—Nesbitt v. Dickover, 22 Ill. App. 140.

[p] (Ind. 1884) September 13th judgment was confessed on a note purporting to be executed September 10th, payable one day after date, for $300, at 8 per cent. interest, but in reality executed on the day judgment was recovered. Held, that the amount demanded must be considered as $300, and that therefore the justice had jurisdiction.—Calloway v. Byram, 95 Ind. 423.

[pp] (Iowa, 1874) A justice of the peace has no authority to render judgment for $100, with accrued interest thereon and costs.—Galley v. Tama County, 40 Iowa, 49.

[q] (Iowa, 1875) A notice issued by a justice of the peace stated that plaintiff claimed $300 on a promissory note, "with 10 per cent. attorney's fees thereon, and jurisdiction given in said note to any justice of the peace." Held, that the phrase providing for attorneys' fees was simply descriptive, and did not ask for a judgment for that amount in addition to the amount of the claim stated, and that, accordingly, the notice gave the justice jurisdiction, under Code 1873, § 3508, to render the judgment.—Long v. Loughran, 41 Iowa, 543.

[qq] (Iowa, 1877) A justice may enforce by garnishment a judgment which was within his jurisdiction to render, the original demand being under $100, notwithstanding, by the addition of costs, the judgment as rendered was for upwards of $100.—Gillett v. Richards, 46 Iowa, 652.

[r] (Iowa, 1882) In determining the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to entertain an action on a note the attorneys' fees provided for in the note are to be treated as costs, and not as part of the amount in controversy.—Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59 Iowa, 606, 13 N. W. 745.

[rr] (Kan. 1890) Where the amount claimed in plaintiff's bill of particulars, principal and interest, exceeds $300, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, since Comp. Laws, c. 81, § 2, limits his jurisdiction in civil actions for the recovery of money to cases where the amount claimed does not exceed $300.—Ball v. Biggam, 43 Kan. 327, 23 Pac. 565.

[s] (Ky. 1846) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction, though, the interest on the principal debt and costs being added to the principal, the amount exceeds the sum to which his jurisdiction is limited.—Sweeny v. Lowe, 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 314.

[ss] (Me. 1866) Under St. c. 77, § 29, permitting the allowance of quarter costs only "when it shall appear, on rendition of the judgment, that the action should have originally been brought before a justice of the peace," the interest on a verdict between the time of its rendition and the entry of judgment cannot be considered in determining whether the action should have been brought before the justice.—Hervey v. Bangs, 53 Me. 514.

[t] (Minn.) Const. art. 6, § 8, providing that "no justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction of any civil cause where the amount in controversy shall exceed $100," means $100 exclusive of costs.—(1880) Watson v. Ward, 27 Minn. 29, 6 N. W. 407; (1882) Closen v. Allen, 29 Minn. 86, 12 N. W. 146.

[tt] (Miss. 1875) In computing the "amount in controversy," within Const. art. 6, § 23, which limits the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil matters to all "causes in which the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum of $150," interest, damages, and costs are to be excluded.—Jackson v. Whitfield, 51 Miss. 202.

[u] (N. C. 1870) The phrase "sum demanded," as used in a provision (Const. art. 4, § 33) giving justices jurisdiction of "actions founded on contracts wherein the sum demanded shall not exceed $200," means the principal alone. Interest is a mere legal incident, and depends on a simple calculation. If the principal is paid, no action lies for the interest.—Hedgecock v. Davis, 64 N. C. 650.

[uu] (Pa. 1867) An alderman has jurisdiction to hear and decide a sci. fa. to revive a judgment, though the interest has increased the claims beyond $100.—McGarry v. Douredoure, 6 Phila. 332.

[v] (S. C. 1810) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace does not exceed $20; therefore, where a justice gave judgment for a greater amount, the same was set aside as unconstitutional, though the excess was interest which had accrued after suit brought.—Melton v. Ellison's Adm'rs, 2 Brev. 399.

[vv] (S. D. 1892) Under Comp. Laws, §§ 4825, 6042, giving to justices' courts jurisdiction of actions on contract for the recovery of money "only where the sum claimed does not exceed $100," and to the district court exclusive jurisdiction in such actions "when the debt or sum claimed exceeds $100," interest demanded on the debt sued on is to be added to the debt to determine the justice's jurisdiction.—Plunkett v. Evans, 2 S. D. 434, 50 N. W. 961.

[w] (S. D. 1895) Where the amount of a note sued on and the amount of attorney's fees stipulated therein to be paid exceed $100 in the aggregate, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of the action, though the stipulation for attorney's fees is void under the statute.—Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co. v. Raymond, 7 S. D. 451, 64 N. W. 525.

[ww] (Tenn. 1836) Where the principal and interest of a sealed note exceeds $50, the want or failure of consideration cannot be inquired into in a suit before a magistrate; Acts 1817, c. 86, only gives jurisdiction to magistrates where the subject in controversy does not exceed $50.—Wharton v. Thompson, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 45.

[x] (Tex. 1877) Under the laws, by which suits for less than $200 are to be brought in the justices' and not in the district courts, if the principal of the debt sued for is less than $200, by ever so little, the suit must be brought in the justice's court. Interest is not taken into the account.—Clark v. Brown, 48 Tex. 212.

[xx] (Tex. 1884) Where a justice of the peace had jurisdiction of the original case, he may issue a writ of garnishment on the judgment, though the judgment with accrued interest renders the amount for which the garnishee is liable more than $200.—City of Austin v. Erwin, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 290.

[y] (Tex.) In an action on a promissory note, where plaintiff seeks to recover in addition to the amount 10 per cent. attorney's fees provided therein, the amount thereof must be considered, in determining the jurisdiction of the justice.—(1885) King v. Robinson, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 556; (1891) Waters v. Walker (App.) 17 S. W. 1085.

[yy] (Tex. 1894) A justice has jurisdiction of an action to cancel notes for an amount not exceeding his jurisdiction, though they provide for attorney's fees, in case of collection by legal proceedings, which would bring the amount above his jurisdiction, where the suit is brought before maturity of the notes.—Hilderbrand v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co., 8 Tex. Civ. App. 132, 27 S. W. 826.

[z] (Utah, 1895) Under Comp. Laws 1888, § 3020, limiting the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to cases in which the sum claimed is less than $300, a justice cannot include in his judgment interest on the sum claimed from the time suit was brought, if this makes the total amount of the judgment more than $300.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Marchant, 11 Utah, 68, 39 Pac. 483.

[zz] (Wash. 1894) Where a statute provides that a justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction in actions for the recovery of money where the amount "claimed" does not exceed $100 (2 Hill's Code, § 23), the interest due and claimed on the principal is part of the amount "claimed," within the meaning of the statute.—State v. King County Superior Court, 9 Wash. 369, 37 Pac. 489.

§ 167. Double damages.

[a] (Mich. 1887) A. sued before a justice of the peace for damages caused by negligently allowing a fire to spread to his land, and in one count claimed $100 damages, and in another count claimed $100, and alleged that, by force of How. Ann. St. c. 328, § 1, he was entitled to double damages. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict of $100 rendered, whereupon the justice entered a judgment for $200. Held that, though in actions of tort the justice's jurisdiction is limited to $100, the entry of such judgment was within the jurisdiction of the justice, as the added $100 was in the nature of a penalty, and added to the actual damages in the same manner as costs.—Rosevelt v. Hanold, 65 Mich. 414, 32 N. W. 443.

[b] (Mo. 1876) The statute (Wag. St. p. 809, § 3, cl. 5) giving justices of the peace concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court, in actions against railroads for killing stock, etc., confers jurisdiction on the former to give judgment for double the amount of damages, regardless of the amount, in the cases mentioned in the damage act.—Parish v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 63 Mo. 284.

[c] (Tenn. 1888) Under Code, § 4130, limiting the jurisdiction of justices in replevin to cases in which the property does not exceed $500 in value; and section 4133, providing that if the justice adjudge the property to belong to defendant, and plaintiff fails to deliver it up, the justice shall render judgment against plaintiff and his sureties for double its value,—a justice may render judgment against a plaintiff in replevin for the value of the property as established on the trial, in any amount not exceeding $1,000, where plaintiff, in his affidavit for the writ, has laid the value at $500, and defendant claims judgment only for $905, the established actual value.—Godsey v. Weatherford, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 670, 8 S. W. 385.

§ 168. Several or split claims exceeding in aggregate limit of jurisdiction.

Compelling consolidation of actions, see post, § 230.

Constitutionality of law authorizing splitting of claims, see ante, § 72 [l].

Presumption of entirety, see post, § 216 [g].

Prohibition against suit on split claim, see "Prohibition."

[a] An entire contract cannot be separated, so as to maintain several suits, and to bring them within the jurisdiction of a magistrate.—(Del. 1836) Messick v. Dawson, 2 Har. 50; (Ga. 1822) Ex parte Gale, R. M. Charlt. 214; (N. Y. 1819) Willard v. Sperry, 16 Johns. 121.

[b] (Ala. 1844) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action to recover a sum not over $50. An action to recover the first installment of a note for $193.50, payable in four installments, at 6, 12, 18, and 24 months, the remaining installments not being due, is within his jurisdiction.—Winston v. Majors, 6 Ala. 659.

[c] (Ark. 1854) By the act of December 21, 1846, passed in pursuance to the third amendment to the constitution, covenant may be maintained before justices of the peace for the recovery of one or more installments of interest due in a bond, when the amount does not exceed $100 at any one suit.—Walker v. Byrd, 15 Ark. 33.

[d] (Ark. 1866) The plaintiff filed with a justice of the peace three separate bills of items arising on an open account against the defendant, the first for $80, the second and third for $75 each. Held, that the three bills of items constituted but one account between the parties, and that the aggregate amount of the demand determined the jurisdiction of the court.—Gregory v. Williams, 24 Ark. 177.

[e] (Ga. 1842) Several suits cannot be commenced by the same plaintiff, against the same defendant, at the same term, in a justice's court, on several causes of action, which in the aggregate exceed the jurisdiction of the court.—Planters' & Mechanics' Bank v. Chipley, Ga. Dec. 50, pt. 1.

[f] (Ga. 1842) Parties cannot, with a view to giving a justice jurisdiction of a debt exceeding $30, divide it into smaller sums, though payable on different days.—Planters' & Mechanics' Bank v. Chipley, Ga. Dec. 50, pt. 1.

[g] (Ga. 1883) Where there is a running account, and the balance is carried forward yearly, there is but one account, which cannot be divided so as to give jurisdiction to a justice's court.—Floyd v. Cox, 72 Ga. 147.

[h] (Ind. 1839) The declaration in a justice's court contained three counts, each claiming $50, and had no conclusion limiting the amount claimed. Held, that the suit should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Swift v. Woods, 5 Blackf. 97.

[i] (Ind. 1840) A justice of the peace has not jurisdiction of an action, if the amount of the several sums claimed by several counts exceed the sum of which the justice has jurisdiction.—Wetherell v. Inhabitants of Congressional Tp., 5 Blackf. 357.

[j] (Ind. 1852) Where a justice has no jurisdiction, if the value of property exceeds $50, and a declaration in replevin contains two counts, and in each count the property is alleged to be of the value of $40, the justice has no jurisdiction.—Markin v. Jornigan, 3 Ind. 548.

[k] (Ind. 1853) In a suit before a justice of the peace, where the jurisdiction was limited to $50, each count of the declaration had its own conclusion, and in each damages were laid at $50. Held, that the plaintiff demanded $100 damages, and the suit must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Bainum v. Small, 4 Ind. 49.

[l] (Ind. 1854) In suits before a justice of the peace, under 2 Rev. St. 1852, § 122, which authorizes justices to take jurisdiction when the amount claimed by any one creditor does not exceed $100, it was held that the same creditor might file three separate claims, each amounting to $100, with a separate affidavit and bond, and each claim would constitute a single, independent suit, and that the plaintiff would be, as to each claim, a separate creditor.—State v. King, 5 Ind. 439.

[m] (La. 1860) Where several parties entered into an agreement by which one of them leased to the other a certain lot of ground, upon which were two houses, at a rent of $125 per month, and upon the death of the lessor, the two houses becoming the property of two distinct persons, one of them sought to eject the lessee by suit before a justice of the peace, it was held that such a lease could not be divided for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the justice's court.—State ex rel. Rutherford v. Third Justice of Peace, 15 La. Ann. 660.

[n] (Miss. 1827) One cannot divide an open account, though containing various items, so as to give jurisdiction to a justice.—Grayson v. Williams, 1 Miss. (Walk.) 298, 12 Am. Dec. 568.

[o] (Miss. 1875) The rule that plaintiff cannot split up or divide his claim so as to bring several suits at the same time within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace does not apply to suits instituted at different times, and on different claims, as where one is an open account and the other an acceptance of a bill of exchange.—Ash v. Lee, 51 Miss. 101.

[p] (Mo. 1874) An action against a railroad company for killing a horse, and also for injuring a harness, cannot be brought under two different subdivisions of the justices' act (Wag. St. p. 808), for the purpose of obtaining a judgment beyond the jurisdictional limit of $50.—Dillard v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 58 Mo. 69.

[q] (Mo. 1892) Plaintiff, having a merchandise account against defendant for $600, divided it into three amounts, each within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and on each of the amounts instituted a separate action in a justice's court, at the same time. Held, that the justice acquired no jurisdiction in either action.—Robbins v. Conley, 47 Mo. App. 502.

[qq] (N. C. 1873) A party has a right to "split up" his account, so as to include a certain number of items under one warrant, and a certain number under another, and so on, so as to bring the several warrants under the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Caldwell v. Beatty, 69 N. C. 365.

[r] (N. C. 1874) A creditor, whose account consists of several items, either for goods sold, or labor done at different times, each of which is for less than $200, although the aggregate of the account exceeds $200, may sue before a justice for any number of such items not exceeding $200. If, however, the debt is an entire one, consisting of but one item, and exceeds $200, it cannot be divided to give the justice jurisdiction.—Boyle v. Robbins, 71 N. C. 130.

[s] (N. C. 1877) Defendant went into plaintiff's store, and purchased goods, going through the building from floor to floor continuously, making his selections and giving his orders, not leaving the store until he had completed his purchase, nor until he had received the bill for the whole purchase. Held, that the account, being for a bill of goods purchased on one day, is to be taken as one entire transaction, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention; and as the dealing was continuous, and nothing appears on the face of it or in the account rendered indicating that either party intended that each item should constitute a separate transaction, the creditor cannot split it into several demands and actions, so as to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction.—Magruder v. Randolph, 77 N. C. 79.

[t] (N. C. 1886) It is the aggregate of the sums demanded which is "the sum demanded," and which fixes the justice's jurisdiction.—Moore v. Nowell, 94 N. C. 265.

[u] (N. C. 1891) Where plaintiffs' contract provided for furnishing defendant with certain lumber, and on a performance of their contract the amount due them exceeded the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, they could not split the amount so as to bring three actions within such jurisdiction, though the lumber had been delivered by installments.—McPhail v. Johnson, 109 N. C. 571, 13 S. E. 799.

[v] (N. C. 1894) One who has an account for articles sold, the different items of which constitute separate transactions, and the entire amount of which exceeds the jurisdiction of a justice, may split it up so as to bring his actions within the jurisdictional amount, the account not having become an account stated, by reason of being presented as a whole, and not objected to within a reasonable time.—Simpson v. Elwood, 114 N. C. 528, 19 S. E. 598.

[w] (Pa. 1852) A claim cannot be divided so as to bring the amount within the jurisdiction of the alderman.—Walton v. Vanhorn, 1 Phila. 377.

[ww] (Pa. 1873) Fifty-four actions were brought before a magistrate on separate orders drawn from goods, by the overseers of the poor, on the plaintiff. Held, that as it appeared by the evidence that the several orders did not constitute separate contracts, the entire demand against the township constituted but one debt, and the plaintiff could not split it up into sums of less than $100, in order to bring the amount within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Moneghan v. Conyngham Tp., 2 Luz. Leg. Reg. 145.

[x] (Tenn. 1851) A party will not be permitted to split his cause of action, and bring several suits, in order to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction; but if two accounts are regarded by the parties as separate and distinct, and the justice of the one be acknowledged after judgment upon the other, separate actions may be maintained, and costs recovered.—Johnson v. Pirtle, 31 Tenn. (1 Swan) 262.

[xx] (Vt. 1861) Where one had an account for articles sold to another, who soon after the purchase became associated in partnership with a third person, and the creditor, acting in good faith, severed his account and brought two suits before a justice of the peace, one against the purchaser of the articles alone, and the other against the latter and his new copartner jointly, the severance of the account, which was altogether more than $100, bringing the amount claimed in each suit within the jurisdiction of the justice, it was held that the plaintiff was justified in severing the account, although, as it resulted, the purchaser's partner was not in fact liable to the plaintiff, who obtained judgment only against the purchaser; and that the justice, therefore, had jurisdiction of both cases.—Reed v. Stockwell, 34 Vt. 206.

[y] (Vt. 1894) Where several items of personal property are pledged for one loan and no reason exists for a separate demand of each article, the contract of pledge is entire and cannot be split up to give jurisdiction to a justice of the peace.—Bullard v. Thorpe, 66 Vt. 599, 30 Atl. 36, 25 L. R. A. 605, 44 Am. St. Rep. 867.

[yy] (Va. 1883) A. owed B. $126 and gave him three bonds aggregating the amount, each being for less than $50. After all became due, B. sued them before a justice. Held, that the justice had no jurisdiction.—James v. Stokes, 77 Va. 225.

[z] (W. Va. 1889) A claim for an amount in excess of a justice's jurisdiction due to two or more persons jointly on a single contract cannot be so divided and apportioned among the creditors without the debtor's consent that the amount assigned to each is within the justice's jurisdiction.—Bodley v. Archibald, 33 W. Va. 229, 10 S. E. 392.

[zz] (W. Va. 1895) A claim for a specific amount of damages for an injury to plaintiff's business cannot be split so as to bring the amount within the jurisdiction of the justice, and then be sued on in several suits.—Hale v. Town of Weston, 40 W. Va. 313, 21 S. E. 742.

§ 169. —— Several bills or notes.

[a] (U. S. 1825) If an entire debt of $250 be settled by the debtor's giving his five several promissory notes for $50 each, payable at different times, each note is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace; and if all the notes have become payable, he may issue his five separate warrants, and render judgment against the debtor in each case.—Moore v. Hough, Fed. Cas. No. 9,766 [2 Cranch, C. C. 561].

[b] (U. S. 1847) The holder of several notes made by the same party may elect to bring separate action in a justice's court on each note, and the fact that the amount of all the notes combined exceeds the jurisdiction of the justice will not oust the justice of jurisdiction.—Thecker v. Milburn, Fed. Cas. No. 13,876 [Hayw. & H. 271].

[c] (Ala. 1861) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in suits upon several notes, each under $50, into which a debt exceeding said sum has been divided.—Herrin v. Buckelew, 37 Ala. 585.

[d] (Ala. 1861) Under the statutes the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace extends to causes in which the amount in controversy does not exceed $50; but held, in this case, that it included several notes of $50, each made by the same party, on the same day, in payment of a single debt, amounting to the aggregate of their several sums.—Herrin v. Buckelew, 37 Ala. 585.

[e] (Ark. 1849) One suit may be brought before a justice of the peace on several notes where neither of the notes is for a greater sum than $100, though the aggregate sum of all the notes may exceed that amount.—Collins v. Woodruff, 9 Ark. (4 Eng.) 463.

[f] (Ga. 1884) Where one has a material man's lien for an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of a justice, he cannot, by taking small notes and suing in the justice's court, give that court jurisdiction.—Bell v. Rich, 73 Ga. 240.

[g] (Ind. 1880) Where 20 separate suits are brought on the same day before a justice of the peace on as many notes, the amount of each being such as to give him jurisdiction over each suit, he is not deprived of jurisdiction over all of the suits because the aggregate sum of the amounts involved in them exceeds the amount of his jurisdiction.—Luce v. Shoff, 70 Ind. 152.

[h] (Miss. 1853) Where defendant executed three notes to plaintiff, and the amount of the same was beyond the jurisdiction of a justice, plaintiff cannot bring an action on one note before one justice, and on the other two notes before a second justice, the notes having been given in the same transaction.—Scofield v. Pensons, 26 Miss. 402.

[i] (Miss. 1874) Where M. sued out two attachments against S., on two promissory notes, one for $112.70, and the other for $139.28, making the sum of $251.98, held, that the plaintiff could not divide his claim so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Morris v. Shryock, 50 Miss. 590.

[j] (Miss. 1890) The holder of two bills of exchange accepted at different times, maturing at different times, and each within the jurisdictional amount of a justice of the peace, may maintain separate actions on each in justice's court, though together they exceed the justice's jurisdiction, and though, at his election, he might have sued on both in one action in the circuit court.—Drysdale v. Biloxi Canning Co., 67 Miss. 534, 7 South. 541.

[k] (N. C. 1841) The division of a note of upward of $100 into several notes of less amount, by the act of the parties, so that judgments may be taken on them before a justice of the peace, is not in either fraud or evasion of the statute prescribing the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Fortescue v. Spencer, 24 N. C. 68.

[l] (Pa. 1852) The holder of two notes made by the same person and exceeding in the aggregate a justice's jurisdiction cannot bring a separate action on each for the purpose of getting within the justice's jurisdiction.—Walton v. Vanhorn, 1 Phila. 377.

[m] (Va. 1816) A., owing B. $80, gave him four single bills for $20 each, payable at different times. After the last bill became due, B. obtained a warrant from a justice of the peace to recover the several sums. Held, that the justice had no jurisdiction in the case, as all the notes constituted but one debt.—Hutson v. Lowry, 2 Va. Cas. 42.

[n] (Wis. 1872) Where a statute gave to justices of the peace jurisdiction of "actions arising out of contract, express or implied, wherein the debt or balance due, or damages claimed, should not exceed $200"; and also of "actions on a note, bill, bond, or other instrument in writing given for the payment of money or other valuable article, for any amount exceeding $100, which had been reduced, by credits or payments indorsed thereon, to an amount not exceeding $100,"—held that a justice had jurisdiction where the suit was on two notes, the amount due on each of which was less than $100, though the aggregate exceeded that sum.—Howard v. Mansfield, 30 Wis. 75.

§ 170. Remission or abandonment of part of claim.

Remission of part of set-off, see post, § 175.

[a] A creditor may relinquish a part of his claim so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.

[f] (Ala. 1850) On the trial of a motion before a justice of the peace against a constable for failing to return an execution, the plaintiff, if his demand is over $50, may remit an amount sufficient to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the justice.—Henderson v. Plumb, 18 Ala. 74.

[g] (Ark. 1847) Where a plaintiff sues for a sum within the jurisdiction of a justice, he is not ousted of his jurisdiction because the evidence shows that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in a sum beyond his jurisdiction.—Lafferty v. Day, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 258.

[h] (Ill. 1828) Where it appears from the account of the plaintiff that he claims less than $100 before a justice of the peace, the justice is not ousted of his jurisdiction, though a witness should prove that the plaintiff was entitled to more than $100. The plaintiff's own claim must determine the jurisdiction.—Ellis v. Snider, 1 Ill. (Breese) 336.

[i] (Ind. 1861) A justice cannot give himself jurisdiction by rendering judgment for a part only of a demand the whole of which exceeds his jurisdiction.—Thompson v. Kerr, 17 Ind. 288.

[j] (Ind. 1865) Where an account on which an action is brought before a justice of the peace is footed up as amounting to $200, the court has jurisdiction, though a correct footing would make more than said sum.—Mitchell v. Smith, 24 Ind. 252.

[k] (Kan. 1863) A plaintiff, by bringing his suit before a justice of the peace, where he cannot recover more than $100, exclusive of interest and costs, must be understood to have limited his claim to that amount.—Wooster v. McKinley, 1 Kan. 317.

[l] (Mo. 1852) Though the amount of an open account on which action is brought before a justice of the peace exceed his jurisdiction, yet, if the amount claimed on trial be for a sum within the jurisdiction, the justice's judgment for the latter amount is valid.—Best v. Best, 16 Mo. 530.

[m] (Neb. 1888) In replevin before a justice of the peace, the property was appraised at less than $200, but on failure of plaintiff to give an undertaking the property was returned to defendant. The action proceeded "as one for damages only" before the justice, who found the value of plaintiff's interest to be $260; and, on plaintiff's remitting $60, judgment was rendered for $200. Held, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1039, providing that, when the value of the property exceeds $200, the justice shall certify the proceeding to the district court, that the justice had jurisdiction to try the case, and to allow the remission, and to render judgment for the balance.—Hill v. Wilkinson, 25 Neb. 103, 41 N. W. 134.

[n] (N. J. 1791) Where the plaintiff claims a sum within the jurisdiction of the justice, it is immaterial what the amount of charges may be. —Johnson v. Colbaugh, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 55.

[o] (N. J. 1844) Where, by the express terms of a contract, a certain sum is to be paid on a future day, the creditor cannot, without the debtor's consent, relinquish any part of the judgment to give the justice jurisdiction.—Howell v. Burnett, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 265.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) Where, in an action before a justice, the amount due from defendant exceeds the jurisdiction of the justice, but plaintiff elects to take judgment for a sum within his jurisdiction, no objection can be made to such jurisdiction.—Farley v. Gibbs, 51 Hun, 643, 4 N. Y. Supp. 353.

[q] (N. C. 1856) Where divers dealings are included in an account, the aggregate of which exceeds $60, the plaintiff can omit, or give credit for, any items he may choose, so as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of a single magistrate. If there is but one item of dealing which exceeds $60, this cannot be done.—Waldo v. Jolly, 49 N. C. 173.

[r] (N. C. 1882) A justice having no jurisdiction of an action on a bond where the penalty exceeds $200, plaintiff cannot remit any part of the amount of such penalty to give jurisdiction. —Coggins v. Harrell, 86 N. C. 317.

[s] (N. C. 1887) It is only when the principal sum demanded exceeds $200 that the plaintiff must remit the excess of principal above that sum in order to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction of the action, as prescribed and allowed by Code, § 835; and when the plaintiff in his summons claims only $200, and recovers less than that sum, it is not necessary to enter a remittitur, though the memorandum of indebtedness exhibited in evidence by plaintiff shows a greater sum than $200 to be due.—Brantley v. Finch, 97 N. C. 91, 1 S. E. 535.

[t] (Tenn. 1817) One may sustain his claim, in an action before a justice of the peace, by evidence which proves his whole claim to be larger than is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, if he claims only a sum within that jurisdiction.—Boyd v. Hensley, 6 Tenn. (5 Hayw.) 258.

[u] (Tenn. 1843) In actions of indebitatus assumpsit and debt on executed contracts, the plaintiff may relinquish part of his claim, with a view to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction, and recover judgment for the balance.—Carraway v. Burton, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 108.

dorse on it, as payment, a sum which will reduce the amount apparently due on the note to a sum less than $100, and do this without any payment being in fact made by the defendant, and for the mere purpose of bringing the note within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and then commence an action on the note before a justice, the action will not, on appeal, be dismissed by the county court, for want of jurisdiction in the justice.—Herren v. Campbell, 19 Vt. 23.

[y] (Vt. 1853) The plaintiff may reduce his claim within the final jurisdiction of a justice, by his writ, declaration, and exhibit or specification, by reducing the price of charges, or by abandoning some.—Warren v. Newfane, 25 Vt. 250.

[yy] (W. Va. 1895) A party claiming unliquidated damages may reduce his claim, so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Wells v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 41 W. Va. 131, 23 S. E. 527.

[z] (Wis. 1844) When an action is brought on an account exceeding in amount the jurisdiction of the justice, and the recovery also exceeds that sum, plaintiff cannot, by remitting the exceess, bring himself within the justice's jurisdiction.—Barker v. Baxter, 1 Pin. 407.

[zz] (Wis. 1865) An indorsement by a justice on the back of a note for $600, that plaintiff offered to release all but $100, is not a credit or payment within Rev. St. c. 120, § 6, giving a justice jurisdiction of an action on a note for more than $100 reduced, by credits or payments indorsed thereon, to an amount not exceeding $100.—Felt v. Felt, 19 Wis. 193.

§ 171. —— Remission of interest.

[a] Plaintiff may relinquish interest on his demand so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the justice.

[b] (Ala. 1873) Plaintiff, in attachment issued by and returnable before a justice of the peace, may, where the sum claimed, with interest, exceeds $100, release the excess, even as against defendant's objection, so as to bring the case within the justice's jurisdiction.—Solomon v. Ross, 49 Ala. 198.

[c] (Ill. 1839) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action on a note for $100, if the plaintiff does not claim interest.—Simpson v. Updegraff, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 594.

[d] (Ill. 1845) A justice may have jurisdiction of an action on a promissory note, the principal of which does not exceed the limit of his jurisdiction, if the plaintiff does not claim interest.—Bates v. Bulkley, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 389.

[e] (Md. 1887) To bring a claim within the pecuniary jurisdiction of a justice, the plaintiff may waive interest on an open account.—Kirk v. Grant, 67 Md. 418, 10 Atl. 230.

[f] (N. J. 1827) While the legal rate of interest is, in the absence of contract, limited to 6 per cent., yet a creditor may, in order to bring his demand within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, demand a less rate.—Griffith v. Clute, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 264.

[g] (N. J. 1844) Where there is a running account between the parties in which the law would allow interest, it is optional with the creditor to waive interest, in order to keep the amount within the jurisdiction of a justice, or to demand it.—Howell v. Burnett, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 265.

[h] (N. J. 1844) Where, by the express terms of the contract, a certain sum is to be paid on a future day, with interest, or with legal interest, or with interest at a given rate, the contract is one and entire, and the creditor cannot, without the consent of the debtor, relinquish any part of his interest for the purpose of giving the justice jurisdiction.—Howell v. Burnett, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 265.

[i] (N. J. 1844) But where the contract is for the payment of a sum of money on a future day, without naming the interest, the creditor may bring his action for the principal, and relinquish any claim he may lawfully have to damages, for the detention of the debt or the violation of the contract.—Howell v. Burnett, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 265.

[j] (S. C. 1810) Where, at the rendition of judgment by a justice of the peace on a note, the interest accrued since the commencement of the suit makes the sum due exceed the jurisdiction of the justice, plaintiff may remit the excess, and a judgment for the balance may be awarded.—Melton v. Ellison's Adm'rs, 2 Brev. 399.

[k] (S. C. 1837) Where $20 for a month's rent had been due but a few days, plaintiff could treat the contract as without interest, and sue before a magistrate.—Varney v. Vosch, 3 Hill, 237.

[l] (Tex. 1853) Whether a party can remit the interest due on a note, for the purpose of applying payments on the note in reduction of the principal, so as to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction, quære. He certainly cannot after the case has been removed to the district court by certiorari.—Hearn v. Cutberth, 10 Tex. 216.

[m] (Vt. 1834) In an action in the justice's court on account, the justice does not lose jurisdiction merely because had plaintiff included interest on his demand, the amount would have exceeded $100.—Gibson v. Sumner, 6 Vt. 163.

[n] (Vt. 1835) The jurisdiction of a justice is determined by inspections of the debit side of plaintiff's book and is not affected by the fact that plaintiff might have charged interest which, if charged, would have made the account exceed $100.—Stone v. Winslow, 7 Vt. 338.

[o] (Vt. 1845) Where a judgment has been rendered for a sum less than $100, but with the interest due on it exceeding $100, the judgment creditor may waive his claim for interest, and sustain an action before a justice of the peace for the amount of the judgment alone.—Parkhurst v. Spalding, 17 Vt. 527.

[p] (Vt. 1856) In an action on an account it appeared that the plaintiff was entitled to interest thereon, which, if charged, would take the account out of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. Held, that it was optional with the plaintiff whether he should release the claim for interest in order to bring the action within the jurisdiction of a justice.—Paige v. Morgan, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 565.

[f] (Ill. 1826) Though the accounts of the plaintiff may originally have amounted to more than $100, yet, if the defendant admits a balance to be due of less than $100, and promises to pay it, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction.—Maurer v. Derrick, 1 Ill. (Breese) 197.

[g] (Ill. 1858) A. and B. owe each other, but A. owes B. more than B. owes A. Held, that B. might give credit to A. by indorsement on his note to an amount, even if not due, sufficient to bring his note within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Korsoski v. Foster, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 32.

[h] (Ky. 1823) Where the law limits the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to £5, they have no jurisdiction of contracts exceeding that amount, though payments have been made reducing the sum, unless such payments were indorsed.—Farrow v. Summers, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 460.

[i] (N. J. 1818) Under statutes authorizing justices to try causes where "the debt, balance, or matter in dispute" is not over $100, where plaintiff demands more than $100, but defendant files an offset reducing it below that sum, the justice may try; but if the plaintiff's demand be proved, and the defendant's not, he cannot render judgment.—Eacrit v. Keen, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 203.

[j] (N. Y. 1853) On the sale of an unfinished house $500 of the purchase money was left in the vendee's hands to complete the building, if not finished by a certain time, and all but a small balance was so expended. Held, that the action for the balance was within the jurisdiction of a justice court, as it was not a case of mutual accounts.—Brady v. Durbrow, 2 E. D. Smith, 78.

[k] (N. Y. 1885) Plaintiff claimed that he had deposited many thousands of dollars with defendant, and had drawn all but $25, which he claimed, defendant contending that he had drawn this also. Held, that the amount in controversy was $25, and within a justice's jurisdiction. The statute depriving him of jurisdiction "where, in a matter of account, the sum total of the accounts" exceeds $400, did not apply.—Brisbane v. Batavia Bank, 36 Hun, 17.

[l] (N. Y. 1888) Where, by agreement, the bills of particulars filed with the complaint and answer were admitted in evidence, subject to the right to cross-examine, and were considered as sworn to, and plaintiff had annexed to his bill of $281.89 a statement of credits, admitting certain charges, amounting to $92.06, in defendant's bill, for work done, etc., when his entire claim was for $221.11, such charges cannot be regarded as payments on plaintiff's claim so as to reduce the aggregate of the accounts below $400, and thus give the justice jurisdiction.—Milbanks v. Coonley, 49 Hun, 610, 2 N. Y. Supp. 167.

[m] (N. Y. 1888) The fact that defendant, in a complaint in a former action against plaintiff to recover the amount now adduced as a set-off, avers that defendant has paid in offset, as set forth in the bill of items, a certain amount, is not ground for treating that amount as a payment, and thus reducing the aggregate of defendant's items.—Milbanks v. Coonley, 49 Hun, 610, 2 N. Y. Supp. 167.

[n] (N. Y. 1888) Nor can such statement of credits be treated as an allowance of defendant's claim to that extent; it appearing, on a comparison of items, that the prices differ where the charges are identical.—Milbanks v. Coonley, 49 Hun, 610, 2 N. Y. Supp. 167.

[o] (N. Y. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 2863, provides that a justice of the peace shall not have jurisdiction of a civil action "where, in a matter of account, the sum total of the accounts of both parties, proved to the satisfaction of the justice, exceeds $400." Plaintiff and defendant presented accounts whereof the total was largely in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, but which were reduced by the justice's findings on either side to amounts the total of which was within the jurisdictional limit. Held, that the existence of credits on either side was a question of fact for the justice, and that having found them to exist, and to reduce the claim of each party to sums whereof the total was less than $400, he had properly taken jurisdiction of the case.—Shaw v. Roberts, 60 Hun, 580, 14 N. Y. Supp. 579.

[p] (N. C. 1846) A liquidated account, within the statute giving jurisdiction to magistrates of liquidated accounts over $60 and under $100, is one in which the balance is stated, and leaving no necessity for extrinsic evidence.—Midgett v. Watson, 29 N. C. 143.

[q] (N. C. 1858) To antedate a credit, so as to produce the effect of reducing the amount due on a note to a sum within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, is an evasion of the law, and judgment should be rendered for the defendant.—Ramsour v. Barrett, 50 N. C. 409.

[r] (N. C. 1883) A person having an account against another for work and labor done may give the other credit for such sums as may be justly due him on account; and if the balance be thereby reduced below $60, he may warrant for it before a single magistrate, and the other party can neither object to the jurisdiction, nor insist upon having his account of the same items allowed as a set-off to the plaintiff's demand.—McRae v. McRae, 20 N. C. 81.

[s] (Pa. 1841) One who has a demand exceeding $100 cannot give jurisdiction to a justice of the peace by allowing a set-off or counter demand of the defendant so as to reduce his claim below $100.—Stroh v. Uhrich, 1 Watts & S. 57.

[t] (Pa. 1877) Defendant owed plaintiff $108. Plaintiff had received from defendant some wood and coal for which he had agreed to allow what was right. He allowed $8.50, thus reducing the amount claimed to $99.50, for which he brought suit before a justice whose jurisdiction did not exceed $100. Held, that plaintiff had no right to make the set-off, that being a privilege of defendant, and that the justice was without jurisdiction.—James v. Frick, 12 Phila. 443.

[u] (Pa.) A claim in excess of the amount over which a justice of the peace has jurisdiction cannot be reduced to a jurisdictional amount by separate and distinct items of set-off constituting an independent debt; but such reduction must be by direct payments on the claim, or by dealings that amount to actual payments.—(1884) O'Connell v. Bank, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 296; (1895) Wanner v. Zimmerman (Com. Pl.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 29.

[v] (Pa. 1884) Where a claim is above the limit of the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, plaintiff cannot offset a book account acknowledged by himself and so bring the claim within the justice's jurisdiction.—Lucas Coal Co. v. Struble, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 300.

[vv] (Tex. 1853) Payments on a note will be applied, in the absence of any agreement, to the extinguishment of the interest, and not in reduction of the principal so as to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction.—Hearn v. Cutberth, 10 Tex. 216.

[w] (Vt. 1834) An action on a book account was commenced before a justice when the debit side of plaintiff's account exceeded $100. Before trial the parties adjusted the account and certified to the justice the amount due, which was less than $100. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction to render judgment for such amount.—Fargo v. Remington, 6 Vt. 131.

[ww] (Vt. 1834) Where plaintiff declares for an indebtedness of $100 in each of several counts, but in his specification shows a balance of charges and credits of a less sum, a justice has jurisdiction. The amount of the original debt, if reduced by payments, does not affect the jurisdiction.—Stevens v. Howe, 6 Vt. 572.

[x] (Vt. 1843) Where the balance found due on settlement is charged in a new account, a justice has jurisdiction of the action on it, if such balance together with the other items of charge does not exceed $100, notwithstanding the items embraced in the former settlement together with the new items would exceed that amount.—Spear v. Peck, 15 Vt. 566.

[xx] (Vt. 1856) Property delivered for trial, and charged on a book, but returned before suit brought, may afterwards be charged off to prevent a justice, before whom the cause is tried, from being ousted of his jurisdiction.—Paige v. Morgan, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 565.

[y] (Wis. 1880) In an action in a justice's court on an account, it is only where the items of account between the parties, which still remain open to investigation, exceed in the aggregate $500, that the cause is beyond the justice's jurisdiction; and, where one item of the litigated account is a balance alleged to be due on a previous settlement, and the settlement is not denied, or is found to have been made in fact, the amount included in the prior account does not affect the question of jurisdiction.—Cuer v. Ross, 49 Wis. 652, 6 N. W. 331.

[yy] (Wis. 1880) Where the present owners of logs on which a lien is claimed for the amount of a debt are joined as defendants with the debtor, though they may not be bound by the settlement between plaintiff and the debtor, yet, in the absence of any attempt to impeach such settlement, the amount of the prior account will not affect the justice's jurisdiction; nor will it be affected by the fact that an examination of the whole account is necessary in order to determine to what extent the indebtedness is a lien.—Cuer v. Ross, 49 Wis. 652, 6 N. W. 331.

[z] (Wis. 1881) On a complaint in justice's court for commissions amounting to $200 on sales of sewing machines, there was proof that, by the contract on which the commissions were earned, they amounted to over $1,200, of which over $1,100 had been paid, and that there had never been a settlement of the account or balance struck by the parties. Held, that there was no jurisdiction.—Henckel v. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co., 51 Wis. 363, 7 N. W. 780.

[zz] (Wis. 1882) Where the action involved the examination of an account exceeding $500, but the complaint was one of account stated, and the balance found due was $33, the action was within the jurisdiction of a justice.—Orr v. Le Clair, 55 Wis. 93, 12 N. W. 356.

(F) SET-OFFS AND COUNTER-CLAIMS.

IN GENERAL, § 173.
AMOUNT OR VALUE AS AFFECTING JURISDICTION, § 174.
— ORIGINAL AMOUNT AS AFFECTED BY DEDUCTION OF PLAINTIFF'S CLAIMS OR REDUCTION FROM OTHER CAUSES, § 175.

Pendency of action before justice in which claim might be set off as ground for abatement of other action, see "Abatement and Revival," vol. 1, cc. 60, 61, § 46.

§ 173. In general.

[a] (Ark. 1887) In an action in a justice's court for the rent of a farm, it is no objection to a counterclaim based on the fact that the farm was smaller than represented, that such claim constitutes an action of tort, over which the justice had no jurisdiction, as such defense may be regarded as a plea of failure of consideration.—Harris v. Simpson, 50 Ark. 427, 8 S. W. 177.

[b] (Ga. 1896) Though the defendant in an action ex delicto brought in a justice's court may plead as a set-off a demand against the plaintiff arising ex contractu, where the latter is insolvent, and unable to respond, and the collection of the defendant's claim would otherwise be hazarded, yet, if the alleged insolvency is not proved, plaintiff, on making out his case, is entitled to recover, though he may admit the correctness and justness of the defendant's counterclaim.—Follendore v. Follendore, 99 Ga. 71, 24 S. E. 407.

[c] (Ill. 1873) In a suit before a justice to recover for professional services in setting a broken arm, the justice has jurisdiction to render judgment on a plea setting up malpractice on the part of plaintiff.—Howell v. Goodrich, 69 Ill. 556.

[d] (Kan. 1888) In an action before a justice for balance due on book account, defendant cannot set off "damages to her crop by the stock of the plaintiff, in the sum of $14."—Christy v. Jones, 30 Kan. 183, 18 Pac. 56.

[e] (Mo. 1890) The provisions of Rev. St. 1879, §§ 2989, 3060, for the prosecution of a counterclaim when plaintiff dismisses his action, and for the amendment of a counterclaim on appeal, show a legislative intent to allow a justice of the peace to entertain a counterclaim by a defendant to the extent of giving defendant an affirmative judgment for the excess of his claim over plaintiff's demand; and, where the justice has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such counterclaim, the question whether he shall be allowed to exercise it is one of procedure, and does not come within the principle that jurisdiction cannot be conferred on justices of the peace by implication.—Green v. Beebe, 39 Mo. App. 465.

[f] (N. Y. 1806) In an action before a justice of the peace, under the £10 act, every demand arising on contract may be set off.—McCumber v. Goodrich, 1 Johns. 56.

[g] (N. Y. 1811) Accounts or demands in justices' courts, as in cases of set-off in other courts, must have existed at the commencement of the suit. So a breach of a promise to discontinue a suit cannot be set off in that suit.—Cobb v. Curtiss, 8 Johns. 470.

[h] (N. Y. 1816) A set-off is not admissible in a justice's court, in an action founded on tort.—Dygert v. Coppernoll, 13 Johns. 210.

[i] (N. Y. 1869) Code Civ. Proc. § 64, expressly giving a right to set up a "counterclaim" in an action before a justice of the peace, intends that the counterclaim be such as is included in section 150, defining "counterclaims," which statute was in force when section 64 was enacted.—Williams v. Bitner, 1 Lans. 200.

[j] (N. Y. 1874) In an action in a justice's court by a veterinary surgeon for professional services, the defendant may show in counterclaim that he had purchased a team of horses, relying on plaintiff's professional recommendation and his promise to be responsible if they did not prove to be as represented, and that the team were not as represented.—Williams v. Wieting, 3 Thomp. & C. 439.

[k] (N. C. 1882) A counterclaim consisting of an alleged indebtedness arising out of unadjusted partnership dealings between the parties cannot be allowed in suit before a justice.—Love v. Rhyne, 86 N. C. 576.

[l] (Pa. 1831) The effect of Act March, 1810, § 7, providing that a defendant who shall neglect to set off his demand against a plaintiff in justice's court, when same does not exceed $100, shall be forever barred from recovering by any subsequent suit, is to give jurisdiction to a justice, in a suit pending before him, not only of the plaintiff's demand arising from contract where it does not exceed $100, but also jurisdiction of any corresponding demand of defendant which does not exceed the pecuniary limit of his jurisdiction.—Slyhoof v. Flitcraft, 1 Ashm. 171.

[m] (Pa. 1833) Where one party bona fide institutes proceedings against another, for a debt or demand arising from contract, before a justice of the peace, the effect of the commencement of such proceedings is to give the justice exclusive jurisdiction, during their pendency, not only of the plaintiff's demand, but of any legal set-off the defendant may have within the jurisdiction of the justice.—White v. Johnson, 2 Ashm. 146.

[n] (Pa. 1835) A justice can only receive as a set-off a claim of which he would have had jurisdiction had the parties before him been reversed.—Henion v. Morton, 2 Ashm. 150.

[o] (Pa. 1835) A defendant in an action for work and labor in a justice's court cannot set off a claim for damages for malfeasance; the justice having no jurisdiction of such a cause of action where the parties are reversed.—Henion v. Morton, 2 Ashm. 150.

[p] (Pa. 1886) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a set-off in an action for wages arising from damages on plaintiff's nonperformance or negligent performance of his work.—Rafferty v. Clark, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 301.

[q] (Wis. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 3626, regulating the practice in justice courts, the plea of counterclaim is not available to the defendant.—Hartel v. Kite, 70 Wis. 396, 36 N. W. 7.

§ 174. Amount or value as affecting jurisdiction.

Offset or counterclaim as reducing plaintiff's claim to within limit of jurisdiction, see ante, § 172.

[a] In an action before a justice of the peace, if the balance claimed by the defendant, after satisfying the plaintiff's claim, exceeds the jurisdiction of the justice, the set-off should be rejected entirely.

—(Ill. 1862) Seafkas v. Evey, 29 Ill. (19 Peck) 178;

(Ind. 1840) Alexander v. Peck, 5 Blackf. 308; (1849) Gharkey v. Halstead, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 389, Smith, 208;

(Tex. 1894) Pickett v. Edwards (Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 32.

[b] A defendant cannot oust a justice of his jurisdiction by setting up a demand against the plaintiff of a sum greater than is within his jurisdiction.

—(Colo. 1894) Ramer v. Smith, 4 Colo. App. 434, 36 Pac. 302;

(N. J. 1809) Hoffman v. Reading, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 561.

[c] In a suit before a justice of the peace, a set-off for a greater sum than the defendant could have maintained an action on before the same magistrate cannot be pleaded, being beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

—(Cal. 1863) Malson v. Vaughn, 23 Cal. 61;

(Pa. 1835) Henion v. Morton, 2 Ashm. 150.

[d] (Ala. 1824) In an action before a justice of the peace having jurisdiction in actions to recover less than $50, the defendant may file in offset a debt exceeding that amount.—Bowman v. Gary, Minor, 326.

[e] (Cal. 1866) A defendant in a case before a justice of the peace has no legal right to set up a counterclaim for more than $300.—Maxfield v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 545.

[f] (Ind. 1859) The judgment claimed in set-off, and not the amount of set-off pleaded, determines whether the suit is within the jurisdiction of a justice.—Murphy v. Evans, 11 Ind. 517.

[g] (Kan. 1863) Jurisdiction having once vested in a justice of the peace, and been exercised in summoning witnesses and jurors, is not devested by the plaintiff's amending his bill of particulars, after the jury had been impaneled and sworn, and claiming an additional sum, which, together with that first claimed, will make an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the court; this having been done by way of offset to a counterclaim of the defendant.—Wooster v. McKinley, 1 Kan. 317.

[h] (Minn. 1872) A justice of the peace is not ousted of jurisdiction by defendant's putting in a counterclaim, which alone, or with the amount claimed in the complaint, exceeds $100, the limit of his jurisdiction.—Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196).

[i] (Mo. 1883) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover for work done on defendant's bridge, the latter admitted the claim, but alleged, by way of recoupment, that plaintiff, when employed on another occasion to watch defendant's engine, negligently allowed the engine to become damaged to an amount equal to plaintiff's claim ($90). Held that, under the statute then in force, such cross demand being for more than $50 was not within the jurisdiction of the court, and hence a judgment for any part thereof was erroneous.—Emery v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. Ry. Co., 77 Mo. 339.

[j] (N. J. 1889) When a plea of set-off claiming a balance of more than $200 is tendered in a justice's court, the justice should overrule the plea for want of jurisdiction, and proceed with the trial of plaintiff's demand; Rev. St. p. 538, limiting the jurisdiction of justices to causes involving not more than $200.—Clancy v. Neumeyer, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 299, 17 Atl. 154.

[k] (N. Y. 1813) Where, in a justice court, defendant avers a set-off exceeding a justice's jurisdiction, but substantiates it only to a sum within the jurisdiction, it must be allowed.—Smith v. Burke, 10 Johns. 110.

[l] (N. Y. 1856) Under the Code, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in cases where the parties have mutual demands against each other arising on contract and amounting together to over $400, when such demands are contested.—Stilwell v. Staples, 12 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Duer) 691, 3 Abb. Prac. 365.

[m] (N. Y. 1889) Code Civ. Proc. § 501, imposes no limit on the amount of a counterclaim which defendant may set up in a justice's court, and it cannot be objected that such counterclaim exceeds the amount of a justice's jurisdiction.—Heigel v. Willis, 50 Hun, 586, 3 N. Y. Supp. 497.

[n] (N. C. 1880) A defendant sued in contract in a justice's court may plead an independent cross demand arising ex contractu, the principal of which is beyond the justice's jurisdiction.—McClenahan v. Cotten, 83 N. C. 332.

[o] (N. C. 1880) Where the defendant, in an action before a justice, sets up a counterclaim composed mainly of items subject to the legislative scale, and remits the excess over $200, held that the claim, when so reduced, is a claim for $200 in lawful money, not in depreciated paper.—Derr v. Stubbs, 83 N. C. 539.

[p] (N. C.) A counterclaim cannot be asserted in a justice's court, the amount of which exceeds his jurisdiction.—(1881) Boyett v. Vaughan, 85 N. C. 363; (1882) Meneely v. Craven, 86 N. C. 364; (1883) Raisin v. Thomas, 88 N. C. 148.

[q] (Pa. 1861) A justice has no jurisdiction of a disputed set-off exceeding in amount $100.—Milliken v. Gardner, 37 Pa. (1 Wright) 456.

[r] (Pa. 1869) Where plaintiff states a claim exceeding a justice's jurisdiction, and that defendant claims a certain sum as set-off which brings the claim within the jurisdiction, but defendant himself claims another set-off bringing the amount of his set-off above the justice's jurisdiction, the justice has no jurisdiction.—Jones v. Stauffer, 1 Leg. Gaz. 91.

[s] (Pa. 1882) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a set-off exceeding $100, where he has no jurisdiction of the original action above that amount.—Kraus v. Bickhart, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 479.

[t] (Pa. 1895) Under the statute giving justices of the peace jurisdiction up to $300 in actions for rent, a justice has jurisdiction of a proceeding by a tenant to offset against the landlord's distress warrant a debt due him from the landlord, though the amount of the rent claimed is more than $100.—Lowenstein v. Helfrich (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 533.

[u] (S. C. 1895) A justice is deprived of jurisdiction by a counterclaim for an amount exceeding $100.—Haygood v. Boney, 43 S. C. 63, 20 S. E. 803.

[v] (Tenn. 1833) In an action before a justice of the peace on a note, the defendant is entitled to set off an open account, though it be for more than $50.—McClain v. Kincaid, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 232.

[w] (Vt. 1827) A justice of the peace may render judgment for the balance, in case of mutual offsets, though it be for more than the sum of $100.—Ex parte Hatch, 2 Aikens, 28.

[x] (Vt. 1842) In an action of book account, if the debit side of the plaintiff's book is less than $100, and he sue before a justice, and the debit side of the defendant's book is more than $100, the latter cannot bring it in before the justice by way of offset.—Temple v. Bradley, 14 Vt. 254.

[y] (Vt. 1870) A justice is not ousted of jurisdiction by the fact that, after defendant has pleaded an offset, the plaintiff claims an offset to that, and the two sums claimed by plaintiff exceed the limit of the justice's jurisdiction; unless, perhaps, where the amount first sued for, and the plaintiff's offset, appear to be parts of the same demand.—Talbot v. Robinson, 42 Vt. 698.

§ 175. —— Original amount as affected by deduction of plaintiff's claims or reduction from other causes.

[a] (Dak. 1887) Under Justices' Code, § 2, subd. 1, giving a justice jurisdiction of an action "where the sum claimed does not exceed $100," the amount involved is within a justice's jurisdiction, where the complaint asks for judgment for $82, and the answer sets up counterclaims amounting to $135, and asks for judgment for $53.—Purcell v. Booth, 6 Dak. 17, 50 N. W. 196.

[b] (Ga. 1881) Where, in a justice's court on a plea of set-off of $100, the jury found for defendant in more than that sum, held that he would not be allowed to write down the finding to $100, so as to have judgment.—Ware v. Fambro, 67 Ga. 515.

[c] (Ill. 1841) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a set-off exceeding $100, where the balance claimed by the defendant does not exceed that sum. And, if the balance exceeds that sum, the justice must either allow so much of the note as will set off the plaintiff's claim, and give judgment for the defendant for costs, or dismiss the suit altogether.—Nichols v. Ruckells, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 298.

[d] (Iowa, 1846) Though a set-off in an action before a magistrate exceeds the jurisdiction of the magistrate, a set-off will be allowed where it appears that the defendant admits a portion of the plaintiff's claim and claims a balance within the magistrate's jurisdiction.—West v. Hatfield, Morris, 493.

[e] (Miss. 1837) A larger amount than the plaintiff's claim may be set off in a justice's court, if the balance does not exceed its jurisdiction.—Glass v. Moss, 2 Miss. (1 How.) 519.

[f, g] (Mo.) In an action before a justice, defendant cannot prove set-off in an amount which exceeds the jurisdiction of the justice, though by crediting plaintiff's demand the claim is reduced within his jurisdiction.—(1855) Almeida v. Sigerson, 20 Mo. 497; (1874) Reed v. Snodgrass, 55 Mo. 180.

[h] (N. C. 1880) The constitutional provision restricting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in actions on contracts contemplates his adjudication on claims within the required limits, and therefore it is not allowable for a defendant to set up a counterclaim for so much as will extinguish the plaintiff's claim and permit the defendant to recover $200; in such case, the remission must be absolute of all in excess of the justice's jurisdiction.—Derr v. Stubbs, 83 N. C. 539.

[i] (Ohio, 1880) The clause in Justices' Code 1853, § 108, which authorizes the defendant to withhold the amount of his claim which is in excess of the jurisdiction of the justice, and to make the same the subject of a subsequent action, does not relate to a claim for unliquidated damages. Where such is the nature of the claim, the whole excess must be remitted, or the justice is without jurisdiction to act on the claim.—Wooleever v. Stewart, 36 Ohio St. 146, 38 Am. Rep. 569.

[j] (Tex. 1860) A defendant in a justice's court may plead in set-off, and recover a balance not exceeding $100 of an account exceeding $100.—Dalby v. Murphy, 25 Tex. 354.

[k] (Tex. 1881) A defendant in a justice's court may plead in reconvention a claim for damages exceeding the court's jurisdiction, where he asks judgment for the difference between such claim and the claim of plaintiff, and such difference is within the court's jurisdiction.—Mulhaul v. Feller, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1162.

[l] (Tex. 1892) Where defendant's counterclaim exceeds the court's jurisdiction, he may waive the excess, and bring himself within its jurisdiction.—Scott v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. (App.) 18 S. W. 137.

[b] (Ill. 1847) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action of debt.—Bedell v. Janney, 9 Ill. (4 Gilman) 193.

[c] (Ill. 1858) To authorize the selection by a justice of the peace of arbitrators, there must be a suit pending before him.—Shirk v. Trainer, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 301.

[d] (Ind. 1860) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction, in actions to recover the possession of real estate, only where the relation of landlord and tenant exists; or where there has been an unlawful or forcible entry into lands, and either a peaceable or forcible detainer thereof; or where, having peaceably obtained possession, one unlawfully and forcibly keeps the same.—Short v. Bridwell, 15 Ind. 211.

[e] (Ky. 1809) An action in which the party has a right to a trial by jury is excluded from the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, irrespective of the amount in issue.—Singleton v. Madison, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 342.

Procedure, see post, §§ 280–294.
Authority to take affidavits for attachments in general, see "Attachment," vol. 5, cc. 441, 442, § 227.

[a] (U. S. 1820) An attachment by a justice of the peace, under Act Va. Dec. 26, 1792, can only be issued by a justice of the county in which the defendant resides, or from which he is privately removing, or in which he absconds or conceals himself.—Sears v. Noon, Fed. Cas. No. 12,590 [2 Cranch, C. C. 220].

[b, c] (Ala. 1881) Code, § 3606, requiring suits before justices of the peace to be brought in the precinct of defendant's permanent residence, is confined in its operation to suits commenced by summons, and does not apply to actions begun by attachment of goods, as they are in their nature proceedings in rem.—Atkinson v. Wiggins, 69 Ala. 190.

[d] (Ala. 1881) Notaries public, appointed to have and exercise the same jurisdiction as justices of the peace, may issue attachments returnable before them to enforce the collection of debts not exceeding the amount of $100.—Griffin v. Appleby, 69 Ala. 409.

[e] (Ala. 1882) Notaries public, appointed by the governor to "have and exercise the same jurisdiction as justices of the peace," have authority to issue attachments within the precincts for which they are appointed, returnable before themselves.—Rice v. Watts, 71 Ala. 593.

[f] (Ala. 1882) A notary public with the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace has authority to issue an attachment returnable before himself for the collection of a demand within a justice's jurisdiction.—Rice v. Watts, 71 Ala. 593.

[g] (Ala. 1886) By an act incorporating a town, it was provided that the mayor "shall possess all the powers and jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in civil and criminal cases, concurrent with and which are now exercised by justices of the peace, * * * and his signature or acts in such cases shall be of equal force as if done by him expressly as a justice." Held, that the mayor could issue a writ of attachment for a sum less than $100.—Bain v. Mitchell, 82 Ala. 304, 2 South. 706.

[h] (Ark. 1840) Under Act Oct. 22, 1823, § 29, allowing attachments where the "defendant is not a resident of or residing in this territory, or is about to remove himself and effects without this territory," an attachment may issue though defendant is a nonresident and without the jurisdiction of the justice issuing the writ.—Jones v. Buzzard, 2 Ark. (2 Pike) 415.

[i] (Ark. 1840) There is nothing in the organic law, or in any subsequent territorial act, forbidding a justice of the peace the right of issuing writs of attachment returnable to the circuit court, as provided by Act Oct. 22, 1823, § 29.—Jones v. Buzzard, 2 Ark. (2 Pike) 415.

[j] (Ark. 1877) Gantt's Dig. § 441, giving the mortgagee a right of attachment on personal property, has exclusive reference to circuit courts, and the right of attachment thereunder cannot be asserted before a justice of the peace.—Lemay v. Williams, 32 Ark. 166.

[k] (D. C. 1885) Under the Revised Statutes, justices of the peace in the District of Columbia have jurisdiction to issue attachments for rent.—Gross v. Goldsmith, 4 Mackey, 126.

[m] (Ill. 1860) If the nature and amount of the claim is within the jurisdiction of a justice, he can entertain a suit begun by attachment against a steamboat as well as if begun by an ordinary summons.—The Delta v. Walker, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 233.

[n] (Ind. 1865) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in an action aginst an inhabitant of the state, who is not a resident of his township, when it was not commenced by capias, though an attachment was sued out which was levied on his property.—Michael v. Thomas, 24 Ind. 72.

[o] (Ind. 1881) An action on contract against a resident of Indiana before a justice, unless commenced by capias, must be brought in the township of the defendant's residence, if there is a competent justice in such township, and the fact that a writ of attachment is issued and property has been seized in the township where the suit is brought does not take the case out of the rule.—Wilkinson v. Moore, 79 Ind. 397.

[p] (Iowa, 1877) That an attachment is issued does not give a justice jurisdiction of an action for recovery of money against a resident of another county.—Gates v. Wagner, 46 Iowa, 355.

[pp] (Iowa, 1889) Under Code 1873, § 3511, providing that "suits commenced by attachment may be commenced in any county and township wherein any portion of the property is found, and justices shall have jurisdiction therein within the county," a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action commenced by the attachment of property within the township, though defendant is a nonresident of, and is not found within, the state, and is not personally served with notice. Sections 3507, 3509, limiting the jurisdiction of justices to the county, and prescribing that suit may be brought in the township where plaintiff or defendant resides, and section 3517, providing that actions in justices' courts are commenced by voluntary appearance or by notice, apply only to actions commenced by personal service, or to actions in the district court.—Anderson v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 77 Iowa, 445, 42 N. W. 366.

[q] (Md. 1798) Under the act of 1795, a justice of the peace has no authority to issue his warrant to the clerk of the general court directing him to issue an attachment.—Smith v. Greenleaf, 4 Har. & McH. 162.

[qq] (N. J. 1833) Attachment Act, § 1, authorizes writs of attachment to be issued out of the supreme court, or common pleas, directed, "To the sheriff or coroner"; section 14 provides that, if the sheriff "or other officer" shall by mistake attach goods claimed by a third person, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or officer to summon a jury to try the right of property; and section 33 authorizes justices of the peace to issue attachments for a limited amount, directed to constables, who "shall execute the same in manner aforesaid." Small Cause Act, § 26, passed later, authorizes the claimant of attached property to make application to a justice of the peace, and expressly gives jurisdiction to the justice and prescribes his duties; and section 45 repeals all acts within the purview of that act and contradictory thereto. Act February, 1830, supplementary to the attachment act, did not expressly repeal Small Cause Act, § 26. Held, that the words "sheriff or other officer," as used in the original and supplementary act, in section 14 and others, mean only coroners or such officers, other than sheriffs, to whom it appertains to execute process out of the superior courts, and did not by construction deprive justices of the peace of jurisdiction conferred by Small Cause Act, § 26.—Stryker v. Skillman, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 180.

[r] (N. Y. 1818) Rev. St. p. 228, authorizing any justice of the peace in any county to issue an attachment in certain cases where the debtor "is about to depart from such county, or is concealed within the same" with intent to defraud, does not warrant an attachment against a debtor who is resident of another county and merely passing through the county where the suit is brought.—Dudley v. Staples, 15 Johns. 196.

[rr] (Ohio, 1861) Act March 14, 1853, § 28, authorizing an attachment in justice court against nonresidents of the county, or foreign corporations, does not authorize an attachment against a domestic corporation not residing in the county.—Boley v. Ohio Life Ins. & Trust Co., 12 Ohio St. 139.

[s] (Ohio, 1866) Where one claims to be the owner of property which has been taken by an officer under an order of attachment issued against another, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, under Code, §§ 426, 427, to try the right of the claimant to the property against his consent and at the instance of the officer alone, nor to render judgment against him in the premises.—Jones v. Carr, 16 Ohio St. 420.

[ss] (Ohio, 1874) Under Swan & C. St. p. 776, a domestic corporation may be proceeded against by attachment before a justice of the peace in a county wherein such corporation has no office or place of business, on the ground that it is a nonresident of such county.—Champion Mach. Co. v. Huston, 24 Ohio St. 503.

[t] (Pa. 1838) The act of June 13, 1836, did not deprive justices of the peace of jurisdiction in cases of domestic attachment where the debt or demand did not exceed $100.—Riley v. Dekker, 2 Miles, 183.

[tt] (Pa. 1838) The act of June 13, 1836, relating to domestic attachments, does not oust a justice of the peace of jurisdiction under the acts of August 22, 1752, or December 4, 1807. —Riley v. Dekker, 2 Miles, 183.

[u] (Pa. 1850) Act July 11, 1842, §§ 27, 28, authorizing a justice of the peace to issue an attachment when a capias cannot issue, on proof that defendant is about to remove his property from the county to defraud his creditors, does not authorize the justice to issue an attachment against a nonresident of the state. —Appeal of Vansyckel, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 128.

[uu] (Pa. 1876) Under Act July 12, 1842, authorizing justices of the peace to issue writs of domestic attachment, they have no jurisdiction in cases where the defendant resides out of the state.—Sharpless v. Lansing, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 502.

[v] (Pa. 1886) Under the act of July 7, 1879, enlarging the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to $300, a justice does not have jurisdiction of an attachment against a nonresident debtor to that amount.—Pagett v. Truby, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 596.

[vv] (Pa. 1886) Under Act July 12, 1842, § 17, a magistrate has no jurisdiction of an action in attachment against a nonresident of the state.—Roberts v. Wright, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 175.

[w] (S. C.) A magistrate has no authority, under the act of 1788, to issue an attachment against the goods of one actually out of the state, but only against the goods of those who conceal themselves, or are in the act of moving.—(1794) Blakely v. Bradford, 1 Bay, 361; (1818) McKenzie v. Buchan, 1 Nott & McC. 205.

[ww] (S. C. 1814) A justice of the peace can issue an attachment only on contracts, and not for torts; the words "debtor" and "creditor" being alone used in the act authorizing justices to issue attachments.—White v. Meloy, Tread. Const. 467.

[x] (S. C. 1882) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to issue an attachment in an action to foreclose an agricultural lien.—Jones v. Clarkson, 16 S. C. 628.

[xx] (Tenn. 1823) Under Act 1794, c. 1, § 56, providing that a justice of the peace, in cases where he has jurisdiction, may issue an original attachment against the estate of any absconding or absent debtor, and that the proceedings thereon shall be in a summary way, and the defendant may replevy the goods attached, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to issue an attachment on land.—Puckett's Lessee v. Owen, 7 Tenn. (Peck) 167.

[y] (Tenn. 1828) Acts 1777, c. 2, authorizing justices of the peace to issue attachments against absconding or nonresident debtors "and make the same returnable to any of the said courts where the same is cognizable," does not authorize them to render judgment on such attachments.—Den v. Wharton, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 125.

[yy] (Tenn. 1830) Under Acts 1794, c. 1, § 56, authorizing justices of the peace to issue attachments "directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county," a justice of the peace cannot issue an attachment against property within his county owned by a resident of another county.—Stewart v. Roberts, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 387.

[z] (Tenn. 1851) Justices of the peace may issue attachments under the statute in aid of suits in the circuit court.—Thompson v. Carper, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 542.

[zz] (Tex. 1883) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction to foreclose attachment liens on land for amounts within their jurisdiction; exclusive jurisdiction not being vested in the district courts by Const. 1876, art. 5, § 8.—Hillebrand v. McMahan, 59 Tex. 450.

§ 178. Garnishment.

Against executor, see ante, § 138 [i].

Amount or value as determining jurisdiction, see ante, §§ 156, 165.

[a] (Ala. 1860) A justice of the peace has authority, under the Code, to issue a garnishment on a judgment rendered by him.—Gould v. Meyer, 36 Ala. 565.

[b] (Colo. 1881) Act Feb. 21, 1879, authorizing justices of the peace to issue garnishee process, may be so construed as to permit the issue of such process on a judgment rendered before the enactment of the statute; the statute being remedial, and no constitutional rule being affected by such construction.—Fisher v. Hervey, 6 Colo. 16.

[c] (Colo. 1887) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction by statute to try the issue raised by an answer in garnishee process setting forth that the garnishees held property by virtue of a chattel mortgage to them, to which a traverse is made alleging fraud and delaying creditors, and charging the garnishees with knowledge and participation in the fraud.—Welsh v. Noyes, 10 Colo. 133, 14 Pac. 317.

[d] (Ga. 1878) D. recovered a judgment against B. in the superior court. B. recovered one against A. in a justice's court. D. obtained a summons of garnishment against A. in the justice's court. A. paid his judgment to the justice, and was discharged. Held, that the justice's court had no jurisdiction over the garnishment.—Durden v. Belt, 61 Ga. 545.

[e] (Me. 1835) One summoned as trustee in a process of foreign attachment is "a defendant" within St. 1827, c. 359, which provides that where there are two or more defendants living in different counties, a justice suit may be maintained against them all in the county in which either defendant lives.—Boynton v. Fly, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 17.

[f] (N. J.) On a justice's judgment in attachment proceedings lawfully instituted before him, he has jurisdiction of an action by sci. fa. against a garnishee who resides within the limits of a city in which a district court is established. This is not, within Revision, p. 1302, § 6, a case "arising under the district court act."—(1883) New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Cookson, 45 N. J. Law (16 Vroom) 302; (1884) Id., 46 N. J. Law (17 Vroom) 208.

[g] (Pa. 1886) Act April 15, 1845, § 1, conferring authority on justices of the peace to issue attachment executions, does not enlarge the jurisdiction of justices of the peace under the Act of March 20, 1810.—Hintermeister v. Ithaca Organ & Piano Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 268.

[h] (Pa. 1898) Under Act 1845, § 1, extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to the issuing, trial, etc., of all process required by the act of 1836, relating to attachment, the justice has jurisdiction to try the truth of the answer of a garnishee.—Strouse v. Lawrence (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 131.

[i] (Tenn. 1814) Act 1794 (1 Hayw. Revisal, p. 194) § 56, requiring attachments to be levied on property, and section 22, authorizing the summoning of a garnishee in attachments in a court of record, do not authorize a justice of the peace to summon a garnishee.—Seawell v. Murphy, 3 Tenn. (Cooke) 478.

[j] (Tenn. 1842) A justice of the peace, having rendered judgment against a defendant for $197.71, had, by consequence thereof, power to sequestrate the debts of the defendant in the execution, by garnishment to that amount. —Cheairs v. Slaten, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 101.

§ 179. Proceedings to recover personal property.

Amount or value as determining jurisdiction, see ante, §§ 153, 163.

Procedure in replevin in general, see "Replevin."

[a] (U. S. 1830) Detinue is an action in form ex contractu and not ex delicto, and hence is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Maynadier v. Duff, Fed. Cas. No. 9,349 [4 Cranch, C. C. 4].

[b] (Ala. 1840) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of detinue even though the value of the property detained is less than $50.—Williams v. Hinton, 1 Ala. 297.

[c] (Ind. 1844) Act 1838, concerning tenants holding over, and authorizing proceedings before justices of the peace, only authorizes proceedings for the recovery of the possession of real estate, and damages for its detention. It has no relation to personal property.—Ricketts v. Ash, 7 Blackf. 274.

[d] (Ind. 1859) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 464, § 71, a plaintiff may, in all cases where his personal property, to an amount not exceeding $100, is taken by attachment issued from the common pleas against another person, proceed before a justice of the peace to recover such property.—Rodman v. Kelly, 13 Ind. 377.

[e] (Kan. 1887) Where an action of replevin is commenced before a justice by a resident of the county against a nonresident, and defendant is properly served in the county where the action is commenced, but the property is not obtained, and has never been wrongfully detained in that county, but has been and is wrongfully detained by defendant in the county where he resides, the court has jurisdiction to determine the case as one for damages only under Comp. Laws, § 4622, providing for such trial when the property has not been taken.—Huckell v. McCoy, 38 Kan. 53, 15 Pac. 870.

[f] (Mass. 1844) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction in replevin, except replevin for beasts distrained for going at large or impounded for doing damage.—Jordan v. Dennis, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 590.

[g] (Mich. 1887) Act No. 188, Laws 1879, gives a justice of the peace jurisdiction of an action of replevin for beasts distrained or impounded for unlawfully running at large, and trespassing on the premises of the distrainor.—Pistorius v. Swarthout, 67 Mich. 186, 34 N. W. 547.

[h] (N. Y. 1882) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2933, providing that where summons has been personally served, the justice must proceed to determine the action, though plaintiff has not required the chattel to be replevied; section 1730, providing that, if the chattel recovered in an action of replevin was not replevied, the final judgment must award plaintiff the sum fixed as to the value thereof, to be paid by defendant if possession is not delivered to plaintiff; and section 1726, directing that when the verdict awards to plaintiff a chattel which has not been replevied, it must also fix the value of the chattel, which latter two sections are made applicable to justices' courts by section 2931,—an action of replevin may now be maintained in justices' courts, though no process is issued for the replevying of the chattel sued for when the action is commenced, or at any time before the execution is issued on the judgment obtained.—Delin v. Stohl, 2 Civ. Proc. R. 222.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2933, providing that "where the summons [in replevin in a justice's court] has been personally served upon the defendant, or where he appears, the justice must proceed to hear and determine the action although the plaintiff has not required the chattel to be replevied," a justice has jurisdiction of an action to recover a chattel, though there has been no requisition.—Guyon v. Rooney, 53 Hun, 633, 6 N. Y. Supp. 99, 17 Civ. Proc. R. 172; Id., 55 Hun, 606, 7 N. Y. Supp. 811.

[j] (N. C. 1886) Where the action is to recover $80 due on a contract, it does not become an action of claim and delivery, so as to oust the justice of his jurisdiction, by reason of the fact that plaintiff files an affidavit and obtains an order of seizure of the property described therein.—Morris v. O'Briant, 94 N. C. 72.

[k] (N. C. 1895) All forms of actions having been abolished, an allegation in the complaint, in an action to recover for rent, that defendant wrongfully detains the crop on which the rent is a lien, does not deprive the justice of jurisdiction, on the ground that the action is one of claim and delivery, and not one ex contractu.—Hargrove v. Harris, 116 N. C. 418, 21 S. E. 916.

[l] (S. C. 1886) Code, § 71, subd. 11, gives jurisdiction to trial justices in "an action to recover the possession of personal property claimed, the value of which * * * shall not exceed" $100. Const. art. 4, § 22, declares that justices "shall have such jurisdiction as may be provided by law in actions ex delicto, when the damages claimed do not exceed $100." Held, that a justice had jurisdiction of an action for claim and delivery, and damages for detention thereof, where the value of the property and damages did not exceed $100. —Dillard v. Samuels, 25 S. C. 318.

[m] (Tenn. 1858) Act 1851, c. 32, conferring on justices of the peace jurisdiction of actions of replevin where the amount does not exceed $50, is not repealed by Act 1854, c. 60.—Hockaday v. Wilson, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 113.

[n] (Vt. 1855) A justice has no jurisdiction in replevin, except for beasts distrained or impounded, even where the value of the property is less than seven dollars.—Glover v. Chase, 27 Vt. (1 Williams) 533.

[o] (Vt. 1866) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in replevin for goods and chattels unlawfully taken or detained of value not exceeding $20.—Tripp v. Leland, 39 Vt. 63.

[p] (Wis. 1858) Replevin, in form as prescribed by the Revised Statutes, in justices' courts, is not abolished by Code, tit. 7, c. 2, which relates exclusively to courts of record.—Pulis v. Dearing, 7 Wis. 221.

§ 180. Summary remedies against sheriffs and constables and their sureties.

[a] (Ala. 1881) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction, under Code, §§ 3663–3675, to render summary judgments against sheriffs for any negligence or malfeasance in serving process returnable before them.—Thompson v. Acree, 69 Ala. 178.

[b] (Ky. 1822) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a motion against a constable for failing to return an execution, the act of 1815, authorizing such motion, having expired.—Lane v. Young, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 40; Abbey v. Thomas, 12 Ky. (2 Litt.) 166.

[c] (Ohio, 1843) St. 1884, § 116, authorizing a justice of the peace, whenever a constable should make a false return or fail to make any on the application of a party injured, to proceed against such constable by sci. fa., applies to returns on mesne process.—Powell v. Jones, 12 Ohio, 35.

[d] (Pa. 1834) The jurisdiction of a justice to issue a sci. fa. against the sureties of a delinquent constable, under the act of March 20, 1810, is not taken away by the act of March 29, 1824.—Evans v. Frey, 3 Watts, 208.

[e] (Tenn. 1842) A justice of the peace has no power to render judgment by motion against a constable and his sureties, for failing to pay over money not collected, by virtue of process in his hands.—McGreggor v. McCorkle, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 578.

§ 181. Summary remedies by surety against principal or co-surety.

[a] (Ind. 1843) The summary remedy by notice and motion by a surety against his cosurety for contribution provided by Rev. St. 1838, p. 233, is within the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace court, where the justice has jurisdiction of the subject-matter to the amount sued for.—Cating v. Stewart, 6 Blackf. 372.

[b] (Tenn. 1849) Act 1809, c. 69, confers upon justices of the peace no jurisdiction to enable them to render judgment on motion against a principal, in favor of the surety on any note, bill, bond, or obligation which the surety may have become liable to pay by reason of a judgment rendered against him.—Vanbibber v. Vanbibber, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 53.

[c] (Tenn. 1854) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a motion by a surety against his principal, unless such suretyship appears on the face of the note, bill, bond, or obligation which is the foundation thereof.—Cannon v. Wood, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 177.

§ 182. Mandamus.

[a] (N. C. 1881) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a mandamus proceeding by a teacher of a free school to compel the school committee by whom he was employed to give an order on the county treasurer for the sum due him for his services.—Robinson v. Howard, 84 N. C. 151.

§ 183. Appointment of guardian ad litem.

[a] (N. Y.) A justice of the peace may appoint a guardian ad litem for an infant.—(1807) Mockey v. Grey, 2 Johns. 192; (1823) Bullard v. Spoor, 2 Cow. 430.

2. EQUITABLE JURISDICTION AND RELIEF.

IN GENERAL, § 184.
ENFORCEMENT OF LIENS IN GENERAL, § 185.
CREDITORS' SUIT, § 186.
SETTLEMENT OF PARTNERSHIP AFFAIRS, § 187.
EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST MARRIED WOMEN, § 188.

Amount or value as determining jurisdiction, see ante, § 150 [q, r].

Constitutionality of statute conferring equitable jurisdiction, see ante, § 72 [kk].

Counterclaim arising out of unadjusted partnership dealings, see ante, § 173 [k].

§ 184. In general.

[a] (Ala. 1853) The statute (Clay's Dig. p. 358, § 1) giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of actions for the recovery of "all debts and demands not exceeding $50 for a sum or balance due," does not confer jurisdiction to determine purely equitable rights in actions involving over $20, so that the parties are excluded as witnesses, but jurisdiction of such actions remains in the court of chancery.—Hall v. Cannte, 22 Ala. 650.

[b] (Ark. 1884) While a justice of the peace may apply equitable doctrines, he cannot administer equitable relief.—Whitesides v. Kershaw, 44 Ark. 377.

[c] (Cal. 1891) An action against a receiver appointed to receive and hold the rents of land pending an appeal in ejectment, brought by one to whom the successful party assigns her right to such rents, is not an equitable action, but an action for money had and received, and a justice has jurisdiction thereof. The rents in his hands are no part of the judgment in ejectment.—Garniss v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 88 Cal. 413, 26 Pac. 351.

[d] (Del. 1842) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to try an action founded on a lost note; the remedy being at law.—Moore v. Frame, 3 Har. 427.

[e] (Ga. 1895) Where the vendee in a conditional sale of personalty, after paying part of the price, abandoned the property, and the vendor took possession thereof under the contract, the equities of the parties could not be adjusted in a garnishment returnable to a justice's court, sued out by a creditor of the vendee against the vendor, since a justice's court has no equity jurisdiction.—Woodruff v. M. G. McDonald Furniture Co., 96 Ga. 86, 23 S. E. 195.

[f] (Ind. 1854) Under the act of 1847, authorizing writs of ne exeat, until the bond required by the statute was filed, a justice had no authority to issue the writ.—Straughan v. Inge, 5 Ind. 157.

[g] (Ind. 1872) Under the provisions of the Code of Procedure, abolishing the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, justices of the peace, where they have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, unless there is some special provision of law to the contrary, may apply thereto equitable as well as legal principles, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as courts of record. It was the evident design of the Code to abolish, in practice, all distinction between law and equity, and to invest every court having jurisdiction of a civil action with a power to hear and determine the same in accordance with equitable as well as legal principles.—Snell v. Mohan, 38 Ind. 494.

[h] (Kan. 1891) In an action in justice's court, the bill of particulars alleged that plaintiff had sold defendant cattle of the value of $595, admitted payment of $488, and prayed judgment for the balance, $107. Held, that other allegations in the bill detailing the particulars of the transactions, including the fact that plaintiff had made a mistake in figuring the aggregate price of the cattle at the time of the sale, did not render the action one to reform the contract of sale, so as to deprive the justice of jurisdiction.—Griffin v. O'Neil, 47 Kan. 116, 27 Pac. 826.

[i] (Ky. 1840) The statute of 1838, conferring chancery jurisdiction on justices of the peace in action to enforce judgments, applies also to judgments against executors or administrators.—Sherwood v. Campbell's Adm'r, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 54.

[j] (Mo. 1859) In a proceeding for an unlawful detainer, a justice of the peace has no power to inquire and decide whether a parol contract ought to be enforced, and to give equitable relief on the ground that the contract has been taken out of the statute of frauds by part performance.—Ridgley v. Stillwell, 28 Mo. 400.

[k] (Mo. 1876) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to dispossess a tenant is not affected by the fact that the lease is held by a trustee for another; the equitable character of the trust relation not conferring any equitable rights as against the landlord, and therefore not giving occasion for equitable inquiry into it.—January v. Stephenson, 2 Mo. App. 266.

[l] (Mo. 1886) A justice has no jurisdiction of a suit for specific performance.—Enlow v. Newland, 22 Mo. App. 581.

[m] (Mo. 1887) Justices have nothing to do with estoppels in pais.—Hicks v. Martin, 25 Mo. App. 359.

[n] (Mo. 1889) In an action of unlawful detainer before a justice of the peace, defendant claimed under a lease made by the carpenter who built the house, with the consent and as agent of the owner, who had received several months' rents under it. It appeared that the agent's authority rested in parol, so that under Rev. St. §§ 2509, 3078, the tenancy was one from month to month, and terminable by a month's notice. Held, that such rental, with possession and part payment of rent, constituted an equitable defense unavailable to defendant, under Rev. St. 1879, § 2837, precluding justices of the peace from the exercise of equitable jurisdiction.—Orr v. McCurdy, 34 Mo. App. 418.

[o] (Mo. 1896) The defense of an estoppel in pais is an equitable defense, and cannot be raised in an action before a justice of the peace.—Phillips v. Burrows, 64 Mo. App. 351, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1001.

[p] (Neb. 1884) The vendee under a contract of sale which declared that it should be forfeited upon his failure to make any payment of the purchase money, and that if allowed to remain in possession after nonpayment, he should hold the property as tenant at will, cannot upon default be sued for its forcible entry and detention, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1020, which gives a justice jurisdiction in such proceedings against tenants holding over their terms, because his equities under the contract cannot be adjudicated in a justice's court.—Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Skupa, 16 Neb. 341, 20 N. W. 393; Grimm v. Kucera, 16 Neb. 349, 20 N. W. 396.

[q] (N. M. 1862) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to enforce specific performance of a contract to build a house on a certain tract of land, by an alternative judgment requiring defendant to build the house or to pay a certain sum, and an execution to enforce such an alternative judgment is void on its face.—Munis v. Herrera, 1 N. M. 362.

[r] (N. C. 1881) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to try an action on a lost note wherein a sum less than $200 is demanded, and is competent to exercise the power of requiring in such case the indemnity of the defendant. The relief sought is not equitable.—Fisher v. Webb, 84 N. C. 44.

[s] (N. C. 1881) Where, in a summary proceeding in ejectment before a justice of the peace, the testimony shows that equities growing out of a contract to purchase are to be adjusted, the proceeding should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Parker v. Allen, 84 N. C. 466.

[t] (N. C. 1882) A justice's court, having incidental jurisdiction of every question necessary to the proper determination of an action within its jurisdiction, may permit an equity to be set up as a defense, though having no affirmative equitable jurisdiction.—Lutz v. Thompson, 87 N. C. 334.

[u] (N. C. 1892) A justice having jurisdiction of the principal matter of an action on a bond may allow a release of the surety to be set up as a defense, though such defense is of an equitable nature.—Bell v. Howerton, 111 N. C. 69, 15 S. E. 891.

[v] (N. C. 1896) Where the allegations and proof in an action in justice's court showed that plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendant for a balance due for services rendered, the relief should be granted, even though the plaintiff's prayer asks for equitable relief by reformation of an accounting between the parties on the ground of mistake.—Holden v. Warren, 118 N. C. 326, 24 S. E. 770.

[w] (Ohio, 1860) A justice of the peace has no equity jurisdiction or power.—Carey v. Richards, 2 Ohio Dec. 630.

[x] (Ohio, 1893) The power to hear and determine controversies between heirs of an intestate, where the fact of advancements to such heirs is to be ascertained, and the legal effect thereof upon their several rights on distribution adjudicated, is an equity power, which a justice of the peace has no authority to exercise.—Moore v. Freeman, 50 Ohio St. 592, 35 N. E. 502.

[y] (Tenn. 1847) Act 1817, c. 68, § 1, authorizes a justice of the peace to inquire into the consideration of contracts under seal where the sum does not exceed $50; but it does not give to a justice the general power of court of chancery in other respects.—Bryan v. Buckholder, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 561.

[yy] (Tex. 1858) In this state equitable defenses are available in courts of law and before justices of the peace, though the latter cannot exercise equity powers in taking jurisdiction or giving affirmative relief.—Gibson v. Moore, 22 Tex. 611.

[z] (Tex. 1889) A justice of the peace cannot grant an injunction, but may try cases involving equitable as well as legal rights.—Crawford v. Sandridge, 75 Tex. 383, 12 S. W. 853.

[zz] (Tex. 1889) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of a suit to ascertain and fix the amount justly due, for which there is a lien on land, and to reform the contract as to the amount secured by the lien.—Crawford v. Sandridge, 75 Tex. 383, 12 S. W. 853.

§ 185. Enforcement of liens in general.

[a] (Ark. 1884) Under Const. art. 7, § 40, providing that a justice of the peace shall have no jurisdiction where a lien on land is involved, a justice of the peace can take no jurisdiction of a mechanic's lien on real estate.—Cotton v. Penzel, 44 Ark. 484.

[b] (Ga. 1879) Under the lien law of 1878, a justice of the peace may administer the affidavit and issue the execution for a laborer's lien.—Dexter v. Glover, 62 Ga. 312.

[c] (Ind. 1860) A suit to enforce a mechanic's lien on real estate is in the nature of a foreclosure suit, and is not within 2 Rev. St. p. 451, § 10, conferring civil jurisdiction upon justices.—Ainsworth v. Atkinson, 14 Ind. 538.

[d] (Ind. 1872) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to foreclose a chattel mortgage.—Snell v. Mohan, 38 Ind. 494.

[e] (Mo. 1874) The jurisdiction conferred on justices of the peace by Act 1872 over actions to enforce a mechanic's lien, where the amount involved is less than $50, is not taken from them, nor conferred on circuit courts, by reason of the fact that justices' courts have no process by which nonresident defendants in such proceedings can be reached.—Stamps v. Bridwell, 57 Mo. 22.

[f] (Mo. 1894) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6122, giving justices jurisdiction in civil cases for recovery of money on contract or tort, on a bond, or for a penalty, the amount involved not exceeding $250, a justice has no jurisdiction to enforce a lien for the expense of a sidewalk, which Act March 30, 1887, § 2, provides may be enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction, though such proceeding does not affect title to real estate, jurisdiction of which is denied a justice by Rev. St. § 6124.—City of Pleasant Hill v. Dasher, 120 Mo. 675, 25 S. W. 566.

[g] (Ohio, 1876) The enforcement of a claim for labor under the provisions of the mechanic's lien law of March 31, 1874, as to railroads (71 Ohio Laws, p. 51), may be had before a justice of the peace by an action at law. The case is not an equity suit to assert a lien on a fund, but is of legal cognizance, and no priorities are given, though the claim may be reduced by other claims which the company may set up by answer.—Scioto Val. Ry. Co. v. Cronin, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 315.

[h] (Tenn. 1879) Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction to enforce a lien on land for taxes in amount not exceeding $50.—State v. Covington, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 51.

[i] (Tex. 1858) A justice's court has no jurisdiction to enforce mortgages or vendor's liens, certainly where the property exceeds $100, though the balance due may be less.—Lane v. Howard, 22 Tex. 7.

[j] (Tex. 1881) Rev. St. art. 1539, giving justices' courts jurisdiction to foreclose liens on personal property, does not give them jurisdiction to foreclose a lien on the grade or roadbed of a railroad.—Texas & P. R. Co. v. McMullen, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 162.

[k] (Tex. 1881) Under Rev. St. art. 1544, providing that justices of the peace shall have no jurisdiction in suits for the trial of title to lands, or of suits for the enforcement of liens on lands, a justice court has no jurisdiction to foreclose a lien on a railroad grade or roadbed; the same being land within the statute.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. McMullen, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 160.

§ 186. Creditors' suit.

Creditors' suit against executor or administrator, see ante, § 138 [k].

[a] (Ohio, 1855) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to subject a chose in action belonging to a judgment debtor to the payment of the judgment; and hence the superior court has such jurisdiction though the judgment is less than $100.—Devou v. Simpson, 1 Handy, 557.

§ 187. Settlement of partnership affairs.

[a] (Ill. 1844) Partners may submit their partnership accounts to the decision of a justice of the peace, under the provisions of the act "concerning justices of the peace and constables," and he may entertain jurisdiction of the matter, and enter up a judgment in such case, provided the amount in issue does not exceed his jurisdiction.—Hyatt v. Harmon, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 379.

[b] (Mo. 1888) An action by one partner against another, on an unsettled account of more than one item, is strictly an equitable action, of which, under Rev. St. § 2837, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Rankin v. Fairley, 29 Mo. App. 587.

[c] (N. Y. 1820) An action for the adjustment of a partnership account cannot be brought before a justice of the peace.—Rickey v. Bowne, 18 Johns. 131.

[d] (N. C. 1890) An action by an assignee of an insolvent firm for the value of a note included in the assignment, against an indorsee to whom the note was assigned by one partner in settlement of a private debt, does not involve an account and settlement of the partnership matters of the insolvent firm, and a justice of the peace has jurisdiction.—Hartness v. Wallace, 106 N. C. 427, 11 S. E. 259.

[e] (N. C. 1891) In an action on a note executed by defendant to one K., who transferred it to plaintiffs, defendant pleaded payment, and introduced evidence that he and K., after the execution of the note, entered into partnership to gin cotton; that, at the dissolution of this partnership, he told K. to apply his share of the proceeds of the cotton left at the gin to the payment of the note; that K. sold the cotton, and applied the proceeds to that end. K., being called to testify, denied this, and asserted that defendant had told him to sell the cotton, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the firm's debts, which he did. He further testified that he went to defendant for a settlement, but never could get it. Held, that the settlement of the partnership affairs was not involved, and the action was therefore within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Hooks v. Houston, 109 N. C. 623, 14 S. E. 49.

§ 188. Equitable relief against married women.

[a] (N. Y. 1856) A justice of the peace, having no equity jurisdiction, cannot try an action to enforce the application of the separate property of a married woman to the payment of a promissory note which she has given for the benefit of such separate property.—Coon v. Brook, 21 Barb. 546.

[b] (N. C. 1883) An action against a married woman upon a promise to pay for work done on premises owned and held as her separate estate is not cognizable in the court of a justice of the peace. Such court is a common-law court, and its jurisdiction does not, therefore, embrace causes of an equitable nature.—Dougherty v. Sprinkle, 88 N. C. 300.

[c] (N. C. 1889) As a justice of the peace has only jurisdiction of common-law actions, he cannot entertain an action on a note given by a married woman not a free trader, though she retains the property for which the note was given, and uses it after her husband's death, as at common law a married woman's contract is absolutely void.—Berry v. Henderson, 102 N. C. 525, 9 S. E. 455.

[d] (N. C. 1890) Where a feme sole employs a servant for an indefinite time, compensation for services rendered after marriage can only be recovered against the wife when charged expressly or by necessary implication on her separate estate, and only then by an action in the superior court; the justice of the peace having no equitable jurisdiction.—Bevill v. Cox, 107 N. C. 175, 12 S. E. 52, 11 L. R. A. 274.

[e] (Ohio, 1876) Suit to charge the debts of a married woman upon her separate estate cannot be brought before a justice of the peace.—Allison v. Porter, 29 Ohio St. 136.

[f] (Ohio, 1878) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action against a married woman to recover for services in selling her separate real estate.—McConnell v. Nolan, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 268.

[g] (Ohio, 1881) A justice of the peace, having no chancery jurisdiction, cannot render a personal judgment against a married woman.—Schultz v. Myer, 6 Ohio Dec. 1086.

(H) ANCILLARY AND INCIDENTAL JURISDICTION.

Incidental question of title as affecting jurisdiction, see ante, § 84 [c].

§ 189. In general.

[a] (U. S. 1837) A justice of the peace may have jurisdiction of a matter incidentally, of which he would not, if it were the principal cause of action. Therefore he may have jurisdiction in an action of debt on a bond, in the penalty of $50, conditioned that, if a certain bay mare should be proved not to be the property of A., the bond should be in full force, otherwise void, and thus collaterally try the title to the mare.—Moore v. Waters, Fed. Cas. No. 9,780 [5 Cranch, C. C. 283].

[b] (Ark. 1847) Justices of the peace cannot decide upon matters of which they have no jurisdiction, as mere incidents to the subject-matter of a suit. To do so would be a fraud on the law.—Fitzgerald v. Beebe, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 305, 46 Am. Dec. 285.

[bb] (Colo. 1894) Where the property of a third person is attached under a writ issued by a justice of the peace, the owner may intervene, and have his property released, even though its value exceeds the amount over which a justice has jurisdiction; and a verdict and judgment in his favor in such proceeding will be valid, provided the damages do not exceed the justice's jurisdiction.—Corthell v. Mead, 19 Colo. 386, 35 Pac. 741.

[c] (Mo. 1863) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to enter judgment on motion on a forthcoming bond taken in an attachment suit commenced before him, though the penalty exceeds his jurisdiction in a direct suit on the bond. Rev. Code 1855, pp. 266, 925, 926.—McDowell v. Morgan, 33 Mo. 555.

[d] (Mo. 1875) In an attachment suit before a justice of the peace, where the amount originally sued for is within the jurisdiction, he will also have jurisdiction of the interplea, though the value of the property attached and of that claimed exceeds the amount for which suit may be brought in that court.—Mills v. Thomson, 61 Mo. 415.

[e] (Mo. 1893) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction, in an action of attachment, to hear and determine an interplea for the attached property, though it exceeds in value the amount fixed by law as the limit of justices' jurisd ction; since the interplea is an incident growing out of the main action.—Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Glazier, 55 Mo. App. 95.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) A justice of the peace, in a proceeding instituted and had before him according to the provisions of a statute of the state, which statute requires him to issue his warrant for the collection of the costs, possesses all needful authority to decide on the amount of costs as incidental and absolutely necessary to enable him to issue the warrant.—Voorhees v. Martin, 12 Barb. 508.

[g] (N. Y. 1877) A justice of the peace, in an action regularly brought before him to recover a penalty for less than $200, has jurisdiction to pass on every question involved in the action, including the validity of the law imposing the penalty.—Hallock v. Dominy, 69 N. Y. 238.

[h] (N. C. 1843) Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the principal question, as on a contract to pay for certain articles, he also has the jurisdiction to determine every incidental question, as, for instance, whether the condition upon which the contract has been executed has been performed.—Garrett v. Shaw, 25 N. C. 395.

[i] (N. C. 1882) A justice's court, having jurisdiction of the principal matter of an action, has incidental jurisdiction of every question necessary to its proper determination, and may permit an equity to be set up as a defense, though having no affirmative equitable jurisdiction.—Lutz v. Thompson, 87 N. C. 334.

[j] (N. C. 1892) A justice, who has obtained jurisdiction of the principal matter of an action, as on a bond, has jurisdiction also of every question necessary to its determination; and may allow, therefore, a release of the surety to be set up as a defense, though such a defense is equitable in its nature.—Bell v. Howerton, 111 N. C. 69, 15 S. E. 891.

[k] (N. C. 1896) Attachment of personal property is only ancillary to the action, and a justice of the peace may entertain an interplea to determine the title, though the value of the property exceed $50.—Gramling v. Dickey, 118 N. C. 986, 24 S. E. 671.

[l] (Pa. 1892) Where a justice of the peace issues an attachment under Act July 12, 1842, he has no authority to determine the claims of third persons to ownership of the property attached, for the act makes no provision for such an inquiry and adjudication by him.—Jackson v. Bradley (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 321.

RESTORATION OF JURISDICTION, § 198.

Constitutionality of statute devesting justice of jurisdiction, see ante, § 72 [qq].
Title to land as ousting jurisdiction, see ante, §§ 83–97.

See ante, § 73 [g].
Withdrawal of appearance as ousting jurisdiction, see post, § 276 [d].

[a] (Cal. 1855) A. commenced in a justice's court an action of forcible entry and detainer. The justice, instead of proceeding to try the case, certified it to the district court. Held, the transfer of the cause was illegal, and could not defeat the plaintiff's rights by operating a discontinuance.—Larue v. Gaskins, 5 Cal. 507.

[b] (Iowa, 1881) Upon an application for change of venue, in an action before a justice, the duty of determining the justice to whom the transfer is to be made is a judicial one, and a mere mistake in sending it to a justice in the county other than the nearest one is judicial error, only, and does not oust the jurisdiction, and the question cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding.—Tennis v. Anderson, 55 Iowa, 625, 8 N. W. 477.

[c] (Mich. 1891) How. Ann. St. § 6938, provides that judgment of nonsuit shall be entered by a justice of the peace against a plaintiff for failure to appear within an hour after the return of the process. Held, that while, by judicial construction, this section has been applied to defendants, as regards them it is not a jurisdictional requirement, but is merely a privilege; and the justice does not lose jurisdiction by not waiting an hour for defendant to appear, and the justice's entry of judgment need not show that he so waited.—Talbot v. Kuhn, 89 Mich. 30, 50 N. W. 791, 28 Am. St. Rep. 273.

[d] (Minn. 1869) Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 21, prescribing the time when pleadings are to take place in a justice's court, is imperative, and, unless complied with, the justice loses his jurisdiction.—Mattice v. Litcherding, 14 Minn. 142 (Gil. 110).

[e] (N. J. 1838) Where a justice of the peace has dismissed a jury because of their inability to reach a verdict, his jurisdiction has ceased, and he has no authority to grant a new trial.—Gulick v. Van Tilburg, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 417.

[f] (N. J. 1839) In the court of small causes, where the jury cannot agree on their verdict and are dismissed by the justice, his jurisdiction in the cause is at an end.—Waddell v. Physick, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 331.

[g] (N. Y. 1849) Where a justice of the peace has once acquired jurisdiction, he will not lose it by subsequent error or irregularity.—Hard v. Shipman, 6 Barb. 621.

[h] (Or. 1877) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, once obtained over the subject-matter of an action, continues until the action abates or is legally disposed of by the justice. The rendering of a void judgment by the justice does not terminate the action, so as to prevent such justice from issuing an alias summons and acquiring jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.—Knapp v. King, 6 Or. 243.

[i] (Or. 1891) A complaint against a railroad company was filed with a justice of the peace, who issued a summons to the company's agent. On this summons a judgment by default was entered, which was afterwards set aside on the plaintiff's motion, and an alias summons issued. Before the service of the alias summons the company had sued out a writ to review and set aside the void judgment. It appeared before the justice, and filed an answer in abatement, to which a demurrer was sustained. The company made no further defense, and judgment was entered against it. Held, that the void judgment did not terminate the jurisdiction of the justice, and the company was bound by the second judgment.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Russell, 20 Or. 459, 26 Pac. 304.

[j] (Pa. 1894) The payment of costs of a justice on his promise to discontinue a suit is the end of the action, and deprives the justice of further jurisdiction.—Musser's Adm'r v. Simpson (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 526.

[k] (Wis. 1890) Where one of several defendants to an action in justice's court is not served with process, and does not appear, a judgment by default against him is a nullity, and does not terminate the justice's jurisdiction over the others.—French v. Higgins, 77 Wis. 121, 45 N. W. 817.

§ 191. Absence or delay of justice.

Delay in rendering judgment as ousting jurisdiction, see post, §§ 390–392.

[a] (Kan. 1873) Where a justice on September 2d, the time to which the case had been previously adjourned, was engaged in other official business, and the case was not called until the Monday following, at which last-mentioned time the case appears to have been tried and the judgment complained of rendered, held, that the justice did not lose jurisdiction of the case.—Kaub v. Mitchell, 12 Kan. 57.

[b] (Kan. 1891) Judgment rendered by a justice was afterwards set aside by him on defendant's motion, and a new trial set for a future day. On that day the parties appeared, but the justice was absent from his office. Afterwards the justice set aside the order setting aside the judgment and granting a new trial, and execution was issued on the judgment. Held, that after the judgment was set aside it ceased to exist, and that the justice, by his absence on the day set for the new trial, lost jurisdiction of the case, so that his order reinstating the judgment was void.—Olson v. Nunnally, 47 Kan. 391, 28 Pac. 149, 27 Am. St. Rep. 296.

[c] (Me. 1840) The absence of the justice at the time and place to which he has continued a case operates a discontinuance.—Spencer v. Perry, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 413.

[d] (Me. 1840) In an action before a justice, if he is not present at the time when the writ is made returnable, and the case is not continued as provided by statute in such cases, it operates a discontinuance.—Martin v. Fales, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 23, 36 Am. Dec. 693.

[e] (Mich. 1861) The fact that the justice was a few minutes late at the hour set for the hearing of an adjourned case, being employed on a coroner's inquest, will not work a discontinuance, though defendant may have left the office at the end of the hour.—Stadler v. Moors, 9 Mich. 264.

[f] (Mich. 1880) A justice of the peace was also superintendent of the poor, under appointment from the board of supervisors. At the hour to which a cause was adjourned he was absent, attending to duties as such superintendent. Returning within half an hour after its expiration, he notified defendant of his readiness to proceed, but, he refusing to appear, adjournment was had, notice served on defendant, and judgment on default finally entered against him.

Held, that the justice's absence was not on official duties as justice, and his judgment was erroneous.—Roberts v. Hathaway, 42 Mich. 592, 4 N. W. 307.

[g] (N. Y. 1809) If the parties appear on the return day, and the justice does not attend, but sends a note, without signing it, adjourning the court, it is not an adjournment which the parties are bound to notice. The cause is discontinued, and all subsequent proceedings are void.—Wiest v. Critsinger, 4 Johns. 117.

[h] (N. Y. 1810) Where a justice adjourned a cause until 10 o'clock, a. m., and the defendant appeared at the time and place, and, after waiting nearly three hours, went away, and the justice came soon after, and proceeded to hear the cause on the part of the plaintiff, and gave judgment against the defendant, held, that the delay of the justice to attend was unreasonable, and that the cause thereby became discontinued.—Taft v. Grosfent, 5 Johns. 353.

[i] (N. Y. 1814) A delay on the part of a justice to open his court for more than two hours after the time appointed by the summons, and then adjourning the cause to another day, when he heard it ex parte, amounts to a discontinuance of the suit.—McCarthy v. McPherson, 11 Johns. 407.

[j] (N. Y. 1815) A delay in proceeding to trial, caused by the justice being engaged in another cause, will not work a discontinuance of the suit.—Chamberlain v. Lovet, 12 Johns. 217.

[k] (N. Y. 1823) Where a justice fails to attend at the adjourned day, the cause is discontinued.—Stoddard v. Holmes, 1 Cow. 245.

[l] (N. Y. 1833) Generally, unless a cause is tried within an hour after the time appointed, the omission amounts to a discontinuance; but, if the justice is engaged at the hour in trying another cause, which occupies him till after the time, this is a good reason for delay, and he may proceed as soon as possible after his other official engagements are disposed of.—Hunt v. Wickwire, 10 Wend. 103, 25 Am. Dec. 545.

[m] (N. Y. 1848) A justice, by absenting himself from the court at the time appointed for the hearing, does not oust his authority to proceed with the cause, where he appears within a few minutes thereafter and notifies the party of his intention to proceed with the trial.—Everitt v. Lisk, 1 Code Rep. 70.

[n] (N. Y. 1851) The departure of a justice, after his refusal to adjourn the cause on application of defendant, from the place of trial, stating that it was uncertain at what time he should return, was a discontinuance of the suit, and all proceedings thereafter were without jurisdiction, unless the parties voluntarily awaited his return, or in some manner assented to the delay.—Lynsky v. Pendegrast, 2 E. D. Smith, 43.

[o] (N. Y. 1878) A justice of the peace loses jurisdiction of an action by failing to appear within one hour after the time to which it has been adjourned.—Flint v. Gault, 15 Hun, 213.

[p] (Pa. 1883) Where an alderman was not present at his office at a time fixed for hearing in an action, he loses jurisdiction, and a judgment thereafter entered in the absence of defendant is void.—Henderson v. Alexander, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 11.

[q] (Vt. 1837) The absence of a justice of the peace from a place to which a cause has been adjourned by him for the whole half day within which the cause was set down for trial is a discontinuance of the action.—Brown v. Stacy, 9 Vt. 118.

[r] (Vt. 1839) Where a justice fails to make an entry of an action within two hours after the time set for trial, as provided by statute, the fact that he was purposely detained by defendant until after the expiration of the two hours cannot give him jurisdiction, though defendant appears after such two hours, and the justice offers him a hearing, which he declines.—Phelps v. Birge, 11 Vt. 161.

[s] (Vt. 1840) Where a justice who signs a writ is absent on the return day, any other justice, in order to continue the suit, must be present at the place set for trial within two hours after the time set in the writ, and have the writ in his possession. If this is not done, the suit is discontinued, and no after proceedings can be legally had.—Crawford v. Cheney, 12 Vt. 567.

[t] (Vt. 1846) A justice of the peace before whom a writ was returnable was absent on the return day. The plaintiff carried the writ to the residence of another justice, and had him enter a continuance, and, after two hours had elapsed from the time of the return, such justice came to the place of return, where the parties still were, and affirmed the continuance. Held, that the suit was discontinued, so that a subsequent judgment by default could not be sustained, since another justice, in order regularly to continue a cause, where the justice before whom the writ is returnable is absent on return day, must be present at the place of return within two hours from the time appointed for the return.—Hinman v. Swift, 18 Vt. 315.

§ 192. Absence or delay of plaintiff.

[a] (Mich. 1874) The failure of a plaintiff to appear within an hour of the time to which a cause in a justice's court has been adjourned for the completion of the trial operates as a discontinuance, and deprives the justice of all jurisdiction thereafter to render any judgment against the defendant, or any judgment whatever, except that of nonsuit and for costs.—Brady v. Taber, 29 Mich. 199.

[b] (N. Y. 1812) If the plaintiff, or some person on his behalf, do not appear on the return of process before a justice of the peace, it is a discontinuance; and, if the justice proceed in the cause, it is error, even though, on the return of process, the note on which the suit was brought was delivered to the justice, with a request of the defendant indorsed on it to enter judgment against him.—Sprague v. Shed, 9 Johns. 140.

[c] (N. Y. 1814) Where, after issue in a justice court, defendant appears at the time appointed, but plaintiff does not appear, and the justice is informed that he is near at hand, and delays calling and nonsuiting him on defendant's motion, who soon after leaves court, and plaintiff in about an hour appears, when the justice proceeds to hear and decide the cause, there is no such unreasonable delay as will work a discontinuance.—Wilde v. Dunn, 11 Johns. 459.

[d] (N. Y. 1818) Where the trial of a cause before a justice, after being commenced, was suspended for a time, and, when resumed, the plaintiff did not appear, it was held that it was a discontinuance, and that the justice could not proceed with the trial.—Baldwin v. Carter, 15 Johns. 496.

[e] (N. Y. 1856) The failure of the plaintiff in a justice's court to appear on the day to which a case has been adjourned works a discontinuance of the action.—Norris v. Bleakley, 1 Hilt. 90, 3 Abb. Prac. 107.

[f] (N. Y. 1890) Plaintiff procured a summons returnable on a certain day. On that day plaintiff did not appear, but sent word desiring an adjournment to another day, which was granted, and defendant's motion to dismiss denied. Held, that the justice lost jurisdiction of the case by reason of plaintiff's failure to appear within one hour after the time specified in the summons for the return thereof, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2934, and that his adjournment of the case to another day was void.—Todd v. Doremus, 60 Hun, 385, 15 N. Y. Supp. 470.

[g] (Tex. 1858) The fact that there is nothing done by plaintiff in the prosecution of a suit in a justice's court for a period of more than four years operates as a discontinuance of the suit.—Flanagan v. Smith, 21 Tex. 493.

§ 193. Continuances or adjournments as ousting jurisdiction.

[a] (Ark. 1887) Under Mansf. Dig. § 4064, which provides that when a justice of the peace shall be satisfied that a jury sworn in his cause, after being out a reasonable time, cannot agree on a verdict, he may discharge them and issue a summons for another, to appear at a time not more than three days distant, the justice does not lose jurisdiction over the subject-matter by a continuance and summons for a new jury to appear at a time four days distant.—Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Donahoe, 49 Ark. 318, 5 S. W. 342.

[b] (Conn. 1864) To make an adjournment by a justice of the peace from day to day legal, so as to prevent a discontinuance, there must have been an actual adjournment.—Town of New Haven v. Rogers, 32 Conn. 221.

[c] (Ill. 1880) The act of a justice of the peace in continuing a case 33 days against the plaintiff's consent on request of the defendant's attorney for 30 days' continuance to take a deposition, held to operate as a discontinuance, and the judgment rendered to be void.—Crichton v. Beebe, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 272.

[d] (Iowa, 1892) Where a justice, in violation of Code 1873, § 3527, adjourned a cause for more than three days, plaintiff alone consenting, he lost jurisdiction, notwithstanding that an agent of defendant was subsequently given verbal notice by plaintiff of the day to which the cause was adjourned.—Iowa Union Tel. Co. v. Boylan, 86 Iowa, 90, 52 N. W. 1122.

[e] (Iowa, 1892) An adjournment by a justice on his own motion for more than three days ousts his jurisdiction, and a default judgment entered after such adjournment is void.—Iowa Union Tel. Co. v. Boylan, 86 Iowa, 90, 52 N. W. 1122.

[f] (Mich. 1887) Under How. Ann. St. § 6003, allowing an adjournment of a cause by a justice of the peace for a period not exceeding six days, an adjournment for a longer period operates as a discontinuance of the suit.—Scullen v. George, 65 Mich. 215, 31 N. W. 841.

[g] (Mich. 1891) How. Ann. St. § 7094, provides that "on the return of the warrant with the accused the said justice shall proceed to * * * determine the cause within one week," unless the excusable absence of witnesses shall render a continuance necessary. Held, that a justice lost jurisdiction by adjourning for eight days an action for breach of the peace at the request of an absent attorney claiming authority to act for defendants, when the latter in open court expressly repudiated such authority, and demanded immediate trial.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 85 Mich. 502, 48 N. W. 625.

[h] (Mich. 1891) At the time a summons was returnable before a justice plaintiffs appeared by counsel, and defendant in person and by his counsel's clerk. It was then mutually agreed that the cause stand adjourned until a certain day and hour, and the parties dispersed. A few minutes thereafter, plaintiffs' attorney, finding that he would be unable to attend at the time set, by telephone obtained consent of defendant's counsel to have the cause adjourned to the day following that to which the case had already been adjourned and so informed the justice. Thereafter the justice changed the minutes of the adjournment to the latter date. Plaintiffs appeared at said time, and, defendant not appearing, trial proceeded ex parte, resulting in a judgment for plaintiffs. Held, that the justice did not lose jurisdiction by reason of the irregularity of the adjournment.—Simon v. Sempliner, 86 Mich. 136, 48 N. W. 700.

[i] (Minn. 1861) An adjournment in a justice's court on an insufficient affidavit amounts to a discontinuance.—School Dist. No. 7 of Wright County v. Thompson, 5 Minn. 280 (Gil. 221).

[j] (Minn. 1881) Where plaintiff, in an action in a justice's court, appears and files his complaint on the return day, but defendant does not appear, the justice does not lose jurisdiction by holding the case open until the second day thereafter to enable plaintiff to make his proofs.—Gillett v. Truax, 27 Minn. 528, 8 N. W. 767.

[k] (N. J. 1793) On the return day of a summons both parties appeared, and plaintiff craved a jury. A venire was granted by the justice, returnable on December 8th. On the return day the justice was taken sick, and no adjournment was made. Two days afterwards plaintiff craved another venire, which was issued, returnable on the 24th, and notice of trial was regularly served on defendant. Held, that the failure to enter a regular continuance of the cause did not operate as a discontinuance of the suit, where everything was done fairly and with notice.—Darlings v. Corey, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 200.

[l] (N. J. 1886) On the affidavit used in procuring an adjournment a second adjournment was granted plaintiff to a time more than 30 days from the first appearance. The second adjourned day plaintiff did not appear; but defendant appeared and moved to dismiss, which was denied, and a further adjournment granted. Defendant did not appear on the last adjourned day, and judgment was rendered against him. Held, that it was without jurisdiction and void.—Savage v. Collins, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 167, 6 Atl. 502.

[m] (N. Y.) An adjournment, improperly made by a justice of the peace, amounts to a discontinuance.—(1807) Gamage v. Law, 2 Johns. 192; (1833) Kimball v. Mack, 10 Wend. 497.

[n] (N. Y. 1811) Where a justice adjourns a cause, on the suggestion of the plaintiff that the defendant had agreed to an adjournment, and on the affidavit of the plaintiff of the absence of a material witness, without showing due diligence to procure his attendance, the adjournment is unauthorized, and amounts to a discontinuance.—Proudfit v. Henman, 8 Johns. 391.

[o] (N. Y. 1849) A justice of the peace will not lose jurisdiction of a cause by erroneously adjourning it contrary to the agreement of the parties.—Hard v. Shipman, 6 Barb. 621.

[p] (N. Y. 1860) By an adjournment in excess of the power of a justice of the peace, he loses jurisdiction of the case.—Peck v. Andrews, 32 Barb. 445.

[q] (N. Y. 1870) If the defendant does not appear in a justice's court, an adjournment for more than eight days, either on motion of the justice or at plaintiff's request, is irregular, and the justice loses jurisdiction.—Miller v. Larmon, 38 How. Prac. 417.

[r] (N. Y. 1885) On summary proceedings for the possession of real estate before a justice of the peace, where defendant moved to dismiss the proceedings, and the justice, after hearing the testimony relative thereto, adjourned the proceedings for the purpose of a decision thereon, the adjournment was unauthorized, and operated as a discontinuance of the proceedings.—Kiernan v. Reming, 2 How. Prac. (N. S.) 89, 7 Civ. Proc. R. 311.

[s] (N. Y. 1887) An adjournment of a summary proceeding to dissolve an injunction pending in a justice court does not operate as a discontinuance of the proceedings and render further proceedings therein void.—Goff v. Vedder, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 358.

[t] (N. Y. 1887) Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2960, 2983, authorizing an adjournment of an action on plaintiff's motion, on the return day, for not more than eight days, and a further adjournment when he desires a commission to take testimony, constitute the only authority for granting a continuance on plaintiff's motion, and an adjournment for a longer time, or under different circumstances, deprives the justice of jurisdiction.—Redford v. Snow, 46 Hun, 370.

[u] (N. Y. 1889) Code Civ. Proc. § 2959, provides that at the time of the return of a summons, or the joinder of issue without process, but at no other time, a justice may adjourn the trial of an action not more than eight days, unless defendant has been arrested; and section 2960 provides that at such time the justice must, on plaintiff's application, adjourn the trial not more than eight days, but not unless on plaintiff's oath, if required by defendant, that it cannot be safely proceeded with for want of some material testimony. On the return day of a summons, which had been personally served on defendant, the court on its own motion adjourned the trial five days for defendant's failure to appear. On the adjourned day, defendant again failing to appear, and plaintiff's attorney having produced satisfactory evidence of plaintiff's illness, the trial was again adjourned for five days, at the expiration of which judgment was rendered for plaintiff on defendant's failure to appear. Held, that the adjournments were regular and the justice did not lose jurisdiction.—Rogers v. Edmonds, 55 Hun, 604, 7 N. Y. Supp. 881.

[v] (N. Y. 1891) A verbal agreement was made between counsel that a cause in a justice's court should be adjourned to a day thereafter, to be agreed on by them, and, in default of such agreement, that the court might appoint a day for the trial. Plaintiff's counsel notified the justice of a day agreed on, and the justice notified defendants' counsel, who telegraphed to his clients, but could get no reply. Judgment was taken against defendants by default on the day so fixed. Held, that the verbal agreement between counsel was too loose to keep the cause in court, and that the judgment against defendants should be reversed for want of jurisdiction.—Bonney v. Paul, 61 Hun, 620, 15 N. Y. Supp. 442.

[w] (Vt. 1869) Where a summons from a justice's court was returnable at a hotel owned by plaintiff, and on the return day plaintiff, claiming that the suit had been settled, prohibited the justice from holding court in his hotel, and the justice adjourned the trial to another convenient day and place, such adjournment, the plaintiff being duly notified, did not operate as a discontinuance, ousting the justice of jurisdiction.—Remick v. Sanborn, 42 Vt. 477.

[ww] (Vt. 1874) If a justice of the peace continue a cause returnable before him without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, and without attending with the writ at the time and place of trial, it operates as a discontinuance of the suit.—Pinney v. Petty, 47 Vt. 616.

[x] (Wash. 1888) Where the petition for certiorari to a justice's judgment shows that the cause was continued to a certain day, which was Sunday, and afterwards proceeded without a new notice to, or personal appearance of, defendant, it is error to dismiss the application for insufficiency, as the justice thereby lost jurisdiction over the person of defendant, which could not be regained without a new notice, or waiver by appearance.—Taylor v. Ringer, 3 Wash. T. 539, 19 Pac. 147.

[xx] (Wash. 1890) Under Code, § 1769, which provides that a justice of the peace may, on the application of either party, continue a case for any time not exceeding 60 days, a continuance of a case for more than 60 days will devest the justice of jurisdiction unless it was by consent of both parties.—Nelson v. Campbell, 1 Wash. St. 261, 24 Pac. 539.

[y] (Wis. 1861) An adjournment by a justice of a suit before him for more than 90 days, works a discontinuance of the action.—Mahr v. Young, 13 Wis. 634.

[yy] (Wis. 1871) If a justice of the peace grants a second adjournment on plaintiff's motion, without defendant's consent and without the oath required by Rev. St. c. 120, § 62, he loses jurisdiction.—Baizer v. Lasch, 28 Wis. 268.

[z] (Wis. 1888) Rev. St. § 3631, provides that in justices' courts no adjournment, after the first, shall be allowed unless the party applying shall show by oath that he cannot safely proceed to trial. There having already been two adjournments for cause shown, the case was again adjourned, on motion of plaintiff, and cause shown, against the objections of defendant, after the jury was sworn. On the adjourned day plaintiff appeared; but defendant, though in court, refused to appear. On motion of plaintiff but without affidavit or cause shown, the case was again adjourned. On the day to which the case was adjourned, defendant did not appear, and judgment was rendered against him. Held, that the adjournment was unauthorized by law, depriving the justice of jurisdiction, and the judgment should be reversed.—State v. Gust, 70 Wis. 631, 35 N. W. 559.

[zz] (Wis. 1896) Rev. St. § 3631, provides that no adjournment after the first shall be allowed on application of a party, unless he satisfy the justice, by oath, that he cannot safely proceed to trial; and section 3586 provides that if a justice of the peace be unable, from sickness, to attend to business when there is pending before him any matter undetermined, he may deliver his docket to some other justice, who may thereupon proceed to try and determine such matter. Held, that a justice lost jurisdiction by a second adjournment, "by consent of plaintiff, and in consequence of sickness of the court," in the absence of defendant.—Gallager v. Serfling, 92 Wis. 544, 66 N. W. 692.

§ 194. —— Adjournment at unauthorized time.

[a] (Mich. 1861) The adjournment of a cause by a justice on his own motion, in the absence and without the consent of the defendant, at any other time than on the return day of the writ, is a discontinuance of the cause, ousting him of jurisdiction.—Stadler v. Moors, 9 Mich. 264.

[b] (N. J. 1880) By adjournment before the day appointed for trial, in the absence of parties and without their consent, the justice loses jurisdiction.—Dittmar Powder Mfg. Co. v. Leon, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 540.

[c] (N. Y. 1891) Upon the return of a summons in a justice's court, plaintiff, without pleading, obtained an adjournment of two days, defendants objecting, to procure counsel, and thereafter, upon the adjourned day, recovered a judgment against defendants. Held, that Code Civ. Proc. § 2959, providing that "at the time of the return of a summons or of joinder of issue without process, but at no other time, the justice may, in his discretion, and upon his own motion, adjourn the trial of the action," etc., applied only to proceedings after issue joined, and that, under section 2934, providing that, "where both parties appear upon the return of the summons, an issue must be joined before an adjournment is had, except when the defendant neglects or refuses to plead," the justice, by the unauthorized adjournment, lost jurisdiction of the case.—Duel v. Sykes, 59 Hun, 117, 13 N. Y. Supp. 166.

§ 195. —— Adjournments for indefinite periods.

[a] (Neb. 1891) A justice of the peace who continues an action, according to the stipulation of the parties, until the determination of a similar action in the district court, loses jurisdiction, because the adjournment is for an indefinite period.—Lininger v. Glenn, 33 Neb. 187, 49 N. W. 1128.

[b] (N. J. 1854) Where a cause in a justice's court is adjourned without fixing a day, but to such day as counsel shall agree upon, and the defendant's counsel refuses to agree to a day, the cause is out of court, and the justice cannot fix a day and give notice thereof to the defendant.—Woodworth v. Wolverton, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 419.

[c] (Wis. 1866) Where a justice of the peace adjourns a cause, without specifying the hour of the day or the place to which it is adjourned, he loses jurisdiction, and the judgment is void.—Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 451.

§ 196. —— Insufficient entries of adjournment on docket.

[a] (Mich. 1896) The suspension of the trial of a case by a justice from noon until 10 o'clock the following morning is not an "adjournment," such as is provided for by 2 How. Ann. St. §§ 6899–6903, and which is required by section 7053 to be entered on the docket, with a statement of the time and place, and the justice does not by such action lose jurisdiction, though the place is not shown by the docket entry.—Woempener v. Ketchum, 110 Mich. 34, 67 N. W. 1106.

[b] (Minn. 1896) Where defendant did not appear, and the cause was adjourned for three days, but the justice omitted to state in his docket on whose motion adjournment was had, the justice did not lose jurisdiction.—Wheeler v. Paterson, 64 Minn. 231, 66 N. W. 964, 58 Am. St. Rep. 527.

[c] (Wis. 1863) Unless the hour of the day and also the place to which a cause is adjourned by a justice of the peace is entered upon his docket at the time of the adjournment, he loses jurisdiction of the cause.—Brown v. Kellogg, 17 Wis. 475.

[d] (Wis. 1864) After a cause was submitted by both parties, the justice took time to consider, and made an entry on his docket that the cause was "continued" to a specified day and hour (being within the time limited by Rev. St. c. 120, § 96), but without mentioning any place. Held, that the omission did not operate as a discontinuance of the cause.—Wheeler v. Smith, 18 Wis. 651.

[e] (Wis. 1867) A justice does not lose jurisdiction of a cause by the clerical mistake of writing the letter "p." instead of "m.," in a docket entry of an adjournment to another certain day, "at 10 o'clock, a. p." The entire omission of "a. p." or "a. m." would not make the designation of the time fatally defective for uncertainty.—Taylor v. Wilkinson, 22 Wis. 40.

[f] (Wis. 1878) Unless the docket entry of a justice of the peace shows the place, day, and hour to which a cause is adjourned, he loses jurisdiction, notwithstanding a return that he stated the place, etc., orally.—Brahmstead v. Ward, 44 Wis. 591.

[g] (Wis. 1883) The failure of a justice of the peace to enter in his docket the place, as well as the time, to which a cause pending before him is adjourned, defeats his jurisdiction, unless the parties voluntarily appear in the action subsequently, and renders all subsequent proceedings therein void.—Witt v. Henze, 58 Wis. 244, 16 N. W. 609.

[h] (Wis. 1890) A recess taken by a justice's court at 2 o'clock p. m. until 10 o'clock a. m. of the following day, on account of the illness of the justice, is not an "adjournment," within Rev. St. § 3574, subd. 5, which requires the justice to enter in his docket "every adjournment, stating at whose request, and to what time and place"; and hence the justice does not lose jurisdiction by his failure to enter in his docket the place to which the recess was taken.—French v. Higgins, 77 Wis. 121, 45 N. W. 817.

§ 197. —— Persons entitled to raise objection.

[a] (Mich. 1874) A defendant, who consented to an adjournment of a case against him in a justice court on account of the illness of the justice, cannot complain that such adjournment was made on the motion of the justice, and was for more than six days, and hence amounted to a discontinuance, which deprived the justice of jurisdiction.—Patterson v. McRea, 29 Mich. 258.

[b] (Neb. 1893) On application of defendant, and with the consent of plaintiff, a justice of the peace adjourned a suit for more than 90 days from the return day of the summons. On the day to which the cause stood adjourned, defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the justice on the ground that the action had been continued beyond the 90 days limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 961, which objection was overruled. Held, that such adjournment did not operate as a discontinuance of the action, and that defendant was estopped from claiming the same.—Fischer v. Cooley, 36 Neb. 626, 54 N. W. 960.

§ 198. Restoration of jurisdiction.

Appearance by attorney without proof of authority as restoring jurisdiction, see post, § 278 [q].

[a] (Mass. 1835) Where, in trespass before a justice of the peace, the filing of a plea of title to real estate has ousted his jurisdiction, it cannot be restored by pleading over and joining an issue not involving the question of title.—Kelley v. Taylor, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 218.

[b] (Wis. 1863) Where a justice of the peace adjourned a case without entering the hour of the day and the place to which it was adjourned on his docket, and thereby lost jurisdiction, a subsequent entry did not operate to supply the defect or restore jurisdiction.—Brown v. Kellogg, 17 Wis. 475.

[a] (U. S. 1809) A magistrate, who has received a deed of trust from an insolvent debtor which is fraudulent in law as to creditors, is incompetent to act as a magistrate in the discharge of the debtor under the insolvent law of Virginia.—Slacum v. Simms, 9 U. S. (5 Cranch) 363, 3 L. Ed. 126.

[b] (U. S. 1805) The mayor of Washington, D. C., cannot exercise jurisdiction in a case in which he is a party.—Barney v. City of Washington, Fed. Cas. No. 1,033 [1 Cranch, C. C. 248].

[c] (Ala. 1895) The disqualifications declared by Code, § 647, providing that no justice "must sit in any cause or proceeding in which he is * * * related to either party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity," are not exclusive of the disqualifications of the common law.—Pegues v. Baker, 110 Ala. 251, 17 South. 943.

[d] (La. 1883) A justice of the peace is not recusable in a case contesting the validity of an ordinance passed by a town council while he was a member thereof.—City of Alexandria v. Williams, 35 La. Ann. 329.

[e] (Me. 1844) The mere fact that a justice of the peace and of the quorum has issued a citation to the creditor does not disqualify him from acting in the same case in the examination of the debtor.—Ayer v. Woodman, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 196.

[f] (Me. 1882) The fact that one of the justices hearing the disclosure of a poor debtor was a creditor of the debtor does not disqualify him from acting.—Fuller v. Davis, 73 Me. 556.

[g] (Mass.) Any interest of a justice of the peace in a penalty, though minute, takes away his jurisdiction; the only exception being where there is a necessity for the justice to act in order to prevent a failure of justice.—(1816) Pearce v. Atwood, 13 Mass. 324; (1828) Hill v. Wells, 23 Mass. (6 Pick.) 104.

[h] (Mass. 1850) A justice of the peace cannot take jurisdiction of an action, if he has an interest in the suit and has instigated the prosecution of the same.—Richardson v. Welcome, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 331.

[i] (Mich. 1890) A plea based on How. Ann. St. § 6822, providing that no justice shall take cognizance of any cause or do any judicial act when he shall be interested in such cause, is sufficient when it shows that the justice was an interested party when the plea was filed, though he may have had no interest when the warrant issued.—Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45, 45 N. W. 377; Howes v. Same, 81 Mich. 51, 45 N. W. 378.

[j] (Minn. 1875) Under Gen. St. c. 64, § 4, and c. 65, § 4, providing that a justice of the peace shall not sit in a case in which he is directly or indirectly interested, a justice of the peace cannot issue a search warrant for his own property; and, where the fact that he has done so appears on the face of the warrant itself, it will be no protection to the officer acting under it.—Jordan v. Henry, 22 Minn. 245.

[k] (N. H. 1844) Where A., B., and C. are co-sureties, and A. pays his share to reimburse the advances of B., and is discharged by B. from further claim, he has no such interest in the event of a suit brought by B. to recover a similar contributory payment from C. as to prevent his presiding at the same as a magistrate.—Russell v. Perry, 16 N. H. 100.

[l] (N. J. 1864) Under the game law (Nix. Dig. p. 334) a justice of the peace, who is the owner of the land trespassed on, cannot act as justice in a proceeding to recover the penalty therefor.—Schroder v. Ehlers, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 44.

[m] (N. Y. 1854) The statute, which declares that no judge of any court shall sit as such in any cause to which he is a party, extends to justices of the peace sitting in the court of sessions.—Baldwin v. McArthur, 17 Barb. 414.

[n] (N. Y. 1865) A justice of the peace is not disqualified from trying a cause and rendering judgment therein by reason of his having been a juror in an action between the same parties and for the same cause of action, wherein a verdict was rendered for the plaintiff.—Travis v. Jenkins, 30 How. Prac. 152.

[o] (Pa. 1888) A justice of the peace is not disqualified from trying a suit to recover a penalty for the violation of a municipal ordinance because he is also the town clerk under a salary.—Commonwealth v. Fenstermacher, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 424.

[p] (R. I. 1886) In an action of trover for the conversion of a uniform belonging to plaintiff, a military company, a justice, who is a member of the company, is interested, and cannot take jurisdiction, though the interest is only for the time of membership.—Kentish Artillery v. Gardiner, 15 R. I. 296, 3 Atl. 662.

[q] (Tex. 1893) A justice of the peace is disqualified from rendering judgment, in garnishment proceedings by the fact that, before his appointment to the office, he had become a surety for plaintiff on the garnishment bond.—Franco-Texan Land Co. v. Howe, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 22 S. W. 766.

[r] (Tex. 1893) A land agent who is in partnership with an attorney under an agreement to pool their earnings, and divide them equally, is disqualified from acting as justice of the peace in an action wherein his partner is attorney for one of the parties.—Franco-Texan Land Co. v. Howe, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 22 S. W. 766.

[s] (Vt. 1836) Under the statute of 1832, by which any justice of the peace who could legally try a cause between the parties may continue it till the justice before whom the process is returnable shall be able to attend, when such justice is unable, by reason of sickness or other cause, to attend at the time originally appointed for the trial, a justice who is interested as bail for the prosecution cannot continue the cause.—Howe v. Hosford, 8 Vt. 220.

[t] (Vt. 1837) A justice of the peace, interested in the event of the suit, may nevertheless sign a writ returnable to the county court.—Graham v. Todd, 9 Vt. 166.

[u] (Vt. 1863) A justice of the peace is not legally disqualified to take jurisdiction of and try a case, for the reason that he had previously, as one of a board of arbitrators between the same parties and in reference to the subject-matter of the suit, upon a hearing of such matter as such arbitrator, formed an opinion and expressed the same to his associate arbitrator.—Batchelder v. Nourse, 35 Vt. 642.

[v] (Wis. 1863) Where the justice knows the fact of his disqualification he should act on his own knowledge, and transmit the case to some other justice in the county; but, if he should not know the fact until after issue is joined, he should decline to proceed with the case whenever he ascertains it, and remove the case according to the statute.—Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 633.

§ 200. Relationship.

Validity of proceeding before justice disqualified by relationship, see post, § 224 [i].
Waiver of disqualification, see post, § 221.

[a] (Ala. 1895) A justice of the peace who married a first cousin of defendant is incompetent to try the cause, when there are children of the marriage surviving, though the wife be dead.—Pegues v. Baker, 110 Ala. 251, 17 South. 943.

[b] (Ga. 1889) A justice of the peace is not disqualified from presiding in a case where one of the parties married a cousin of the justice's wife; the party and the justice not being otherwise related.—Blalock v. Waldrup, 84 Ga. 145, 10 S. E. 622, 20 Am. St. Rep. 350.

[c] (Ind. 1849) A judgment confessed before a justice of the peace is not void because confessed in favor of a brother of the justice.—Eastwood v. Buel, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 434, 1 Smith, 376.

[d] (Ind. 1852) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a cause where his brother-in-law is the plaintiff.—Dawson v. Wells, 3 Ind. 398.

[e] (Ind. 1862) Under the statutes a justice who was fifth cousin to one of the parties was held not to be disqualified thereby.—Brady v. Richardson, 18 Ind. 1.

[f] (Ind. 1877) Relationship by affinity ceases with the dissolution of the marriage creating it, except so far as the children of such marriage are concerned; and therefore the fact that a deceased former wife of a party to an action pending before a justice of the peace is the aunt of the wife of such justice does not deprive the latter of jurisdiction, whether there be issue of such marriage or not.—Trout v. Drawhorn, 57 Ind. 570.

[g] (Me. 1849) A justice of the peace who has married a sister of one of the plaintiffs is disqualified from taking jurisdiction of the case, except by the express consent of the parties interested; and this whether his wife be living at the time of the suit or not, and whether the plaintiff sue for his own or for another's benefit.—Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. (16 Shep.) 531.

[h] (N. H. 1837) An application was made to magistrates by an individual to take the poor debtor's oath, and one of the magistrates selected by him was an uncle of the debtor, which fact was unknown to the creditor or his attorney, so that the exception could not be taken at the hearing. Held, that the discharge was invalid.—Gear v. Smith, 9 N. H. 63.

[i] (N. H. 1841) The fact that one of the magistrates selected to administer a poor debtor's oath is a brother of the poor debtor will not disqualify him to act.—Allen v. Bruce, 12 N. H. 418.

[j] (N. J. 1875) If one of the justices making the order of affiliation in proceedings under the New Jersey bastardy act is a cousin of the mother of the bastard, the proceedings will, on certiorari, be quashed, as the relationship disqualifies him from acting therein.—Stoll v. Garliss, 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 200.

[k] (N. Y. 1821) Where a justice of the peace before whom a suit was brought was the son-in-law of the plaintiff, and persisted in trying the cause, notwithstanding the objection made by the plaintiff, it was held that these facts were of themselves evidence that the trial was not impartial, and that there was sufficient ground for reversing the judgment; the damage being excessive.—Bellows v. Pearson, 19 Johns. 172.

[l] (N. Y. 1839) A justice of the peace cannot issue process, or proceed in any suit in which he is related by consanguinity or affinity to either of the parties.—Edwards v. Russell, 21 Wend. 63.

[m] (N. Y. 1841) A justice cannot sit in a cause in which the real party in interest, though not the nominal party, has married the sister of the wife of the justice.—Foot v. Morgan, 1 Hill, 654.

[n] (N. Y. 1845) Where it appeared that the plaintiff's brother had married the widow of the brother of the justice before whom a cause was to be tried, and that she was dead, and that there was no issue of such marriage, the justice was not disqualified by such affinity.—Carman v. Newell, 1 Denio, 25.

[o] (N. Y. 1845) Where a brother of the justice was the husband of the plaintiff's sister, the justice was not thereby disqualified from taking jurisdiction of the case.—Higbe v. Leonard, 1 Denio, 186.

[p] (N. Y. 1847) A justice of the peace cannot act as such on the trial of a cause, where one of the parties is his second cousin.—Post v. Black, 5 Denio, 66.

[q] (N. Y. 1857) Under 2 Rev. St. (2d Ed.) p. 204, § 2, providing that no judge of any court can sit as such in any case in which he would be excluded from being a juror by reason of consanguinity to a party in interest, a relation to a stockholder of a corporation cannot sit as justice of the peace in an action against the corporation.—Place v. Butternuts Woolen & Cotton Mfg. Co., 28 Barb. 503.

[r] (N. Y. 1871) An overseer of the poor commenced bastardy proceedings before a justice of the peace, who was his son-in-law, and whose wife was still living, and this justice associated another with himself, and after the usual proceedings the justices made an order of filiation, and for the neglect of the party charged to comply with the same committed him to jail. Held, that the overseer was a party to the proceedings in such case, and that the proceedings were void.—Rivenburgh v. Henness, 4 Lans. 208.

[s] (Pa. 1829) Where the justice of the peace before whom an action is brought is the brother of the plaintiff, he is disqualified from acting in the case.—McGee v. Jackson, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 136.

[t] (Pa. 1829) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to issue process at the instance of his own relatives or to decide their suits.—McGee v. Jackson, 5 Haz. Reg. 27.

[u] (Pa. 1886) Where the justice of the peace before whom an action is brought is the father-in-law of the plaintiff, and the facts indicate a bias on his part in favor of plaintiff, his judgment will be set aside.—Watterson v. Ramsey, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 137.

[v] (Pa. 1887) Where a justice of the peace before whom an action is brought is a son of the plaintiff, he is disqualified from proceeding in the case.—Singer v. Singer Mfg. Co., 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 578.

[w] (Pa. 1887) Where a justice of the peace before whom an action is brought is the son-in-law of one plaintiff and a brother-in-law of another, he is disqualified from proceeding in the case.—Spidle v. Robinson, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 642.

[x] (Vt. 1831) Rendering judgment on voluntary confession of a debtor is "taking cognizance of a cause" within the act, and cannot be done by a justice of the peace related to one of the parties.—Hill v. Wait, 5 Vt. 124.

[y] (Vt. 1834) In a suit by a corporation, a justice's jurisdiction is not ousted by his being a relation to one of the corporators and stockholders.—Searsburgh Turnpike Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 315.

[yy] (Wis. 1851) Quære, are brothers-in-law "near of kin" within Rev. St. c. 88, § 47, so as to exclude a justice from trying a cause in which his brother-in-law is a party?—Rector v. Drury, 4 Chand. 24, 3 Pin. 298.

[z] (Wis. 1863) The word "kin," in its strictest sense, includes only relations by blood. In its general sense, as used in Rev. St. c. 120, § 48, it includes both relations by blood and marriage, and a justice of the peace is disqualified from trying a cause to which his son-in-law is a party.—Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 633.

[zz] (Wis. 1884) A justice of the peace is "near of kin" to his son-in-law, within Rev. St. § 3617, providing that where the justice is near of kin to one of the parties he shall transmit the action to some other justice, and has, therefore, no jurisdiction to render judgment in such an action.—Elderkin v. Wiswell, 61 Wis. 498, 21 N. W. 541.

§ 201. Counsel or agent for parties.

[a] (Conn. 1891) Gen. St. § 3392, provides that no person shall be committed to prison without a mittimus, signed by a proper magistrate; and sections 672, 675, provide that no justice of the peace shall "act" in any cause where he is attorney, or where he may receive a direct pecuniary benefit, or be liable for costs. Held, that the word "act" referred, not alone to judicial action in the trial of a cause, but to every act not purely ministerial, and that a justice was disqualified to sign a mittimus in an action at law in which he was attorney for plaintiff, or in which he was attorney and bondsman, in that it was requisite for him first to find the cause of commitment.—Yudkin v. Gates, 60 Conn. 426, 22 Atl. 776.

[b] (Ind. 1887) An answer to a motion under Rev. St. § 4030, to enforce in the circuit court a justice's judgment against a railroad for injury to stock, alleging that the judgment was rendered by a justice who, while hearing the case, was acting as plaintiff's counsel therein, sets up a valid defense.—Chicago & A. Ry. Co. v. Summers, 113 Ind. 10, 14 N. E. 733, 3 Am. St. Rep. 616.

[c] (Ind. 1893) The fact that the justice of the peace before whom an action is tried was plaintiff's agent for the collection of claims, including the claim in suit, under an agreement by which he was to receive a commission on all claims collected without suit, and that he tried to collect this claim, and, not being able to do so, issued process thereon just as if it had been left with him for suit, does not necessarily disqualify him to try the case, so as to render his judgment void, but objection to his qualification may be waived by failure to object before judgment.—Baldwin v. Runyon, 8 Ind. App. 344, 35 N. E. 509.

[d] (Kan. 1890) A justice of the peace who receives for collection a number of notes upon an agreement that if suits are brought on the notes he is not to receive his costs, "unless he can make them out of defendants," is an interested party, and is disqualified to sit as justice in such actions.—Limerick v. Murlatt, 43 Kan. 318, 23 Pac. 567.

[e] (Me. 1863) A justice selected by a poor debtor to hear his disclosure, if he is not related by consanguinity or affinity, and has no pecuniary interest in the result, may be considered "disinterested"; and his official act will not be rendered void because he had counseled and aided the debtor in preparing for his disclosure, although this should have deterred him from acting as one of the justices.—Lovering v. Lamson, 50 Me. 334.

[f] (Mass. 1869) The fact that a magistrate drew and attested the lease and notice to quit held not to disqualify him to try an action under Gen. St. c. 137, for possession of the leased premises.—Cook v. Berth, 102 Mass. 372.

[g] (Mich. 1882) Suit on a promissory note cannot be brought before a justice of the peace to whom it has been indorsed for collection, as he thereby becomes plaintiff's agent therefor.—Wheeler v. West, 49 Mich. 505, 13 N. W. 836.

[h] (Mich. 1884) The fact that a claim was sent to a justice for collection does not disqualify him to try a suit subsequently instituted thereon.—Moon v. Stevens, 53 Mich. 144, 18 N. W. 600.

[i] (N. H. 1824) A justice of the peace who makes out a summons to bring before him a party against whom an information has been filed for neglect of military duty does not thereby become of counsel in the case, so as to be disqualified to try it.—Wood v. Fletcher, 3 N. H. 61.

[j] (N. Y. 1861) Where the justice who rendered the judgment had been counsel for the plaintiff in a suit before another justice for the same matters declared for before himself, but on application refused to dismiss the action, held, that the judgment should be reversed.—Carrington v. Andrews, 12 Abb. Prac. 348.

[k] (N. Y. 1861) The provision of Laws 1847, p. 319, c. 280, § 81, that "no judge of any court shall have a voice in the decision of any cause in which he has been counsel, attorney, or solicitor, or in the subject-matter of which he is interested," applies to justices of the peace.—Carrington v. Andrews, 12 Abb. Prac. 348.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) Where a justice of the peace, who was also an attorney at law, two days after a summons issued by him, accepted a retainer from the plaintiff to bring another suit for him in the supreme court, the judgment entered by the justice for the plaintiff in the original suit should be set aside, though there probably was no corrupt intent in accepting the retainer.—Hubbell v. Harbeck, 54 Hun, 147, 7 N. Y. Supp. 243.

[m] (N. Y. 1891) The affidavit of defendant that a few days before the action was commenced she received a letter signed by C., the justice who issued the summons against her, and who was also a practicing lawyer, stating that plaintiff had left with him an account of $50 against defendant for collection, and unless it was settled plaintiff would feel obliged to bring an action to enforce its collection, does not show that the account was left with him as an attorney, and does not disqualify him to try the suit.—McLouth v. Myers, 61 Hun, 624, 16 N. Y. Supp. 779.

[n] (Vt. 1847) The attorney who makes the writ cannot sign it as justice of the peace and take a recognizance for costs.—Ingraham v. Leland, 19 Vt. 304.

atively, is a judicial act, and cannot be done by a justice who is an attorney in the suit.—Ingraham v. Leland, 19 Vt. 304.

§ 202. Interest as citizen or taxpayer.

[a] A justice of the peace may take jurisdiction of an action for a penalty, though part of the avails go into the treasury of the town where he resides.

—(Colo 1871) Deitz v. City of Central, 1 Colo. 323;

(Me. 1888) State v. Craig, 80 Me. 85, 13 Atl. 129;

(N. Y. 1814) Corwein v. Hames, 11 Johns. 76.

CONTRA, see

(Vt. 1838) Waters v. Day, 10 Vt. 487.

[b] (Conn. 1804) A justice of the peace, inhabitant of the town interested, may, on complaint of the selectmen founded on the statute of bastardy, recognize the defendant to appear at the county court.—Davis v. Salisbury, 1 Day, 278.

[c] (Conn. 1817) In an action by the selectmen of a town, on the statute "to prevent encroachments on highways," it was held that the town was not interested in the event of such a suit, and that, consequently, a judgment in such action by a justice of the peace of the town was not erroneous.—Tomlinson v Leavenworth, 2 Conn. 202.

[d] (Ill. 1870) Gross' Comp. p. 777, art. 17, § 10, provides that all penalties under this act, not exceeding $100, may be sued for before any justice of the peace of the proper county. Article 12, § 6, of the same act provides that no action in favor of a town shall be brought before any of the justices of the peace residing in the town for the benefit of which the same is prosecuted. Held to limit the jurisdiction of suits by towns to recover penalties for obstructing highways to justices of the peace not residing in the plaintiff town.—Town of Chatham v. Mason, 53 Ill. 411.

[e] (Me. 1881) Upon a poor debtor's disclosure on an execution in favor of the inhabitants of a town, a justice who is one of such inhabitants is not disinterested, as required by Rev. St. c. 113, § 28.—Norridgewock v. Sawtelle, 72 Me. 484.

[f] (Mass. 1858) A penalty for violation of a by-law of a town against obstructing its streets, though payable into the town treasury, may be recovered under Rev. St. c. 15, § 13, by complaint before any justice of the town, notwithstanding St. 1847, c. 166.—Hall v. Kent, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 467.

[g] (Mass. 1861) Prior to Gen. St. c. 122, § 13, a magistrate had no jurisdiction of an action made returnable before him, in which the inhabitants of the town in which he lived were summoned as trustees of the defendant; and a recognizance taken in such suit is void.—Clark v. Lamb, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 396.

[h] (Mo. 1861) In a proceeding to widen a street, as provided in the act incorporating the city of Lexington, the fact that the mayor is the owner of a lot on the street sought to be widened does not disqualify him from the performance of the duties assigned to him as presiding judge of the mayor's court before which the proceeding is held.—City of Lexington v. Long, 31 Mo. 369.

[i] (N. Y. 1843) A suit may be brought before a justice of the peace, in the name of the overseers of the poor, to recover the penalty given by 1 Rev. St. p. 680, § 15, for selling spirituous liquors, though the justice reside in the same town.—Wood v. Rice, 6 Hill, 58.

[j] (Pa.) Justices of the peace are incompetent, on the ground of interest, to grant an order for the removal of a pauper from their own township to another.—(1842) Overseers of Washington v. Overseers of Beaver, 3 Watts & S. 548; (1843) McVeytown v. Union Tp., 5 Watts & S. 434.

[k] (Pa. 1875) The interest which excludes a justice from acting in awarding an order of removal of a pauper is personal, and creates a want of jurisdiction on his part over the matter before him.—Rose Tp. v. Clover Tp., 32 Leg. Int. 449.

[l] (Tenn. 1826) A magistrate who is a member of an incorporated town is not thereby disqualified from trying a suit in which the corporation is a party.—Town of Jonesborough v. McKee, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 167.

[m] (Vt. 1844) A plea in abatement in a bastardy case prosecuted in the interest of a town, averring that the justice before whom the primary proceedings were had was "a lawful inhabitant and citizen of said town," does not disclose any interest in the justice, as it does not import that he was liable to pay taxes in the town.—Pierce v. Butler, 16 Vt. 101.

[n] (Vt. 1873) Justices of the peace are not disqualified from making an order of removal of a pauper merely because they are rated inhabitants and taxpayers in a town which is a party to the proceedings.—Morristown v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 33.

[o] (Vt. 1892) In an action to recover the expense of supporting a pauper chargeable to defendant, it appeared that plaintiff, defendant, and three other towns formed an association for the purpose of supporting their poor on a common farm, the several towns to bear any deficit in proportion to the number of weeks their paupers had been maintained; that for the year covering the time laid in the declaration there was a deficit which was apportioned among the towns on such basis; and that plaintiff paid the association at this rate for keeping the pauper. Defendant pleaded that the town of E. was a member of the association, and so interested in the suit, and that the justice of the peace before whom it was tried was a resident and taxpayer in E. Held that, as each town was to pay for the expense of its own paupers, the town of E. was not interested in the suit, and that the justice was not disqualified.—Town of Jericho v. Town of Underhill, 64 Vt. 362, 24 Atl. 251.

[p] (Wis. 1879) Tayl. St. c. 18, § 96, provides that, "in case the town treasurer is unable to collect any tax assessed upon any personal property, and payable by any person named in his tax list, he shall make and file with some justice of the peace of his county an affidavit," etc. Chapter 120, § 10, subd. 4, as amended by Laws 1871, c. 146, provides that no justice shall have cognizance of any action for or against any town in which the justice is elected. Held, that the provisions of the latter section, relating to the jurisdiction of justices in ordinary cases, do not apply to a special proceeding, under the provisions of section 96, for the collection of a tax on personal property.—Town of Hancock v. Merriman, 46 Wis. 159, 49 N. W. 970.

§ 203. Tavern keepers.

Holding court in tavern in general, see post, § 233 [g].

[a] (N. Y. 1804) Where a tavern is kept in the house of a justice and for his benefit, although the license is in the name of another who lived in his house, he is within 1 Rev. Laws, p. 502, § 20, prohibiting a justice of the peace who is an innkeeper, or living in a house in which an inn is kept, from trying any cause for selling spirituous liquors without a license.—Schermerhorn v. Tripp, 2 Caines, 108.

[b] (N. Y. 1811) Where, after suit was commenced, the justice moved into a part of a tavern house, and there tried the cause, while a tavern was kept in the other part of the house, there being free communication between the parts, it was held that the case was within St. 24th Sess. c. 165, prohibiting a justice residing in such house from trying any cause under that act.—Low v. Rice, 8 Johns. 409.

[c] (N. Y. 1816) A justice of the peace who in fact keeps a tavern, though he has no license for that purpose, is disqualified from trying a cause.—Clayton v. Per Dun, 13 Johns. 218.

[d] (N. Y. 1816) A justice of the peace who keeps a tavern being disqualified from trying a cause, it is immaterial whether or not suit was instituted before or after he commenced keeping the tavern.—Clayton v. Per Dun, 13 Johns. 218.

[e] (N. Y. 1845) 2 Rev. St. p. 226, § 6, provides that, if a person elected a justice of the peace shall become a tavern keeper, he shall not have any power to act as such justice. Held, that a statute passed to confirm the official acts of a certain justice and relieve him from liabilities and forfeitures, though it stated that he became a tavern keeper on a particular day, was not evidence of that fact, so as to deprive him of jurisdiction to try a case after such date.—Parmelee v. Thompson, 7 Hill, 77.

[f] (N. Y. 1845) A justice of the peace is not deprived of his jurisdiction by being a tavern keeper, provided he was such at the time of his election; aliter, of a justice who became a tavern keeper after his election.—Parmelee v. Thompson, 7 Hill, 77.

[g] (N. Y. 1849) The statute respecting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace who shall become innkeepers does not make the election of an innkeeper to that office void, nor does it affect his jurisdiction under other statutes. He is suspended, on becoming an innkeeper, merely as to the powers and duties conferred by the statute which suspends him.—Rice v. Milks, 7 Barb. 337.

(K) POWERS AFTER EXPIRATION OF TERM AND OVER PROCEEDINGS BEFORE OTHER JUSTICES.

POWERS AFTER EXPIRATION OF TERM, § 204.
POWERS OF SUCCESSOR OVER PROCEEDINGS BEFORE FORMER JUSTICE, § 205.
POWERS OF OTHER JUSTICES OVER PROCEEDINGS WITHIN JURISDICTION OF JUDGE OR JUSTICE WHO HAS RESIGNED OR IS DISQUALIFED, ABSENT FROM COURT, OR DISABLED, § 206.

§ 204. Powers after expiration of term.

[a] (Ark. 1885) The fact that the term of the justice has ended before the commencement of the term of the circuit court at which the statute directs him to file a transcript of fines and forfeitures does not excuse him for not doing so.—Knox v. State, 45 Ark. 500.

[b] (Conn. 1859) Under Rev. St. tit. 1, § 139, which authorizes a justice of the peace, after the expiration of his term of office, to perfect his records, a justice whose term has expired, and who has removed from the state, may perfect his records in another state.—Hawley v. Middlebrook, 28 Conn. 527.

[c] (Kan. 1877) A justice received an appeal bond just before he removed from the township, whereby he vacated his office; and just afterwards, and within the proper time, he indorsed his approval, dating it back to the time when he received the bond. Held, that the act might be sustained, as relating back.—Haas v. Lees, 18 Kan. 449.

[d] (Me. 1834) In making up and completing his records, a justice of the peace acts ministerially, and not judicially. Consequently he may do it when not in commission.—Matthews v. Houghton, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 377.

[e] (Me. 1853) A justice of the peace, in issuing an execution on a judgment rendered by him, acts ministerially, and not judicially, and his power to renew executions continues for the term of two years after his judicial powers, under his commission, expire.—Jones v. Elliott, 35 Me. 137.

[f] (Mo. 1881) A judgment entered by a justice of the peace after the expiration of his term of office is a nullity.—Gage v. Vail, 73 Mo. 454.

[g] (N. J. 1811) The expiration of the commission of a justice of the peace is a discontinuance of a cause pending before him.—Ross v. Ford, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 906.

[h] (N. J. 1833) After a justice's commission had expired, he could not, before the statute of February, 1834, accept an appeal bond, nor do any other official act, even in a case that was before him while in office.—Tichenor v. Hewson, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 26.

[i] (N. Y. 1888) Under Code, § 52, providing that, in case of removal from office or other disability of an officer before whom a special proceeding has been instituted, it may be continued before his successor, where a trial in summary proceedings to recover realty was had before a justice on December 28th, and the case was adjourned by consent to January 4th following, and the term of the justice expired on January 1st, he could not thereafter finish the trial of the case and render a judgment therein.—In re Rodding, 14 Civ. Proc. R. 47.

[j] (Pa.) A justice of the peace cannot certify a transcript to another justice after his term of office has expired.—(1851) Regle v. Nugent, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 297; (1865) Koons v. Headley, 49 Pa. (13 Wright) 168; (1881) Singley v. Fisher, 2 Leg. Rec. 168; (1881) Koch v. Shimer, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 77.

[k] (Vt. 1860) While a justice of the peace is alive and continues to reside in the county for which he was appointed, he is the proper certifying officer of his own records, though he may be out of office.—Carruth v. Tighe, 32 Vt. 626.

§ 205. Powers of successor over proceedings before former justice.

Appearance before successor as conferring jurisdiction, see post, § 267 [k].

Costs of proceedings before former justice as taxable on trial before successor, see "Costs," vol. 13, c. 29, § 15 [b].

[a] (Ark. 1852) The successor in office of a justice of the peace may enter up his predecessor's judgment nunc pro tunc.—Adams v. Thompson, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 670.

[b] (Ark. 1878) A justice of the peace may correct a judgment rendered by his predecessor in office by a nunc pro tunc order.—Gates v. Bennett, 33 Ark. 475.

[c] (Ark. 1891) Where an order of dismissal for want of prosecution of proceedings before a justice of the peace is set aside by consent of the parties, and a trial had and a judgment rendered for the plaintiff, which, however, is not entered on the docket of the justice, who soon afterwards dies, it is competent for his successor to enter the judgment nunc pro tunc, and parol evidence is admissible to show that such a judgment was in fact rendered, so as to authorize such entry.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Winfrey, 16 S. W. 572.

[d] (Cal. 1852) It being provided by the practice act that, where a judge or justice trying a cause may be called as a witness, he may order the case to be tried before another judge or justice, a justice before whom a cause was properly brought sent it to the mayor of a city, who, denying his own jurisdiction, sent it back; and it was tried by the successor in office of the justice who sent it to him, his predecessor having resigned, and the judgment rendered by the last justice sustained.—Julian v. Gallen, 2 Cal. 358.

[e] (Iowa, 1892) In a suit against an absconding debtor, where funds were garnished and service had by posting notices, the justice who issued the process resigned before the return day set in the notices, and some time after the return day a successor was appointed, who set a day for trial, and notified all the parties except defendant. Held, that he had acquired no jurisdiction of defendant; Code 1873, § 3610, providing that the hearing must be on the day set in the notices.—Evans v. Richards, 85 Iowa, 620, 52 N. W. 541.

[f] (Kan. 1894) The successor of a justice of the peace has the power, under the direction of the district court, to supply omissions in a transcript of his predecessor, and for that purpose may file with the clerk of the district court a new and completed transcript from the official records in his possession.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hurst, 52 Kan. 609, 35 Pac. 211.

[g] (Minn. 1881) An action pending before a justice of the peace when his term of office expires is not transferred by operation of law to his successor, so as to give the latter jurisdiction of the case.—Anderson v. Hanson, 28 Minn. 400, 10 N. W. 429.

[h, i] (Tex. 1854) The successor in office of a justice of the peace cannot revise the action of his predecessor.—Haley v. Villeneuve, 11 Tex. 617.

[j] (Tex. 1886) Under the general law of the state, by which justices of the peace succeed to the books and papers of their predecessors, and are required to dispose of their unfinished business, the law, in effect, authorizes them to execute the former's valid judgments, no matter upon what cause of action rendered, in as ample a manner as if a special statute, giving them that power, had been enacted.—Bryant v. Buckner (Sup.) 2 S. W. 452.

[k] (Wash. 1890) A complaint coming into the possession of a justice of the peace, by reason of his succession to that office, will be presumed to have been filed by him, if at all, on the day he entered upon the office, though marked several days later; and citation to defendant must require him to appear within 20 days from that date, under Code, § 1712, requiring defendant to be cited to appear at a time within 20 days from the filing of the complaint.—Nelson v. Campbell, 1 Wash. St. 261, 24 Pac. 539.

[l] (Wis. 1880) Though the expiration of the term for which a particular person is elected to an office does not create any "vacancy" in the office within the statute which provides for filling vacancies by appointment or election, still Rev. St. 1878, § 3591, declaring that whenever the office of any justice shall become vacant by resignation, removal, or otherwise, his successor may proceed to try any action then undetermined, and may issue a transcript also upon any judgment rendered by his predecessor, must be construed as covering the case of one who ceases to be a justice by reason of the expiration of his term, and as allowing transcripts of judgments rendered by him to be issued by his successor.—Stamm v. Dixon, 49 Wis. 328, 5 N. W. 858.

§ 206. Powers of other justices over proceedings within jurisdiction of judge or justice who has resigned or is disqualified, absent from court, or disabled.

Appearance as conferring jurisdiction on other justice, see post, § 267 [t, v].

Duty of parties to call other justice on expiration of term of incumbent pending action, see post, § 362 [m].

Issuance of execution on judgment rendered by justice of other county, see post, § 429.

Power to vacate judgment rendered by another justice, see post, § 401 [o].

[a] (Ala. 1886) An execution on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, issued by another justice, is not void on that account.—Sandlin v. Anderson, 82 Ala. 330, 3 South. 28.

[b] (Ala. 1890) Code 1876, § 754, provides that two justices shall be elected in each precinct, and section 3608 that if there is no justice in a precinct, or if he is incompetent, the cause may be tried by the justice of an adjoining precinct. Held that the justice of an adjoining precinct has no jurisdiction in another unless it appear that both of the justices in the latter are incompetent or disqualified.—Horton v. Elliott, 90 Ala. 480, 8 South. 103.

[c] (Ga. 1854) The judgments of justices' courts may be renewed to the same extent that judgments of higher courts may be; and it is not necessary that the justice presiding should be the same justice who presided when the judgment was rendered.—Wilcher v. Hamilton, 15 Ga. 435.

[d] (Ga. 1892) Where the term of office of a notary public, who is ex officio justice of the peace, has expired after an appeal from his judgment to a jury has been entered, and his successor has not been commissioned or sworn, the other justice of the district may preside in a trial of the appeal before the jury, especially when neither of the parties, before verdict, makes any objection to his so presiding.—Harrison v. Perry, 90 Ga. 206, 15 S. E. 742.

[e] (Ill. 1854) A., a justice of the peace, removed from the county and made over his docket and papers to B., then the nearest justice to A. B. afterwards removed from the state, and transferred his docket and papers, including those of A., to C., who issued an execution on the judgment rendered by A. Held, that the execution was properly issued; C. being vested with as much power over one docket as the other.—Martin v. Walker, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 377.

[f] (Ind. 1854) The fact that the only justice of the peace within the township where a defendant resides declines to act does not give jurisdiction of the suit to a justice in another township, under Rev. St. 1843, p. 863. The plaintiff in such case is left to his remedy against the magistrate.—Poyser v. Murray, 6 Ind. 35.

[g] (Ind. 1871) Under the statute providing that a person claiming property which has been seized by virtue of an execution against another issued by a justice of the peace may file his complaint with the justice issuing the writ, if he is disqualified from acting and has no successor, there is no jurisdiction in any other justice to act.—Test v. Beeson, 37 Ind. 380.

[h] (Ky. 1833) One justice of the peace has no authority to issue an execution upon the judgment of another, who remains in office and retains his records.—Clifford v. Cabiness, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 384.

[i] (Mo. 1834) A justice of the peace cannot issue a scire facias on a judgment obtained before another justice to show cause why execution should not issue.—Wilson v. Tiernan, 3 Mo. 577.

[j] (N. J. 1837) A scire facias to revive a judgment of a justice of the peace must be issued by the same justice and can be by no other. If he be dead or out of commission, the only remedy is debt upon the judgment.—Tindall v. Carson, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 94.

[k] (N. Y. 1860) 3 Rev. St. (5th Ed.) pp. 398, 399, §§ 86–98, provides that the justice of the peace before whom proceedings for a reassessment of damages occasioned by the laying out of a highway are initiated shall certify the verdict. Held, that a certification of another justice is not warranted by the fact that the highway commissioners procured the justice before whom the proceedings were commenced to absent himself, so that he could not be found; such absence not being a "disability," within 3 Rev. St. (5th Ed.) p. 475, § 25, which authorizes another justice to act in place of one disabled.—People v. Ulster County Sup'rs, 32 Barb. 473.

[l] (Pa. 1841) Any justice of the peace has jurisdiction, on the delivery of a transcript to him, to recover the amount of a judgment rendered by another justice of the peace, who has resigned his office but retains his docket. The proceeding may be by summons.—Ingle v. Homman, 1 Watts & S. 414.

[m] (Pa. 1846) Executions issued by one justice on the transcript of another justice of the same county, who was at that time in commission and acting in his office, are void.—Hallowell v. Williams, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 389.

[n] (Pa. 1867) An alderman has jurisdiction on a sci. fa. sur judgment entered before an alderman whose commission has expired.—McGarry v. Douredoure, 6 Phila. 332.

[o] (Pa. 1888) One justice of the peace cannot issue an alias summons from proceedings before another justice of the peace, where the latter justice is alive, in commission, and within the district, though he is sick and unable to attend to business.—Fetters v. Leonard, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 653.

[p] (Tenn. 1871) S., a justice of the peace before whom a suit was pending, was sick on the day of trial, and procured M., another justice of the same district, to try the case. Upon the judgment rendered by M., S. afterwards issued execution. Held, that the whole proceeding was regular, and the execution valid.—Fowler v. McDaniel, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 529.

[q] (Tex. 1894) A justice court, having obtained jurisdiction under Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1537, providing that, when any justice shall be absent from his precinct, the nearest justice in the county may perform his duties, retains it until the case is removed by appeal.—Crawford v. Saunders (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 102.

[r] (Vt. 1850) A writ of scire facias, for the purpose of enforcing a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, cannot be brought before another justice of the peace. It can only issue from the court in which the judgment was rendered.—Gibson v. Davis, 22 Vt. 374.

[s] (Vt. 1854) A justice, continuing a writ for another in his absence, has no further jurisdiction than mere naked continuance.—Braynard v. Burpee, 27 Vt. (1 Williams) 616.

[t] (Wis. 1871) Where a justice of the peace was authorized to take jurisdiction of an action only in case of the "absence, sickness, or other inability" of a municipal judge, held, that the fact that such judge declined to act in the cause did not give the justice jurisdiction.—Klaise v. State, 27 Wis. 462.

[b] (Ill. 1870) In an action to recover the price of property sold to defendant under an execution issued on a judgment rendered by a police magistrate, his docket, duly proved, showing the judgment, is competent evidence on plaintiff's behalf, though it did not appear thereby that the magistrate had jurisdiction, as competency of evidence does not depend on the extent to which facts are proved thereby.—Willoughby v. Dewey, 54 Ill. 266.

[c] (Ind. 1854) Jurisdiction of a justice of the peace must appear on the face of the proceeding. No presumption is made in its favor. Therefore, where a justice issued a writ of ne exeat, and it did not appear of record that a bond for the payment of costs and damages was filed as required by the act of 1847, the judgment should be reversed.—Straughan v. Inge, 5 Ind. 157.

[d] (Iowa, 1881) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is limited; but to require that he should show that his proceedings were within the statute by negativing the grounds by which it may be taken away is to require more than a sound construction of the statute warrants or is reconcilable to settled practice of law.—Lanpher v. Dewell, 56 Iowa, 153, 9 N. W. 101.

[e] (Kan. 1892) A summons was issued by a justice of the peace, returnable on June 4, 1886, at 10 o'clock a. m., and was regularly served, and judgment was afterwards rendered against defendant by default. The record showing the manner of rendering the judgment reads: "June 4, 1886, 10 o'clock a. m. The plaintiff present by his agent, L. The defendants, being three times called, still fail to appear. Upon hearing the proof and allegations of the plaintiff, I do render judgment by default. It is therefore," etc., and here follows the judgment. Held, that it does not appear that the judgment is void on its face for the reason that it was rendered within less than an hour after the time specified in the summons for the appearance of the parties, and therefore before the justice had acquired sufficient jurisdiction to render it.—Green v. Tower, 49 Kan. 302, 30 Pac. 468.

[f] (Mich. 1895) In an action on a justice's judgment, the failure of the justice's docket to show that he acquired and retained jurisdiction cannot be supplied by memoranda made by him on the file wrapper.—Rasch v. Bissell, 106 Mich. 106, 64 N. W. 7.

[g] (Minn. 1871) An affidavit for the transfer of a case to another justice, when filed, is a part of the record, within the rule that in action in justice court the record must show facts which confer upon it jurisdiction both of the person and cause of action.—McGinty v. Warner, 17 Minn. 41 (Gil. 23).

[h] (Minn. 1896) It is not essential to the validity of a judgment obtained in a justice court without personal service of the summons that the justice docket or judgment should disclose the fact that a security bond was filed before the judgment was entered.—Vaule v. Miller, 64 Minn. 485, 67 N. W. 540.

[i] (Mo. 1885) In a proceeding before a justice to enforce a mechanic's lien, all jurisdictional facts must appear affirmatively on the face of the proceedings; and a filing of a sufficient statement before the justice is a jurisdictional fact.—Ewing v. Donnelly, 20 Mo. App. 6.

[j] (Mo. 1891) Lodging with a justice of the peace of the paper which is the foundation of the action being requisite to jurisdiction, it must by some means be made affirmatively to appear by the record, if not by a docket entry, then by the paper itself being among the original papers in the cause.—Olin v. Zeigler, 46 Mo. App. 193.

[k] (Mo. 1893) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is sufficiently shown if it appears from the entire record of the proceeding.—Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.

[l] (Mo. 1893) It is sufficient to the validity of a judgment of a justice that the jurisdictional facts appear anywhere on the face of the proceedings, and they need not appear in his docket entries.—Collins v. Kammann, 55 Mo. App. 464.

[m] (N. J. 1833) On a proceeding under Rev. Laws, p. 637, § 26, providing that on execution out of the court for trial of small causes, if a third person claims the goods, claimant may have a jury to try his right, the justice must make up a record to show his proceeding in the matter to be within the scope of his authority.—Baird v. Johnson, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 120.

[n] (N. J. 1854) Where a justice acts under a special statutory authority, everything necessary to his jurisdiction should be shown on the face of the proceedings before him.—State v. Williamstown & G. I. Turnpike Co., 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 547.

[o] (N. Y. 1854) The record of a justice holding special sessions must show that judgment was rendered when his court was in session.—Lattimore v. People, 10 How. Prac. 336.

[p] (N. Y. 1890) It is not essential to the validity of a justice's judgment that the return should affirmatively show that the justice waited an hour after the time mentioned in the summons before proceeding with the cause in the absence of defendant, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2893.—Knight v. Willson, 55 Hun, 559, 9 N. Y. Supp. 20.

[q] (N. C. 1846) Continuances of a justice's warrant in a civil case need not appear on the face of the proceedings, to prevent them from being void on their face.—State v. Conoly, 28 N. C. 243.

[r] (Ohio, 1861) Under Justice Code, § 7, providing that if any debtor shall appear before a justice without process, and confess that he is indebted to another, such justice may, on application of the creditor, render judgment on such confession, such judgment is not void because the justice's docket does not show that it was rendered on the application of the creditor.—Wilson v. Wickersham, 2 Ohio Dec. 545.

[s] (Pa.) In summary proceedings for the possession of premises under the landlord and tenant act, the record must show affirmatively the necessary fact to give the court jurisdiction.—(1865) McGrath v. Donally, 6 Phila. 43; (1868) Miller v. Frees, 1 Woodw. Dec. 409; (1871) McGinnis v. Vernon, 67 Pa. (17 P. F. Smith) 149; (1880) Hiester v. Brown, 11 Lanc. Bar. 159.

[t] (Pa. 1868) In a penal action before a magistrate, the record must affirmatively show that he had jurisdiction.—Adams v. Commonwealth, 1 Woodw. Dec. 417.

[u] (Pa. 1876) A suit for the recovery of a fine for violation of a borough ordinance before a justice of the peace is not a summary proceeding, but in the nature of a civil action for the recovery of the debt, and therefore the record must contain all the requirements necessary to support such suit.—Borough v. Gill, 1 Leg. Rec. 88.

[v] (Pa.) The record of a justice on a judgment by default must show jurisdiction affirmatively.—(1879) Starch v. Snyder, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 172; (1880) Smith v. Noone, Id. 165.

[w] (Pa. 1881) Where it appears from the record of the justice of the peace that an action was brought for the recovery of a note, but the judgment was rendered for a specified sum of money, it sufficiently appears that the action was for the amount of the note, and not for the recovery of its possession, of which the justice would have no jurisdiction.—Leamy v. McClure, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 220.

[x] (S. D. 1894) Though the justice's docket should contain a record of all facts essential to his jurisdiction, the judgment, properly entitled, stating the amount thereof, including costs, and the time when rendered, is not void because it fails to show jurisdiction expressly.—Williams v. Rice, 6 S. D. 9, 60 N. W. 153.

[y] (Wis. 1882) In statutory proceedings by garnishment in a justice court, the jurisdiction must affirmatively appear from the record; and, where that fails to show the affidavit required by the statute as the foundation of the proceedings, a docket entry that an affidavit was made and filed cannot give validity to the judgment.—Wells v. American Exp. Co., 55 Wis. 23, 11 N. W. 537, 12 N. W. 441, 42 Am. Rep. 695.

§ 208. —— Jurisdiction of subject-matter.

[a] (Colo. 1873) Under Rev. St. c. 50, § 4, requiring a justice of the peace to note on his docket "the amount and nature of the debt sued for," though jurisdiction as to the subject-matter of the action in which the judgment was rendered must be shown, where plaintiff relies on such judgment to establish title, it may be shown by evidence without the record.—Liss v. Wilcoxen, 2 Colo. 85.

[b] (Colo. 1873) Where plaintiff relied on a judgment of a justice of the peace to establish his title in an action of unlawful detainer, the jurisdiction of the justice as to the subject-matter of the action in which such judgment was rendered was not sufficiently shown by the circumstance that it was for a debt and in an amount of which the justice had jurisdiction, where "the amount and nature of the debt sued for" were not noted on the docket, as required by Rev. St. c. 50, § 4.—Liss v. Wilcoxen, 2 Colo. 85.

[c] (Colo. 1888) The omission of a justice of the peace to record in his docket the nature of the debt sued for, as required by Gen. St. § 2061, is not a fatal jurisdictional defect; but on appeal to the county court, where both parties appear and go to trial on the merits, the jurisdiction of the justice may be shown by evidence outside the record.—Behymer v. Nordloh, 12 Colo. 352, 21 Pac. 37.

[cc] (Minn. 1869) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace must appear from the "brief statement of the nature of the plaintiff's demand," which he is required to enter in his docket, under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 7, and cannot be shown by the judgment entered therein.—Barnes v. Holton, 14 Minn. 357 (Gil. 275).

[d] (Pa. 1814) If it appear on the justice's record that the plaintiff has stated his cause of action generally, it is sufficient to show jurisdiction of the subject-matter.—McEntire v. McElduff, 1 Serg. & R. 19.

[e] (Pa. 1865) In a proceeding to recover a penalty under a city ordinance, conducted partly before an alderman and partly before the mayor of the city, where the record contains no recital of the ordinance containing the cause of action and conferring the jurisdiction, and no statement of acts done within the city that would amount to a violation, the judgment cannot be sustained.—Hennershitz v. City of Reading, 1 Woodw. Dec. 264.

[f] (Pa. 1887) Where the record of a justice of the peace states the cause of action to be for "trespass and damage to personal property not exceeding $300," it is a sufficient statement to bring the action within the jurisdiction of the justice, under Act March 22, 1814, for "injury done or committed."—Reese v. Deyett, 4 C. P. Rep. 53.

[g] (Pa. 1893) Since Act May 25, 1887, gives the word "trespass" a wider meaning than it had formerly, a justice's record is insufficient to show jurisdiction when it merely designates the action as "trespass for damages for injuries done on real estate," though Act March 22, 1814, expressly confers on justices jurisdiction of such actions.—Wood v. Bronson (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 545.

[h] (Pa.) Where the record of a justice of the peace simply states that the action is on a contract, without showing that it is a contract of which he has jurisdiction, it is insufficient.—(1895) Pearre v. White (Com. Pl.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 504; (1896) Barnett v. Fisher (Com. Pl.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 277, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 393.

[i] (Tex. 1860) A judgment of a justice, rendered under Act Jan. 27, 1842, § 10, providing that, if any sheriff fails or refuses to pay over money collected on execution, he shall be liable to pay 10 per cent. a month on the amount so collected, besides interest and costs, and that the sum may be recovered by motion against his sureties, is void, if the record fails to show that the justice had jurisdiction over the subject-matter.—Mitchell v. Runkle, 25 Tex. Supp. 132.

[j] (Wis. 1895) Where the docket of a justice does not show the nature of the action, whether any pleas were made by the parties, nor any other facts showing jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the judgment rendered is void.—Jones v. Hunt, 90 Wis. 199, 63 N. W. 81.

§ 209. —— Jurisdiction of feme covert.

[a] (Pa. 1871) To sustain a judgment in a justice court against a married woman, the record must show a cause of action against her herself, and it is not sufficient that the evidence showed such fact.—O'Mallery v. Dempsey, 3 Leg. Gaz. 225.

[b] (Pa. 1872) Where the proceedings before a justice of the peace, in which judgment is entered against a married woman, do not show on their face that she is liable, the judgment is void, as the fact that such proof is made must be shown by the record.—Ingham v. Sickler, 1 Leg. Chron. 151.

[c] (Pa. 1873) Where there is a justice's judgment against a married woman for family necessaries, it must be aver.ed of record, as well as shown by the evidence, that the debt was contracted by her personally or by some one under her authority.—O'Malley v. Dempsey, 2 Luz. Leg. Reg. 77.

[d] (Pa. 1873) To sustain a justice's judgment against a husband and wife, intended to be levied on the wife's estate, a cause of action against her must be declared of record.—O'Malley v. Dempsey, 2 Luz. Leg. Reg. 77.

[e] (Pa. 1873) Where judgment was recovered in a justice's court against a married woman for building materials used in improving her estate, the record must show that they were contracted for by herself, and not by herself and her husband together.—O'Malley v. Dempsey, 2 Luz. Leg. Reg. 77.

[f] (Pa. 1875) A joint judgment, obtained against a husband and wife in proceedings before a justice, which did not show affirmatively that the debt sued for was contracted by the wife and for necessaries for her family, was void, and no judgment of revival could be had thereon.—Glenn v. Bracey, 7 Leg. Gaz. 174.

[g] (Pa.) Where the record of a justice of the peace fails to show the liability of a married woman, a judgment as to her is void for want of jurisdiction.—(1877) Krause v. Leiby, 1 Leg. Rec. 74; (1879) Heffner v. Beahler, Id. 118.

[h] (Pa. 1879) The record of a justice of the peace on a judgment against a married woman must show her liability, or the judgment will be void.—Starch v. Snyder, 1 Leg. Rec. 172.

[j] (Pa. 1880) A judgment against a married woman is invalid, unless the record itself shows the liability under the statute.—Rice v. Ketzelman, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 174.

[k] (Pa. 1881) The record of a justice of the peace, where it is intended to bind an estate of a married woman, must show everything necessary to give jurisdiction.—Sherman v. Reed, 2 Leg. Rec. 220.

[l, m] (Pa. 1883) Where the record of a judgment by a justice in an action against a married woman does not clearly show a liability on her part, the judgment will be set aside on certiorari.—Fraelich v. Mowrer, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 49.

[n] (Pa. 1884) A record averring a claim for "family necessaries" is not sufficient to support a judgment against a married woman, unless it also avers a contract made by her.—Stephens v. Hadsell, 3 Kulp, 66.

[o] (Pa. 1884) A joint action of debt against a husband and wife for rent cannot be maintained; it not appearing on the justice's record that it was alleged or proved that the debt was contracted by her and was for necessaries.—Edwards v. Carr, 3 Kulp, 192.

[p] (Pa. 1884) The record of a judgment in a magistrate's court against a married woman must show that the debt was contracted by the wife for the necessaries of life and on the credit of her separate estate, or it will be set aside.—Hartzell v. Osborne, 15 Wkly. Notes Cas. 142.

[q] (Pa. 1886) In an action against husband and wife for necessaries, the judgment record of the justice must show the liability of the wife.—Rodgers v. Carr, 3 C. P. Rep. 216.

[r] (Pa. 1886) Under Act April 11, 1848, § 8, in an action against a husband and wife for necessaries, no judgment can be entered against the wife, except on proof that the debt was contracted by the wife and incurred for articles necessary for the support of their family; and a judgment by default in common pleas on a transcript of an alderman, showing no such proof, is void.—Gould v. McFall, 111 Pa. 66, 2 Atl. 403.

[s] (Pa. 1887) On scire facias to revive a judgment, a transcript of a justice of the peace stated that "the debt in suit had been contracted by defendant, Judith Weber, for necessaries, to wit, medical attendance furnished by plaintiff to the family of Judith Weber," and stated that "summons was served by producing the original summons to defendants, and informing them of the contents thereof." Held, that this, together with a further statement that, after proper hearing, judgment was entered against defendants, sufficiently complied with the rule that a judgment against a married woman before a justice of the peace must affirmatively show her liability within the statute.—Weber v. Detwiller, 8 Atl. 910.

[t] (Pa. 1887) To enable recovery from a married woman for necessaries, it is not requisite that the evidence adduced to establish the claim that the debt was incurred by the wife, and that it was for necessaries, be entered on the justice's record.—Fenstermacher v. Xander, 116 Pa. 41, 10 Atl. 128.

[u] (Pa. 1887) A justice's judgment against a married woman will be struck from the record, unless it affirmatively appears thereby that her liability was on a contract allowed by the statute.—Rosenfelt v. Wagner, 2 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 371.

[v] (Pa. 1888) Under Married Woman's Act June 3, 1887, the record of a justice's judgment, to be binding against a married woman, should show that the suit was brought for necessaries.—Myers v. Stauffer, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 657, 22 Wkly. Notes Cas. 412.

[w] (Pa. 1888) Under the married person's property act of June 3, 1887, the record of a justice's judgment, in order to bind a married woman, must set forth the facts which bring her within the act. Where the record shows merely an action on back accounts, the judgment will be stricken off.—Ames v. Hugg, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 83.

[x] (Pa. 1890) Under Act 1848, § 7, which forbids judgment against a married woman unless it be "proved" that she contracted the debt, and that the articles furnished were necessaries, an entry by a justice, in a suit for necessaries, of "Claim investigated," will not be sufficient to sustain a judgment against a married woman.—Rauch v. Young (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 416.

[y] (Pa. 1892) A justice's judgment against a married woman which does not show on its face her liability on the contract within the statute is void.—March v. McCardle (Com. Pl.) 1 Pa. Dist. R. 677.

[z] (Pa. 1893) A judgment rendered by an alderman against a married woman prior to the passage of the act of 1887 will be stricken off where the record does not show that the debt was one for which a married woman could be made liable.—Shreiner v. Dommel (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 332; Dornes v. Staley, Id.; Rice v. Foy, Id. 333.

[zz] (Pa. 1894) Where an action for necessaries furnished defendants is apparently against husband and wife, but the record fails to disclose the relationship, it was proper for the justice to render judgment against the female defendant as one against a married woman on her contract for necessaries.—Burnes v. Maloney (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 341.

§ 210. —— Jurisdiction as dependent on place of bringing suit.

[a] (Cal. 1860) The record of proceedings in a justice court must affirmatively show that the suit was brought in the proper township.—Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 296.

[b] (Mo. 1880) The record of a justice in proceedings under the landlord and tenant act must show that he lived in the ward in which the property was situated, or in the adjoining ward.—Hessey v. Heitkamp, 9 Mo. App. 36.

[c] (Mo. 1885) The record of the justice must show affirmatively, in actions for killing stock, where the statute affords a remedy only for stock killed in the township of the justice or the adjoining township, that the stock was killed in one of such townships.—Roberts v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 19 Mo. App. 649; Backenstoe v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 23 Mo. App. 148.

[d] (Mo. 1886) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is purely local and statutory, and, in a suit against a railway corporation for the killing of live-stock, it must affirmatively appear that the action was brought in the township where the injury occurred, or in some adjoining township, under section 2835, Revision 1879.—Rohland v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 89 Mo. 180, 1 S. W. 147.

[e] (Mo. 1891) The charter of Kansas City confers jurisdiction to render judgment on a special tax bill on "the recorder of the city, or any justice of the peace of the city." Held that, in a suit on a special tax bill, the docket of the justice must show that he is a justice of the city.—Corrigan v. Morris, 43 Mo. App. 456.

[f] (Mo. 1894) The record in an action of unlawful detainer must show that the detained premises are in the justice's county, or the justice will have no jurisdiction.—Johnson v. Fischer, 56 Mo. App. 552.

[g] (Pa.) The record of proceedings before a justice in an action for trespass to real estate must show that the estate was situated within the county.—(1811) Pennell v. Foster, 1 Browne, 355; (1844) Brown v. Quinton, 3 Pa. Law J. 425. CONTRA, see (1845) Brown v. Fruit, 5 Pa. Law J. 222.

[h] (Pa. 1883) Where an alderman, in a suit for the violation of a city ordinance providing that no person shall purchase on market days within market hours any marketable provisions for the purpose of retailing same, gives judgment for the amount of the penalty for violation thereof, his docket should set forth that the market so held was within the limits of the city.—Lemon v. Reidel, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 3.

§ 211. —— Jurisdiction as dependent on amount or value in controversy.

[a] (Colo. 1888) The omission of a justice of the peace to record in his docket the amount of the debt sued for, as required by Gen. St. § 2061, is not a fatal jurisdictional defect; but, on appeal to the county court where both parties appear and go to trial on the merits, the jurisdiction of the justice may be shown by evidence outside the record.—Behymer v. Nordloh, 12 Colo. 352, 21 Pac. 37.

[b] (Ind. 1824) Justices of the peace, by a statute of 1823, had a general jurisdiction to the amount of $50, and they could take judgment by confession for any amount not exceeding $100, provided the defendant made oath that the judgment was not confessed to defraud creditors. Held, that the justice's record of a judgment confessed, exceeding $50, must show the oath to have been taken, or he will be considered as having had no jurisdiction.—McFadin v. Gill, 1 Blackf. 309.

[c] (Mich. 1884) Where, in replevin before a justice, the affidavit does not state that the property does not exceed $100 in value, the justice has no jurisdiction.—Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116, 18 N. W. 580.

[d] (Mo. 1869) In an action commenced before a justice of the peace for damages in killing stock, where the amount claimed is $170, a sum exceeding the jurisdiction of the court, unless it comes within the provisions of the act of 1861, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of justices' courts," the fact that it does should appear on the face of the papers in the justice court in order to confer jurisdiction.—Hansberger v. Pacific R. Co., 43 Mo. 196.

§ 212. —— Jurisdiction of other justice as dependent on inability of regular officer.

[a] (Iowa, 1859) When, under the amended charter of Muscatine (Laws 1853, p. 137), a justice hears a case, on account of the inability of the mayor, the regular officer, to act therein, the inability of the mayor must appear of record to confer jurisdiction.—Muscatine v. Steck, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 505.

[b] (Me. 1880) Where different justices from the one before whom a writ is made returnable continue and try the case, in order to give them jurisdiction, it must appear on the record that the justice named in the writ is unable to attend, under Rev. St. c. 83, § 12.—Inman v. Whiting, 70 Me. 445.

[c] (Minn. 1870) Under St. c. 65, § 18, relating to the transfer of actions from one justice of the peace to another, the docket of a justice before whom an action has been commenced, and who has allowed the case, upon proper affidavits, to be transferred to another justice, must, to give jurisdiction to the latter, show that such transfer was ordered to that particular justice. A simple statement of the transfer, without indicating to what particular justice the case is transferred, will not confer jurisdiction.—Rahilly v. Lane, 15 Minn. 447 (Gil. 360).

[d] (Mo. 1839) Where justices of the peace exercise jurisdiction in an adjoining township, under a statutory provision allowing them to do so when the justice of the latter township is disqualified, etc., their records need not show that the facts existed to authorize them to exercise the jurisdiction, but this may be shown aliunde.—Lates v. Perkins, 6 Mo. 57.

§ 213. —— Jurisdiction as dependent on consent.

[a] (Iowa, 1884) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, and the subsequent proceedings thereunder, including a sale of land on execution, are not rendered void by a failure of the record to show that the consent of the parties was given that the justice might take jurisdiction of the case, since this is not required by Code 1873, § 3515, prescribing what the record shall contain, though, by the provisions of section 3508, such consent was necessary to confer jurisdiction.—Schlisman v. Webber, 65 Iowa, 114, 21 N. W. 209.

§ 214. —— Process, notice, or appearance.

See post, § 454.

[a] (Cal. 1858) The failure of the justice to enter the return of service on his docket is not fatal to a default judgment on appeal.—Denmark v. Liening, 10 Cal. 93.

[b] (Cal. 1883) An entry in the docket of a justice of the peace to the effect that summons was returned served does not show a valid service, or that jurisdiction was acquired.—Kane v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 464.

[c] (Del. 1850) In proceedings by attachment the justice's record must show how notice was given. A record that notice was given "according to law" is insufficient to give the justice jurisdiction.—Johnson v. Layton, 5 Har. 252.

[d] (Del. 1875) The record of a judgment by default on summons returnable forthwith for want of appearance should state that it was returnable forthwith because the justice was satisfied that delay was dangerous to plaintiff's interests.—Gray v. Vandyke, 5 Houst. 134.

[e] (Ga. 1853) The record of a justice's judgment should show that service was made on the defendant of the summons or warrant in the original suit, that it may be seen that the justice had jurisdiction of the person.—Gray v. McNeal, 12 Ga. 424.

[f] (Ind. 1861) A justice's record ran: "Now comes A. with a power of attorney to confess judgment. Whereupon the defendant, by his attorney, waived the issuing and service of process, and confessed judgment," etc. Held, that this record, though informal, and perhaps irregular, was sufficient for the basis of an action, and sufficiently showed jurisdiction in the justice over the person of the defendant.—Dragoo v. Graham, 17 Ind. 427.

[g] (Ind. 1867) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace on default is not made void by the fact that the summons and return of service are not set out in the record. The statute which prescribes the requisites of a justice's docket (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 581) makes it the duty of the justice to keep a record of the proceedings in each case,—that is, to record the facts as they occur,—but does not require him to copy on his docket the summons and other proceedings that may be issued by him in the cause.—Taylor v. McClure, 28 Ind. 39.

[h] (Iowa, 1887) Where the record of a justice's judgment on a written contract to be performed in his township shows service of the original notice on defendant, then living in another county, by a return indorsed thereon purporting to be signed by a constable of the latter county, it sufficiently shows jurisdiction.—Baker v. Jamison, 73 Iowa, 698, 36 N. W. 647.

[i] (Me. 1863) A record of a justice, showing that a writ made returnable before him "at his dwelling house," to wit, "at his office," in a certain town, was entered at a "place separate and at a short distance from said dwelling house," in said town, "which place said justice uses as his office for the trial of actions brought before him," is insufficient to show that the justice had jurisdiction.—Stanton v. Hatch, 52 Me. 244.

[ii] (Mich. 1862) Entry on a justice's docket that "the parties appeared," and judgment was rendered by confession, imports the presence of both plaintiff and defendant.—Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 Mich. 16.

[j] (Mich. 1872) A docket entry which does not show whether the plaintiff appeared on any particular day out of several, and does not show that he appeared within an hour after the return day of the process, fails to show that the justice was authorized to render judgment; and it is inadmissible to prove the validity of the judgment, since, under Comp. Laws 1857, § 3777, cl. 2, a failure of plaintiff to appear within an hour after the time set for hearing works a discontinuance of the case.—Redman v. White, 25 Mich. 523.

[jj] (Mich. 1885) To show jurisdiction, a justice's docket must show the hour, as well as the day, of the appearance, and a failure in such respect cannot be helped by parol.—Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307, 25 N. W. 297.

[k] (Mich. 1886) The docket must affirmatively show, when there is no appearance of the defendant, that the plaintiff appeared within one hour of the time named on the return day, or jurisdiction is lost.—Post v. Harper, 61 Mich. 434, 28 N. W. 161.

[kk] (Mich. 1890) Where defendant appears specially, and objects to the jurisdiction for want of authority in the person serving the process, and appeals from a judgment overruling his objection, the justice's record must show the jurisdictional facts; and no presumption will be indulged in favor of their existence.—Gadsby v. Stimer, 79 Mich. 260, 44 N. W. 606.

[l] (Minn. 1872) When parties appeared before a justice at the time specified in the summons, and without any objection to the time of appearance, the failure of the justice's docket to show when they appeared affects the regularity of the docket, but not the regularity of the justice's judgment.—Tyrrell v. Jones, 18 Minn. 312 (Gil. 281).

[ll] (Minn. 1872) Failure of the justice's docket to show appearance of parties, that fact appearing otherwise in the record, is mere irregularity, not affecting his judgment.—Tyrrell v. Jones, 18 Minn. 312 (Gil. 281).

[m] (Mo. 1858) A judgment rendered in a justice's court, which is not a court of general authority, is void, unless it is shown by the record that the justice acquired jurisdiction by service of process or by the appearance of the defendant.—Bersch v. Schneider, 27 Mo. 101.

[mm] (Mo. 1885) In a proceeding before a justice to enforce a mechanic's lien, the filing of notice in the clerk's office of the circuit court before beginning suit must appear of record.—Ewing v. Donnelly, 20 Mo. App. 6.

[n] (Neb. 1895) The record of a judgment by default entered by a justice of the peace must show that the summons was served on defendant, as that is necessary to show jurisdiction.—Muller v. Plue, 45 Neb. 701, 64 N. W. 232.

[nn] (Neb. 1895) The record of a judgment by default entered by a justice of the peace must show that plaintiff appeared within one hour of the time named in the summons, as that is necessary to show jurisdiction.—Muller v. Plue, 45 Neb. 701, 64 N. W. 232.

[o] (Nev. 1865) A justice's judgment will be held void when the record does not affirmatively show that the summons was served within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice, or that the defendant appeared.—Mallett v. Uncle Sam Gold & Silver Min. Co., 1 Nev. 188, 90 Am. Dec. 484.

[oo] (N. J. 1857) Proof of the advertisement of an attachment, being essential to entitle the justice to try the case in the defendant's absence, must be stated on the docket.—Lentz v. Collin, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 218.

[p] (N. Y. 1847) Where a justice's docket, given in evidence to prove a judgment, stated the issuing and personal service of a summons on a day named, and that on a subsequent day, specified, which was six days after the service of the summons, the plaintiff appeared and declared, and that judgment was rendered, but it was not otherwise stated on what day the summons was returnable, it was held that the docket sufficiently showed jurisdiction to have been obtained in the suit.—Groff v. Griswold, 1 Denio, 432.

[pp] (Ohio, 1891) An objection to the validity of a judgment by a justice of the peace taken by default, on the ground that the return on his docket did not show that the amount claimed to be due was indorsed on the writ, cannot be maintained, since Rev. St. § 594, only requires the justice to enter on his docket the date of the writ and the time of its return.—Cook v. Dinsmore, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 385.

[q] (Pa. 1840) A judgment for over $100 before a justice is void, unless it appear on the face of the record that the parties appeared before him and confessed the same.—Camp v. Wood, 10 Watts, 118.

[qq] (Pa. 1856) In an action before an alderman it must appear on the record that 30 days' notice in due form has been given to an alderman sued before suit was brought against him for his official acts.—Ashton v. Isard, 2 Phila. 39.

[r] (Pa.) The record of a justice's default judgment must show that the return of service was made on oath or affirmation.—(1870) Shultz v. Sweigart, 2 Lanc. Bar, No. 1, p. 1; (1873) Sauser v. Werntz, 1 Leg. Chron. 249; (1879) Deerbeck v. Hildebrand, 10 Lanc. Bar, 152; (1879) Hawthorn v. Filler, 1 Leg. Rec.

Rep. 48; (1882) Adler v. Patrick, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 465; (1894) Knoblauch v. Hefron (Com. Pl.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 765.

[rr] (Pa. 1872) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace by default, the record must show that proper process was served, or the judgment will be reversed on certiorari.—Klugh v. Rouse, 4 Lanc. Bar, No. 14, p. 1.

[s] (Pa. 1874) To justify the court in sustaining as regular the service of a justice's summons, it must appear by the record that the constable who deputed the plaintiff's agent to serve same was a constable of the county, or within the proper class, or that such officer appeared before the justice and identified his official character as a constable of the county. —Warren v. Wells, 3 Luz. Leg. Reg. 111.

[ss] (Pa. 1875) The record of a justice of the peace, which shows that the defendant was summoned to appear at 1:30 o'clock p. m., and that judgment was rendered at 2 o'clock, the defendant not appearing, is defective, since it does not show that defendant might not have been present at the hour stated.—Smith v. Fetherston, 32 Leg. Int. 40.

[t] (Pa. 1879) To sustain a judgment by default, the record must show a legal service of the summons.—Deerbeck v. Hildebrand, 10 Lanc. Bar, 152; Commonwealth v. Turnpike Co., 1 Law T. (N. S.) 127.

[tt] (Pa. 1883) Where defendant does not appear before the justice, it must appear by the record that the process was issued and served in the manner prescribed by law.—Fraelich v. Mowrer, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 49.

[u] (Pa. 1884) The record of a justice on a judgment by default must show affirmatively that plaintiff, or some one on his behalf, appeared at the time of the hearing before the justice.—Karche v. Bach, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 118.

[uu] (Pa. 1891) Judgment of a justice for plaintiff will be reversed where the record fails to show that a copy of affidavit of claim was served on defendant, or that defendant waived service, or that plaintiff or his agent appeared and substantiated his claim by proof.—Abbey v. Young (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 476.

[v] (Pa. 1892) Where a judgment by default is rendered by a justice of the peace, the record must show that the plaintiff appeared on the day and at the hour mentioned in the summons.—Gwinner v. Brendt (Com. Pl.) 6 Kulp, 532.

[vv] (Pa. 1892) The justice's docket must show an appearance of plaintiff at the time mentioned in the summons.—Ellenberger v. Bush (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 50.

[w] (Pa. 1896) The record of a justice of the peace, though failing to show that summons was served on the defendant, and stating only that it was indorsed "Served," was sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff.—Missemer v. Trout (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 317.

[ww] (S. C. 1839) Proceedings before an inferior court are void, unless they carry upon their face the evidence of jurisdiction; and therefore the oath upon which a magistrate issues an attachment, though it need not be taken in writing, must be recited in the writ.—Devall v. Taylor, 1 Cheves, 5.

[x] (S. C. 1882) An inference of an appearance by defendant is not warranted by the mere fact of an indorsement on the summons by the trial justice of a taxation of costs for "hearing, examination of witness, and subpœna," and jurisdiction does not appear sufficiently.—Barron v. Dent, 17 S. C. 75.

[xx] (Tex. 1860) A judgment of a justice, rendered under Act Jan. 27, 1842, § 10, providing that, if any sheriff fails or refuses to pay over money collected on execution, he shall be liable to pay 10 per cent. a month on the amount so collected, besides interest and costs, and that the sum may be recovered by motion against his sureties, is void if the record fails to show that defendant had notice or that he appeared in the proceeding.—Mitchell v. Runkle, 25 Tex. Supp. 132.

[y] (Tex. 1888) Justices' courts, not being courts of special jurisdiction, in which all the facts giving them jurisdiction must appear, the fact that a transcript from the justice does not show expressly that all defendants in an action were cited to appear, does not invalidate the judgment.—Hance v. Galveston Wharf Co., 70 Tex. 115, 8 S. W. 76.

[yy] (Tex. 1894) Where the citation is served on the defendant, a nonresident outside of the state, a mere entry in the justice's docket that an attorney appeared for defendant is insufficient, under Rev. St. art. 1579, to show that defendant made an appearance, and a personal judgment against defendant is void.—Schneider v. Gray, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 25, 26 S. W. 640.

[z] (Vt.) Where a defendant, who was a resident of the state, is out of the state at the time of commencing a suit, and the return does not show notice, the plaintiff must show notice before judgment is rendered, and that fact must appear on the face of the justice records, or proceedings must be had agreeably to Comp. St. p. 236, §§ 58, 59.—(1826) Marvin v. Wilkins, 1 Aiken, 107; (1853) Kidder v. Hadley, 25 Vt. 544.

§ 215. Pleading jurisdictional facts.

In action on judgment, see post, § 423.

[a] (Ark. 1852) Where, in trover for a gun, defendant claims title under a judgment rendered under Dig. c. 153, § 52, which provides for the forfeiture of guns found in the hands of slaves, the plea should state all the facts necessary to show jurisdiction on the part of the justice rendering the judgment of forfeiture. —Jones v. Mason, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 687.

[b] (Ind. 1837) The statement of demand filed in an action before a justice of the peace need not show that the justice has jurisdiction; but, if it show the contrary, the suit must be dismissed.—Perkins v. Smith, 4 Blackf. 299.

[c] (Ind. 1882) Where a complaint before a justice of the peace is for the recovery of real estate, and fails to show the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to the suit, which relation alone would give jurisdiction, such complaint is insufficient on motion in arrest of judgment in the circuit court.—Burgett v. Bothwell, 86 Ind. 149.

[d, e] (Md. 1857) In an action against a constable a plea alleging that certain property was taken by defendant by virtue of an attachment issued by a justice of the peace, implies that the writ was legally issued (Act 1856, c. 112, subc. 2, art. 4, § 60), and the facts necessary to jurisdiction in the justice need not be set forth.—Campbell v. Webb, 11 Md. 471.

[f] (Mo. 1876) To give a justice jurisdiction of an action for killing live stock on a railroad, the statement of the cause of action must specify the locality where the injury occurred.—Haggard v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 63 Mo. 302.

[g] (Mo. 1876) In an action for rent before a justice of the peace under Wag. St. p. 882, §§ 33–35, which require that the landlord shall file a statement setting forth the terms on which the property was rented and the amount of rent actually due, which shall not exceed the jurisdiction of a justice, plaintiff's complaint must specify the exact sum, or, if rent be payable in particular products or material, the exact amount thereof, demanded and due.—Cook v. Decker, 63 Mo. 328.

[h] (Mo. 1888) In an action against a railroad company before a justice of the peace, under Rev. St. § 809, for killing stock in a township other than that in which the suit is brought, the fact that the two townships adjoin each other is jurisdictional and must be averred.—Wiseman v. St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co., 30 Mo. App. 516, Kinion v. Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co., Id. 573.

[i] (Mo. 1893) Where an action before a justice of the peace for killing stock is brought in the township adjoining the one where the killing occurred, it should be so alleged in the complaint.—Jones v. Chicago, B. & K. C. Ry. Co., 52 Mo. App. 381.

[j] (Mo. 1894) Rev. St. § 2079, providing that in pleading a judgment by a court of special jurisdiction it shall be sufficient to allege it as having been "duly made," and, if this be denied, the pleader shall show the jurisdictional facts, applies to the pleading of a judgment of a justice of the peace condemning land for reservoir area for a railroad.—Musick v. Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co., 124 Mo. 544, 28 S. W. 72.

[k] (Mo. 1894) In an action against a railroad company under Rev. St. § 2611, for double damages for killing stock, the fact that the stock was killed in the township in which the action was brought, or in an adjoining township, is jurisdictional, and an averment thereof is essential.—Mier v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 56 Mo. App. 655.

[l, m] (Mo. 1894) In an action before a justice of the peace against a railroad company to recover double damages for the killing of stock, an allegation that the township in which such stock was killed is adjacent to the one in which the action is instituted will, in the absence of objection, be deemed equivalent to an allegation that the one township adjoins the other.—Harrison v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 58 Mo. App. 463.

[n, o] (N. J.) A credit given by the plaintiff to reduce his demand within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace ought to appear on the state of demand itself.—(1807) Price v. Smock, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 206; (1809) Caldwell v. French, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 613; (1866) Keep v. Kelly, 32 N. J. Law (3 Vroom) 56.

[p] (N. J. 1870) Since a justice of the peace is given a special jurisdiction under the landlord and tenant act over actions to recover possession from a tenant, every fact necessary to show that the justice had jurisdiction of the case must appear in the pleadings.—Hopper v. Chamberlain, 34 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 220.

[q] (N. Y. 1826) In trespass, a plea of justification by overseers of the poor that they seized plaintiff's property by virtue of a warrant of two justices, issued on defendant's application, on the ground that plaintiff had left his wife and children a charge on the town, must state affirmatively that the plaintiff had left his wife and children a charge, since this is necessary to give the justice jurisdiction.—Bowman v. Russ, 6 Cow. 234.

[r] (N. Y. 1844) A plea of justification under an attachment issued by the justice must set forth the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the justice is founded. General averments that the proceedings were according to the statute are not sufficient.—Van Etten v. Hurst, 6 Hill, 311, 41 Am. Dec. 748.

[s] (N. Y. 1850) In an action for assault and battery and false imprisonment, a plea in justification under warrant of arrest issued by a justice of the peace in a civil suit is sufficient, where enough is shown to bring the case within the general language of the act conferring jurisdiction, though, if within certain exceptions of the act, the warrant would have been unauthorized.—Foster v. Hazen, 12 Barb. 547.

[t] (N. Y. 1886) Buffalo City Charter, tit. 2, § 10, as amended by Laws 1885, c. 181, provides that a justice of the peace in a certain ward in Buffalo shall have jurisdiction in civil actions and proceedings only where the defendant is a nonresident at the time the action or proceeding is commenced. Held, that the fact of nonresidence is not a jurisdictional fact, which must be pleaded to authorize a judgment in plaintiff's favor.—Griffin v. Norton, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 812.

[tt] (Pa. 1851) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, it was held that it need not appear in the declaration that the claim of the plaintiff was for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court; that it was sufficient if it appeared on the trial.—Hackman v. Flory, 16 Pa. (4 Harris) 196.

[u] (Vt. 1840) In actions on promissory notes before justices of the peace, it must appear, either from the declaration or from the indorsements on the note or notes, that the sum due is less than $100, or the case will be dismissed on motion.—Perkins v. Rich, 12 Vt. 595.

[v] (Wis. 1859) Under the old practice, a justification of a trespass under a justice's execution must set out in detail the facts, to show jurisdiction.—Roys v. Lull, 9 Wis. 324.

§ 216. Presumptions as to jurisdiction.

On appeal, see post, § 705.

On certiorari, see post, §§ 812, 813.

[a] The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace or other inferior magistrate will not be presumed.

—(Ala. 1890) Horton v. Elliott, 90 Ala. 480, 8 South. 103; (Ark. 1843) Reeves v. Clarke, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 27;
(Cal. 1883) Kane v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 464;
(Ind. 1854) Straughan v. Inge, 5 Ind. 157; (1881) Wilkinson v. Moore, 79 Ind. 397;
(Me. 1856) Lane v. Crosby, 42 Me. 327;
(Mich. 1847) Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. (Man.) 19, 48 Am. Dec. 688;
(Minn. 1871) Clague v. Hodgson, 16 Minn. 329 (Gil. 291).
(Nev. 1865) Mallett v. Uncle Sam Gold & Silver Min. Co., 1 Nev. 188, 90 Am. Dec. 484.

[b] (U. S. 1824) If a creditor gives a credit upon his account so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and if the debtor does not object to the credit before the justice, his assent to the credit will be presumed, in the District of Columbia.—Maddox v. Stewart, Fed. Cas. No. 8,934 [2 Cranch, C. C. 523].

[c, d] (Cal.) One who sets up a judgment of a justice must affirmatively show every fact necessary to confer jurisdiction.—(1859) Swain v. Chase, 12 Cal. 283; (1863) Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401; (1867) Jolley v. Foltz, 34 Cal. 321.

[e, f] (Cal. 1867) In an action in a justice's court it did not appear that the defendant against whom judgment by default was rendered resided in the township in which the action was commenced, or that he was within any of the exceptions enumerated in section 525 of the practice act. Held, that when the proceedings and judgment in such action, as contained in the docket and other papers alone, were offered in evidence against the defendant in another action, they were properly rejected, because jurisdiction of the person of the defendant did not affirmatively appear.—Jolley v. Foltz, 34 Cal. 321.

[g] (Ga. 1843) To oust a justice court of jurisdiction on the ground that the entire demand has been divided into several smaller ones, it must be proved before the justice that the whole demand was originally entire.—Pinckard v. Ware, Ga. Dec. 172, pt. 2; Kendall v. Justices of 675th Dist. of Muscogee County, Ga. Dec. 185, pt. 2.

[h] (Ga. 1869) Where a justice of the peace officially indorsed a fi. fa., but without naming the county, the legal presumption is that he was a justice of the peace for the county in which the levy was made; especially after the lapse of 30 years.—Thomas v. Malcom, 39 Ga. 329, 99 Am. Dec. 459.

[i] (Ill. 1839) The court will presume that a credit, allowed on an account by the plaintiff in a suit before a justice, which, if allowed, would bring the case within the jurisdiction of the justice, was fair, until the contrary is shown.—Hugunin v. Nicholson, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 575.

[j] (Ill. 1854) A., a justice of the peace, removed from the county and made over his docket and papers to B., then the nearest justice to A.; B. afterwards removed from the state and transferred his docket and papers, including those of A., to C., who issued an execution on the judgment by A. Held, that it would be presumed in support of his jurisdiction that he was the nearest justice.—Martin v. Walker, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 377.

[k] (Ind. 1841) Though a note filed before a justice of the peace as a cause of action be, on its face, for a sum beyond his jurisdiction, yet, if the amount actually demanded and recovered be within it, the presumption is that the note had been so reduced by credits as to authorize the justice, under the statute, to take cognizance of the cause.—Remington v. Henry, 6 Blackf. 64.

[l] (Ind. 1857) There is no presumption in law that a justice of the peace of a foreign state has jurisdiction to render judgment in a civil action.—Willey v. Strickland, 8 Ind. 453.

[m] (Ind. 1862) Where the justice does not certify the cause up, and the pleadings do not put the title in issue, and there is nothing to show what the proof was before the justice, it will be presumed that he did his duty, and that the proof did not put the title in issue.—Wall v. Albertson, 18 Ind. 145.

[n] (Ind. 1875) An affidavit in support of a motion for a writ of mandate to compel a justice of the peace to issue a summons in a civil action must allege that the justice is not related by blood or marriage to either party.—Logansport, C. & S. W. R. Co. v. Groniger, 51 Ind. 383.

[o] (Ind. 1891) Justices of the peace are inferior courts of statutory powers, and no presumption can be invoked in favor of their judgments on points relating to their jurisdiction.—Goodwin v. Barnett (App.) 28 N. E. 115.

[oo] (Ind. 1892) Rev. St. 1881, § 1433, gives justices of the peace concurrent jurisdiction to determine certain suits, where the value in controversy does not exceed $200. Held, in an action to recover replevied property, that though the complaint alleges that the justice who issued the writ of replevin, and the party who procured it, knew that the value of the property to be replevied was $300, yet where it is not shown how the justice had such information, nor claimed that the complaint filed in the action of replevin did not show that the value of the property did not exceed $200, it will be presumed that the justice acted in good faith, and had jurisdiction of the matter.—Lemert v. Shaffer, 5 Ind. App. 468, 31 N. E. 1128.

[p] (Iowa, 1877) In the absence of any showing to the contrary in the justice's record, jurisdiction of a garnishment once acquired is presumed to have continued to the judgment, though more than three days intervened between the answer and the judgment.—Moore v. Reeves, 47 Iowa, 30.

[pp] (Mich. 1847) Credit will not be given to a confession of judgment before a justice of the peace, unless it is clearly and affirmatively shown that he had jurisdiction to render it.—Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. (Man.) 19, 48 Am. Dec. 688.

[q] (Mich. 1865) Where, under Comp. Laws, § 3893, a justice certifies a transcript of a judgment from the docket of a former justice, the original docket and judgment must be presumed to be under his legal control.—Facey v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 527.

[qq] (Mich. 1873) Where it is shown that a justice of the peace originally obtained jurisdiction of an action, it will be presumed in support of the judgment rendered therein that jurisdiction continued until entry of such judgment.—Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520.

[r] (Mo. 1857) Where defendant to an action in a justice court was served with process in the township in which it was begun, it will be presumed, in another action involving such judgment, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he resided therein.—Franse v. Owens, 25 Mo. 329.

[rr] (Mo. 1886) Where suit is brought for double damages before a justice for the killing of plaintiff's hogs in a township alleged to be adjoining that in which suit was brought, and there is failure to prove either that the killing was done in the township alleged, or that that township adjoined the one where the suit was brought, the action cannot be maintained.—Palmer v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 21 Mo. App. 437.

[s] (N. J. 1856) In special statutory proceedings in justice's court to compel a turnpike company to cease taking toll when its road is out of repair, under Act Feb. 22, 1852 (Nix. Dig. p. 603), authorizing the incorporation of plank road companies, everything necessary to give jurisdiction must be shown.—Bergen Turnpike Co. v. Walker, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 554.

[ss] (N. Y. 1847) A count, in a suit in a justice's court, charging an injury to plaintiff's clothing, is good, as the court will not intend that it was incidental to an assault and battery, of which latter matter a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Rich v. Hogeboom, 4 Denio, 453.

[t] (N. Y. 1855) Although, in the justice's return of a case in which judgment has been rendered by him, no facts appear affirmatively to show that he had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the person, yet if the docket of the justice is read in evidence without objection, and no objection taken to the validity of the judgment, or the sufficiency of the evidence to show that the justice had jurisdiction, the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction will be presumed.—Westbrook v. Douglass, 21 Barb. 602.

[tt] (N. Y. 1891) The affidavit of defendant recited that a few days before the action was commenced she received a letter signed by C., the justice who issued the summons against her and who was also a practicing lawyer, stating that plaintiff had left with him an account of $50 against defendant for collection, and that unless it was settled plaintiff would feel obliged to bring an action to enforce its collection. Held, that it would not be presumed against the jurisdiction of the justice that he was acting as an attorney in writing for the plaintiff.—McLouth v. Myers, 61 Hun, 624, 16 N. Y. Supp. 779.

[u] (N. C. 1837) The term "book account" may comprehend a signed account as well as an open one, and where judgment of a single justice appears to have been given on a warrant, as due by book account, for an amount beyond the jurisdiction of a justice to render on an open account, it will be taken, in support of the justice's jurisdiction, that the book account was a signed account.—Turner v. Edwards, 19 N. C. 539.

[uu] (N. C. 1896) Where a cause of action could be brought either for breach of contract or in tort for negligence, and plaintiff sues before a justice, in order to sustain the jurisdiction of the justice it will be presumed that the action was brought on the contract.—Schulhofer v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 118 N. C. 1096, 24 S. E. 709.

[v] (Pa. 1895) Where a judgment of a justice of the peace was allowed to stand for over a year after the entry, every reasonable presumption consistent with the record will be made in favor of the jurisdiction and regularity of the proceedings.—Cooke v. Shoemaker (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 212, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 641.

[vv] (Tenn. 1874) A justice's judgment is not invalidated by the fact that the warrant fails to affirmatively show that the note upon which the judgment was rendered was for an amount within the justice's jurisdiction, as that fact will be presumed.—Elliott v. Jordan, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 376.

[w] (Tex. 1857) Where the record of a justice of the peace shows that judgment was had against some defendants on appearance, any defendant not duly served, in order to impeach the judgment on that ground, must allege and prove that he did not appear in court.—Howerton v. Luckie, 18 Tex. 237.

[ww] (Tex. 1858) A justice of the peace will be presumed to have acted within his jurisdiction, although his entry of judgment is so made that its terms are applicable to a case in which he had no jurisdiction as well as to one which he had authority to decide.—Bumpus v. Fisher, 21 Tex. 561.

[x] (Tex. 1887) A judgment in personam of a justice of the peace showed that it was obtained on service by publication, which was allowable, under Act Aug. 7, 1848, if defendant was absent from the state or transient. It did not appear on what ground publication was ordered. In a transfer of certain scrip indorsed thereon, 15 years before judgment, defendant was described as of a foreign state. Held, that it should not be presumed, in a collateral proceeding, that defendant was nonresident, so as to invalidate the judgment.—Traylor v. Lide (Sup.) 7 S. W. 58.

[xx] (Tex. 1895) A judgment of a justice of the peace, though silent as to service of citation, will be presumed to be valid, on collateral attack, until the contrary is shown, either from the record, or by evidence aliunde.—Hambel v. Davis (Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 251.

[y] (Vt. 1840) In order to sustain the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace of an action on a note as to the amount in controversy, if a payment is alleged in general terms, without time or place, it will be presumed to have been made at the date of the note.—Perkins v. Rich, 12 Vt. 595.

[yy] (Vt. 1852) The same rule of construction is extended in favor of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace as is done in favor of courts of general jurisdiction.—Wright v. Hazen, 24 Vt. 143.

[z] (Wis. 1859) Though the Code allows a general allegation of jurisdiction in the case of the inferior courts, as justices' courts, yet if the jurisdiction is denied the jurisdictional facts must be affirmatively shown at the trial, as under the old practice.—Roys v. Lull, 9 Wis. 324.

[zz] (Wis. 1880) Under Laws 1877, c. 192, providing that a justice shall not issue process unless prior thereto a complaint shall be made and filed by one of certain officers, to give the justice jurisdiction of an action it must appear affirmatively that the complaint was made and filed by a person authorized by the statute; it cannot be presumed.—State v. Gillen, 49 Wis. 683, 6 N. W. 250.

(M) CONSENT OF PARTIES TO JURISDICTION, AND WAIVER AND CURE OF OBJECTIONS.

CONSENT OF PARTIES TO JURISDICTION, § 217.
WAIVER OR CURE OF OBJECTIONS, § 218.
— WAIVER OF OBJECTION THAT TITLE TO LAND IS INVOLVED, § 219.
— WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS TO PLACE OF BRINGING SUIT, § 220.
— WAIVER OF DISQUALIFICATION OF JUSTICE, § 221.

Appearance as conferring jurisdiction or waiving objections, see post, §§ 267, 272, 273.

§ 217. Consent of parties to jurisdiction.

[a] (Ala. 1834) Where a defendant consents to be sued in a justice court in a county other than that in which he resides, he cannot, on appeal to the county court, plead his privilege to be sued in the county of his residence.—McKinney v. Low, 1 Port. 129.

[b] (Cal. 1857) Consent of parties cannot give a justice jurisdiction beyond $200.—Feillett v. Engler, 8 Cal. 76.

[c] (Ga. 1889) Where a magistrate issued an attachment, and went outside of the limits of his jurisdiction, and tried a claim filed against the property attached, he had neither jurisdiction of the person of the claimant nor of the suit, and jurisdiction could not be conferred by an agreement of the claimant to that effect.—Block v. Henderson, 82 Ga. 23, 8 S. E. 877, 14 Am. St. Rep. 138, 3 L. R. A. 325.

[d] (Ind. 1877) Jurisdiction by consent of parties cannot be given to a justice of the peace in a controversy exceeding $200.—Horton v. Sawyer, 59 Ind. 587.

[e] (Iowa) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to render a judgment on an award of arbitrators where, by agreement of the parties to the arbitration, judgment is so to be rendered thereon, and where the amount of the award does not exceed the sum limiting the jurisdiction of the justice to render judgment by consent.—(1866) Van Horn v. Bellar, 20 Iowa, 253; (1868) Whitis v. Culver, 25 Iowa, 30.

[f] (Iowa, 1880) A clause in a note for less than $300, bearing interest, that "consent is hereby given that a justice of the peace may have jurisdiction on this note to the amount of $300," confers, under Code 1873, § 3508, and Const. art. 11, § 1,—both of which declare that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall extend to all civil cases where the amount in controversy does not exceed $100, and, by consent of parties, may be extended to any amount not exceeding $300,—jurisdiction upon any justice who would otherwise have had jurisdiction but for the statutory limitation to $100.—Marshalltown Bank v. Kennedy, 53 Iowa, 357, 5 N. W. 508.

[g] (Iowa, 1882) Since, under Code 1873, § 3508, a justice of the peace cannot have jurisdiction in excess of $100, except by consent, where the parties to a note for $225 agree therein that judgment may be taken on it before any justice of the peace of Dallas county, a judgment on such note, rendered by a justice of the peace of Polk county, is void, though the note was payable there.—Brown v. Davis, 59 Iowa, 641, 13 N. W. 861.

[h] (Iowa, 1886) A tenant gave his note for rent in an amount in excess of a justice's jurisdiction, agreeing that the justice might have jurisdiction. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction thereunder of a proceeding to enforce the landlord's lien as against a subtenant.—Houghton v. Bauer, 70 Iowa, 314, 30 N. W. 577.

[i] (Me. 1855) The jurisdiction of magistrates can arise only from the express provision of statute, and not from the agreement of parties.—Call v. Mitchell, 39 Me. 465.

[j] (Mich. 1847) Where jurisdiction is unqualifiedly withheld from a justice, consent will not render the proceedings valid.—Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. (Man.) 19, 48 Am. Dec. 688.

[k] (Miss. 1881) Consent of parties will not confer jurisdiction on a justice's court where none exists, but will bind the parties, if the thing consented to could lawfully be done by the court under any circumstances without consent.—Rice v. Locke, 59 Miss. 189.

[l] (Mo. 1893) The rule that jurisdiction of persons may be conferred by consent applies to justices' courts.—Grimm v. Dundee Land & Investment Co., 55 Mo. App. 457.

[m] (N. J. 1790) Where the justice who issues the warrant is absent when the writ is returned, and the parties voluntarily submit to the decision of another justice, the judgment by such second justice is good.—Quigley v. Baldwin, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 37; Johnson v. ———, Id. 44.

[n] (N. Y. 1823) In trespass, the consent of one defendant to appear and go to trial, after the cause has been discontinued on account of the justice's absence on the day set for trial, will not give jurisdiction as to the other defendants.—Stoddard v. Holmes, 1 Cow. 245.

[o] (N. Y. 1823) Where a cause is discontinued by the absence of a justice on the day of trial, the parties may confer jurisdiction by consent, and appearing and going to trial on another day.—Stoddard v. Holmes, 1 Cow. 245.

[p] (N. Y. 1831) In an action of trespass in a justice's court, the consent of the parties that the suit shall proceed, notwithstanding that it involves the title to lands, does not confer jurisdiction.—Striker v. Mott, 6 Wend. 465.

[q] (N. Y. 1850) Consent gives no jurisdiction to the justice over the subject-matter, but does over the person.—Hogan v. Baker, 2 E. D. Smith, 22.

[r] (N. C. 1881) Where a contract creates the legal relation of vendor and vendee, and not that of landlord and tenant, so that a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a summary proceeding in ejectment by the vendor under the landlord and tenant act, such jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of the parties embraced in the contract.—Hughes v. Mason, 84 N. C. 472.

[s] (Ohio, 1853) In any proper form, one may delegate to another complete authority to regulate, control, dispose of, receive, and receipt for his property of whatever description; but he cannot, by any form of commission, whatever the powers of the agent may be, confer on a justice of the peace a power not given by the statute.—McCleary v. McLain, 2 Ohio St. 368.

[t] (Ohio, 1861) Jurisdiction cannot be given to a justice of the peace by consent in cases where he has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter.—Place v. Welch, 2 Ohio Dec. 542.

[u] (Pa. 1869) Where, in an action before a justice, the amount involved exceeds his jurisdiction, the parties cannot, by consent, after the suit is instituted, give the justice jurisdiction of the cause.—Jones v. Stauffer, 1 Leg. Gaz. 91.

[v] (Tex. 1894) Where the appointment of a justice of the peace was void, consent of parties cannot give him jurisdiction.—Crawford v. Saunders (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 102.

§ 218. Waiver or cure of objections.

To jurisdiction of justice taking cause on change of venue, see post, § 240.

[a] (Ala. 1879) Code, § 757, provides that a justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction of all "actions brought to recover specific property where the value does not exceed $50." Held, that where the value of the property exceeds $50, though averred in the complaint as less than that sum, the defect of jurisdiction is not cured when properly presented by plea in abatement by a verdict for plaintiff assessing the value at less than $50.—Carter v. Alford, 64 Ala. 236.

[b] (Cal. 1886) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace to recover a sum of money due on an assessment for street work in a municipality, no question as to the legality of the assessment is raised by answer verified by oath of the defendant, no evidence of such legality can be received, and the justice's court retains jurisdiction.—Williams v. Mecartney, 69 Cal. 556, 11 Pac. 186.

[c] (Colo. 1891) Where, after the trial of an action in justice's court, the parties stipulate for its submission to the district court, which has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and proceed to trial, an objection that the justice had no jurisdiction, and that consequently the district court has no authority to try the case, comes too late.—Edwards v. Smith, 16 Colo. 529, 27 Pac. 809.

[d] (Ga. 1843) Where several suits are brought between the same parties in a justice's court, the defendant can take advantage of their amounting to more than $30 only by a plea to the jurisdiction, and if not so taken the objection is waived.—Gresham v. Landens, Ga. Dec. 149, pt. 2.

[e] (Ga. 1880) Where a justice's summons in a suit for more than $50 was made returnable in less than 20 days, the defect in jurisdiction was not cured by an agreement to waive all defects.—Thurston v. Wilkerson, 65 Ga. 557.

[f] (Ill. 1871) Where a person not a justice of the peace assumes the functions of such officer, and issues a writ of replevin, he is a trespasser; but if the defendant therein procures a change of venue to a person who is a justice, and proceeds to trial before the latter, he thereby confers jurisdiction on him, both as to the person and the subject-matter.—Graves v. Shoefelt, 60 Ill. 462.

[g] (Ind. 1862) Where a justice of the peace disregards a plea to the jurisdiction, and the defendant then pleads to the merits, he thereby waives all question of jurisdiction.—Storm v. Worland, 19 Ind. 203.

[h] (Iowa, 1878) Where a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action, the fact that defendant, after the overruling of a motion to dismiss, filed an answer, will not give him jurisdiction.—McMeans v. Cameron, 51 Iowa, 691, 49 N. W. 856.

[i] (Mich. 1884) An objection to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is waived where defendant pleads the general issue and the parties proceed to trial on the merits.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 Mich. 330, 21 N. W. 358, 23 N. W. 25.

[j] (Mo. 1855) Where a suit is brought before a justice of the peace for a sum exceeding that magistrate's jurisdiction, waiver of this error does not confer jurisdiction.—Stone v. Corbett, 20 Mo. 350.

[k] (Mo. 1893) The rule that jurisdiction of the person may be conferred by waiver applies to justices' courts.—Grimm v. Dundee Land & Investment Co., 55 Mo. App. 457.

[l] (N. J. 1890) A party against whom a judgment is rendered in a justice's court in New Jersey, in a matter over which the justice had no jurisdiction, can raise the objection to the jurisdiction of the court either upon a certiorari or upon an appeal.—Steinlein v. Folwell (Sup.) 20 Atl. 1079.

[m] (N. Y. 1850) A defendant does not waive a plea to the jurisdiction of a justice by pleading the general issue after the justice has overruled his first plea.—Allen v. Stone, 9 Barb. 60.

[n] (N. Y. 1851) Where the statute expressly declares that a justice shall have no jurisdiction of the cause if the defendant be not proceeded against as the law prescribes, this strips the justice of all official authority, and he has no more power to accept a waiver, and thus acquire jurisdiction, than a private individual would have.—Robinson v. West, 11 Barb. 309, reversing (1847) 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 19.

[o] (Ohio, 1861) Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the defendant has some privilege which exempts him from jurisdiction, he may waive the privilege, and thereby confer jurisdiction on the justice.—Place v. Welch, 2 Ohio Dec. 542.

[p] (Pa. 1877) Where a judgment of a justice of the peace against a married woman was void for want of jurisdiction, failure on her part to appeal was not a waiver of the want of jurisdiction.—Krause v. Leiby, 1 Leg. Rec. 74.

[q] (Pa. 1884) Want of jurisdiction can be taken advantage of at any time on the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace.—Lucas Coal Co. v. Struble, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 300.

§ 219. —— Waiver of objection that title to land is involved.

[a] (N. J. 1833) In the court for the trial of small causes, the justice may allow a defendant to file a plea of title after the return day of the summons, but not after the day to which the cause should be first adjourned.—Shannon v. Flood, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 301.

[b] (N. Y. 1818) In an action of trespass on land, before a justice, the plea of title comes too late, after pleading the general issue, demanding a jury, and obtaining an adjournment. —Quimby v. Hart, 15 Johns. 304.

[c] (N. Y. 1850) To entitle a defendant to a dismissal of a cause pending before a justice, on the ground that the title to land comes in question, he must call the justice's attention specifically to the objection, by at least disputing the title of the plaintiff.—Browne v. Scofield, 8 Barb. 239.

[d] (N. Y. 1851) Where the complaint in a justice's court is so drawn that the defendant can set up title in his answer, and, on giving the requisite security, oust the justice of his jurisdiction, but omits to do so, the justice retains his jurisdiction, and the defendant will be precluded from drawing it in question on the trial.—Adams v. Rivers, 11 Barb. 390.

[e] (N. Y. 1856) The justice ought to give defendant a liberal opportunity of amending his answer, if necessary so as to set up title.—Smith v. Mitten, 13 How. Prac. 325.

[f] (N. Y. 1858) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover penalties for passing a toll gate without paying the tolls, if the defendant intended to raise the question of title, he should have set forth in his answer the matter showing that title would come in question, and should have given the undertaking. Not having done so, the justice had jurisdiction of the cause, and the defendant was precluded, in his defense, from drawing the title in question.—Fredonia & S. Plank Road Co. v. Wait, 27 Barb. 214.

[g] (N. Y.) Under the Code of Procedure, a defendant in a justice's court who would interpose a plea of title is not absolutely required to do so at the time of joining issue, as under the Revised Statutes; but this, like any other defense, may be interposed by amendment at any time before trial, when substantial justice shall be promoted thereby.—(1866) Hinds v. Page, 6 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 58; (1868) Weeks v. Stroble, 36 How. Prac. 123.

[h] (Pa. 1868) Under Act March 22, 1814, requiring an affidavit that title to land would come in question to be made, in order to oust the jurisdiction of the magistrate, "before the trial of the action," it is not essential in every case that the affidavit be made before any witnesses are examined; a reasonable and liberal intendment is to be made in favor of the statutory right of defendant.—Geiger v. Geiger, 1 Woodw. Dec. 404.

[i] (Vt. 1854) Where the title to land is concerned in an action, and the justice consequently has no jurisdiction, it is a defect which may be taken advantage of at any time during the pendency of the action.—Thayer v. Montgomery, 26 Vt. 491.

[j] (Wis. 1883) The existence of a right of way, being an interest in land, cannot be contested in a justice's court, under Rev. St. 1878, § 3573; and, if its existence be relied on as a defense to an action of trespass begun in such court, it must be specially pleaded, and the statutory bond tendered to take the case to the circuit court, or the defense is waived.—Lowitz v. Leverentz, 57 Wis. 596, 15 N. W. 842.

§ 220. —— Waiver of objections to place of bringing suit.

[a] (Cal. 1860) The failure of the defendant, after summons served, to appear and object that suit was brought in the wrong township, is no waiver of the objection to the justice's jurisdiction.—Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 296.

[b] (Cal. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 890, providing, in regard to justices of the peace, that if the objection that the action is brought in the wrong county "is not taken at the trial it is waived," the objection may be taken by answer, and urged on the trial, and therefore an answer to the merits does not waive such objection.—Holbrook, Merrill & Stetson v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 106 Cal. 589, 39 Pac. 936.

[c] (Ga. 1880) Where the justice of the defendant's district was disqualified, his objection that the justice of another district, before whom the case was tried on its merits, did not have jurisdiction over his person, held to come too late, being first raised after judgment.—Dozier v. Allen, 65 Ga. 254.

[d] (Ind. 1854) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, in cases where the defendant is resident in another township, is not destroyed by Rev. St. 1843, p. 863, § 4; unless such defendant appear and plead to the jurisdiction, after being duly served with process, the justice has power to render judgment against him.—State v. Carter, 6 Ind. 38.

[e] (N. Y. 1848) Where defendant did not appear in an action, his failure to object that it was brought before a justice of a town in which the parties did not reside is not a waiver of the error, though he might have appeared and objected.—Tiffany v. Gilbert, 4 Barb. 320.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) 2 Rev. St. art. 226, providing that every action cognizable before a justice shall be brought before some justice of the town in which the parties, or some one of them, reside, or of an adjoining town, is in the nature of an exception to article 225, which gives jurisdiction to justices generally, and must be pleaded by a party seeking to bring himself within its provisions.—Foster v. Hazen, 12 Barb. 547.

[g] (N. Y. 1868) A defendant by answering a complaint in a justice's court waives any defense on the ground of nonresidence, though his attorney made a statement in regard to such nonresidence, where he does not plead such fact or make an affidavit.—Osburne v. Gilbert, 52 Barb. 158.

[h] (N. Y. 1890) Where a justice of the peace acquires no jurisdiction of the person of defendant because neither of the parties resides in his town, the failure of defendant to appear and object to the jurisdiction does not waive the objection.—Larocque v. Harvey, 57 Hun, 366, 10 N. Y. Supp. 576.

[i] (Ohio, 1881) Where a resident of one township was sued before a magistrate in another and goes to trial on the merits, without objection to the jurisdiction, he will be taken to have waived his right to object.—Caldwell v. High (D. C.) 8 Ohio Dec. 183, 6 Wkly. Law Bul. 201.

[j] (Tex. 1881) The right of a party in a justice court to be sued within the precinct or county of his residence may be expressly or impliedly waived.—Masterson v. Ashcom, 54 Tex. 324.

§ 221. —— Waiver of disqualification of justice.

[a] (Conn. 1888) Under Gen. St. § 676, authorizing parties by consent in writing to waive a disqualification of a justice of the peace, such waiver must be in writing, and is not affected by proceeding to trial without objection, even with knowledge of the disqualification.—Keeler v. Stead, 56 Conn. 501, 16 Atl. 552, 7 Am. St. Rep. 320.

[b] (Ind. 1893) The objection to a justice's trial of a cause because of his disqualification may be waived.—Baldwin v. Runyan, 8 Ind. App. 344, 35 N. E. 569.

[c] (N. H. 1858) Where, in a bastardy proceeding, the magistrate before whom the complaint was made, and the preliminary examination had, was a resident citizen and taxpayer of the complainant town, and these facts were known to respondent and his counsel at the time, but they designedly omitted to make any objection on that account until after various proceedings in courts of unquestioned authority having jurisdiction of the cause, the objection came too late.—Warren v. Glynn, 37 N. H. 340.

[d] (N. H. 1859) Objections to the competency of a justice having general jurisdiction of the subject to try a case, because the town of which he is a resident is pecuniarily involved, will be considered to have been waived, unless shown to have been taken at the earliest practical moment after the incompetency became known to the party objecting.—Gilmanton v. Ham, 38 N. H. 108.

[e] (N. Y. 1857) A defendant may prove the relationship of the justice of the peace, before whom the action is tried, to himself, for the purpose of showing want of jurisdiction, though his answer discloses no such defense, and he files no plea to the jurisdiction.—Place v. Butternuts Woolen & Cotton Mfg. Co., 28 Barb. 503.

[f] (Tenn. 1880) A confession of judgment in writing before a justice of the peace related to one of the parties is a waiver in writing of the relationship, within Code, § 4098.—Hilton v. Miller, 73 Tenn. (5 Lea) 395.

[g] (Wis. 1851) After a final judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace, it is too late to object that the justice is brother-in-law of the plaintiff.—Rector v. Drury, 4 Chand. 24, 3 Pin. 298.

[h] (Wis. 1851) The objection that a justice is "near of kin" to one of the parties litigant, within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 88, § 47, may be waived.—Rector v. Drury, 4 Chand. 24, 3 Pin. 298.

[i] (Wis. 1863) It is not necessary that the disqualification of the justice through relationship be made to appear before joining issue.—Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 633.

(N) DETERMINATION OF QUESTIONS OF JURISDICTION.

DETERMINATION OF QUESTIONS OF JURISDICTION, § 222.
MODE AND SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTIONS, § 223.

§ 222. Determination of questions of jurisdiction.

[a] (U. S. 1880) A New York statute provides that justices of the peace shall have civil jurisdiction in certain cases, including "an action to recover the possession of personal property claimed, the value of which, as stated in the affidavit of the plaintiff, his agent or attorney, shall not exceed the sum of $200." It is further provided in the same statute that, before any process shall issue, the plaintiff, his agent or attorney, shall make proof, by affidavit, showing among other things the "actual value" of the property claimed. Held, that such affidavit is an essential prerequisite to the attaching of the jurisdiction of the court.—Daily v. Doe (D. C.) 3 Fed. 903.

[aa] (Ark. 1883) A justice of the peace, having no jurisdiction to try the title to land, should refuse an interplea for land on which an attachment from his court has been levied, and proceed to judgment without reference to the title.—Cunningham v. Holland, 40 Ark. 556.

[b] (Colo. 1871) An action of unlawful detainer against a tenant holding over before a justice of the peace is not defeated by raising a question of title, but the effect is only to remove the cause to another court.—Klopfer v. Keller, 1 Colo. 410.

[c] (Iowa, 1849) A justice of the peace may ex officio determine what townships are within his jurisdiction.—Wright v. Phillips, 2 G. Greene, 191.

[d] (Iowa, 1856) The pleading of the defendant raising a question of title is not the test of the justice's jurisdiction, though if it appear on the trial that title is involved, the justice will be without jurisdiction.—Cox v. Graham, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 347.

[e] (Ky. 1818) Where a declaration is not filed, the evidence must show a demand within a justice's jurisdiction.—Patterson v. Martin, 8 Ky. (1 A. K. Marsh.) 348; Latham v. Ford, Id. 410.

[f] (La. 1895) A justice of the peace who is, by a party litigant in his court, recused on the charge of having a personal and pecuniary interest in the suit, is incompetent to make any order other than one of recusation and assignment to some other justice.—State ex rel. Hogsett v. Patin, 47 La. Ann. 1592, 18 South. 622.

[g] (Mass. 1837) In an action of trespass quare clausum before a justice of the peace, where a plea of title to the land is filed, the justice is not devested of his jurisdiction over the case in all respects, but may act on a motion to waive or amend the plea, or to amend the declaration, or to newly assign; and if the pleadings, as definitely fixed by the parties, do not present a question of title to real estate, he should proceed to try the cause.—Magoun v. Lapham, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 419; Wesson v. Joslin, Id. 422, note.

[h] (Minn. 1871) It is error, in dismissing an action for want of jurisdiction in a justice court, to give judgment for costs against plaintiff, though he appears generally.—McGinty v. Warner, 17 Minn. 41 (Gil. 23).

[i] (Miss. 1876) When one who is a freeholder and householder is sued before a justice in a wrong district, this, under the laws, defeats the jurisdiction of the justice. He has no power to make any order for the transfer of the cause to the proper district, but must simply disclaim jurisdiction.—Cain v. Simpson, 53 Miss. 521.

[j] (Mo. 1883) The justice's transcript, as well as the plaintiff's statement of his cause of action, may be looked to for the purpose of determining whether the stock, for killing which defendant railroad company is sued, were killed in the township wherein suit is brought, so as to confer jurisdiction on the justice.—Fields v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 80 Mo. 208.

[k] (Mo. 1893) Where the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is questioned, the constable's return of service of summons is admissible, either to support or to oppose the docket entries of the justice.—Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.

[l] (N. J. 1875) Where, on challenge to a justice of the peace for having counseled the plaintiffs and expressed his opinion on the matter in controversy, three triors are appointed, their determination of the facts is conclusive under Revision 1874, p. 652, § 262.—Davis v. Mahany, 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 104.

[m] (N. Y. 1831) A plea of title before a justice, and a compliance with the requirements of the statute in such cases, does not oust the justice of jurisdiction, in an action of debt for a penalty for not removing an obstruction in a highway. It is the duty of the justice to decide whether such plea, when put in, is appropriate to the action prosecuted before him.—Fleet v. Youngs, 7 Wend. 291.

[n] (N. Y. 1888) The decision of the justice on the question whether the sum total of the accounts of the parties exceeds $400, thus determining his jurisdiction, is not conclusive in the sense that it cannot be reviewed. If incorrect, though not fatal to his jurisdiction, it is nevertheless error for which the judgment will be reversed.—Milbanks v. Coonley, 49 Hun, 610, 2 N. Y. Supp. 167.

[o] (N. C. 1831) A justice of the peace can try the truth of any plea which, if sustained, would bar an action within his jurisdiction.—Haines v. Dalton, 14 N. C. 91.

[p] (N. C. 1873) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace cannot be proven by witnesses, but must be determined by the court.—Bridgers v. Bridgers, 69 N. C. 451.

[q] (N. C. 1881) In a summary proceeding in ejectment before a justice of the peace, it is the province of the court to determine whether title to land is in controversy.—Parker v. Allen, 84 N. C. 466.

[r] (Pa. 1803) The court, in examining the proceedings of justices of the peace, will call in the aid of affidavits to ascertain whether they have exceeded their jurisdiction.—Burginhofen v. Martin, 3 Yeates, 479.

[s] (Pa. 1855) In proceedings by a landlord to recover possession of the demised premises, under the act of April 3, 1830, the defendant's affidavit that the title to land will come in question will not oust the jurisdiction of the justice. That fact must be proved like any other fact in the case.—Essler v. Johnson, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 350.

[t] (Pa. 1872) Under Act March 22, 1814, providing that a justice shall have no jurisdiction of an action for rent when the title to land may come in question, an affidavit in such an action that the title to land will come in question is conclusive on the justice.—Gruber v. Sheetz, 2 Woodw. Dec. 63.

[u] (Pa. 1872) The filing of an affidavit that title to realty will come in question does not oust the justice of jurisdiction, in proceedings under the landlord and tenant act of 1863; the act being complete in itself and not providing for such ouster by affidavit. The tenant's remedy is by appeal.—Livingood v. Moyer, 2 Woodw. Dec. 65.

[v] (Pa. 1892) Under the law of 1810 (5 Smith's Laws, p. 170, § 20) and of 1814 (6 Smith's Laws, p. 183, § 6), ousting justices of jurisdiction of cases involving title to land on defendant's affidavit, that such title will come in question, it is the duty of the justice on such affidavit to dismiss the case, without requiring payment or tender of one-half the cost.—Williams v. Williams (Com. Pl.) 6 Kulp, 415.

[w] (Tenn. 1874) Where the value of the property replevied is found to be beyond the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, he can only render judgment for costs, though the plaintiff dismisses the suit.—Jacobs v. Parker, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 434.

[x] (Vt. 1884) Where of two counts, trespass and case, the justice has jurisdiction of one, the count in trespass, he cannot amend himself into jurisdiction by striking out the action of case.—French v. Holt, 57 Vt. 187.

[y] (Wis. 1877) Where, in an action of replevin, a justice's judgment determines the value of the property to be over $200, he has no further jurisdiction, whatever the value may in fact be, except to render the statutory judgment of abatement (Rev. St. c. 120, § 145), including costs in defendant's favor and damages for caption and detention of the property seized by the officer.—Darling v. Conklin, 42 Wis. 478.

§ 223. Mode and sufficiency of objections.

Demurrer as raising objection to jurisdiction, see ante, § 97 [b, c, q].

[a] (Ala. 1892) When the lack of jurisdiction appears from the complaint filed in the justice's court, a motion may be made to dismiss the action; and, if the want of jurisdiction does not so appear, the facts may be shown by a plea in abatement denying jurisdiction.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barker, 96 Ala. 435, 11 South. 453.

[b] (Cal. 1856) An objection to the jurisdiction of a justice on the ground of excess of value of the subject in controversy is properly taken by answer.—Small v. Gwinn, 6 Cal. 447.

[c] (Cal. 1886) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover a sum of money due on an assessment for street work in a municipality, the question of the legality of the assessment, so as to oust the justice of jurisdiction, can only be raised by answer, verified by oath, of the defendant.—Williams v. Mecartney, 69 Cal. 556, 11 Pac. 186.

[d] (Cal. 1894) Plaintiff alleged that defendant agreed to locate him on vacant government land, which it failed to do. Defendant admitted the contract, and alleged that it did locate plaintiff on vacant government land; "that defendant is informed and believes that plaintiff claims that said lands were not vacant government lands, but that they were in the possession of some other person; and that defendant alleges that they were not in the possession of some other person at the time of the location of plaintiff thereon." Held, that the title and possession of real property was not necessarily put in issue by the pleadings, so as to deprive a justice of the peace of jurisdiction.—Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co., 103 Cal. 132, 37 Pac. 196.

[e] (Conn. 1793) A traverse of a plaintiff's title, in an action of trespass, amounts to the general issue, and is not such a plea of title as will take an action from a justice of the peace.—Abel v. Abel, 1 Root, 549.

[f] (Conn. 1793) A plea of title before a justice of the peace, though insufficiently set forth, is sufficient to take the cause from the justice.—Riggs v. Woodruff, 2 Root, 35.

[g] (Del. 1888) Under Rev. Code, c. 128, as amended by Act March 8, 1875, and Act March 9, 1877, giving a justice of the peace jurisdiction to try a proceeding for trespass on real estate, but providing for arrest of the proceeding before him on defendant claiming ownership of the premises, and giving security for transfer to the superior court, though defendant gives to the justice a paper stating that the place where the trespass was alleged was his freehold and soil, still if, on being asked by the justice on what ground he claimed the land, he said that he did not own it, the justice was not bound to consider that he claimed the ownership of the premises or of a right of way thereover.—Legates v. Lingo (Super.) 8 Houst. 154, 32 Atl. 80.

[h] (Ga. 1892) Since a plea to the jurisdiction must show that there is another court in the state which has jurisdiction, a plea to a suit in a justice's court in F. county, which alleges that at the commencement thereof defendant was a resident of De K. county, and resides there now, and has so resided for the past year, that said court has no jurisdiction of the person of defendant, and that a suit against defendant by the same plaintiff and on the same subject-matter is pending in the court of defendant's residence, is insufficient, it not being shown what court in De K. county has jurisdiction.—Fain v. Crawford, 91 Ga. 30, 16 S. E. 106.

[i] (Ind. 1832) A statute provides that no person shall be bound to answer any summons issued by a justice in a civil action in any other township than the one in which such defendant actually resides, or where the debt was contracted or the cause of action accrued, or where defendant may be found, unless there is no such justice who can legally issue such summons, etc. To an action of debt before a justice of the peace in a certain township, defendant pleaded that he was not a resident there, nor was the debt contracted there. Held, that such defense was insufficient, as the defendant might not have lived in the township, nor the debt have been contracted there, and yet have been within the justice's jurisdiction.—Nelson v. Zink, 3 Blackf. 101.

[j] (Ind. 1837) The want of jurisdiction in a justice of the peace may be pleaded or given in evidence under the general issue.—Perkins v. Smith, 4 Blackf. 299.

[k] (Ind. 1862) Title to real estate may be put in issue before a justice of the peace (1) by pleading, supported by affidavit, and (2) by proof adduced on the trial.—Wall v. Albertson, 18 Ind. 145.

[kk] (Ind. 1862) A defendant's plea to the jurisdiction before a justice of the peace, averring himself to be a resident of another township, is defective unless it also avers that there is in his own township a justice competent to act, and unless the plea is verified.—Storm v. Worland, 19 Ind. 203.

[l] (Ind. 1892) In an action before a justice by D. to recover possession of premises leased to defendant, September 26, 1890, defendant filed a plea asking that the cause of action abate and be certified to the circuit court, "because the title to land was involved;" "that defendant purchased said lot of D. on the ——— day of September, 1890," and paid "$125 on December 13, 1890, purchase money on said lot; that defendant is not the tenant of plaintiff, but claims said lot by right of purchase." Held, that such plea did not put the title to land in issue, since it did not show whether the alleged purchase was before or after the commencement of the tenancy, or whether or not plaintiff was defendant's vendor, nor did it allege a conveyance.—Millikan v. Davenport, 5 Ind. App. 257, 31 N. E. 1122.

[ll] (Iowa, 1859) An action on a promissory note, against the maker and indorser, was commenced before a justice of the peace. The indorser appeared before the justice, and moved to dismiss the action, for the reason that he resided in a different township from that in which the action was brought, which motion was not sworn to, and which was overruled. He then sued out a writ of error, and the judgment of the justice was affirmed in the district court. Held, that the motion was properly overruled.—Shellenberger v. Ward, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 425.

[m] (Iowa, 1893) Code 1873, § 3535, provides that if the title to land be put in issue by pleadings supported by affidavit, the justice shall thereupon certify the cause and papers to the district court. Held, that where defendant's answer putting in issue the title to the land was unsupported by affidavit, a motion by him for dismissal was properly overruled.—Delzell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 89 Iowa, 208, 56 N. W. 433.

[mm] (Iowa, 1893) A motion to dismiss a suit because the title to land is involved is properly denied when no motion is made to transfer the cause to the district court, as provided by Code 1873, § 3535.—Delzell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 89 Iowa, 208, 56 N. W. 433.

[n] (Me. 1832) Since St. 1831, c. 514, abolishing special pleading, the general issue, with a brief statement of soil and freehold, in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit brought before a justice of the peace, is sufficient to bar any further proceedings before him, except the taking of a recognizance to prosecute the plea in the court of common pleas; this statute having virtually repealed so much of St. 1821, c. 76, § 10, as requires that, in such cases, the title to the locus in quo should be specially pleaded.—Hodgdon v. Foster, 9 Me. (9 Greenl.) 113.

[nn] (Md. 1877) The question of jurisdiction, in a suit before a justice of the peace, must be raised before the justice by filing the verified allegation prescribed by Code, art. 51, § 33, or by plea or other proper proceeding when the case is in the circuit court on appeal.—Cole v. Hynes, 46 Md. 181.

[o] (Mass. 1864) The best way for defendant in replevin to avail himself of an objection to the jurisdiction, where the goods replevied do not exceed $20 in value, is by plea in abatement; but a motion to dismiss may be made at the trial.—Davenport v. Burke, 91 Mass. (9 Allen) 116.

[p] (Neb.) A defendant who appears specially in a case for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court over his person must specifically point out the defect which it is claimed prevents the court from acquiring jurisdiction.—(1884) Freeman v. Burks, 16 Neb. 328, 20 N. W. 207; (1887) Bell v. White Lake Lumber Co., 21 Neb. 525, 32 N. W. 561; (1890) Brown v. Goodyear, 29 Neb. 376, 45 N. W. 618.

[pp] (N. H. 1836) The constitution empowers the general court to give justices of the peace jurisdiction in civil causes when the title of real estate is not concerned. Act Dec. 31, 1828, § 5, provides that defendant in a justice court may give any special matter in evidence under the general issue, except such as may bring the title of real estate in question. Section 3 provides that where in trespass before a justice defendant pleads the general issue, he shall not be allowed to bring the title of real estate in question; and that when defendant pleads a special plea, whereby the title of real estate is drawn in question, the justice shall record such plea, and no further proceedings shall be had before him. Act July 2, 1831, enacts that in all civil actions defendant may plead the general issue, which shall be joined by plaintiff; and either party may give in evidence any matter in support or defense of the action, on filing in the court a brief statement of such matter. Held, that where, in trespass quare clausum fregit in justice's court, defendant pleads the general issue and files a brief statement setting forth matter which brings the title to real estate in question, the justice is not deprived of jurisdiction by such brief statement.—Foster v. Leavitt, 8 N. H. 353.

[q] (N. H. 1855) In an action of trespass before a justice, a plea of title in a third person, or in the defendant, with a traverse of the plaintiff's title, is good.—Foster v. Lane, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 305.

[qq] (N. Y. 1812) A plea of title is not valid, unless reduced to writing, in proceedings before a justice of the peace.—Sage v. Barnes, 9 Johns. 365.

[r] (N. Y. 1847) Where a declaration in a justice's court contained a count for a cause of action within his jurisdiction, and another for a matter of which he had no jurisdiction, it was held that a plea to the jurisdiction answering both counts was bad.—Rich v. Hogeboom, 4 Denio, 453.

[rr] (N. Y. 1872) The only demurrer to a complaint which is allowed in a justice's court is when the complaint is not sufficiently explicit to enable the defendant to understand it, or when it contains no cause of action. Neither of these causes of demurrer applies to an objection that the action is brought in a wrong county.—Lapham v. Rice, 63 Barb. 485.

[s] (N. Y. 1895) An answer alleging that defendants were the "owners in fee" of the premises at the time of the trespass sued for sufficiently sets forth "facts showing that title to real property will come in question" (Code Civ. Proc. § 2951) to require the justice to discontinue the action.—Manfredi v. Wiederman (Com. Pl.) 14 Misc. Rep. 342, 35 N. Y. Supp. 680.

[ss] (Pa. 1867) In a landlord and tenant case under the act of April 3, 1830, if the title to land comes in question, the alderman has no jurisdiction, and an assertion of this authenticated by evidence is sufficient, without affidavit by defendant, to defeat the jurisdiction.—Allen v. Ash, 6 Phila. 312.

[t] (Pa. 1868) Under Act 1772, in an action before a justice of the peace, the tenant must make the affidavit that the title to the premises in question is in dispute, the affidavit of his wife is not sufficient, unless it appears that she interferes with his consent to oust the jurisdiction of the justice.—Haffner v. Hoeckley, 3 Brewst. 253.

[tt] (Pa. 1872) In an action before a justice of the peace, an affidavit setting out "that in the above suit the title to land must come in question positively" is sufficient, and ousts the jurisdiction.—Stevens v. Sarver, 29 Leg. Int. 46.

[u] (Pa. 1872) Under Act March 20, 1810, § 1, excepting from the jurisdiction of justices cases of real contract where the title of land "may" come in question, an affidavit that the title will come in question, as required by Act 1814, is superfluous.—Gruber v. Sheetz, 2 Woodw. Dec. 63.

[uu] (Pa. 1883) An affidavit that the title to lands will come in question, in an action before a justice of the peace, under the act of March 2, 1813, may be made by the attorney for the defendant, and the jurisdiction of the justice is thereby ousted.—Acker v. Moore, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 169.

[v] (Tenn. 1879) A plea to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace cannot be received under Code, § 2901, unless filed in writing.—Crutchfield v. Durando, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea) 68.

[vv] (Tex. 1886) In a justice court, a plea of privilege to be sued in the county of defendant's residence is sufficient, where filed at the appearance term in due order of pleading, if it alleges the residence of defendant to be in a county other than that in which suit was brought, and denies that they had contracted to perform the contract or obligation for a breach of which recovery was sought in the county in which suit was brought.—Walthew v. Milby, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 119.

[w] (Tex. 1890) A plea to the jurisdiction, in a suit before a justice in A. county, that defendant "is now a bona fide citizen of precinct No. 2, C. county, Texas, and was so residing in said precinct No. 2, C. county, at and long before the institution of this suit," is defective in not alleging that defendant was not a resident of A. county.—Noel v. Denman, 76 Tex. 306, 13 S. W. 318.

[ww] (Tex. 1893) In an action in a justice court one of the defendants, who was a nonresident of the county in which the action was brought, filed a plea negativing all the jurisdictional facts, if he had been sued alone, and averring that his codefendant, who was a resident of the county, was not his partner, or in any way interested in the business out of which the action arose, or liable to plaintiff, but omitting to aver that the codefendant was made a party for the fraudulent purpose of conferring jurisdiction. Held, that the plea was fatally defective because of such omission.—Needham v. Dial, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 23 S. W. 240.

[x] (Utah, 1877) In an action by a city in the justice's court for taxes, where the complaint alleges that defendant is indebted to the city in a certain amount for taxes on real estate, and asks judgment, and the answer is a mere denial, and is not verified, no issue involving the title to real property or the legality of a tax is raised, so as to oust the justice of jurisdiction under Comp. Laws 1888, § 3543.—City of Willard City v. Woodland, 7 Utah, 192, 26 Pac. 284.

[xx] (Utah, 1886) Rev. St. U. S. § 1867, provides that no justice of the peace in any territory shall have jurisdiction of any case wherein title to land comes in question. Code Civ. Proc. § 707, provides that, "if it appears from the answer of defendant, verified by his oath, that the determination of the action will necessarily involve title to real estate," the justice must suspend proceedings, etc. Held that, where it appears that such title is involved, the justice has no jurisdiction, even though the answer be not "verified by oath."—People v. House, 4 Utah, 369, 10 Pac. 838.

[y] (Utah, 1894) Comp. Laws 1888, § 3537, requires actions in a justice court to be begun and tried in the precinct or city of defendant's residence, unless there be no justice court therein; and section 3595 provides for dismissal without prejudice when it is objected at the trial and appears by the evidence that the action is brought in the wrong county, precinct, or city. Held, that defendant need not specially appear to move for such dismissal, but may object by answer, and prove the facts on the trial.—Kansas City Hardware Co. v. Neilson, 10 Utah, 27, 36 Pac. 131.

[yy] (Vt. 1844) An allegation in a plea to the jurisdiction, in a bastardy case controlled by the overseer of the town of B., that the justice before whom the primary proceedings were had was the "lawfully appointed agent of the town of B. to prosecute and defend suits in which said town was interested," is insufficient, on demurrer, to bring the case within the provisions of the statute which prohibits a justice from taking cognizance of any cause, or doing any judicial act, when he shall have been of counsel.—Pierce v. Butler, 16 Vt. 101.

[z] (Vt. 1848) A plea in abatement, which alleges that "the justice of the peace who signed said writ, and took security by way of recognizance for the costs of prosecution in said suit, was, at the time of signing said writ and taking said security by way of recognizance for the costs of prosecution, as justice of the peace, as aforesaid, and still is, related to the said defendant within the fourth degree of affinity," is defective, in not containing an allegation, except by way of recital, that the writ was signed by said justice.—Landon v. Roberts, 20 Vt. 286.

[zz] (Wis. 1863) It is not necessary that the disqualification of a justice be made to appear by affidavit of the opposite party.—Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 633.

[a] (U. S. 1836) Where process issued beyond the limits of the township is not within the exception of the statute limiting process to the township, it is utterly void, and no justification to the officer acting under it.—Leadbetter v. Kendall, Fed. Cas. No. 8,157a [Hemp. 302].

[b] (U. S. 1852) An order made by a justice upon a matter not within his jurisdiction is void.—Greene v. Briggs, Fed. Cas. No. 5,764 [1 Curt. 311].

[c] (Ala. 1853) An attachment issued by a justice of the peace against a domestic executor or administrator whose testator or intestate at the time of his death was a resident of Alabama, being issued without jurisdiction, is absolutely void, creating no lien on the property attached.—Taliaferro v. Lane, 23 Ala. 369.

[d] (Ala. 1887) Code 1886, § 3538, provides that no debt in any court of record can be attached by any process issued by and returnable before a justice of the peace. Defendant in a judgment in the circuit court procured himself to be garnished before a justice, and petitioned the circuit court to restrain the collection of the judgment before the justice, and to have the amount credited on the original judgment. Held properly refused.—Sharpe v. Wharton, 85 Ala. 225, 3 South. 787.

[e] (Cal. 1852) A magistrate who had no jurisdiction to the extent of the debt claimed had no authority to issue an attachment therefor; and the attachment bond executed and taken is void.—Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 251, 56 Am. Dec. 332.

[f] (Ind. 1831) The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is limited; when that jurisdiction is transcended, everything done is void. This principle applies whether the want of jurisdiction embraces the subject-matter or the person.—Hall v. Rogers, 2 Blackf. 429.

[g] (Ind. 1861) The record of a judgment rendered by a justice in a case beyond his jurisdiction cannot be used in evidence to show diligence in prosecuting a note against the makers.—Thompson v. Kerr, 17 Ind. 288.

[h] (N. Y. 1844) A defendant need not appear to a summons of a justice laying damages at $100, as he has no jurisdiction.—Yager v. Hannah, 6 Hill, 631.

[i] (N. Y. 1863) When a justice of the peace acts in violation of the statute that no judge of any court can sit in a cause where he is related to either of the parties, all his proceedings are utterly void, even if no objection has been made on this account.—Schoonmaker v. Clearwater, 41 Barb. 200, affirmed Chambers v. Clearwater (1864) 1 Abb. Dec. 341.

[j] (N. Y. 1887) Where a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction whatever, and undertakes to act, his acts are coram non judice and void, though if he has jurisdiction, and errs in the exercise of it, his acts are voidable only.—Tracy v. Seamans, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 144.

[k] (N. C. 1834) The acts of 1820 and 1829 do not give justices jurisdiction beyond $60, except when the debt is secured by bond or note, or a liquidated account; and an attachment founded on two judgments for a sum exceeding that amount is void.—Bryan v. Washington, 15 N. C. 479.

[l] (N. C. 1872) Proceedings taken before a justice of the peace to recover the possession of land, where the title comes in question, are not absolutely null as regards the plaintiff.—Dulin v. Howard, 66 N. C. 433.

[m] (N. C. 1872) The defendant in a proceeding before a justice over which he has no jurisdiction may treat it as an absolute nullity.—Dulin v. Howard, 66 N. C. 433.

[n] (N. C. 1872) The party instituting proceedings before a justice over which he has no jurisdiction cannot treat them as absolute nullities after having taken the benefit of them.—Dulin v. Howard, 66 N. C. 433.

[o] (Ohio, 1817) Where the matter in dispute between the parties in an action before a justice of the peace was of an amount exceeding his jurisdiction, his proceedings were coram non judice and void.—Aten v. Morgan, Tapp. 232.

[p] (Pa. 1785) Where it appears upon the face of the record that the justice has exceeded his jurisdiction, by giving judgment and issuing execution for a greater sum than the act of assembly allows, the court will consider the whole as a nullity, and discharge a defendant committed under such judgment.—Geyger v. Stoy, 1 Dall. 135.

[q] (Pa. 1881) When an alderman or justice has no jurisdiction in original proceedings before him, all the subsequent proceedings are erroneous and void.—McGovern v. McTague, 13 Lanc. Bar, 119.

[r] (S. C. 1839) If the proceedings of a justice, from whom a writ of domestic attachment issued, show upon their face that the justice had no authority to grant the attachment, or if they fail to show that he had, then no judgment can be given upon it, but the whole is an absolute nullity; and it is of no consequence in what way the defect is brought to the view of the court, or at whose motion it is quashed.—Devall v. Taylor, 1 McMul. 460.

[s] (S. C. 1850) Under Act 1839, providing that an attachment may be issued by a magistrate in sums of and under $20 where the debtor is absent from the state, a domestic attachment issued by a magistrate against a debtor for a claim of $56, on the ground that he has absconded and concealed himself so that process could not be enforced against him, is void where the defendant was absent from the state when the attachment issued.—Lindau v. Arnold, 4 Strob. 290.

§ 225. Mode and form in general.

[a] (Iowa, 1845) Where an action before a justice of the peace seems to have been substantially brought, it will be sustained, though not according to strict technical rules.—Culbertson v. Tomlinson, 1 Morris, 404.

[b] (Mo. 1828) In proceedings before a justice of the peace, the statute has dispensed with all matters of mere form.—Casey v. Clark, 2 Mo. 11.

[c] (Mo. 1852) In proceedings in cases arising before justices of the peace, much liberality is allowed in construing the acts of the parties, as well as of the justices themselves.—Mooney v. Williams, 15 Mo. 442.

[d] (Tenn. 1845) A liberal, and not a restricted, construction will be given to the proceedings of justices of the peace.—Heffly v. Hall, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 581.

[e] (Tenn. 1850) Substantial accuracy is all that can be had or will be required in proceedings before justices of the peace.—Glass v. Stovall, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 453.

[f] (Tex. 1885) Great liberality is indulged with respect to the proceedings in a justice court, as the real object is to attain substantial justice.—Brunswig v. Kramer, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 804.

§ 226. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

[a] (Ga. 1894) Act Nov. 11, 1889, as amended by Act Dec. 20, 1893, does not, by providing that justices of the peace and notaries public, who are ex officio justices of the peace, "may hold their courts at the same or different time, or at the same or different place as they may desire," violate the constitution (Code, § 5153), requiring justices of the peace to hold court monthly at fixed times and places.—Brooks v. Mutual Loan & Banking Co., 95 Ga. 178, 22 S. E. 55.

[b] (Kan. 1863) The justices' act as well as the Code must be construed liberally, with a view to promote its object, and assist the parties in obtaining justice.—Wooster v. McKinley, 1 Kan. 317.

[c] (Neb. 1876) Act 1875, authorizing justices in cities and towns to hold their offices in other precincts than that for which they were elected, is unconstitutional. — State v. Shropshire, 4 Neb. 411.

[d] (Tenn. 1865) Code, § 2754, in reference to the commencement and continuance of suits, does not apply to suits brought before justices of the peace.—Maynard v. May, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 44.

§ 227. Conformity to practice in courts of record.

[a] (Ind. 1864) The practice in attachment proceedings is the same in justices' as in the superior courts.—Dunn v. Crocker, 22 Ind. 324.

[b] (Tex. 1851) Justices of the peace are not supposed to be skilled in the forms of judicial proceedings observed in courts of record. If their proceedings are intelligible, and attain substantially the ends of justice, they are generally sustained.—Clay v. Clay, 7 Tex. 250.

[c] (Tex. 1881) Proceedings in a justice's court by a distress warrant will be sustained, if they are intelligible and the ends of justice are attained, though all the forms of procedure essential in courts of record have not been observed.—Conway v. Merrifield, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1025.

§ 228. Forms of action.

[a] (Ill. 1859) A party may succeed in any form of action, if the justice of the peace had jurisdiction of the subject-matter.—Swingley v. Haynes, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 214.

[b] (Ill. 1860) If the proof before a justice entitles the plaintiff to recover, he should have judgment, notwithstanding mistakes in the form of action.—Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Reid, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 144.

[c] (Ill. 1862) It is immaterial what form of action may be specified in a summons issued by a justice of the peace, if he had jurisdiction of the subject-matter.—Brewster v. Grover, 29 Ill. (19 Peck) 246.

[d] (Ill. 1878) Where, in a suit on a contract for services in a justice court, plaintiff fails to establish the amount agreed to be paid, he may recover on a quantum meruit, notwithstanding his attempt to prove a fixed amount.—Phillips v. Roberts, 90 Ill. 492.

[e] (Ind. 1854) In a suit originating before a justice of the peace, no great strictness is required as to form of action.—Brush v. Carpenter, 6 Ind. 78.

[f] (Miss. 1848) The only thing a justice has to determine is the question of indebtedness, without regard to the technical form of the action. His is not a common-law court.—Stier v. Surget, 18 Miss. (10 Smedes & M.) 154.

[g] (Pa. 1888) Under the act of May 12, 1887, an alderman has no power to amend his record, so as to make the form of action one in trespass instead of assumpsit.—Fahnestock v. Bushey, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 57.

[h] (Pa. 1892) Under Act March 22, 1814, § 1, which provides that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction of actions of trespass for damages to real or personal property, when the value of the property or the damages claimed do not exceed $100, an action of trespass will not lie for milk sold and delivered.—Weisberger v. White (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 224.

[i] (Tenn. 1845) The several forms of action cannot be preserved and enforced in suits before justices of the peace.—Bodenhamer v. Bodenhamer, 25 Tenn. (6 Humph.) 264.

§ 229. Joinder of causes of action.

[a] (Ind. 1883) An action before a justice of the peace will not be dismissed for misjoinder of causes of action.—Koons v. Williamson, 90 Ind. 599.

[b] (Mo. 1881) The original statement, in an action before a justice of the peace, was based on the 43d section of the railroad law. An amended statement contained two counts, one of which was based on another act. Held, that this was allowable, both counts referring to the same injury; and that plaintiff could not be required to elect on which count he would proceed.—Lincoln v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 75 Mo. 27.

[c] (Mo. 1886) That a suit before a justice on a contract is improperly joined with one in tort is not jurisdictional, unless the aggregate of both claims exceeds the amount of the justice's jurisdiction.—Gerber v. McCoy, 23 Mo. App. 295.

[d] (N. J. 1828) A charge in the plaintiff's state of demand in a justice's court, "To loading vessel at his wharf," etc., may be considered as a charge of wharfage, and not a trespass, and hence may be joined with a count in debt.—Cornelius v. Ivins, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 56.

[e] (N. J. 1864) A state of demand in a justice's court contained two counts: The first setting forth a sale and delivery by the plaintiff to the defendant of a horse, for the price of $200, and claiming an unpaid balance of $100; the second averring a special agreement whereby the defendant was to pay for the horse $100 in cash, and a lot of land of the value of $100, and that the defendant refused to convey the lot, and concluding with a demand of the balance of the value of the horse, to wit, $100. Held, that there was a misjoinder of counts, notwithstanding that it appeared on the trial that the agreement aforesaid was void, as not in writing; that fact not being pleaded.—Hinchman v. Rutan, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 496.

[f] (N. Y. 1808) In an action before a justice of the peace, the objection that the plaintiff has declared both on a contract and a tort must be made at the time of pleading.—McNeil v. Scoffield, 3 Johns. 436.

[g] (N. Y. 1841) The misjoinder of counts in a justice's court is not a fatal defect in pleading; no objection being interposed until after verdict.—Whitney v. Crim, 1 Hill, 61; West v. Stanley, Id. 69.

[h] (N. Y. 1854) Where the plaintiff improperly joins several causes of action, e. g., one on contract with one in tort, the objection should be taken by requiring him to elect, before proceeding to trial, which cause he will proceed for, and, if the justice refuses to compel him to elect, the judgment will be reversed.—Burdick v. McAmbly, 9 How. Prac. 117.

[i] (N. Y. 1895) In a justice's court misjoinder of causes of action is not a ground for demurrer, nor is it a "defense" in the sense that it must be alleged in the answer.—Gerould v. Cronk, 85 Hun, 500, 33 N. Y. Supp. 202.

[j] (N. Y. 1895) In an action in a justice's court an objection that there is a misjoinder of causes is waived unless raised before proceeding to trial.—Gerould v. Cronk, 85 Hun, 500, 33 N. Y. Supp. 202.

[k] (Pa. 1882) Distinct cases of trespass and debt cannot be joined in the same action before a justice of the peace.—Yetter v. Carpenter, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 523.

[l] (Vt. 1884) To warrant a joinder of causes of action under Rev. Laws, § 912, providing for the joinder of trespass and case, though for the same cause of action, the justice of the peace must otherwise have jurisdiction of both forms of action in the concrete case.—French v. Holt, 57 Vt. 187.

[m] (W. Va. 1894) Plaintiff suing before a justice alleged in his first count that defendant, a railroad company, negligently ran its train and killed plaintiff's horse. The second count set up that defendant bound itself by written contract to maintain the necessary cattle guards, and through its failure to do so the injury occurred. Held, that the counts were properly joined.—Harrow v. Ohio River R. Co., 38 W. Va. 711, 18 S. E. 926.

[n] (Wis. 1851) The pleadings before a justice of the peace were oral, and it appeared from the minutes entered in the justice's docket that the declaration was in assumpsit. The plaintiff amended his declaration by adding a special count, with reference to which the entry in the docket was that the plaintiff added a "special count, and declared against the defendants, as innkeepers, for two buffalo robes of the value of $20, which they refused to deliver plaintiff, it being plaintiff's property." Held, on demurrer for misjoinder of counts, that the special count was in assumpsit, and that therefore there was no misjoinder.—Hibbard v. Bell, 3 Chand. 206, 3 Pin. 190.

§ 230. Consolidation of actions.

[a] (Ark. 1849) Where in one of three suits before a justice of the peace the cause of action was filed with the justice before the issuance of the writ, and in the other two this was not done, and defendant moved for the consolidation of the three suits, and pleaded to and defended the consolidated suit, the jurisdiction of the justice was nevertheless restricted to the cause of action filed.—Everett v. Clements, 9 Ark. (4 Eng.) 478.

[b] (Ill. 1834) Where two distinct suits are brought before the same justice, on the same day, on two demands which might be consolidated into one suit, and which, when thus consolidated, would not exceed $100, and one suit is dismissed and judgment is rendered on the other, the proceedings are regular.—McKinney v. Finch, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 152.

[c] (Ill. 1878) Rev. St. c. 79, § 49, refers only to suits commenced before a justice of the peace, and only requires a consolidation of demands which do not exceed $200 when consolidated. But where one holds two or more promissory notes, each one constitutes a separate demand, on which he has a right to bring a suit; and if suit is brought on one of them, before a justice, the party is not required to bring in the others, unless they do not amount to more than $200 when consolidated.—Nickerson v. Rockwell, 90 Ill. 460.

[d] (Ill. 1892) In justice's court plaintiff is not bound to consolidate in one suit a demand for labor and one for breach of contract, since no exemption can be claimed against a judgment for wages, while it may be against a judgment for breach of contract.—Osborn v. Philpot, 46 Ill. App. 274.

[e] (Mo. 1831) A plaintiff in a justice's court cannot be compelled to consolidate three suits on different notes against the same defendant commenced on the same day.—Barns v. Holland, 3 Mo. 47.

[f] (Mo. 1831) A plaintiff may sue on all or only a part of the demands he may have against the same defendant before a justice of the peace, and cannot be compelled to consolidate his actions after he may have sued on several demands.—Barns v. Holland, 3 Mo. 47.

§ 231. Commencement of action or other proceeding in general.

Converting criminal prosecution into action for damages, see ante, § 116 [b].

Failure to enter action within time limited as ousting jurisdiction, see ante, § 191.

For purpose of limitations, see post, § 246.

[a] (Ga. 1892) A magistrate, when not presiding in court, does not act judicially in answering questions put by counsel on a court day, whether or not a given case has that day been called; and counsel, shaping his conduct by such answer, must take the risk of its being correct.—Ballard Transfer Co. v. Clark, 91 Ga. 234, 18 S. E. 138.

[b] (Iowa, 1875) An action in a justice's court may be commenced simply by the service of a notice on the defendant, save where a writ of replevin is asked for, in which case a petition duly verified must be filed. In all other cases, the filing of the petition forms no part of the commencement of the action, and need be done only on the day of trial.—Duffy v. Dale, 42 Iowa, 215.

[c] (N. Y. 1805) The issuing of a warrant or summons in a justice court is the commencement of the suit.—Boyce v. Morgan, 3 Caines, 133.

[d] (N. Y. 1845) Where parties appeared before a justice of the peace, with a view to the commencement of a suit before him by one of them as plaintiff against the other as defendant, and an adjournment was then had at the request of the defendant, without any issue joined, or any pleadings put in, no suit was thereby commenced.—Lester v. Crary, 1 Denio, 81.

[e] (N. Y. 1845) Suits in justices' courts can only be commenced by process, or by the voluntary appearance of the parties and joining issue.—Lester v. Crary, 1 Denio, 81.

[f] (N. Y. 1870) Where property is levied on under an execution and advertised for sale on a certain day, and the summons in an action for wrongful taking and conversion of the property brought by a third person claiming title is issued by a justice of the peace, and delivered for service on the day of, but before, the sale, and not served until thereafter, there can be no recovery for the sale, since under 2 Rev. St. p. 227, § 12, subd. 2, providing that an action in a justice court is commenced when the summons is delivered to be served, the suit was commenced before the cause of action accrued.—Hodge v. Adee, 2 Lans. 314.

[g] (Pa.) It is a settled rule that the cause of action must exist at the commencement of the suit, and cannot be varied by subsequent circumstances.—(1817) McLaughlin v. Parker, 3 Serg. & R. 144; (1823) Bechtol v. Cobaugh, 10 Serg. & R. 121.

[h] (Pa. 1887) Where actions are brought before different aldermen for counterclaims by the same parties and are made returnable at the same hour, the alderman who first issues summons has jurisdiction.—Tuttle v. Sheridan, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 1.

§ 232. Time for taking proceedings or holding court.

Absence or delay on part of justice as ousting jurisdiction, see ante, § 191.

—— on part of plaintiff, see ante, § 192.

Constitutionality of statute regulating time, see ante, § 226.

On renewal of proceedings after continuance, see post, § 359.

Time for adjournment, see post, § 357.

—— for staying execution, see post, § 437.

—— for taking default, see post, §§ 385, 386.

Waiver of delay in calling suit, see post, § 448 [x].

[a] (Conn. 1843) Where the hour is designated in the writ, it has been the practice in that state to wait for the appearance of the parties until the expiration of that hour and no longer, unless a reasonable excuse for further indulgence is shown.—Burgess v. Tweedy, 16 Conn. 39.

[b] (Conn. 1877) By long established practice, one hour of grace is allowed to parties in appearing in actions brought before justices of the peace; but the rule is not inflexible in its application, and where the matter comes to one of minutes, allowance should be made for the want of accuracy of ordinary timepieces.—Nugent v. Wrinn, 44 Conn. 273.

[c] (Conn. 1889) Though ordinarily it is the duty of a justice to render judgment against a plaintiff who fails to appear after one hour from the time fixed for trial, the plaintiff cannot complain that judgment was rendered at a later time.—Parmalee v. Town of Bethlehem, 57 Conn. 270, 18 Atl. 94.

[d] (Del. 1846) Judgment by default, before a justice of the peace, cannot be signed until the usual time of closing business for the day, unless a certain hour is fixed for the hearing, with due notice thereof to the defendant.—Colescott v. Bonwill, 4 Har. 364.

[e] (Ga. 1887) Since Act Oct. 8, 1885, justices' courts may hold from day to day until their business is disposed of.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Pitts, 79 Ga. 532, 4 S. E. 921.

[f] (Ga. 1893) Under Act Oct. 8, 1885, a justice's court may hold from day to day until its business is disposed of; and this power is not affected by a publication by the magistrate that his court will continue in session 15 days from the first Monday in each month.—Bostain v. Morris, 93 Ga. 224, 18 S. E. 649.

[g] (Ga. 1895) A notary public, who is an ex officio justice of the peace, may, in a city having a population of over 5,000, lawfully hold his court at a time different from that at which the justice of the peace of the same district holds his court.—Moye v. Walker, 96 Ga. 769, 22 S. E. 276.

[h] (Ill. 1875) It is the duty of a justice of the peace to hold a case open one hour after the time named in the summons for a defendant to appear, but he is not required to wait longer before rendering judgment. At the expiration of the hour, it is his duty to call and dispose of the case, and the presumption is that he does so.—First Nat. Bank v. Beresford, 78 Ill. 391.

[i] (Kan. 1892) Though section 83 of the justices' act provides that if either party fail to appear at the time specified in the summons, "or within one hour thereafter," the cause may proceed at the request of the adverse party, a judgment by default, rendered by a justice before expiration of an hour after the time for appearance specified in the summons, is not void on the ground that the justice had not yet acquired jurisdiction to render it, where defendant did not in fact appear within the hour.—Green v. Tower, 49 Kan. 302, 30 Pac. 468.

[j] (Ky. 1847) A justice of the peace may hear a civil cause in vacation, on affidavit of the plaintiff that the defendant is about to remove his property from the state.—Rogers v. Hall, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 349.

[k] (La. 1883) Under Code, art. 1085, providing that if a party residing in the country fails to appear at the appointed time the justice shall wait two hours, he must so wait if defendant has refused to go to trial and withdrawn from the court.—State ex rel. Montague v. Coquillon, 35 La. Ann. 1101.

[l] (Mass. 1849) The proper time for the entry of an action before a justice of the peace is within the hour named in the writ; and if not so entered, the defendant may refuse to appear, or may appear merely for the purpose of moving to dismiss the action.—Blanchard v. Walker, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 455.

[m] (Mich. 1881) In the cases in which Comp. Laws, § 5373, provides that plaintiff may have an hour after the time fixed for hearing, a justice must wait for defendant an equal time.—Bassence v. Jones, 46 Mich. 492, 9 N. W. 531.

[n] (Mo. 1885) Rev. St. § 2848, declares that justices of the peace may hold court on any day except Sunday. A judgment rendered on Thanksgiving Day is, therefore, valid.—Bear v. Youngman, 19 Mo. App. 41.

[o] (Neb. 1883) Where there is no defense to an action before a justice of the peace, the justice need not wait the one hour after the time set for the hearing of a cause required by statute before proceeding to render judgment against defendant.—Wells v. Turner, 14 Neb. 445, 16 N. W. 484.

[p] (N. H. 1841) As a general rule, a party in justice's court who has given notice of a hearing at a particular hour is required to proceed with his case within the hour, unless the hearing is postponed.—Banks v. Johnson, 12 N. H. 445.

[q] (N. Y. 1819) Where defendant in a justice court is ready in court to prove his defense when plaintiff closes his case, he should be allowed to do so, though he was not present when the trial commenced.—Atwood v. Austin, 16 Johns. 180.

[r] (N. Y. 1850) The justice should wait an hour after a summons is returnable before proceeding to swear witnesses in the cause.—Allen v. Stone, 9 Barb. 60.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) In justices' courts in the city of New York, the justice need not wait an hour after the time for appearance mentioned in the summons before proceeding with the case.—Klenck v. De Forest, 3 Code Rep. 185.

[t] (N. Y. 1852) It is not a sufficient case for the reversal of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace on the return of a summons, that the justice did not appear at the place named in the summons for the trial until half past 3 o'clock, when the summons was returnable at 1 o'clock p. m., if the defendant was present at the trial, although he did not appear in the suit.—Cornell v. Bennett, 11 Barb. 657.

[tt] (N. Y. 1854) A justice is entitled to proceed with a case immediately on the expiration of the time named in the summons.—Appleby v. Strang, 1 Abb. Prac. 143.

[u] (N. Y. 1890) Where the summons in a justice's court is returnable at 9 a. m., and the justice calls the case at 9:45, and, in the absence of defendant, waits until 10 before proceeding, it is a compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 2893, requiring the justice to wait one hour after the hour specified in the summons for its return, unless the parties sooner appear.—Dunn v. O'Keefe, 56 Hun, 648, 10 N. Y. Supp. 34.

[uu] (Tex. 1888) Rev. St. art. 1547, providing that justices residing at the county seats "shall hold the regular term of their courts on the last Monday of each month," was amended by providing that justices should hold regular terms at such times as might be prescribed by the commissioners' court of the county. Held, that a term of court held by a justice at a county seat after the amended article went into effect, but on the day prescribed by the old statute, the commissioners not having taken any action as to the time of holding court, was not without authority of law, and that a judgment rendered at such term was valid.—Stone v. Hill, 72 Tex. 540, 10 S. W. 665.

[v] (Tex. 1889) Rev. St. art. 1547, formerly provided that the justices residing at the county seat should hold regular terms on the last Monday in each month. In 1878 the commissioners' court of a county made an order prescribing the second Monday as the time for holding court in precinct 1 of said county. In 1881 the article was amended to require justices to hold their regular terms at such times as should be described by the commissioners' court of the county. No new order was made as to precinct 1, and a judgment was rendered by a justice thereof on the last Monday of the month. Held that, if the county seat was in precinct 1, the court was properly held on that day.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Ware (Sup.) 11 S. W. 554.

[vv] (Tex. 1890) Const. art. 5, § 19, provides that justices of the peace shall hold their courts at such times as may be provided by law. Rev. St. art. 1514, and article 1547 as amended by Act 1881, provide that the times at which justices of the peace shall hold their terms of court shall be fixed by the county commissioners' court. No order was made by the commissioners' court fixing the time of holding court by one B., elected one of the justices of the peace for a certain precinct. But it appeared that such an order had been made in the case of S., a former justice of the peace for such precinct, and that both one who had been justice of the peace for said precinct up to B.'s election, and B., held court at the time indicated in such order. Held, that a judgment rendered by B. as justice of the peace was not void as rendered without jurisdiction; it being presumed that the court held by S. was the same court as that held by B., and an order once made fixing the time of holding court continuing in force until changed.—Koehler v. Earl, 77 Tex. 188, 14 S. W. 28.

[w] (Vt. 1824) The statute prescribing that actions must be entered in justices' courts within two hours after the time set in the writ for trial is directory to the justices; they are necessarily judges, in the first instance, of the actual time when actions are entered; and if the party is dissatisfied, he may plead the matter in abatement, and have the fact found by a jury.—Stone v. Proctor, 2 D. Chip. 108.

[ww] (Vt.) To constitute an entry of an action in a justice's court within the purview of the statute, it is at least necessary for the magistrate to be at the place of holding the court within the two hours from the time set for trial, having in his possession the writ, and ready on his part to proceed with the cause.—(1839) Phelps v. Birge, 11 Vt. 161; (1850) Underwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 120.

[x] (Vt. 1841) If a justice be at the place appointed for trial, in a writ returnable before him, within two hours after the time appointed, and the writ is then returned so as to be within his knowledge and power, and he comes there for the purpose of taking cognizance of the suit, it is not necessary that he should remain until the defendant appears or until the expiration of the first two hours; nor is it necessary that he should have come to the place of trial with the purpose of proceeding instanter to the hearing. It is enough if he came there to take cognizance of the cause, and to dispose of it in an appropriate mode and convenient time.—Peach v. Mills, 13 Vt. 501.

[xx] (Vt.) It is not necessary for a justice to remain at the particular place set for trial during the whole time allowed for the defendant to appear.—(1850) Underwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 120; (1853) Hall v. Safford, 25 Vt. 87.

[y] (Vt. 1853) It is the duty of the justice to see that the defendant has his day in court and an opportunity to make his defense; and where the justice ordered the case to stand open for trial, with the understanding that if the defendant appeared by 3 o'clock, or in a reasonable time (1 o'clock being the time set in the writ), the right of appearing and defending the suit should be secured to him, and the justice returned about the hour of 4, and within the time in which he had the power by statute to vacate any record of default, etc., and then notified the counsel of the defendant that the case was open for trial if they desired to make any defense, and requested him to appear and answer for that purpose, it was held that this was a full compliance with the duty of the justice, after the case was ordered to stand open.—Hall v. Safford, 25 Vt. 87.

[yy] (Vt. 1853) A case being properly in court, it is competent for the justice to order the case to stand open for trial for a reasonable time.—Hall v. Safford, 25 Vt. 87.

[z] (Wis. 1878) Under Rev. St. c. 120, § 45, as amended by Laws 1875, c. 172, a justice of the peace is required to be in his office at the return hour of process issued by him, and for the next succeeding hour, and, on return of process served, to call the case for trial at the hour specified in the process, but to wait the next succeeding hour for the appearance of the parties. Held, that where the process is not returned served nor the case called within the hour named therein, the justice acquires jurisdiction if it be returned served and the case be called within the succeeding hour; and in such event the provision that the case shall be called at the hour named in the process is directory only.—Carter v. Wyatt, 43 Wis. 570.

[zz] (Wis. 1878) Under Rev. St. 1858, c. 120, § 5, providing that, on return of process served, a justice shall wait one hour for the appearance of the parties, etc., a formal appearance to the action is not meant, but personal appearance before the justice.—Brandies v. Robinson, 45 Wis. 464.

§ 233. Place for taking proceedings or holding court.

Place for adjournment, see post, § 357.
—— for staying execution, see post, § 437.
Territorial extent of jurisdiction, see ante, §§ 146, 147.

[a] (Conn. 1791) A justice of the peace cannot go out of his town to try a cause.—Scovel v. Smith, 1 Root, 300; Allen v. Vining, Id. 313.

[b] (Conn. 1792) The judgment of a justice of the peace, out of his town, is erroneous.—Abby v. Cargel, 1 Root, 403.

[c] (Ga. 1883) Code, § 457, par. 1, requires justices of the peace to hold court at some convenient place within their district, of which they are to give notice; section 462 provides that any judgment rendered at a different place from the one selected shall be void. Held that, on appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendant on his plea of set-off, the court having been held at a place different from that selected, the action should be dismissed on plaintiff's motion for want of jurisdiction.—Bozeman v. Singer Mfg. Co., 70 Ga. 685.

[d] (Ga. 1886) A justice of the peace in the city of Augusta cannot hold court and render judgment in a civil case elsewhere than in his own district, notwithstanding the prior local laws of that city, since the taking effect of Const. 1877 and Act 1879, to carry into effect the constitutional provisions relating to the uniformity of practice, and making provisions as to the times and places of holding justices' courts.—Brahe v. Boker, 75 Ga. 881.

[e] (Ga. 1895) A notary public, who is an ex officio justice of the peace, may, in a city having a population of over 5,000, lawfully hold his court at a place different from that at which the justice of the peace of the same district holds his court.—Moye v. Walker, 96 Ga. 769, 22 S. E. 276.

[f] (Iowa, 1879) Where the parties stipulate that the justice may for convenience try a case outside of his own township, the justice does not lose jurisdiction by trying the case in such place.—Rogers v. Loop, 51 Iowa, 41, 50 N. W. 224.

[g] (Mich. 1848) The statute of 1842 provides that no justice of the peace shall hold any court in any barroom, place, etc., where intoxicating liquors are sold. From the justice's return it appeared that the cause was called in the barroom of a tavern and adjourned to an adjoining room in the same house, but the justice had no knowledge that intoxicating liquors were sold there, nor was any proof of such fact offered on the trial, and the court refused to disturb the judgment of the justice.—Savier v. Chipman, 1 Mich. (Man.) 116.

[h] (Minn. 1879) Gen. St. 1878, c. 66, § 2, provides that every justice of the peace "shall keep his office in the town, city, or ward for which he is elected," but that he "may hold his court at any place appointed by him in a town or ward adjoining the town or ward in which he resides, provided the place so appointed be within his county." Held, that a justice of the township of Winona cannot hold his court in the city of Winona.—State v. Marvin, 26 Minn. 323, 3 N. W. 991.

[i] (Neb. 1876) A justice of the peace must hold his office in the precinct for which he is elected.—State v. Shropshire, 4 Neb. 411.

[j] (Neb. 1883) Though a justice of the peace is required by Const. art. 6, § 20, to reside in the precinct for which he is elected or appointed, a judgment rendered by him anywhere in his county is valid.—Jones v. Church of the Holy Trinity, 15 Neb. 81, 17 N. W. 362.

[k] (N. Y. 1815) Where a justice tried a cause at a place different from that mentioned in the summons, it was held an irregularity for which judgment was reversed.—Stewart v. Meigs, 12 Johns. 417.

[l] (N. Y. 1859) A justice of the peace can take the confession of a judgment out of the town in which he resides anywhere in his county, the Revised Statutes of 1830 (1 Rev. St. p. 102, § 12, restricting him merely in forbidding him to try a civil cause in any town other than the one in which he is chosen.—Pollock v. Aldrich, 17 How. Prac. 109.

[m] (N. Y. 1867) The provisions of Code, pt. 2, tit. 4, are not applicable to suits commenced in a court of a justice of the peace. Those provisions in regard to the place of trial of actions are expressly made subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, in the cases provided by statute, and are not applicable to justices' courts, which have not the power to change the place of trial.—Lapham v. Rice, 66 Barb. 487.

[n] (N. D. 1891) Comp. Laws, § 6041, requiring a justice of the peace to perform all his official acts within the township and county for which he was elected, is mandatory.—In re Evingson, 2 N. D. 184, 49 N. W. 783.

[o] (Pa. 1821) A justice of the peace cannot do an official act out of the county for which he was appointed.—Share v. Anderson, 7 Serg. & R. 43, 10 Am. Dec. 421.

[p] (Pa. 1829) A justice of the peace must have his place of administering justice.—King v. King, 1 Pen. & W. 15.

[q] (Pa. 1877) A justice of the peace must preside and keep his office within the limits of the district for which he is commissioned, and his acts outside such districts are invalid.—Morrison v. Stuart, 9 Lanc. Bar, 7.

[r] (Pa. 1877) Under Act Feb. 22, 1802 (Purd. Dig. p. 846), a justice has no authority to act in any other ward than that in which he is commissioned and resides.—Novick v. Buck, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 76.

[s] (Pa. 1895) An alderman must keep his office in the ward for which he has been elected, and has no right to hold court and exercise judicial functions in another ward.—Wright v. Millar (Com. Pl.) 1 Lack. Leg. N. 346.

[t] (Tenn. 1895) Const. art. 6, § 15, provides that counties shall be divided into districts, from each of which two justices of the peace shall be elected, whose jurisdiction shall be coextensive with the county. Code, § 4113 (Mill. & V. Code, § 4888), provides that the jurisdiction of such justices is geographically coextensive with the county, and sections 4127, 4128 (Mill. & V. Code, §§ 4902, 4903), require each justice to hold court at some place in his district one day in each month, but authorize him to try any cause at any place within the county, unless prohibited by the Code. Held, that a justice, having an office in his district, whereat he holds court one day in each month, has jurisdiction to hear causes at another office, opened by him, out of his district, but within the county, where he holds court when not engaged at his district office.—Strain v. Hefley, 94 Tenn. (10 Pickle) 668, 30 S. W. 747.

[u] (Tex. 1853) A justice of the peace cannot go out of his own precinct and try a cause in another, even by consent of parties.—Foster v. McAdams, 9 Tex. 542.

[v] (Tex. 1871) A justice of the peace elected for one precinct has no right or authority to establish his office and exercise his official functions within the limits of another precinct.—Clements v. City of San Antonio, 34 Tex. 25.

[w] (Tex. 1890) Const. art. 5, § 19, provides that justices of the peace shall hold their courts at such places as may be provided by law. Rev. St. art. 1514, and article 1547, as amended by Act 1881, provide that the places at which justices of the peace shall hold their terms of court shall be fixed by the county commissioners' court. No order was made by the county commissioners' court fixing the place of holding court by one B., elected one of the justices of the peace for a certain precinct. But it appeared that such an order had been made in the case of S., a former justice of the peace for such precinct, and that both one who had been justice of the peace for said precinct up to B.'s election, and B., held court at the place indicated in such order. Held, that a judgment rendered by B., as justice of the peace, was not void as rendered without jurisdiction; it being presumed that the court held by S. was the same court as that held by B., and an order once made fixing the place of holding court continuing in force until changed.—Koehler v. Earl, 77 Tex. 188, 14 S. W. 28.

§ 234. Payment to justice or officer.

Liability of justice for loss of money received in satisfaction of judgment, see ante, § 44.

On judgment, see post, § 417.

[a] (Mich. 1866) In making a payment of money in a suit on a note before a justice of the peace, no rule or order is necessary, if it is paid in at the time of or prior to the plea; if after plea, a motion should probably be made for leave.—Phelps v. Town, 14 Mich. 374.

[b] (Mich. 1866) Where, in a suit on a note before a justice of the peace, defendant paid money thereon in open court, the effect on the rights of the parties was the same as when paid into a court of record, and the money belongs to the plaintiff absolutely, and defendant is not responsible for its disposition or payment.—Phelps v. Town, 14 Mich. 374.

[c] (Mo. 1887) Under Rev. St. § 2924, providing that after commencement of suit in justice's court defendant may throw subsequent costs on plaintiff, if he "pay the constable" the full amount which he owes the plaintiff, with accrued costs, the constable of the township where the justice presides is the proper depositary.—Voss v. McGuire, 26 Mo. App. 452.

[d] (Mo. 1887) Under Rev. St. § 2924, providing that after commencement of suit in justice's court defendant may "pay the constable" the amount due the plaintiff, with accrued costs, and if plaintiff fail to recover a larger sum, he shall pay the costs thereafter accruing, the defendant by such payment loses all control over the money, and cannot retake or claim it, but it passes into the custody of the law, subject alone to the demand of the plaintiff.—Voss v. McGuire, 26 Mo. App. 452.

[e] (Neb. 1882) A justice of the peace has no authority to accept a tender of an amount in excess of that involved in an action before him, as where, in an action on a coupon, defendant tenders the amount of both the coupon and the coupon note.—Fletcher v. Daugherty, 13 Neb. 224, 13 N. W. 207.

[f] (N. Y. 1874) For the purpose of taking an appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace against a third person, plaintiff left with the wife of the justice at his house seven dollars, supposed to be enough to pay the costs and return fee. It was insufficient, and the justice applied the seven dollars on the judgment. Held, that the money, when paid to the justice, became the property of R. and no longer that of plaintiff, and plaintiff could not maintain an action against the justice for the same.—Rightmire v. Kimball, 2 Hun, 598, 5 Thomp. & C. 95.

[g] (N. C. 1863) A defendant before a justice of the peace, after trial and judgment against him, but before appeal, paid part of the claim to the justice, who held it till the trial above took place, and then paid it to the clerk of the appellate court. Held, that under the pleas of "tender" and of "always ready" the measure was unavailing.—Cope v. Bryson, 60 N. C. 112.

(B) VENUE, CHANGE OF VENUE, TRANSFER AND REMOVAL OF CAUSE.

VENUE, § 235.
CHANGE OF VENUE OR TRANSFER OF CAUSE TO OTHER JUSTICE, § 236.
— GROUNDS, § 237.
— TIME FOR APPLICATION, § 238.
— APPLICATION AND PROCEDURE, § 239.
— JURISDICTION AND PROCEEDINGS AFTER CHANGE, § 240.
— SECOND OR SUBSEQUENT CHANGE, § 241.
— JURISDICTION AND PROCEEDINGS AFTER REFUSAL OF CHANGE, § 242.
REMOVAL OF CAUSE TO COURT OF RECORD, § 243.
— PROCEEDINGS AFTER REMOVAL IN GENERAL, § 244.
— AMENDMENTS IN PLEADINGS AND REPLEADING, § 245.

§ 235. Venue.

Domicile or residence of parties as affecting jurisdiction, see ante, §§ 143–147.

[a] (Ala. 1843) Under the statute requiring that a defendant shall be sued before a justice of the peace in the beat in which he resides, or in which the debt was contracted, if a debt be contracted in one beat, and a note given therefor in another, an action will lie on the note in the former beat.—Wright v. Burt, 5 Ala. 29.

[b] (Cal. 1885) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 832, providing that, where a person has contracted to perform an obligation at a particular place, and resides in another county, an action thereon before a justice shall be brought in the county where it is to be performed, or in the county where defendant resides, and section 848, providing that, where an action is brought in the county where the contract was to be performed, and the defendant resides in another county, the summons may be served in the county where he resides, an action for damages for breach of contract may be brought before a justice of the county where it was to be performed, and the summons served in the county where the defendant resides.—Cole v. Fisher, 66 Cal. 441, 5 Pac. 915.

[c] (Colo. 1887) Gen. St. 1883, § 1932, provides that "suits before justices shall be commenced in the township in which the debtor resides, unless the cause of action accrued in the township in which the plaintiff resides, in which case the suit may be commenced where the cause of action accrued or is specifically made payable." Held, that the statute does not apply to nonresident debtors.—Charles v. Amos, 10 Colo. 272, 15 Pac. 417.

[d] (Ill. 1877) A justice of the peace of the county where the parties reside may take jurisdiction of an action for damages done to real property in another county.—Pilgrim v. Mellor, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 448.

[e] (Ind. 1872) To give a justice of the peace jurisdiction of an action by a landlord to recover possession of real estate, the land must lie in the county where the action is brought.—Jolly v. Ghering, 40 Ind. 139.

[f] (Ind. 1885) The jurisdiction of the mayor of an Indiana city over an action against a railroad company which, by not fencing, has run over plaintiff's stock, is not limited to cases where the stock was run over within the limits of the city.—Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Lash, 103 Ind. 80, 2 N. E. 250.

[g] (Iowa, 1875) Where a promissory note is, in terms, made payable in a certain township, a justice of the peace of that township has jurisdiction of the maker, though he resides, and is served with process, in another county.—Klingel v. Palmer, 42 Iowa, 166.

[h] (Me. 1838) Local actions may be brought before a justice of the peace in the county where the defendant lives, though the cause of action accrued from an injury done to real estate within a different county.—Morton v. Chase, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 188.

[i] (Mass.) An action for injury to real estate, if the damage does not exceed $20, is not local to the county where the land lies, but may be brought before a justice in any county where the defendant may be.—(1818) Sumner v. Finegan, 15 Mass. 280; (1830) Pitman v. Flint, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 504.

[j] (Miss. 1879) Under Code, § 1303, replevin before a justice of the peace will not lie in a district where the defendant neither resides nor has property.—Turner v. Lilly, 56 Miss. 576.

[k] (Miss. 1881) Under Code 1880, § 2634, regulating the venue of the action of replevin, a justice of the peace of one district cannot issue a writ of replevin for property held by a defendant in another district, returnable before a justice of the peace in such district.—Richardson v. Davis, 59 Miss. 15.

[l] (Mo. 1885) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 2839, conferring jurisdiction upon justices of the peace in actions against railroad companies for killing or injuring of stock, the jurisdiction is not confined to the justice of the township where the injury occurred, but is extended to the justice of any adjoining township, without regard to the amount involved.—Chaney v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 18 Mo. App. 661.

[m] (Mo. 1885) Rev. St. § 2835, gives justices original jurisdiction in actions against a railroad company to recover for killing or injuring stock within their respective townships, without regard to the value of the animals killed, or the amount claimed for killing the same. Section 2839 requires an action against a railroad company for killing or injuring stock, etc., to be brought before a justice of the township in which the injury happened, or in any adjoining township. Held, that taking the two sections together, the jurisdiction is still local, and that the locality in which the jurisdiction is exercised extended so as to include any township adjoining the township in which the stock may be injured, etc., and no further; as this jurisdiction as thus extended as purely and entirely local, "without regard to the value of the stock, or the amount claimed for killed the same."—Manuel v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 19 Mo. App. 631.

[n] (Mo. 1885) An action brought before a justice of the peace against a railroad company for double damages for killing stock must be instituted in the township where the killing occurred, or in an adjoining township.—Backenstoe v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 86 Mo. 492, affirming (1885) 23 Mo. App. 148.

[o] (Mo. 1887) In an action for stock killing, where the complaint alleges that the animal was killed in S. township, and there is some evidence tending to show that it was killed at a point two and one-half miles from C., "in S. township," there is sufficient evidence of venue to go to the jury.—Kinney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 27 Mo. App. 610.

[p] (Mo. 1892) Under Rev. St. § 6126, providing that an action before a justice against a railroad company for killing stock shall be brought in the township where the killing occurred, or in an adjoining township, the evidence must show that the suit was so brought, and a mere allegation to that effect, not admitted to be true, is insufficient.—Whitesides v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co., 49 Mo. App. 250.

[q] (Mo. 1893) An action in a justice's court to enforce a mechanic's lien must be brought in the county where the land sought to be charged is situated.—Schultz v. Larkin, 53 Mo. App. 223.

[r] (N. Y. 1846) Trespass quare clausum fregit may be brought in a justice's court of a different county from that in which the land lies, though the action is a local action.—Graves v. McKeon, 2 Denio, 639.

[s] (N. C. 1891) Under Code, § 871, forbidding a justice of the peace to issue process to any county other than his own where there is only one defendant, and section 191 (applicable to proceedings in superior courts), providing that an action for the recovery of a penalty must be brought in the county where the cause arose, a justice has jurisdiction of an action against a resident of his county for a penalty incurred in another county, in the absence of any provision extending the provision of section 191 to justices' courts.—Fisher v. Bullard, 109 N. C. 574, 13 S. E. 799.

[t] (Ohio, 1861) The act to regulate inclosures (Act Jan. 17, 1840, § 15), which provides that actions of trespass to recover assessments of damages made under the act by township trustees shall be brought in the township in which defendant resides, is not repealed by Justices' Code, § 3, which authorizes a common-law action of trespass in any township where the trespass was committed.—Place v. Welch, 2 Ohio Dec. 542.

[u] (Tex. 1859) A defendant may be sued before a justice in the county where the debt was to be paid, as well as in the one where he resides.—Perry v. Lovett, 24 Tex. 359.

[v] (Tex. 1866) An action for damages to land cannot be brought before a justice of the peace in the precinct where the land lies when the defendant resides in another county.—Cowan v. Nixon, 28 Tex. 230.

[w] (Tex. 1894) Where a boy voluntarily leaves his father's house to seek shelter with another, any persuasion exercised by such other to keep the boy with him is a tort committed in the precinct where he resides, and hence a justice of the peace of another precinct has no jurisdiction of an action brought by the father for enticing away the boy.—Bracken v. Johnson (Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 1101.

[x] (Utah, 1884) Due bills for work done in a certain precinct are not contracts to be performed within such precinct, within Prac. Act (Comp. Laws, p. 1734) subd. 6, which provides that, where a person has contracted to perform any obligation at a particular place, and resides in another precinct, he may be sued in justice's court in the precinct in which it is to be performed.—Fenton v. Salt Lake County, 3 Utah, 423, 4 Pac. 241; Klopenstein v. Woolf, 3 Utah, 426, 4 Pac. 227; Sanders v. Same, 3 Utah, 429, 4 Pac. 228.

[y] (Vt. 1831) Act Oct. 1811, directing that certain suits before justices for goods sold shall be brought in the town where they were sold, does not apply to a single act of selling, on a particular occasion, by one who did not follow the trade of vending goods, or, if he did, was only transiently in the town where the sale was made.—Wainwright v. Berry, 3 Vt. 423.

[z] (Vt. 1853) Rev. St. c. 26, § 16, enacts that suits commenced before a justice to recover debts or demands for goods sold or delivered shall be tried in the town where such commodities were sold, or where the defendant resides. S. & E. had a shop in R. for the manufacture of gravestones, and S. resided there. E. was transiently in another town, where defendant resided, and there sold him a set of gravestones. Held, that a suit to recover the value of the stones was properly brought before a justice of the peace in R.—Stone v. Hazen, 25 Vt. 178.

[zz] (Wis. 1875) Under Rev. St. c. 123, actions for the recovery of personal property are transitory, except where the property has been distrained. Therefore the police justice of a city may obtain jurisdiction where the property (not being distrained) was taken by the defendant outside of the city.—Young v. Lego, 38 Wis. 206.

§ 236. Change of venue or transfer of cause to other justice.

Appearance before justice to whom cause is sent as conferring jurisdiction, see post, § 240 [a, hhh].

Transfer of criminal prosecution, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 822–825, § 204.

[a] (Cal. 1885) Under the statute of 1875–76, reincorporating the city of San Diego, an action properly brought before a justice of the peace of such city may be transferred for trial before a justice whose office is outside of the city. The general statute as to change of place of trial is applicable to such cases. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 833–835.—Palmer v. Snyder, 67 Cal. 105, 7 Pac. 196.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) Where a party to an action before a justice of the peace files his affidavit, and moves for a change of venue on the ground that the justice is so prejudiced against him that he cannot obtain justice before him, it is error to refuse a change of venue.—Berner v. Frazier, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 77.

[c] (Iowa, 1873) Revision, § 2802, providing that if suit is brought in the wrong county the defendant may demand a change of venue to the proper county, does not apply to proceedings before a justice of the peace.—Post v. Brownell, 36 Iowa, 497.

[d] (Iowa, 1877) A change of venue may be taken from the court of a mayor of a city or incorporated town to that of a justice of the peace.—Finch v. Marvin, 46 Iowa, 384.

[e] (Kan. 1882) The granting of a change of venue by a justice is a ministerial act precluding the exercise of judicial discretion.—Herbert v. Beathard, 26 Kan. 746.

[f] (Mo. 1892) The fact that the garnishee in a justice court obtains a change of venue does not affect the jurisdiction of the justice in the principal case.—Martin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 50 Mo. App. 428.

[g] (Neb. 1893) Where a proper affidavit for a change of venue from one justice of the peace to another, on the ground of bias and prejudice, under Code, §§ 958a, 958b (Consol. St. §§ 5428, 5429), is seasonably filed, and the provisions of the statute relating to the payment of costs are complied with, it is the imperative duty of the justice before whom the objection is made to transfer the cause to the nearest justice of the county to whom the same objections do not apply.—Peyton v. Johnson, 37 Neb. 886, 56 N. W. 728.

[h] (Neb. 1895) When an affidavit by a defendant for a change of venue of a cause pending before a justice of the peace is filed, and the costs have been paid, under Code Civ. Proc.

§ 958a, it is mandatory on the justice to transfer the cause to the nearest justice of the county to whom the objections stated in the affidavit do not apply.—Paul v. Ziebell, 43 Neb. 424, 61 N. W. 630.

[i] (Tex. 1889) Rev. St. art. 1560, provides that, "if there be no justice of the peace qualified to try the suit in the proper precinct, the suit may be commenced before the nearest justice of the peace of the county who is not disqualified to try the same." Held, that a suit could be brought in the proper precinct though the justice therein was disqualified, by reason of his relation to one of the parties, and then transferred to the nearest justice.—Morris v. Foreaker (App.) 15 S. W. 37.

[j] (Wis. 1881) Under Rev. St. 1878, § 3616, which provides that if the defendant shall, before any proceedings are had on his part, make oath that from prejudice, or other cause, he believes the justice will not decide impartially, such justice shall immediately transmit the case to another justice, an execution defendant in garnishment proceedings issued by a justice in aid of a judgment previously rendered by him or his predecessor is not entitled to a removal on the ground of prejudice.—Garland v. McKitrick, 52 Wis. 261, 9 N. W. 160.

[k] (Wis. 1885) A village charter conferred on each of the justices of the village, which is situated in two counties, jurisdiction coextensive with the limits of both counties, and a cause removed from a justice of the village may be sent to the nearest justice, though the latter may live in the other county.—Starkweather v. Sawyer, 63 Wis. 297, 23 N. W. 566.

§ 237. —— Grounds.

[a] (Cal. 1855) Where a justice is interested in a cause, he should transfer it as is provided by statute.—Larue v. Gaskins, 5 Cal. 507.

[b] (Minn. 1858) Under Laws 1849, p. 19, a justice of the peace has no right to transfer a cause to another justice on an affidavit of partiality or prejudice, but only on affidavit, filed before issue joined, that the justice is a material witness, or where it was proved that he is near of kin to plaintiff. The remedy for errors from partiality or prejudice is by appeal or certiorari.—Cooper v. Brewster, 1 Minn. 94 (Gil. 73).

[c] (Ohio, 1859) If the defendant wishes the justice as a witness, he should, before the trial, cause the cause to be removed for trial before another justice, according to the express provisions of the Code.—McMillen v. Andrews, 10 Ohio St. 112.

§ 238. —— Time for application.

Demanding change of venue after removal of cause to court of record, see post, § 244 [b, c].

[a] (Iowa, 1849) Application for change of venue may be made to a justice of the peace at any time after appearance of the parties, and before the jury is sworn or the trial submitted to the justice.—Lyne v. Hoyle, 2 G. Geene, 135.

[b] (Iowa, 1855) A case was tried before a justice, and the jury disagreed; just before a second jury was sworn, a party applied for a change of venue. Held, that this was "before the trial commenced" (St. Jan. 24, 1853), and in time.—Marshall v. Kinney, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 580.

[c] (Iowa, 1866) An application for a change of venue from one justice to another should be made before the commencement of the trial.—McKenney v. Hopkins, 20 Iowa, 495.

[d] (Kan. 1882) A party may procure a change of venue in a justice's court, after the cause has been continued, and before the day to which it has been continued.—Herbert v. Beathard, 26 Kan. 746.

[e] (Minn. 1859) Rev. St. art. 4, c. 69, § 65, relating to justices' courts, provides that change of venue may be had "at any time before trial shall have commenced." Held, that neither the settlement of the pleadings, nor the argument of a motion to dissolve an attachment, is a commencement of the trial, and that an application for a change of venue before the commencement of a trial on the merits is in time.—Curtis v. Moore, 3 Minn. 29 (Gil. 7).

[f] (Mo. 1890) A change of venue may be granted by a justice of the peace, before the return day of the summons, on the appearance of both parties before him.—Weber v. Cummings, 39 Mo. App. 518.

[g] (Neb. 1890) Under Code, § 954, allowing a change of venue before justices of the peace at any time before trial, none can be granted after a judgment given in the absence of the defendant, which has been conditionally set aside.—Tyler v. Baxter, 29 Neb. 688, 46 N. W. 153.

[h] (Wis. 1884) An application to remove a case because the justice before whom the suit was instituted is a material witness is too late after issue has been joined and witnesses for plaintiff sworn.—Jacubeck v. Hewitt, 61 Wis. 96, 20 N. W. 372.

§ 239. —— Application and procedure.

[a] (Iowa, 1882) When a justice of the peace grants a change of venue, he must send the papers to the nearest justice, as provided by Code 1873, § 3534, and must name him. Until he does so name him, he retains jurisdiction.—Bremner v. Hallowell, 59 Iowa, 433, 13 N. W. 412.

[b] (Iowa, 1893) Under Miller's Code, § 3516, providing that the proceedings prescribed for the circuit court shall be pursued in a justice's court; and section 2596, providing that a change of venue in the circuit court shall not be deemed perfected until the costs caused thereby are paid by the applicant; and section 3842, providing that an officer performing any service is entitled to his fees in advance,—a justice of the peace may demand his fees before granting a change of venue, and, on the failure of the applicant to make such payment, the justice may retain jurisdiction over the cause.—Holmes v. Butts, 87 Iowa, 412, 54 N. W. 249.

[c] (Kan. 1876) Where a defendant makes an application in a justice's court for a change of venue, but does not pay or offer to pay any costs, and does not confess or offer to confess a judgment for any costs, though his attention is called to the matter by the plaintiff, the justice may rightfully overrule the application.—Chapin v. Brown, 17 Kan. 142.

[d] (Kan. 1882) Justices' Code, §§ 78, 79, requiring a plaintiff applying for a change of venue in a justice's court to pay costs or confess judgment therefor, do not excuse the justice's refusal to attach his jurat and signature to plaintiff's affidavit for such change of venue, or to file such affidavit, though plaintiff does not pay costs or confess judgment therefor.—Herbert v. Beathard, 26 Kan. 746.

[e] (Mich. 1886) A motion to remove a cause, under How. Ann. St. § 6937, providing that if, before issue is joined in a justice's court, defendant files an affidavit that the justice is a material witness for defendant, or has advised with plaintiff in regard to the matter in controversy, the cause shall be transferred to one of the nearest justices in the county, provided defendant shall pay the accrued costs and 50 cents for the transcript, will be denied, unless it appears that both the costs and fee for making the transcript have been paid or tendered.—Oakley v. Dunn, 63 Mich. 494, 30 N. W. 96.

[f] (Minn. 1871) The entry in the docket of a justice of the peace, relating to the transfer of a cause to another justice, was as follows: "Defendant made affidavit that he could not safely proceed to trial before the undersigned, and asked change of venue. The court granted the change, and sent the cause before P. Bliss, Esq., of the city of Owatonna, at 1 p. m." Held, that this was a sufficient order for such transfer.—McGinty v. Warner, 17 Minn. 41 (Gil. 23).

[g] (Mo. 1895) A justice may not refuse to allow a change of venue except on payment in advance of his fee therefor, there being definite provision by Rev. St. 1889, §§ 5007, 6244, for other modes of collecting his fees.—State ex rel. Uedeking v. McCracken, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 223.

[h] (Mo. 1895) A justice cannot impose on persons applying for change of venue the condition that the costs be paid.—Endicott v. Hall, 61 Mo. App. 185, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 340.

[i] (Neb. 1887) Where a justice of the peace, on application for a change of venue, made an order transferring the cause to one R., supposed to be the nearest justice to whom no objection would apply, but on the next day ascertained that said justice had resigned, whereupon he changed the order, transferring the cause to one B., the nearest justice exercising the duties of his office, all parties being notified of said change, and a trial was thereafter had before B. and a jury, at which the parties appeared, there is no error.—Hitchcock v. McKinster, 21 Neb. 148, 31 N. W. 507.

[j] (Neb. 1893) Under Code, §§ 958a, 958b (Consol. St. §§ 5428, 5429), allowing a change of venue from one justice of the peace to another on the ground of bias and prejudice, an affidavit for a change of venue is sufficient if it is in the language of the statute, and need not set out the facts showing bias and prejudice.—Peyton v. Johnson, 37 Neb. 886, 56 N. W. 728.

[k] (Neb. 1893) Under Code, §§ 958a, 958b (Consol. St. §§ 5428, 5429), allowing a change of venue from one justice of the peace to another on the ground of bias and prejudice, and providing that, on the filing of the proper affidavit, the cause shall be transferred to the nearest justice to whom said objections do not apply, where an affidavit states that "F. A. W., the nearest justice to whom said cause could be transferred, is, as affiant verily believes, biased and prejudiced against affiant, so that a fair and impartial hearing cannot be had before him," it is error for the justice before whom the action is pending to order the venue changed to such nearest justice.—Peyton v. Johnson, 37 Neb. 886, 56 N. W. 728.

[l] (Neb. 1895) In an affidavit for a change of venue from a justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 958a, defendant may set up a well-founded objection disqualifying the nearest or any other justice in the county.—Paul v. Ziebell, 43 Neb. 424, 61 N. W. 630.

[m] (Neb. 1895) Where defendant has filed an affidavit of prejudice, for a change of venue from a justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 958a, plaintiff cannot show prejudice of the nearest justice in order to prevent defendant from procuring a change of venue.—Paul v. Ziebell, 43 Neb. 424, 61 N. W. 630.

[n] (Wis. 1871) Rev. St. c. 120, § 47, does not require a party who desires to have a cause in justice's court removed, to make an affidavit, but only an oath, "that from prejudice or other cause he believes the justice will not decide impartially in the matter." And where the oath is reduced to writing, and signed and filed as on affidavit in the cause, it is sufficient to authorize a removal of the cause, though deficient as an affidavit for lack of a venue. The affidavit includes the oath, and may show what facts the affiant swore to, and thus be available as an oath, although it may be entirely unavailable as an affidavit.—Burns v. Doyle, 28 Wis. 460.

[o] (Wis. 1884) Where a part of the defendants make affidavit of the prejudice of a justice of the peace, and afterwards all appear and join in a motion for the removal of the case to the nearest justice in the county, tendering the proper costs, the affidavit of prejudice is sufficient, and it is the duty of the justice to remove the case as requested; and, if defendants refuse to appear further in the action, the justice loses jurisdiction of the case.—Hillriegel v. Truman, 60 Wis. 253, 19 N. W. 79.

[p] (Wis. 1884) A justice is not bound to grant an application for a removal on the ground that he is prejudiced or is a material witness, where the application is made by one defendant only, the other not joining.—Jacubeck v. Hewitt, 61 Wis. 96, 20 N. W. 372.

[q] (Wis. 1892) An affidavit by a person charged with a tort, in support of an application to change venue from one justice to another, under Rev. St. § 4809, providing that such person "shall make oath that from prejudice or other cause he believes that such justice will not decide impartially in the matter," which does not set out the facts constituting the alleged "prejudice or other cause," is insufficient.—Hager v. Falk, 82 Wis. 644, 52 N. W. 432.

[r] (Wis. 1894) A justice of the peace was held not to have been deprived of jurisdiction by an affidavit of prejudice for removal of the cause to the nearest justice made by one only of two defendants.—State v. Roberts, 87 Wis. 292, 58 N. W. 409.

§ 240. —— Jurisdiction and proceedings after change.

[a] (Ark. 1890) Where plaintiff filed with a justice a note indorsed "Paid," upon which he appeared as a co-maker with defendant, and an entry was made on the docket that plaintiff claimed he was surety for defendant, and had paid the note for him, and afterwards defendant obtained a change of venue, filed this record before a second justice, and entered his appearance, he cannot question the jurisdiction of the second justice.—Buffington v. Sipe, 58 Ark. 235, 13 S. W. 763.

[aa] (Ind. 1869) Where a justice has failed to certify his transcript to another justice, in case of a change of venue, the cause should be remanded back for trial.—Todhunter v. Marshall, 32 Ind. 96.

[aaa] (Ind. 1871) Where a defendant appeared before a justice of the peace and agreed on a day for trial, and afterwards asked for and obtained a change of venue, held, that he had fully submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the justice before whom the action was commenced, and that he could not plead to the jurisdiction of the justice before whom the cause was sent.—Nesbit v. Long, 37 Ind. 300.

[b] (Ind. 1877) A party to an action before a justice of the peace, who procures several changes of venue, cannot, after voluntarily appearing, object that one of such changes was improperly taken, or that the justice to whom the venue was changed had no jurisdiction over his person.—Mayes v. Goldsmith, 58 Ind. 94.

[c] (Iowa, 1855) In an action before a justice of the peace, after the jury had failed to agree and were discharged, the plaintiff obtained a change of venue to another justice on the ground that the first justice was a material witness for him. Upon the appearance before the second justice the defendant moved specially to dismiss the suit, for the reason that the change of venue was erroneously granted, and that the second justice had no jurisdiction of the cause. Held, that it was not error in the justice to refuse to dismiss.—Marshall v. Kinney, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 96.

[d] (Iowa, 1855) A change of venue by a justice may be erroneous, but it is not void, so that the second justice has no jurisdiction.—Marshall v. Kinney, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 96.

[e] (Kan. 1890) Where an action is commenced before a justice of the peace, who is interested in the result thereof, and a change of venue is had on the ground of prejudice, it is proper for the justice to whom the case is transferred to dismiss all prior proceedings on motion of defendant, because the action was commenced before a justice who was disqualified.—Limerick v. Murlatt, 43 Kan. 318, 23 Pac. 567.

[f] (Minn.) Where a case is transferred from one justice of the peace to an adjoining justice, and the ordering of the transfer does not appear in the docket of the justice from whom the transfer is made as required by Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 18, neither the subsequent appearance of the parties before the justice to whom it is sent, nor recitals in his docket, will confer jurisdiction upon such justice.—(1870) Rahilly v. Lane, 15 Minn. 447 (Gil. 360); (1871) McGinty v. Warner, 17 Minn. 41 (Gil. 23).

[g] (Minn. 1871) On a change of venue in a justice's court, the transcript stated that defendant made affidavit that he could not safely proceed to trial before "the undersigned," and asked for a change of venue. The justice certified that the papers transmitted with the transcript of his docket were all there were in the case, but no affidavit for the change was received by the justice to whom they were so transmitted. Held, that diminution of the record, and not want of jurisdiction, was shown, and the change having been made at defendant's request, it was to be presumed, as against him, that the affidavit was sufficient, until the contrary appeared.—McGinty v. Warner, 17 Minn. 41 (Gil. 23).

[h] (Minn. 1895) A party to an action in justice's court who obtained a transfer to another justice cannot object that the cause was improperly transferred because of an insufficient affidavit for removal.—Oltman v. Yost, 62 Minn. 261, 64 N. W. 564.

[hh] (Mo. 1895) A general appearance by the parties in a justice's court to which the venue of a case is changed, and also in the circuit court on appeal, confers jurisdiction to try the cause of action.—Buzzard v. Hapeman, 61 Mo. App. 464, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 657.

[hhh] (Mo. 1896) Though plaintiff in an action on account fails to file the account with the justice, defendant's application for a change of venue, and his appearance before the justice to whom the case is sent, confer jurisdiction over his person.—Carter v. Womack, 64 Mo. App. 338, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 997.

[i] (Neb. 1887) Where, on a change of venue, a cause is transferred to a justice of the peace, who, by reason of bias and prejudice, is unable to try the case, a motion to dismiss, filed by the defendant, is properly overruled. The proper motion in such case is to remand.—Hitchcock v. McKinster, 21 Neb. 148, 31 N. W. 507.

[j] (Wis. 1843) It cannot be objected, after trial, that a justice to whom a cause was transferred was not the nearest justice to the one before whom the cause originated.—Cox v. Groshong, 1 Pin. 307.

[k] (Wis. 1886) By proceeding to trial before a justice to whose court the case is removed, the parties waive the right to object to his jurisdiction, on the ground of a defect in the affidavit for removal.—Magmer v. Renk, 65 Wis. 364, 27 N. W. 26.

§ 241. —— Second or subsequent change.

[a] (Cal. 1863) Where the venue of an action before a justice has been once changed, a further change may be ordered for good cause shown.—People v. Hubbard, 22 Cal. 34.

[b] (Ind. 1877) Where a change of venue is taken in a cause from one justice of the peace to another of the same township, the latter may, in certain cases, on a change being taken from him, send the cause to a justice of the peace of another township.—Mayes v. Goldsmith, 58 Ind. 94.

[c] (Kan. 1882) The procuring of a change of venue by defendant in an action before a justice will not preclude plaintiff from thereafter procuring another change of venue.—Herbert v. Beathard, 26 Kan. 746.

§ 242. —— Jurisdiction and proceedings after refusal of change.

[a] (Kan. 1883) Where a sufficient application for a change of venue is made, under Comp. Laws 1879, c. 81, art. 7, and judgment for costs confessed before a justice, it is the duty of the justice to make the change; but, if he refuse, he does not lose his jurisdiction, and his subsequent acts are not necessarily nullities.—Barnhart v. Davis, 30 Kan. 520, 2 Pac. 633.

[b] (Mo. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6241, providing that, after affidavit for change of venue is filed, the justice shall have no further jurisdiction, a judgment entered after such filing is absolutely void.—Endicott v. Hall, 61 Mo. App. 185, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 340.

§ 243. Removal of cause to court of record.

Actions involving title to land as requiring removal, see ante, §§ 83–97.

Necessity for removal of attachment suit where same property is attached under writ from court of record, see post, § 287 [f].

Unauthorized certification as ousting justice's jurisdiction, see ante, § 190 [a].

Mandamus to compel certification, see "Mandamus," II. (A).

[a] (Conn. 1834) Double pleading of title to an action of trespass quare clausum before a justice of the peace is not allowable under the statute for the purpose of removing the cause to a higher court.—Lamb v. Beebe, 10 Conn. 322.

[b] (Iowa, 1889) The law does not authorize the transfer of an action from a justice's court to the district court before final judgment, though the parties consent thereto.—Evans v. Phelps, 77 Iowa, 526, 42 N. W. 432.

[c] (Kan. 1888) Where in an action before a justice of the peace, the answer shows that the title to land is in dispute, and the action is held for trial by the justice, and judgment rendered, and defendant appeals, the district court has jurisdiction to try such case as though certified by the justice, under Comp. Laws 1885, c. 81, § 7.—Lyman v. Stanton, 39 Kan. 443, 18 Pac. 513.

[d] (Mass. 1844) The record of a justice of the peace, before whom trespass was brought, showed that defendant pleaded the general issue, which was joined, and that, "the defendant offering in evidence title to the real estate upon which the alleged trespass was committed, the plaintiff appealed to the next court of common pleas," etc., "and entered into recognizance, as the law directs, to prosecute said appeal there with effect." Plaintiff entered said action in the next court of common pleas, judgment was there rendered against him, and he brought error to reverse said judgment, on the ground that the action was not rightly removed into the common pleas and that said court had no jurisdiction thereof. Held, that it sufficiently appeared on the justice's record that the title to real estate was brought in question; that the term "appealed" was not used technically, but was meant to express plaintiff's election to remove the case to the court of common pleas; and that said court had jurisdiction of the case.—Lawrence v. Souther, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 166.

[e, f] (N. Y. 1814) In an action before a justice defendant entered a plea of title, and entered into a recognizance to appear and put in claim at the next term of the court of common pleas on a suit commenced against him there by the plaintiff. Held, in an action on the recognizance, plaintiff must show that at such next term of the common pleas he commenced the suit against the original defendant.—Brown v. Van Duzen, 11 Johns. 472.

[g] (N. Y. 1849) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, defendant pleaded title to land and delivered to a justice the undertakings for removal required by Code, § 56, but failed to accept service of the complaint and summons filed by the plaintiff thereafter within the time allowed by such section, the higher court had no jurisdiction to permit defendant to accept service thereafter, since without service of summons there is no case before the court.—Davis v. Jones, 3 Code Rep. 63, 4 How. Prac. 340.

[h, i] (N. Y. 1853) Where defendant, on raising a question of title, fails to comply literally with the terms of the undertaking filed with the justice which is required by Code 1849, § 56, by omitting to give the written admission of service of the summons and complaint, but puts in his answer in the supreme court, he has substantially performed his obligation, and plaintiff, by accepting the answer without the written admission, waives his right to require a literal compliance with the terms of the undertaking, and such waiver does not affect the identity of the suits before the justice and in the supreme court.—Wiggins v. Tallmadge, 7 How. Prac. 404.

[j, k] (N. Y. 1879) An action was brought to recover damages for trespass on land before a justice. Defendant interposed a plea of title, and gave an undertaking conditioned that, if plaintiff should within 20 days from the date thereof deposit with the justice the summons and complaint in an action in the supreme court, defendant would within 20 days give an admission in writing of service. Held, that the bond was insufficient under Laws 1854, c. 96, § 12, providing the condition of the bond should show that defendant would give an admission of the services of summons and complaint in the superior court, if plaintiff should deposit such summons and complaint with the justice.—Kohlbrenner v. Elsheimer, 19 Hun, 88.

[l] (N. Y. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2951, 2952, provide that an action in justice's court must be discontinued where defendant files an affidavit showing that the title to land will come in question, and delivers to the justice an undertaking, with one or more sureties, "approved by the justice," conditioned that defendant will admit service in a new action brought by plaintiff in the proper court. Held that, after such affidavit and undertaking have been filed by defendant, the justice could not retain jurisdiction of the cause, by arbitrarily refusing to approve the undertaking, without examining the surety, and without giving any reasons for his disapproval, and that a judgment thereafter rendered against defendant in his absence must be reversed on appeal.—Harding v. Ellston (Co. Ct.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 549, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 252.

[m, n] (N. C. 1848) Where an attachment is made returnable to a single justice of the peace, and several garnishees are summoned, the justice cannot refer the matter to the county court, unless plaintiff makes affidavit that the garnishees owed the defendant such a debt, or had property belonging to him of such a nature, or made such a statement of facts, that the justice could not give judgment. The simple statement by the justice that plaintiff made the proper affidavit is insufficient.—Miller v. Bates, 30 N. C. 477.

[o] (Ohio, 1861) An attachment suit, commenced before a justice on the ground that defendant was a nonresident of the county, cannot be certified to or proceeded with in the common pleas on a return that defendant had no effects liable to be seized, except land, since an attachment cannot issue from the common pleas against a nonresident, except where he lives without the state.—Breckenridge v. Grace, 2 Ohio Dec. 558.

[p] (Ohio, 1861) Where an attachment suit is commenced before a justice, and there is a return that defendant has no effects liable to seizure, except lands, the case may be certified to the common pleas, if it be one which can be proceeded with in said court in all respects as if the same had originated there.—Breckenridge v. Grace, 2 Ohio Dec. 558.

[q] (Ohio, 1861) Under Justice Code, § 53, providing that in attachment cases, where no effects are found, except land, the justice shall certify the case to the common pleas, applies to cases where the amount is less than $100, as well as those over that amount.—Breckenridge v. Grace, 2 Ohio Dec. 558.

[r] (Ohio, 1861) Justice Code, § 53, authorizing an attachment case to be certified to the common pleas when there has been an examination of the garnishee, does not restrict the right to have a case certified to such cases.—Breckenridge v. Grace, 2 Ohio Dec. 558.

[s] (Ohio, 1894) Rev. St. § 6618, provides that when the appraised value of property taken by replevin in justice's court, exceeds $300, the justice shall certify the proceedings to the court of common pleas, and "thereupon" shall file the original papers, etc., in the clerk's office of such court. Held, that "thereupon" means as soon thereafter as it is possible to do so.—Bernhard v. Iglauer (Com. Pl.) 31 Wkly. Law Bul. 163.

[t] (Pa. 1895) Under Act March 20, 1810, § 14, providing that, if it shall appear "by due proof, on oath or affirmation," that a judgment was confessed before a justice of the peace for the purpose of defrauding creditors, the parties shall certify the proceedings to the common pleas, a verified affidavit in the words of the act is sufficient, and the proof need not satisfy the justice that the judgment was confessed with a view to defraud creditors.—Minick v. Tharp (Com. Pl.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 44.

[u] (Utah, 1883) Unless authorized by statute, a justice of the peace cannot certify a case to another court. If he finds the case not within his jurisdiction, he must dismiss it.—Crismon v. Tufts, 2 Pac. 705.

[v] (Vt. 1829) Act Oct. 28, 1826, repealing Act Nov. 19, 1824, § 2, which requires a justice of the peace to refuse to take jurisdiction of a cause where the defendant pleads title to land, and to certify the records and proceedings to the county court for trial, is a valid law; and hence a removal of an action by a justice on such ground is erroneous.—Easterbrook v. Low, 2 Vt. 135.

[w, x] (Wash. 1891) Where a justice has taken jurisdiction of a case involving more than his jurisdictional amount, and an appeal is taken from his judgment, it will be treated as a proper transfer of the case to the superior court.—Moore v. Perrott, 2 Wash. St. 1, 25 Pac. 906.

[y] (Wis. 1857) Under a statute providing that, in actions commenced before a justice, when the title to land comes in question, the defendant, on tendering plea and notice thereof, may have the question certified to the circuit court, the plea and notice must clearly show that the title to land was in question.—Verbeck v. Verbeck, 6 Wis. 159.

[z] (Wis. 1857) The statute having prescribed the manner in which an action commenced before a justice of the peace may be removed to the circuit court, the mode thereby provided must be pursued, and the statute complied with, in order to give that court jurisdiction.—Verbeck v. Verbeck, 6 Wis. 159.

§ 244. —— Proceedings after removal in general.

Costs on removal of case involving title, see "Costs," vol. 13, cc. 74, 75, § 45.

[a] (Ala. 1860) A complaint for forcible entry and detainer in an action commenced in a justice's court should not be stricken from the files, after the cause has been removed to the city court of Mobile, because of a variance between it and the justice's indorsement on the summons of the cause of action.—Van Aspen v. Townsend, 36 Ala. 582.

[b] (Cal. 1889) Where the defendant in an action commenced in a justice's court asks to have the cause transferred to the superior court of the county where he is sued, for the reason that the cause involves the legality of a tax, there is no authority, upon the transfer being made, to transfer the cause to another county for trial.—Powell v. Sutro, 21 Pac. 436.

[c] (Cal. 1889) In an action before a justice to recover taxes paid for defendant, the answer averred illegality of the taxes; whereupon, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 838, the cause was certified to the superior court of the county. Held, under section 396, providing that the trial may be had in the county in which an action is brought, though it be not the proper county, unless defendant, at the time he appears and answers or demurs, demands in writing that the trial be had in the proper county, that a demand for change of venue, made in the superior court, was too late.—Powell v. Sutro, 80 Cal. 559, 22 Pac. 308.

[d] (Ind. 1846) If a suit in a justice's court, in which the defendant is entitled to the general issue, be certified to the probate court, the trial in the latter court should be by jury, though the defendant fail to appear there.—Owen v. Moore, 8 Blackf. 79.

[e] (Ind. 1853) The only office of a plea that the title to real estate is involved is to remove the cause to the circuit court, which then proceeds to its final determination as though it had been commenced in that court.—Love v. Bohan, 4 Ind. 235.

[f] (Kan. 1872) Where, on a trial before a justice of the peace, defendant pleads to the justice's jurisdiction, and the justice, finding that the title to land is in controversy, certifies the case to the district court, on appeal defendant is estopped from insisting that the justice had jurisdiction.—Bernstein v. Smith, 10 Kan. 55.

[g] (Mich. 1873) Where an action of trespass, commenced before a justice of the peace, has been certified to the circuit court under Comp. Laws 1871, § 5330, for the reason that it appeared from plaintiff's evidence that a question of title to land was involved, the fact that the defendant had failed to give notice with his plea that title would come in question does not, on the trial in the circuit, operate as an admission of the plaintiff's title, so as to exclude evidence of title in defendant. The case stands in the circuit subject to the same rules of proof and disproof as though it had been originally commenced there.—Kawson v Finlay, 27 Mich. 268.

[h] (Minn. 1877) Where a cause is certified by a justice to the district court, under Gen. St. c. 65, § 35, on the ground that the title to real estate is involved, and it does not in fact so appear on the trial before the justice, the objection should be seasonably brought to the attention of the district court by an affidavit and motion for further return, showing what the evidence on the question of title was; and, in the absence of such motion, the judgment of the district court will not be disturbed.—Lindekugel v. Angelhofer, 24 Minn. 324.

[hh] (Minn. 1877) The docket entry of a justice of the peace, of the certificate and return to the district court of a cause, under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 35, on the ground that the same involves the title to real estate, the pleadings showing that the title may be involved, and the cause otherwise being one within the justice's jurisdiction, is prima facie sufficient to invest the district court with complete jurisdiction.—Lindekugel v. Angelhofer, 24 Minn. 324.

[i] (Mo. 1887) Under Rev. St. § 2931, an action of landlord's summons, certified to the circuit court by a justice of the peace on affidavit that it involves the title to real estate, is triable at the return term, even in counties which have 40,000 inhabitants or less.—Anselm v. Groby, 26 Mo. App. 126.

[j] (N. H. 1881) Where the defendant in trespass qu. cl. fr. has, by claiming title to the locus in quo, induced the plaintiff to bring the action in the supreme court, he is estopped to deny on the trial that the title was in dispute.—Carpenter v. Britton, 61 N. H. 430.

[k] (N. J. 1862) A defendant, who, in trespass before a justice of the peace, tenders a plea as one of title and gives a title bond reciting such plea, and that it has been given as one of title, is not estopped to deny, on the plaintiff's bringing suit in this court, that the plea is not one of title, where there is no evidence of willful misrepresentation by the defendant which induced the plaintiff to act to his injury.—Yawger v. Manning, 30 N. J. Law (1 Vroom) 182.

[l] (N. M. 1892) Comp. Laws 1884, § 2443, requiring a trial de novo in all cases originating before a justice of the peace and removed into the district court, and that such court shall allow all amendments necessary in furtherance of justice, includes an action of replevin so originating, and it was error to refuse an application to amend an affidavit which did not state the value of the property in question on the ground that no application to amend was made before the justice of the peace, and that the defect was jurisdictional.—Romero v. Luna, 6 N. M. 440, 30 Pac. 855.

[m] (N. M. 1892) The statute in regard to actions of replevin requiring the writ, if issued without the required affidavit, to be quashed, does not deprive complainant of the right to amend the writ on removal from a justice's court to the district court, since Comp. Laws 1884, § 2443, requires a trial de novo, and provides that such amendments shall be allowed as are necessary in furtherance of justice.—Romero v. Luna, 6 N. M. 440, 30 Pac. 855.

[n] (N. Y. 1832) The rule that showing title to any lands in a town will support a plea of liberum tenementum where the declaration is general does not entitle a defendant to a verdict who, on removal of a cause from a justice's court to the common pleas, attempts to show that the plaintiff had not possession of a title to the locus in quo, by proving title to lands generally in third persons in the same town.—Ellice v. Boyer, 8 Wend. 503.

[o] (N. Y. 1832) To enable a defendant, on removal of trespass quare clausum fregit from a justice court to the common pleas, to avail himself of the benefit of Laws 1824, p. 283, which authorizes a defendant, notwithstanding the plea of title, to show that the plaintiff had not possession of or title to the premises at the time the cause of action accrued, he must object before the justice to the generality of the description of the premises.—Ellice v. Boyer, 8 Wend. 503.

[p] (N. Y. 1850) Where an action has been commenced before a justice of the peace, and discontinued by the interposition of a plea of title, and an action is commenced thereupon in the supreme court, the former suit is ended, and the action in the supreme court is a new action for the same cause, and must be commenced as other actions are, and be governed by the same rules of pleading as other actions in that court.—Jewett v. Jewett, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 409, 6 How. Prac. 185.

[q] (N. Y. 1851) In an action of trespass in a justice's court, defendant pleaded title to the land in question. The action was thereupon discontinued and plaintiff sued on the same cause of action in the supreme court. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appealed to the court of appeals. Code, § 11, denies the court of appeals jurisdiction of an appeal in an action originally commenced in a court of a justice of the peace. Held, that plaintiff's appeal was within the prohibition.—Brown v. Brown, 6 How. Prac. 320.

[r] (N. Y. 1354) It is very much doubted whether, in a cause originating in a justice court, continued by plea of title in the county court, and then transferred to the supreme court, it is the duty of the court, after trial is moved on, to entertain any inquiry into the question of the jurisdiction of the county court over the person of the defendant, provided enough appears to show that such jurisdiction may exist, which may be by the opening statements of counsel, as well as by a copy of the summons and proceedings before the justice. If such facts should be made to appear by the copy pleadings and proceedings before the justice, the court should allow them to be annexed to the pleadings in the county court.—Clyde & R. Plank Road Co. v. Baker, 12 How. Prac. 371.

[rr] (N. Y. 1854) In an action begun before a justice of the peace, and continued by a plea of title in the county court, it is not necessary, to give the county court jurisdiction, that it should appear that defendant was a resident of the county when the action was commenced, since the fact that the justice had acquired jurisdiction of his person, together with the proceedings before him, was sufficient to give the county court jurisdiction.—Clyde & R. Plank Road Co. v. Baker, 12 How. Prac. 371.

[rrr] (N. Y. 1858) Under Code, §§ 55–60, providing that in suits before a justice of the peace, where the title to real property shall be involved, defendant may give an undertaking conditioned that, if plaintiff within a stated time thereafter shall deposit with the justice a complaint and summons in an action in the county court for the same cause of action, the suit in the justice's court shall be discontinued, a suit in the county court, commenced after the discontinuance, pursuant to such provisions, of a suit for the same cause of action in the justice's court, is a suit arising in a justice's court, within Const. art. 6, § 14, providing that the county court shall have jurisdiction of actions arising in a justice's court.—Cook v. Nellis, 18 N. Y. 126.

[s] (N. Y. 1878) A defendant, having availed himself of a decision of a justice of the peace discontinuing an action, is estopped from claiming, in a subsequent action in the supreme court wherein plaintiff recovered less than $50, that the justice had jurisdiction.—Bradner v. Howard, 75 N. Y. 417, affirmed (1878) 14 Hun, 420.

[ss] (N. C. 1889) Under Code, § 838, providing that, when an action before a justice is dismissed on answer and proof that title to land is in question, suit may be brought in the superior court, and defendant shall not be admitted to deny jurisdiction, that court will entertain an action, not within its original jurisdiction, on an allegation that to a suit before a justice defendant objected that title to land was in question, which objection was overruled by the justice, but sustained on appeal to the superior court.—Peck v. Culberson, 104 N. C. 425, 10 S. E. 511.

[t] (Ohio, 1859) Where, in an action of replevin commenced before a justice of the peace, the property was appraised at over $100 and the proceedings were certified to the common pleas, where plaintiff defaulted, and defendant gave evidence on an inquiry of damages, plaintiff may, in answer to the proofs of defendant, give evidence that he is the owner and entitled to the possession of the property; and such evidence will conclude the defendant from a judgment for nominal damages.—Louden v. Clark, 2 Ohio Dec. 161.

[u] (Ohio, 1859) Where, in an action of replevin commenced before a justice of the peace, the property was appraised at over $100, and the proceedings were certified to the common pleas under Justice Code, § 145, the defendant cannot proceed to have his damages assessed on plaintiff's default without first filing a petition.—Louden v. Clark, 2 Ohio Dec. 161.

[v] (Ohio, 1861) Where an attachment suit is commenced before a justice, and there is a return that the defendant has no effects liable to be seized, except land, and the case is certified to the common pleas, there must be filed in that court a petition and affidavit for attachment specifying one of the causes enumerated by Civ. Code, § 191, and summons must issue, and an order of attachment and undertaking must be filed, under Code, § 193, unless defendant is a foreign corporation or a nonresident of the state.—Breckenridge v. Grace, 2 Ohio Dec. 558.

[w] (Wis. 1857) Where an action properly within the jurisdiction of the district court is certified by a justice to the circuit court on the theory that it was without the jurisdiction of the justice, voluntary appearance of both parties does not give jurisdiction to the circuit court.—Verbeck v. Verbeck, 6 Wis. 159.

§ 245. —— Amendments in pleadings and repleading.

[a] (Ala. 1884) Where the original complaint filed in justice court was for forcible entry and detainer, on removal of the cause to the circuit court, a complaint for unlawful detainer may be filed.—Littleton v. Clayton, 77 Ala. 571.

[b] (Ind. 1879) After a suit to obtain possession of lands is certified by a justice to the circuit court, that court is not limited to the jurisdiction of the justice, as in ordinary appeals. It has the case as if it had been originally commenced therein, and it is not necessary that one who has been joined as a defendant in the justice court, and who claims title as against both plaintiff and defendant, should set up his title in his counterclaim any more particularly than would have been necessary to obtain possession of the land under Code, § 595.—Bibbler v. Walker, 69 Ind. 362.

[c] (Me. 1832) Where the title to real estate has been specially pleaded to an action of trespass quare clausum fregit brought before a justice of the peace, and the cause has been brought up from the common pleas by demurrer, it is not the course of this court to permit the defendant to add any other plea which could have been tried by the justice.—Copeland v. Bean, 9 Me. (9 Greenl.) 19.

[d] (Mass. 1811) In trespass quare clausum, commenced before a justice of the peace and carried to the court of common pleas on a plea of title, the plaintiff may amend his declaration by alleging any torts in the same close, or by giving a more accurate description of the close.—Cuminge v. Rawson, 7 Mass. 440.

[e] (Mass.) In trespass quare clausum, removed from before a justice of the peace on a plea of title, the court above has no authority to allow a new assignment.—(1837) Magoun v. Lapham, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 419; (1838) Johnson v. Shed, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 225.

[f] (N. H. 1853) The plaintiff may new assign, as matter of right, in an action of trespass commenced before a justice, and entered at the court of common pleas because of a plea of title to real estate.—Janvrin v. Scammon, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 360.

[g] (N. J. 1810) After plea of title in trespass before a justice, defendant cannot plead the general issue in the supreme court, and give notice of special matter, but must rely on his plea of title.—Westervelt v. Merenus, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 693.

[h] (N. J. 1829) If, on plea of title, an action is carried from a justice of the peace to the supreme court, where the plaintiff in his declaration enlarges his demand beyond what he demanded in the action before the justice, the defendant will not be confined to his plea.—Snedicker v. White, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 87.

[i] (N. J. 1843) If an action of trespass quare clausum is brought in a court for the trial of small causes, the defendant pleads title and gives bond, and an action is thereupon brought in the supreme court, the plaintiff, in his replication to the common bar, may make a new assignment, setting out the locus in quo with greater certainty than was done below, without thereby releasing the defendant from his obligation to plead and rely upon title only; but he cannot enlarge or change his complaint either in his declaration or replication, or assign a close in a different township from that named in the state of demand filed before the justice.—Tindall v. Tindall, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 146.

[ii] (N. J. 1846) Elm. Dig. pp. 282, 283, §§ 33, 34, requiring a justice in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit to dismiss the suit where defendant pleads title, does not preclude defendant, when the action is commenced in the supreme court, from pleading title in a different person than the one alleged to have title in his plea before the justice.—Phillips v. Kent, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 686.

[j] (N. J. 1847) In trespass quare clausum fregit, brought in the supreme court after plea of title before a justice, the defendant cannot plead "not guilty," or "leave and license"; but those pleas will be struck out on motion, and he will be confined to his plea of title.—Campfield v. Johnson, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 83.

[k] (N. J. 1862) Where an action of trespass q. c. f., in which defendant pleaded title and right of way, is dismissed in the justice court, and thereafter an action with the same declaration is commenced in the supreme court, the pleas in the supreme court must be the same as those filed in the justice court, and a plea of not guilty should be struck out as not the same plea. A plea of liberum tenementum is proper.—Brain v. Snyder, 30 N. J. Law (1 Vroom) 56.

[l] (N. J. 1862) In trespass q. c. brought before a justice and removed to the supreme court on plea of title, a plea in the latter court that the locus in quo was a highway, and a plea that it was a by-way, were both struck out as not being pleas of title.—Brain v. Snyder, 30 N. J. Law (1 Vroom) 56.

[m] (N. M. 1892) On removal into the district court of a cause originating before a justice, an amendment in the pleadings intended to secure a trial de novo on the merits under Comp. Laws 1884, § 2443, is permissible, being an amendment in furtherance of justice.—Romero v. Luna, 6 N. M. 440, 30 Pac. 855.

[n] (N. Y. 1827) In trespass quare clausum fregit, brought in the common pleas because the defendant pleaded title in the justice's court, the defendant is confined in the common pleas to his plea of title, which admits the trespass; and, if he pleads the general issue, the court should confine him to his plea of title, and not require the plaintiff to prove the trespass.—Marsh v. Berry, 7 Cow. 344.

[o] (N. Y. 1832) Under Acts 1824, p. 283, if defendant in an action of trespass q. c. f. puts in a plea of title before the justice, plaintiff may new assign, notwithstanding the provision in the act that on the trial in the common pleas he shall declare for the same cause of action.—Ellice v. Boyer, 8 Wend. 503.

[p] (N. Y. 1834) Where the pleadings in an action removed to the common pleas from a justice, because the title to land is in question, vary from what they were before the justice, and the parties have acquiesced in such variance, the cause will be treated as an original suit in the common pleas. The plaintiff may new assign in the justice's court, but he cannot do so in the court above.—Tuthill v. Clark, 11 Wend. 642.

[q] (N. Y. 1838) Where the defendant has pleaded title to a declaration of trespass quare clausum in a justice's court, the plaintiff, if he prosecutes in the common pleas, may there declare, particularly describing the close, though he did not do so in the justice's court.—People v. Albany Common Pleas, 19 Wend. 123.

[r, s] (N. Y. 1847) Where an action commenced before a justice of the peace is removed to the common pleas by reason of a special plea of title interposed by defendant under Rev. St. p. 236, § 59, which is not such as to form an issue between the parties, plaintiff may interpose a demurrer in the common pleas to such plea, tendering an issue of law on the matters contained therein; and such demurrer is not a departure from the pleadings, and a motion to strike it out will be denied.—Dorman v. Lang, 3 How. Prac. 59.

[t] (N. Y. 1848) Though title set up in justice's court by answer ousts the justice's jurisdiction before a reply is put in, the necessity for a reply when a new suit is instituted in the supreme court is not thereby superseded.—Royce v. Brown, 3 How. Prac. 391.

[u] (N. Y. 1849) In a cause commenced in a justice's court, and removed to the common pleas by plea of title to the land, the plaintiff's proof must be confined to his declaration.—Houghtaling v. Houghtaling, 5 Barb. 379.

[v] (N. Y. 1849) Under the Code of 1849, where title is set up in a justice's court by answer, and a new suit is brought in the supreme court for the same cause, to which defendant puts in the same answer as below, no reply should be put in.—McNamara v. Biteley, 4 How. Prac. 44, 2 Code Rep. 42.

[w] (N. Y. 1850) Where, in an action before a justice, a plea of title is interposed, and the case thereupon removed, defendant cannot amend his answer in matters of substance.—Wendell v. Mitchell, 5 How. Prac. 424.

[x] (N. Y. 1851) In actions commenced in the supreme court after a discontinuance in a justice court by reason of the title to land coming in question, where defendant sets up title to land as a defense, the plaintiff may reply to the answer the same as in other suits commenced in the supreme court.—Kiddle v. Degroot, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 202.

[y] (N. Y. 1853) Code 1849, § 60, relating to the removal of causes from the justice's court to the supreme court when title to real property comes in question, providing that the answer of defendant shall be the same which he made before the justice, does not require defendant to use the identical words in his answer in the supreme court that he used in the justice's court, but only the same substantial defense; and he may abandon part of his defense before the justice when he comes to answer in the supreme court, and the defense will be the same within the meaning of the statute.—Wiggins v. Tallmadge, 7 How. Prac. 404.

[z] (N. Y. 1883) Code, § 2957, providing that, where a new action is brought in a court of record after the discontinuance of an action before a justice of the peace because of a plea of title, the complaint must be for the same cause of action only as that relied on before the justice, does not prohibit the plaintiff from making such cause of action perfect by inserting in the complaint new allegations necessary for the purpose, such as an allegation that defendant is a corporation.—Fox v. Erie Preserving Co., 93 N. Y. 54.

[zz] (Va. 1793) If the defendant, after issue joined, remove the suit by habeas corpus into a superior court, the plaintiff may declare anew in the superior court.—Verell v. Coleman, 4 Call, 230.

PARTIES, § 247.
—— NEW PARTIES AND CHANGE OF PARTIES, § 248.
—— DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS, AMENDMENT, WAIVER, AND CURE, § 249.

§ 246. Limitation of actions.

To revive judgments, see post, § 416.

[a] (Ill. 1870) The bar of limitations may intervene between the time of issuing an unserved summons by a justice and the issuance and service of an alias summons.—Bell v. Dart, 54 Ill. 526.

[b] (Ind. 1834) The statute of limitations may be pleaded in a suit before a justice of the peace.—Hoyt v. Reed, 3 Blackf. 368.

[c] (Kan. 1875) It is not necessary in a justice's court that the statute of limitations should be specially pleaded, or that the question should be raised by demurrer. It may be raised by objecting to evidence introduced on the trial for the purpose of proving a claim barred by the statute.—Sanford v. Shepard, 14 Kan. 228.

[d] (Mass. 1817) Under St. 1783, c. 42, a defendant may avail himself before a justice of the peace of the statute of limitations under the general issue.—Williams v. Root, 14 Mass. 273.

[e] (Mich. 1880) To an action on a promissory note brought in justice court, defendant pleaded orally: "Defendant pleads limitation of statute; that the cause of action did not accrue within six years preceding commencement of suit." Held sufficient, though the statute requires the general issue to be pleaded in all cases in a justice court, with a notice of any special defense, as the objection was only to the form of the plea, which the justice should have corrected when entering it in his docket in due form. His failure will not deprive defendant of his defense. If imperfect, he should be allowed to amend.—Eddy v. Manshaun, 42 Mich. 532, 4 N. W. 286.

[f] (Mich. 1880) In an action in a justice's court on a note given eight years before, payable one day after date, where defendant has pleaded that he did not "undertake and promise" within six years, he should be allowed the defense of the statute of limitations, the plea fairly apprising plaintiff of that defense.—Snyder v. Winsor, 44 Mich. 140, 6 N. W. 197.

[g] (Mich. 1882) A suit is not begun for the purposes of the statute of limitations by merely filling out a summons, and leaving it in the justice's office until the return day, or by retaining it in the plaintiff's custody. It must be issued with the intent that, if practicable, it shall be served.—Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472, 12 N. W. 661.

[h] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6136, providing that a suit instituted by process shall be deemed to have been commenced "upon delivery of the writ to the constable to be served, and he shall note thereon the time of receiving the same," a suit on a special tax bill is barred where the tax bill was deposited with the justice before the expiration of the five years, but the process was not delivered to the constable until after it had expired.—Turner v. Burns, 42 Mo. App. 94.

[i] (Mo. 1896) The last clause of Rev. St. 1889, § 2013, providing that "the filing of a petition in a court of record, or a statement or account before a court not of record, and suing out of process therein, shall be taken and deemed the commencement of a suit," does not conflict with section 6136, as to justices of the peace, and an action is commenced before a justice, so as to stop the running of limitations, when process is delivered to a constable to be served.—Hornsby v. Stevens, 65 Mo. App. 185, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1218.

[j] (Mo. 1896) Limitations need not be pleaded before a justice of the peace, where no formal pleadings are required.—Hornsby v. Stevens, 65 Mo. App. 185, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1218.

[k] (N. J.) A justice cannot overrule a plea of the statute.—(1806) Sayres v. Scudder, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 53; (1809) Neafie v. Ackerman, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 562.

[l] (N. Y. 1859) In the absence of proof showing when summons in a justice's court was issued, the day of its service will be taken as the beginning of the action, for the purpose of the statute of limitations.—McGraw v. Walker, 2 Hilt. 404.

[m] (Tenn. 1839) The statute of limitations of three years is not a bar to an action before a justice of the peace founded on a simple contract, on which an action of debt might be maintained if of sufficient amount to force the parties into a court of record.—Phipps v. Richmond, 20 Tenn. (1 Humph.) 21.

[n] (Wis. 1871) On the first day to which a cause in justice's court was adjourned after issue joined, an amendment to the answer was allowed, and, after a second adjournment for trial, a further amendment, setting up the statute of limitations, was refused. Held no abuse of discretion. On such an application, the court may properly consider the character of the defense proposed to be set up; and a defense founded on the statute of limitations is not favored.—Fogarty v. Horrigan, 28 Wis. 142.

§ 247. Parties.

In action on justice's judgment, see post, § 418 [r].

To judgment, see post, § 394.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Though the amount in controversy is less than $50, and the suit was commenced before a justice of the peace, yet the plaintiff, who sues for the use of another, cannot recover for work and labor done for the beneficial plaintiff, unless he stood in such a relation that the right to compensation inured to him.—Mooney v. Ivey, 8 Ala. 810.

[b] (Conn. 1868) G. was summoned to appear before a justice of the peace and "answer unto Ward Wheeler, as committee of school district No. 10, of the town of R., in a plea that to the said school district the defendant render the sum of ten dollars which he justly owes for the tuition of his children, as by the rate bills and books of the plaintiff, ready in court to be produced, fully appears." Held, that school district No. 10, and not Ward Wheeler, was the plaintiff in the writ.—Goodsell v. Wheeler, 34 Conn. 485.

[c] (Ill. 1898) Parties cannot be sued jointly before a justice of the peace who cannot be so sued in a court of record.—Columbian Hard Wood Lumber Co. v. Langley, 51 Ill. App. 100.

[d] (Mo. 1887) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 2905, providing that a party in a justice's court may appear and conduct his suit by an agent, the suit cannot be maintained in the agent's name.—Crescent Furniture & Lumber Co. v. Raddatz, 28 Mo. App. 210.

[e] (Mo. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 2852, concerning statements to be filed before justices of the peace, a note does not constitute a sufficient statement in a suit on it unless it discloses a demand in favor of plaintiff; and an administrator, suing on a note, must allege that he sues as administrator.—Smith v. Zimmerman, 29 Mo. App. 249.

[f] (N. Y. 1844) The summons and declaration in a justice's court must agree in respect to the names and number of the defendants.—Leggett v. Raymond, 6 Hill, 639.

[g] (N. Y. 1888) A summons in a justice's court described defendant as "commissioner of highways in the town of W." In the title of the written complaint he was described in the same manner, but in the body he was called "defendant," not mentioning name or title. There was also a special allegation that "the board directed that money should be raised to pay plaintiff, and that the same was paid defendant to pay plaintiff." Held, that the action was brought against defendant in his official capacity.—Buyce v. Buyce, 48 Hun, 433, 1 N. Y. Supp. 642.

[h] (Pa. 1892) Proceedings on an attachment under Act 1842, before a justice of the peace, will be reversed on a certiorari where the action is brought in the name of an agent, and not his principal, and the bond is similarly executed.—Powell v. Roderick (Com. Pl.) 6 Kulp, 400, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 191, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 120.

§ 248. —— New parties and change of parties.

Death of party and substitution of personal representative, see "Abatement and Revival," vol. 1, c. 224, § 298 [e].

[a] A justice of the peace cannot permit an amendment which changes the parties.
—(Ala. 1876) Davis Ave. R. Co. v. Mallon, 57 Ala. 168; (Vt. 1839) Emerson v. Wilson, 11 Vt. 357, 34 Am. Dec. 695.

[b] (Ala. 1830) Laws 1812, p. 70, § 4, providing that, where suit is brought by one for the use of another, the death of the nominal plaintiff shall not abate the suit, has no application to a case where the nominal plaintiff was deceased before suit was brought. In such case an amendment cannot be allowed by the justice to change the name of the party plaintiff.—Frierson v. Blakesley, 3 Stew. 267.

[c] (Kan. 1878) A justice of the peace may properly amend a bill of particulars by substituting the name of another party as plaintiff.—Haulin v. Baxter, 20 Kan. 134.

[d] (Mo. 1887) A suit brought in an agent's name cannot be amended by substituting the principal's name.—Crescent Furniture & Lumber Co. v. Raddaty, 28 Mo. App. 210.

[e] (N. Y. 1837) It is no cause of reversal of a justice's judgment that on the trial of the cause the justice himself discharged one of several defendants in an action of trespass, against whom no evidence had been given, and permitted him to be examined as a witness, instead of directing the jury to find him not guilty.—Noyes v. Hewitt, 18 Wend. 141.

[f] (N. Y. 1846) A justice of the peace has no power to compel the substitution of new parties in a suit before him; the provision in 2 Rev. St. p. 474, § 100, not being applicable to justices' courts.—Colegrove v. Breed, 2 Denio, 125.

[g] (N. Y. 1854) Whether a justice of the peace has power to grant an amendment by striking out the name of one of the coplaintiffs, quære.—Gates v. Ward, 17 Barb. 424.

[h] (N. Y. 1854) Where a justice's court, on motion of both of two plaintiffs, in an action of tort, has allowed an amendment to be made by striking out the name of one of them, it has no power to restore the party whose name was stricken out as a coplaintiff, if objection be made.—Gates v. Ward, 17 Barb. 424.

[i] (N. Y. 1855) The provisions of Code, tit. 6, respecting amendments by adding or striking out the names of parties, refer to the pleadings in civil actions, and are necessarily confined to courts of record, which are clothed with discretion in reference to the terms on which amendments shall be allowed, and possess the appropriate machinery by which their orders may be enforced. Those provisions are not applicable to justices' courts.—Webster v. Hopkins, 11 How. Prac. 140.

[j] (N. Y. 1867) A justice of the peace has no power to strike out of a summons, after it has been served, the name of one defendant, and proceed to trial and judgment against the other.—Gilmore v. Jacobs, 48 Barb. 336.

[k] (N. Y. 1874) A justice's court has power, in an action brought jointly by two plaintiffs, to amend by striking out the name of one.—Lapham v. Rice, 55 N. Y. 472.

[l] (Ohio, 1885) A party sued before a justice of the peace may interplead adverse claimants.—Geller v. Puchta, 1 O. C. D. 18.

[m] (Pa. 1846) A justice of the peace before whom the suit is brought against one in his private and individual capacity, may, before hearing, so amend as to show the action to be against the defendant as executor, especially after notice to the defendant that such was the fact.—Wilson v. Wilson, 3 Clark, 419, 5 Pa. Law J. 461.

[n] (Tex. 1886) It is not error, after a plea in abatement for nonjoinder, in an action for rent, brought in the name of one joint tenant of premises leased in the name of both, for a justice's court to make the other joint tenant a party to the suit, and permit the case to proceed to judgment on its merits.—Weinsteine v. Harrison, 66 Tex. 546, 1 S. W. 626.

§ 249. —— Defects and objections, amendment, waiver, and cure.

Misnomer in judgment as affecting execution see post, § 426 [g].

—— in process as affecting validity of default judgment, see post, § 383 [o].

New parties and change of parties, see ante, § 248.

[a] (U. S. 1836) Proceedings before a justice of the peace need not be formal, and, where the pleadings offered will enable the magistrate to decide the case according to the right of the matter, he may reject a plea of misnomer in abatement.—Hall v. Washington, Fed. Cas. No. 5,953 [4 Cranch, C. C. 722].

[b] (Ala. 1876) Where a summons from a justice of the peace was against "M., president Davis Avenue Railroad Company," a complaint against "Davis Avenue Railroad Company" should have been stricken from the file on motion.—Davis Ave. R. Co. v. Mallon, 57 Ala. 168.

[c] (Ark. 1875) Where an account in proper form is filed before a justice of the peace as the foundation of an action, and is lost, and a substituted account is filed in which the name of the creditor is omitted, he should be permitted to amend at any time.—Martin v. McClellan, 30 Ark. 405.

[d] (Cal. 1887) The designation in an action in a justice's court of the defendant, "John C. McDonald," as "John McDonald," does not affect the validity of the proceedings.—Allison v. Thomas, 72 Cal. 562, 14 Pac. 309.

[e] (Ga. 1875) The omission of the word "as" before "executor" in a suit before a justice of the peace will not vitiate the proceeding.—Dorsey v. Black, 55 Ga. 315.

[f] (Ill. 1874) As no written pleadings are required before a justice of the peace, the fact that the information or complaint in an action before a justice to recover a fine imposed on school officers by School Law 1872, § 76, and the affidavit on which the justice issued the summons, did not run in the name of the people of the state, was immaterial. It is sufficient if the process by which the defendants are brought into court runs in the name of the people.—Newton v. People, 72 Ill. 507.

[g] (Ind. 1877) Where a complaint in a justice's court set out only the initials of the plaintiff's Christian name, the defect was cured by a written answer, filed by the defendant, setting out the full names of all the parties.—Sherrod v. Shirley, 57 Ind. 13.

[h] (Iowa, 1844) Where no objection is made at the time to a change in the name of the plaintiff in a suit before a justice of the peace, it is a waiver of the irregularity, and the defendant will not, after judgment, be permitted to take advantage of it.—Cornelius v. McIlvaine, 1 Morris, 318.

[i] (Iowa, 1850) In an action commenced before a justice of the peace a misnomer may be taken advantage of by motion, as well as by plea.—Hall v. Bennett, 2 G. Greene, 466.

[j] (Mich. 1882) A complaint filed with a justice in a proceeding to recover possession of premises is not jurisdictionally defective in omitting the name of defendant from the body of the instrument if there is enough in it to supply the name.—Olson v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 85, 13 N. W. 369.

[k] (Mich. 1889) In an action before a justice of the peace against a corporation, summons was duly issued and served, and on trial plaintiff made oral declaration "against the defendant," giving the wrong corporate name, and, on default, judgment was duly rendered and entered against defendant, as described in the summons. Held, that the judgment was valid, as How. Ann. St. §§ 7633, 7635, provide that after judgment any variation in the record from any process, pleading, or proceeding had in such cause shall be amended accordingly, and that no judgment on default shall be reversed, impaired, or affected by mistake in the name of a party where the name has once been correctly alleged in the pleadings or proceedings.—Bole v. Sands & Maxwell Lumber Co., 77 Mich. 289, 43 N. W. 873.

[l] (Mich. 1890) In a justice's court, a motion by defendant to dismiss, because plaintiff's full Christian name does not appear in affidavit, writ, or declaration, is equivalent to a plea in abatement.—Fisher v. Northrup, 79 Mich. 287, 44 N. W. 610, 7 L. R. A. 629.

[m] (Mo. 1874) The fact that a suit between two firms before a justice of the peace is entitled of their firm names only is not such an error as to work a dismissal; a correction under the statute being practicable.—Rohrbough v. Reed, 57 Mo. 292.

[n] (Neb. 1881) A bill of particulars described plaintiffs by their individual names, doing business as "The Citizens' Bank." The summons omitted the names, and described them simply as "The Citizens' Bank." Held, that the justice might allow the bill of particulars to be amended so as to conform to the summons.—Haskins v. Citizens' Bank, 12 Neb. 39, 10 N. W. 466.

[o] (Neb. 1884) The proper method of raising the objection in a justice's court that plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue in the name in which the suit is brought is by plea in abatement, and it cannot be raised by objection to the jurisdiction of the court.—Smelt v. Knapp, 16 Neb. 53, 20 N. W. 20.

[p] (Neb. 1884) An objection that plaintiff has "no legal capacity to sue in the name or initial letters of the name W. S. Knapp," in which the action was brought, cannot be made on special appearance for that purpose, but, if at all, by plea in abatement.—Smelt v. Knapp, 16 Neb. 53, 20 N. W. 20.

[q] (N. J. 1817) If there be two administrators, and one only be sued before a justice, it need not be pleaded in abatement; but the defendant may have nonsuit on motion.—Ryerson v. Ryerson, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 363.

[r] (N. J. 1828) In courts for the trial of small causes, the infancy of plaintiff may be taken advantage of by motion to dismiss.—Smith v. Van Houten, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 881.

[s] (N. Y. 1833) Where, in a bill of particulars presented in a justice's court as part of plaintiff's declaration, defendants, sued as partners, are described as belonging to a particular association, plaintiff is not precluded from proving his account against defendants as belonging to an association with a name different from that in the bill of particulars, notwithstanding the misdescription of the name or style of the association in the bill of particulars.—Benson v. Brown, 10 Wend. 258.

[t] (N. Y. 1854) Defendant, by consenting to a subsequent motion to amend a complaint, or by going to trial, does not waive an objection to the justice, who allowed an amendment by striking out the name of two plaintiffs in an action for tort, restoring him again as coplaintiff.—Gates v. Ward, 17 Barb. 424.

[u] (N. Y. 1855) Where a plaintiff is tenant in common with another, the defendant, under the Code of Procedure, may raise the objection in a justice's court on a motion for a nonsuit on the trial, where the defect of the parties appears on the face of the complaint.—Rice v. Hollenbeck, 19 Barb. 664.

[v] (N. Y. 1878) The requirement of Code, §§ 147, 148, that a defendant not objecting by answer to a defect of parties that does not appear in the complaint waives the same, is a provision "respecting parties," which, by section 64, subd. 15, is made applicable to justices' courts.—Frazier v. Gibson, 15 Hun, 37.

[w] (N. Y. 1891) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2939, a complaint in a justice court is not demurrable on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff.—Lord v. Lord, 58 Hun, 601, 11 N. Y. Supp. 389.

Appearance as waiving process, see post, § 272.

[a] (Ga. 1851) The jurisdiction given to the justice's court is to hear and determine suits by summons or warrant; and a copy of the process is to be served by the constable personally on the defendant or left at his usual and notorious place of abode.—Fitzgerald v. Adams, 9 Ga. 471.

[b] (Ga. 1883) A summons to the defendant is indispensable to give a justice jurisdiction.—Jeffers v. Ware, 72 Ga. 135.

[c] (Ga. 1893) When a case in a justice's court is suspended to give opportunity to settle it, and a settlement is attempted, but fails, both parties knowing of the failure, neither is entitled to notice when the case afterwards comes up for trial.—Bostain v. Morris, 93 Ga. 224, 18 S. E. 649.

[d] (Ill. 1840) A justice of the peace can render judgment against a defendant only where process is personally served on him, or he appears in person before the justice and waives it.—Evans v. Pierce, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 468.

[e] (Mass. 1832) Error lies to reverse a judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered on a writ which had not been served on the defendant.—Arnold v. Tourtellot, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 172.

[f] (Mich. 1861) A justice was a few minutes late at the hour set for the hearing of an adjourned case, and, being employed on a coroner's inquest, defendant left the office at the end of the hour. Held that, if defendant was ignorant of the cause of the justice's absence, he should have been notified of his return, and shown to have received the notice before further proceedings.—Stadler v. Moors, 9 Mich. 264.

[g] (Mich. 1875) Comp. Laws, § 5264, authorizing the issuance of a short summons when the plaintiff is a nonresident, is permissive only.—Moore v. Vrooman, 32 Mich. 526.

[h] (Mich. 1880) Where, in a suit before a justice of the peace there is no proper service of summons, or appearance by defendant, the court acquires no jurisdiction, though defendant has actual notice of the pendency of such proceedings.—Vleit v. Westenhaver, 42 Mich. 593, 4 N. W. 448.

[i] (Miss. 1888) Plaintiff filed with a justice of the peace three claims against defendant railroad for damages for injuries to his stock on three different occasions. The justice docketed three actions, but issued only one writ. Defendant appeared to one action only, and moved to consolidate all the actions, which was denied, and after trial judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Defendant refused to appear to the other actions, and judgment was rendered against it by default. Held that, if there were three actions, no jurisdiction was obtained over defendant, except in the first one.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McCollister, 66 Miss. 106, 5 South. 695.

[j] (N. J. 1835) A justice cannot adjourn a cause on an adjourned day, in the absence of the defendant and without his consent, and then hear the cause in his absence and without notice.—Brannin v. Voorhees, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 590.

[k] (N. Y. 1843) Prior to Acts 1840, p. 125, one residing out of the state could not be sued in a justice's court by a short summons.—Dowd v. Stall, 5 Hill, 186.

[l] (N. Y. 1845) Since the passage of the act exempting nonresidents of the state from arrest for debt (St. 1840, p. 120, § 1), a short summons or attachment is the proper process against such nonresidents, when sued before a justice of the peace; and any other process would be void.—Thompson v. Sayre, 1 Denio, 175.

[m] (N. Y. 1846) Joint debtors may be sued in a justice's court by "long summons," though one of them be a nonresident of the county.—Burghart v. Rice, 2 Denio, 95.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) A defendant resident in New York City and a nonresident may be sued together by long summons.—Murphy v. Mooney, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 288.

[o] (N. Y. 1850) A summons is the ordinary process of the justice's court, and issues on the mere suggestion of the plaintiff.—Barnes v. Harris, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 374.

[p] (N. Y. 1850) A person having no legal residence anywhere may be sued by long summons. That process is appropriate unless the defendant is a nonresident of the county.—Barnes v. Harris, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 374.

[q] (N. Y. 1855) A justice has no jurisdiction to issue a short summons in an action to recover back fees illegally charged in a bill of costs collected of the plaintiff by an attorney.—Waters v. Whittemore, 22 Barb. 593.

[r] (N. Y. 1855) Nor can such short summons, in any case, go against a defendant who is a nonresident of the county, except when the plaintiff's demand arises on contract, express or implied.—Waters v. Whittemore, 22 Barb. 593.

[s] (N. Y. 1871) A short summons can only be issued against defendants who come within that class of persons who, by the nonimprisonment act of 1831, now adopted as a part of the provisions in relation to justices' courts (3 Rev. St. [5th Ed.] p. 462, §§ 212–215), cannot be proceeded against by long summons or warrant.—Rue v. Perry, 41 How. Prac. 385.

[t] (Pa. 1876) Where a judgment has been obtained before a justice of the peace without summons served, the court of common pleas will order the judgment and execution set aside.—Huddy v. Putt, 13 Phila. 550.

[u] (Pa. 1885) A summons against "Martha Male" will not give the justice jurisdiction to render judgment for want of appearance against "Margaret Meyl," who was served, unless the amendment of the record is accompanied with an alias summons or a rule to show cause why the amendment should not be made.—Meyl v. Wiedeman, 3 C. P. Rep. 96.

[v] (Pa. 1885) Where an alderman, while defendant is under arrest, changes the form of the action against him from criminal to civil, without having issued a summons or given defendant further notice, the proceedings will be reversed on certiorari.—Commonwealth v. Blessington, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 153.

[w] (Pa. 1886) Under Act July 12, 1842, an action before a justice of the peace against a nonresident debtor may be begun either by a short or long summons.—Beninghouse v. Felt, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 496.

[x] (Pa. 1888) Where a continuance is granted without day in a justice court, defendant is entitled to notice of the day of the hearing in sufficient time in advance thereof to enable him to prepare his defense.—Hunt v. Laufer, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 337.

[y] (W. Va. 1895) In order that jurisdiction be conferred on a justice the summons must be issued and served.—Colborn v. Booth, 41 W. Va. 289, 23 S. E. 556.

§ 251. Issuance.

Territorial limits within which justice may issue process, see ante, § 147.

[a] (Del. 1858) It is error for a justice of the peace to issue a summons returnable forthwith on the representation of the plaintiff that he believed he would lose the benefit of the process by delay, without his oath or affirmation thereto, or without the justice's being otherwise satisfied of its truth.—Bishop v. Carpenter, 1 Houst. 526.

[b] (Ill. 1873) A justice of the peace having jurisdiction throughout his county may issue any writ where he has jurisdiction, wherever he may be in the county, so that he make it returnable to his office, which must be in his township.—Durfee v. Grinnell, 69 Ill. 371.

[c] (N. Y. 1842) A short summons in favor of a nonresident of the county may be issued by any justice of the county, though he and the defendant do not reside in the same or adjoining towns.—Onderdonk v. Ranlett, 3 Hill, 323.

[d] (N. Y. 1850) The authority of a justice of the peace to issue a long summons on the request of the plaintiff is as ample as to issue a warrant or attachment on a special application and proof required by law.—Barnes v. Harris, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 374.

[e] (N. Y. 1852) A justice cannot proceed by a short summons against a defendant as a nonresident, without proof of such nonresidence to give him jurisdiction.—Sperry v. Major, 1 E. D. Smith, 361.

[f] (N. Y. 1871) A short summons, being an extraordinary process, can only issue on proper preliminary proof.—Rue v. Perry, 41 How. Prac. 385.

[g] (N. Y. 1871) It must be made to appear by affidavit to the justice that defendant comes within the class of persons who by the nonimprisonment act of 1831 cannot be proceeded against by long summons or warrant before a short summons should issue.—Rue v. Perry, 41 How. Prac. 385.

[h] (N. Y. 1875) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to issue a short summons, under the nonimprisonment act of 1831 (4 Edm. St. at Large, p. 472), without the affidavit required by section 19, art. 2, tit. 4, c. 2, pt. 3, Rev. St. The affidavit should state that the defendant is a nonresident, that the cause of action arose on contract, and facts showing that the defendant cannot be arrested under the provisions of the nonimprisonment act. It need not state that the plaintiff is a resident. If he is a resident, the justice has jurisdiction to issue the summons without taking security, even though the fact has not been proved before he issues the summons. It is sufficient for the plaintiff to state in his affidavit that the cause of action arose on contract, express or implied, and he need not go into the particulars of his demand.—Wende v. Bradley, 5 Hun, 513.

[i] (N. Y. 1875) Where a short summons was issued by a justice of the peace on an affidavit by plaintiff that he had, as he believed, a good cause of action arising on contract against the defendant, "upon which, according to the provisions of section 31 of the act to abolish imprisonment for debt and to punish fraudulent debtors, no warrant" could issue, held, that the affidavit was sufficient and the summons properly issued.—Clark v. Wellington, 5 Hun, 638.

[j] (Ohio, 1859) Under Swan's St. p. 528, § 54, a bill of particulars must be filed by plaintiff in a justice court before the summons can issue.—McCarty v. Blake, 2 Ohio Dec. 155.

[k] (S. C. 1888) Under Code, § 88, subd. 16, providing that, in actions where more than $25 is demanded, the complaint shall be served 20 days before trial, but, if plaintiff has reason to fear that he will lose his debt by such delay, the justice, if satisfied that there is good reason, may make the process returnable in such time as justice may require, such good reason is shown by affidavit that defendant had removed property covered by plaintiff's lien from the county, and had openly avowed that he would never pay the bond sued on.—Cavender v. Ward, 28 S. C. 470, 6 S. E. 302.

Deputations to serve process, see post, § 259.

Misnomer in justice's summons as affecting validity of default judgment, see post, § 383 [o].

Stamp taxes on justice's process, see "Internal Revenue," vol. 29, cc. 333–335, § 42.

[a] (Ark. 1881) A justice's summons must, under the act of 1873, be directed to a constable.—McCabe v. Payne, 37 Ark. 450.

[b] (Cal. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. c. 5, art. 1, tit. 1, pt. 1, § 91, providing that process shall be issued by the justices' clerk "upon the order of the presiding justice," the summons need not state that it was so issued, and, if such recital be made, a mistake therein as to the name of the presiding justice will not affect the jurisdiction of the court.—Helms v. Dunne, 107 Cal. 117, 40 Pac. 100.

[c] (Ga. 1856) Process sued out of an inferior court, bearing teste in the name of but one of the justices, is legal and sufficient.—Brown v. Roberts, 19 Ga. 424.

[d] (Ill. 1850) The statute requiring the justice to indorse the amount of the plaintiff's demand on the back of the summons is directory, and, when he has omitted to do so altogether, it ought not to operate to defeat the action, especially when the objection was first taken in the circuit court.—Eaton v. Graham, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 619.

[e, f] (Ind.) The provision of the statute requiring the justice to direct process to a special constable by name is imperative, and not directory.—(1864) Benninghoof v. Finney, 22 Ind. 101; (1872) Schaw v. Dietrichs, Wilson, 153.

[g] (Iowa, 1849) The amount of the plaintiff's claim need not be mentioned in the body of a summons from a justice of the peace; but the amount claimed, including interest and costs, should be indorsed thereon.—Hedinger v. Silsbee, 2 G. Greene, 363.

[h] (Iowa, 1866) In the notice of an action on a note in a justice's court, the plaintiffs described themselves as heirs of the payee. Held, that this statement in the notice might be regarded as mere descriptio personæ, or might be rejected as immaterial.—King v. Gottschalk, 21 Iowa, 512.

[i] (Mich. 1893) How. Ann. St. § 6829, does not require a short summons in justice's court to show on its face why a long summons was not used.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13, 56 N. W. 1042.

[j] (Mo. 1825) The summons of a justice's writ must run in the name of the state.—Charless v. Marney, 1 Mo. 537.

[k] (N. J. 1888) The fact that the summons issued by a justice was indorsed on the back as "in the court for the trial of small causes," such indorsement being no part of the summons, is not ground for an objection that jurisdiction was taken in that court, instead of the justice's court.—O'Hagan v. Crossman, 50 N. J. Law (21 Vroom) 516, 14 Atl. 752.

[l] (N. Y. 1822) If a justice of the peace delivers to a party a summons signed by him in blank, to be filled up with the names of the parties, etc., in his presence and under his control, it is not a violation of the fourth section of the act of April 7, 1820; aliter, if the party receiving a blank summons fills it up out of the presence of the justice, though before it is delivered to a constable to be served.—People v. Smith, 20 Johns. 63.

[m] (N. Y. 1855) The indorsement on a summons issued by a justice of the peace, "issued according to the proceedings of title nine, chapter twentieth, part first, of the Revised Statutes," was a substantial compliance with the statute, which has "provisions" instead of "proceedings."—Andrews v. Harrington, 19 Barb. 343.

[n] (N. Y. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 3135, provides that a mandate issued by a justice of the peace must be signed by him, and must be entirely filled up at the time when it is delivered to the officer to be executed, so as to have no blank, either in the date thereof or otherwise; and that a mandate delivered to an officer contrary to this section is void. Held, that the justice acquires no jurisdiction where a summons is issued, signed in blank, to plaintiff's attorneys, who afterwards inserted the names of the parties and the date, and gave it to the officer to be served.—Hannaman v. Muckle (Co. Ct.) 15 N. Y. Supp. 961, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 296.

[o] (N. C. 1888) Under Code, § 832, providing that summons issued by justices of the peace shall contain the amount of the sum demanded by plaintiff, a summons to answer a complaint for the detention of a mule, without specifying its value, is insufficient.—Leathers v. Morris, 101 N. C. 184, 7 S. E. 783.

[p] (Pa. 1821) All civil process of a justice must be directed to a constable for service.—Clark v. Worley, 7 Serg. & R. 352.

[q] (S. D. 1891) Where a summons in justice's court fully sets out facts constituting a cause of action in tort, a complaint stating the same facts will not be set aside because the summons notifies the defendant that, if he fails to answer, judgment will be taken for the amount specified in the summons, instead of notifying him that the plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded.—Berry v. Bingaman, 1 S. D. 525, 47 N. W. 825.

[r] (Tenn. 1874) A justice's warrant, summoning a defendant to appear and answer, is not invalidated by the use of the abbreviation "Tenn." for "Tennessee."—Elliott v. Jordan, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 376.

[s] (Tex. 1894) Under Rev. St. art. 1570, providing that a citation shall contain "the names of all the parties to the suit," the omission of the name of one of the defendants from a citation before a justice court leaves the justice without jurisdiction.—Hunt v. Achison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 460.

[t] (Utah, 1877) Where an officer brings a suit in his official character, the summons must affirmatively disclose the official capacity in which he claims to act; otherwise, it should be quashed on motion, even in an action before a justice of the peace.—Hamilton v. Spiers, 2 Utah, 225.

[u] (Vt. 1844) Where the magistrate who signed the original writ, in an action of debt to recover a penalty given by the statute to a town, indorsed upon the writ and signed the following minute: "I hereby certify that this writ was exhibited to me and filed in my office, this 9th day of June, A. D. 1842,"—it was held that it was not a compliance with the statute (Rev. St. p. 304, § 9), and the action was, upon motion made at the first appearance in the case, dismissed.—Montpelier v. Andrews, 16 Vt. 604.

[v] (Vt. 1847) A justice's writ filled up by the constable, is void, though done at the request of the attorney for the plaintiff and under his supervision.—Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198.

[w] (Vt. 1847) Under Rev. St. c. 11, § 26, providing that no sheriff or deputy sheriff shall be allowed to make any writ, declaration, plea, etc., except in his own case, and declaring all such acts to be void, a writ filled up by a constable is void; the term "sheriff," as used in that section, being a generic term, including all officers whose duties are of a like nature.—Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198.

[x] (Wis. 1852) Justices of the peace must strictly follow the form of any writ when the same is prescribed by statute.—Streeter v. Frank, 4 Chand. 93, 3 Pin. 386.

§ 253. —— Statement as to nature, form, and cause of action.

[a] (U. S. 1832) Where the summons of an Arkansas justice of the peace describes the cause of action as a "note of hand," a "bond" or "writing obligatory" cannot be received in evidence; for it is variant from the summons.—Madding v. Peyton, Fed. Cas. No. 8,933a [Hemp. 192].

[b, c] (U. S. 1837) The plaintiff cannot, in an action before a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, recover on a cause of action different from that stated in the warrant.—Foy v. Talburt, Fed. Cas. No. 5,020 [5 Cranch, C. C. 124].

[d] (Ala. 1880) In a summary proceeding against a constable and his sureties, instituted before a justice, for failure to levy an attachment (Code, §§ 3663, 3671), the notice must briefly describe the process, stating when and by whom issued, the names of the parties, and when received by the constable, and must aver that he failed to execute it, whereby plaintiff lost his debt; but it is not necessary to file a written motion in the justice's court.—Abrams v. Johnson, 65 Ala. 465.

[e] (Ark. 1838) In an action before a justice of the peace, the cause of action must be stated in the summons with sufficient certainty to apprise the defendant of the legal character of the action.—Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 108.

[f] (Ark. 1838) It is not necessary to state the kind of action in the summons, and, if stated, it is merely surplusage.—Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 108.

[g] (Ga. 1878) A summons commencing a suit for debt in a justice's court need not set forth the cause of action; that not being required by Code, § 4139.—Davis v. Wilson, 61 Ga. 388.

[h] (Iowa, 1855) In an action before a justice of the peace by the indorsee against the indorser of a promissory note, the notice is only required to state the cause of action in general terms, sufficient to apprise defendant of the nature of the claim.—Hall v. Monahan, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 554.

[i] (Iowa, 1864) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover for damages in the purchase of oxen, evidence of a warranty of the oxen is admissible, though the notice only states that the cause of action is $40 damages in the sale of oxen.—Dilley v. Nusum, 17 Iowa, 288.

[j] (Iowa, 1878) In an action before a justice of the peace, a notice that the plaintiff claimed of the defendant "on a promissory note," though the latter was merely guarantor of the note, is "sufficient to apprise the defendant of the nature of the claim against him," as required by Code 1873, § 3518.—Francis v. Bentley, 50 Iowa, 59.

[k] (Mo. 1882) A statement, in a summons issued by a justice of the peace, of the nature of the suit and the sum demanded, was not required until Rev. St. 1879, § 2858.—Anthony v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 76 Mo. 18.

[l] (Mo. 1886) Under Rev. St. § 2858, providing that a summons issued by a justice of the peace shall state the nature of the suit, and the sum demanded, a summons which merely states that the plaintiff demands a certain sum, but fails to state the nature of the suit,—e. g., on a note, or an account, or for trespass upon person or property,—is defective.—Hill v. St. Louis Ore & Steel Co., 90 Mo. 103, 2 S. W. 289.

[m] (Mo. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 2858, defining process in the justice court, and providing that it shall state the nature of the suit and the sum demanded, a summons issued by a justice which describes the nature of the action as "for $250 damages, as per statement filed," is sufficient.—Damhorst v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 32 Mo. App. 350.

[n] (N. J. 1856) The design of section 13 of the act constituting courts for the trial of small causes is that the real debt claimed shall be inserted in the process, and a variance will be fatal.—Coyle v. Coyle, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 132.

[o] (N. Y. 1849) The summons from a justice court, which does not state on its face the alleged cause of action, is a nullity.—Ellis v. Merit, 2 Code Rep. 68.

[p] (N. Y. 1850) In justice court, the summons must state the nature of the cause of action, or a judgment taken in defendant's absence will be set aside.—Cooper v. Chamberlain, 2 Code Rep. 142.

[q] (N. Y. 1850) Service and return of summons containing no statement of the cause of action gives a justice no jurisdiction.—Hogan v. Baker, 2 E. D. Smith, 22.

[r] (N. Y. 1851) The summons from a justice's court need not state the plea.—Smith v. Joyce, 12 Barb. 21.

[s] (N. Y. 1852) An omission in the summons issued by a justice of the peace to state the plea in which the defendant is to answer the plaintiff, or the nature of the claim alleged by the plaintiff, is no cause for reversing a judgment rendered by the justice.—Cornell v. Bennett, 11 Barb. 657.

[t] (N. Y. 1852) The particular plea need not be stated in a summons from a justice. It is enough to state that it required the plaintiff to answer "in a civil action for damage and false representations in the sale of a horse."—Delancy v. Nagle, 16 Barb. 96.

[u] (N. Y. 1854) A summons issued from a justice's court, requiring "the defendant to answer the complaint of the plaintiff for personal services," sufficiently states the cause of action.—Bissell v. Dean, 3 E. D. Smith, 172.

[v] (N. C. 1882) To give a justice jurisdiction of civil actions under Const. art. 4, § 27, the summons, as a substitute for a complaint in such case, must show upon its face that the cause of action is within his cognizance.—Allen v. Jackson, 86 N. C. 321.

[w] (Tenn. 1835) Under Act 1777, c. 23, imposing a penalty on millers for taking unlawful toll, a justice's process in an action to recover such penalty, after stating the facts constituting the unlawful taking, need not state it was taken contrary to the statute; that being a mere conclusion.—Kirby v. Rice, 16 Tenn. (8 Yerg.) 442.

[x] (Tenn. 1835) In an action for recovery of a penalty for refusing to grind a grist in turn, a justice's process stating that defendant refused to grind grist in turn for a certain person, and first ground for others who came to the mill later, sufficiently charges a violation of St. 1777, c. 23, § 10, requiring grists to be ground in the order of their receipt, under a penalty.—Kirby v. Lee, 16 Tenn. (8 Yerg.) 439.

[xx] (Pa. 1886) In actions for penalties before justices of the peace, the summons of the justice need not set forth the form of action, since such penalties are recoverable as debts of like amounts.—Kern v. Commonwealth, 2 Del. Co. Ct. R. 490.

[y] (Pa. 1890) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, the defendant is summoned to answer an action of trespass, the plaintiff cannot recover on a claim for goods sold and delivered.—Weisberger v. White (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 626.

[yy] (Tenn. 1844) A warrant to an action before a justice of the peace is not in lieu of a declaration. It is simply a summons to appear, and need contain only a general statement of the cause of action.—Wood v. Hancock, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 465.

[z] (Tenn. 1847) Where a defendant was summoned before a justice of the peace to answer "in a plea of trespass for the fraudulent detention of a note for the woodwork of a wagon, to the plaintiff's damage fifty dollars," it was held that this was a sufficient warrant in trover before a justice.—Seals v. Cummings, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 442.

[zz] (Tenn. 1873) Under a justice's process stating the cause of action to be debt on a constable's receipt, no recovery ought to be allowed on any other than the receipt therewith filed, especially after a plea of non est factum, averring a material alteration.—Watkins v. Kittrell, 62 Tenn. (3 Baxt.) 38.

§ 254. —— Directions as to time for return or appearance.

[a] (Cal. 1857) A justice cannot make a summons returnable more than 10 days from date.—Deidesheimer v. Brown, 8 Cal. 339.

[b] (Conn. 1843) In a suit before a justice of the peace, not only the day of appearance, but the hour of the day, ought to be designated in the writ; and, though a judgment might be good if no hour was designated, yet such an omission would be fatal on a plea of abatement.—Burgess v. Tweedy, 16 Conn. 39.

[c] (Ga. 1880) A justice's summons, in a suit for more than $50, returnable in less than 20 days, gives no jurisdiction.—Thurston v. Wilkerson, 65 Ga. 557.

[d] (Ind. 1861) A writ, in a civil cause, running more than 30 days before return, issued by a justice of the peace, is void, either as notice to defendant, as commencement of an action, or for any other purpose whatsoever; for it is not authorized by statute.—Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hanna, 16 Ind. 391.

[e] (Ind. 1862) A summons issued in a civil case by a justice of the peace, running more than 30 days before return, is invalid, and creates no obligation on the defendant to answer thereto.—Fuller v. Indianapolis & C. R. Co., 18 Ind. 91.

[f] (Iowa, 1854) Code 1851, § 2274, requires the notice of actions in a justice's court to state the amount for which judgment will be taken if the defendant fails to appear at the "time" and place therein fixed. Held that, where the notice fixed the time as "11 o'clock m.," the justice acquired no jurisdiction.—Hodges v. Brett, 4 G. Greene, 345.

[g] (Mich. 1880) Under Comp. St. 1871, § 5264, providing that a summons in a justice court may be made returnable not less than two days from the date thereof, and shall be served at least two days before the time of appearance mentioned therein, a summons issued and served on June 25th, and returnable on June 27th, is insufficient.—Evarts v. Fisk, 44 Mich. 515, 7 N. W. 81.

[h] (Mich. 1883) Comp. Laws, §§ 5264, 5265, providing that a summons against a nonresident defendant shall be returnable not less than two nor more than four days from its issue, require two secular days between the issue and return of the writ; and no jurisdiction is acquired when the writ is issued on Friday, and is made returnable the following Monday.—Simson v. Durfee, 50 Mich. 80, 14 N. W. 706.

[i] (Minn. 1878) Under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 10, providing that a summons issued by a justice of the peace "shall be entirely filled up, and have no blank, either in date or otherwise, at the time of its delivery to an officer to be executed," a summons issued with a blank as to the return day is absolutely void, and its service and return after the blank is filled by another person confer no jurisdiction.—Craighead v. Martin, 25 Minn. 41.

[j] (Minn. 1884) A summons issued by a justice of the peace required the defendant to appear before him "at 10 o'clock in the —— noon." Held, that the summons was void, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 12, requiring that such a summons "shall be entirely filled up, and have no blank, either in date or otherwise, at the time of its delivery to an officer to be executed," and declares that a summons "issued contrary to the provisions of this section shall be void."—Seurer v. Horst, 31 Minn. 479, 18 N. W. 283.

[jj] (Miss. 1893) Code 1880, § 2194, provides for the trial of a cause before a justice, at any reasonable time other than the regular term, when the plaintiff or defendant is a nonresident, and it is shown by the oath of either party that delay to the regular term will be of injury to him, and authorizes the writ to be made returnable at such "reasonable time."

Section 2196 provides that the summons shall be executed five days before the return term, and any summons issued within five days before its return day shall be made returnable to the next succeeding term of the court after that, to be held within five days, unless a shorter day shall be named, in pursuance of section 2194. Held, that the justice has power to decide what constitutes "reasonable time" within section 2194.—Goodbar v. Owen, 70 Miss. 840, 12 South. 556.

[k] (Mo. 1845) Making a writ returnable before a justice of the peace on a day not the regular court day of the justice is not ground to dismiss the writ.—Harper v. Baker, 9 Mo. 116.

[l] (Mo. 1858) Where a writ is made returnable before a justice of the peace in less time than that fixed by law, it is void.—Williams v. Bower, 26 Mo. 601.

[m] (N. Y. 1837) The summons from the justice's court, served on the defendant, must set forth the time for his appearance.—Stewart v. Smith, 17 Wend. 517.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) By statute, a nonresident plaintiff may sue in a justice's court, by a short summons having not more than 4 nor less than 2 days to run, or by long summons having not more than 12 nor less than 6 days to run. Held, in the case of a summons returnable 5 days from date, that the justice had no jurisdiction.—King v. Dowdall, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 131.

[o] (N. Y. 1859) According to section 33 of the nonimprisonment act (Laws 1831, c. 300), prescribing a short summons, a justice of the peace can acquire no jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant by a service of a summons returnable in four days.—Willins v. Wheeler, 28 Barb. 669, 8 Abb. Prac. 116.

[p] (N. Y. 1867) Where a summons in an action in a justice's court is returnable on the day of a general election, and there is no appearance, the justice acquires no jurisdiction,—not even to adjourn the proceedings to another day.—People v. Schwartz, 8 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 395.

[q] (N. D. 1894) Service of a summons issued by a justice of the peace, returnable, not on any particular day, but on the seventh day after service thereof, confers no jurisdiction of defendant.—Miner v. Francis, 3 N. D. 549, 58 N. W. 343.

[r] (Or. 1887) In an action in a justice's court under the Oregon forcible entry and detainer act a summons is not void which requires the defendant to answer in less than 6 days after its date; the time when the defendant may be required to answer being determined by section 5 of said act, which provides that "the summons shall be served and returned as in other cases. Such service shall not be less than 2 nor more than 4 days before the day of trial appointed by the justice." Section 8 of the justice's act, providing that the summons must require the defendant to appear at a time named therein not less than 6 nor more than 20 days from the date thereof, is not applicable to actions of forcible entry and detainer.—Belfils v. Flint, 15 Or. 158, 14 Pac. 295.

[s] (Pa. 1862) A summons issued on August 3, 1861, and made returnable on May 10th next, is fatally defective, and a judgment by default based thereon will be set aside.—Hunter v. Weidner, 1 Woodw. Dec. 6.

[t] (Pa. 1880) Process in a justice's court cannot be made returnable more than six days from its date.—Turnpike Co. v. Commonwealth, 2 Law T. (N. S.) 233.

[u] (S. C. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 71, subd. 12, requiring the trial justice to issue a summons directed to defendant, requiring him to appear not more than 20 days from the date thereof, a summons returnable more than 20 days from the date of its issue confers no jurisdiction on the justice when objected to on trial.—Simmons v. Cochran, 29 S. C. 31, 6 S. E. 859.

[v] (S. C. 1895) Code, § 88, subd. 16, as amended by Act Dec. 22, 1891, provides that when $25 or more is demanded the complaint shall be served on defendant not less than 20 days before the day therein fixed for trial. Held, that a justice's summons which required defendant to appear "on the twentieth day from service of this summons, exclusive of the day of service, at 10 o'clock a. m.," was insufficient to give the justice jurisdiction to render a judgment at the time fixed in the summons.—Adkins v. Moore, 43 S. C. 173, 20 S. E. 985.

[w] (S. C. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 88, subd. 16, provides that, when $25 or more are demanded, the complaint shall be served on defendant not less than 20 days before the day therein fixed for trial. Section 71, subd. 12, applicable to actions of claim and delivery only, provides that the trial justice shall issue a summons directed to defendant requiring him to appear not more than 20 days from the date thereof. Held, in an action for claim and delivery, that a summons, otherwise sufficient, which required defendant to appear in less than 20 days from the date thereof, was sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction, though it also contained a demand for the value of the property in case it could not be returned.—Kelley v. Kennemore, 47 S. C. 256, 25 S. E. 134; Barr v. Same, Id.

[x] (S. C. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 88, subd. 16, gives defendant in an action in a justice's court 20 days to answer after summons served, provided, if plaintiff shall make affidavit that he is apprehensive of losing his debt by such delay, and the justice considers there is good reason therefor, he may make such process returnable in such time as justice may require. Held that, where such affidavit was filed, the justice could make his process returnable at 10 o'clock a. m. of the day of service.—Cothran v. Knight, 47 S. C. 243, 25 S. E. 142.

[y] (S. D. 1895) A summons for relief issued by a justice of the peace in an action for a specific sum of money, and made returnable on a legal holiday, is a nullity; and the justice has no jurisdiction to adjourn the case, or to enter judgment at the adjourned trial.—Leonosio v. Bartilino, 7 S. D. 93, 63 N. W. 543.

[z] (Tex. 1893) Rev. St. arts. 1568, 1570, under the title of "Justices' Courts," requires a citation to be made returnable at the first day of "some" term of court. Held, that such citation need not be made returnable at the "next" term of court.—White v. Johnson, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 480, 24 S. W. 568.

§ 255. —— Directions as to place for appearance.

[a] (Ark. 1886) A warning order to appear signed by a justice of the peace is sufficiently definite as to the justice before whom the appearance is to be made, though the justice is not named in the order.—Webster v. Daniel, 47 Ark. 131, 14 S. W. 550.

[b] (Del. 1835) A summons notifying defendant to appear in a town before a justice named is not sufficiently certain, without designating his office or some other place.—Coulter v. Layton, 1 Har. 494.

[c] (Mo. 1848) A summons, issued by a justice of the peace, requiring the defendant "to appear before one of the justices of the peace," etc., "at my office," etc, omitting the words "me," or "the undersigned," was held to be sufficient.—Smith v. Young, 11 Mo. 566.

[d] (N. Y. 1837) A justice's summons must set forth the place for defendant to appear.—Stewart v. Smith, 17 Wend. 517.

[e] (Pa. 1880) A justice's summons is fatally defective unless it informs the defendant where he is to appear. The words "appear before the subscriber" are insufficient.—Murdy v. McCutcheon, 95 Pa. 435.

[f] (Pa. 1892) Where a borough is divided into a number of wards, a justice of the peace must designate in a summons the ward in which his office is situated.—Ritchie v. Perd (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 590.

[g] (Pa. 1894) A summons, in an action in justice's court, which fails to state the ward in which the justice's office is located, is insufficient to sustain a judgment by default.—Lumber & Feed Co. v. Curley (Com. Pl.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 428.

[h] (Pa. 1895) A summons commanding defendant to appear before a justice of the peace in "Jackson," with nothing to show where such place is, is fatally defective.—Bogert v. Miller (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 67, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 592.

[i] (Pa. 1895) A summons by a justice of the peace, which does not state where his office is, or that he has an office, but simply that he is "one of the justices of the peace in and for said county," is defective.—Skinner v. Morrow (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 108, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 606, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 701.

[j] (Wis. 1860) The venue of a justice's summons was O. county, town of G., and the defendant was ordered to appear at the justice's office in the village of M. Held, that the summons was good; M. being in G.—Barnum v. Fitzpatrick, 11 Wis. 81.

§ 256. —— Return to other justice.

[a] (Conn. 1869) Under a statute providing that every justice of the peace may issue and sign any returns which may be served and returned before any court in the state, a writ of summary process to recover possession of leased property may be signed by one justice and made returnable before another.—McNamara v. Rogers, 36 Conn. 205.

[b] (N. C. 1892) Since the constitution of 1868 (article 4, § 27) and enactment of certain laws, among them section 827 of the Code, requiring justices of the peace to keep a record of their proceedings, and section 833, commanding any officer to whom a summons of theirs may have been directed to return same as soon as executed to the justice issuing it, such a summons cannot be made returnable to any other justice, except in bastardy proceedings and in ejectment, in which cases, under sections 32, 1767, it may still be made returnable to some other justice if desired.—Williams v. Bowling, 111 N. C. 295, 16 S. E. 176.

§ 257. —— Signature and seal.

[a] (Cal. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. c. 5, art. 1, tit. 1, pt. 1, § 95, declaring that justices' courts shall be governed by the laws regulating proceedings before justices, "so far as such provisions were not altered or modified in this article," a summons, signed by the clerk of the justices' court, in accordance with section 91 of the same article, is valid, that provision modifying Code Civ. Proc. § 844, requiring process to be signed by the justice.—Helms v. Dunne, 107 Cal. 117, 40 Pac. 100.

[b] (Cal. 1895) A summons from the justice's court, signed by W., "Clerk of the Said Court," is valid, though "justices' clerk" is the proper designation.—Helms v. Dunne, 107 Cal. 117, 40 Pac. 100.

[c] (Ill. 1846) Where a probate justice is required to keep an official seal, and is also invested by statute with the powers of a justice of the peace, it is not necessary that he should affix his official seal as probate justice to a summons issued by him as a justice of the peace.—Dunlap v. Ennis, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 286.

[d] (Ill. 1850) A probate justice of the peace, when acting in that capacity, must affix the seal of the probate court to the process issued by him.—Williams v. Blankenship, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 122.

[e] (Me. 1854) It is unnecessary that a justice should sign a writ issued by him personally, but it is sufficient if signed by one duly authorized.—Achorn v. Matthews, 38 Me. 173.

[f] (Miss. 1840) A scroll affixed to the name of the justice, with the word "Seal" written within it, is a good seal of a writ of a justice of the peace.—Wright v. The Vesta, 6 Miss. (5 How.) 152.

[g] (N. H. 1844) The failure of a justice of the peace to sign the summons in proceedings before him, as required by Rev. St. c. 209, and Id. c. 182, § 5, is fatal to the proceedings.—Smith v. Smith, 15 N. H. 55.

[h] (N. H. 1851) A justice's writ, signed by the authority of the justice, but not in his presence, was held not to be valid.—Kidder v. Prescott, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 263.

[i] (N. H. 1853) Where the name of the justice of the peace before whom a writ is returnable is affixed thereto by his direction and in his presence, such writ is legally signed by the justice.—Hanson v. Rowe, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 327.

[j] (N. J.) The signature of a justice to a summons is sufficient if it give his surname in full, and his Christian name by initials.—(1853) Wood v. Fithian, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 33; (1855) Id. 838.

[k] (Tenn. 1882) A justice of the peace cannot authorize another to sign his name to the original process; this being an official act.—Kirkwood v. Smith, 77 Tenn. (9 Lea) 228.

[l] (W. Va. 1895) A justice of the peace issuing a summons in an action for the recovery of money must sign the same, in order that the action commence.—Colborn v. Booth, 41 W. Va. 289, 23 S. E. 556.

§ 258. Service in general.

[a] (Conn. 1789) A town, when sued before a justice, is entitled to 12 days' notice.—Payne v. Bacon, 1 Root, 109.

[b] (Ga. 1893) Under Act Oct. 17, 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 103), which provides that, whenever process from any court is not served for the required length of time before the appearance term of the court from which it issues, such service shall be good for the next succeeding term thereafter, which succeeding term shall be the appearance term of the cause, the word "process" includes a summons from a justice's court.—Hyfield v. Sims, 90 Ga. 808, 16 S. E. 990.

[c] (Ga. 1896) There was no error in refusing to dismiss an action pending on the appeal in the superior court from a justice's court, on the ground that the promissory note sued on, instead of a copy of the same, was attached to the original summons by which the action was begun.—Bull v. Edward Thompson Co., 99 Ga. 134, 25 S. E. 31.

[d] (Ind. 1846) The statute of 1838 required the summons of a justice of the peace to be served at least three days (the day of service being excluded from the computation) before the time of appearance.—Wort v. Finley, 8 Blackf. 335.

[e] (Kan. 1887) A summons in an action before a justice of the peace, issued and served on the 31st day of October, to appear at 2:30 p. m. of the 3d day of November, is served three days before the time of appearance.—Foster v. Markland, 37 Kan. 32, 14 Pac. 452.

[f] (Kan. 1888) Under the Justices' Code, providing that a summons issued by a justice must, unless accompanied with an order of arrest, be served at least three days before the time of the appearance, the statutory rule of computing time obtains, and the day of service is excluded, but that of appearance included.—Schultz v. Hine, 39 Kan. 334, 18 Pac. 221.

[g] (Mich. 1889) Service of summons, issued by a justice of the peace on a nonresident of the county, while therein in attendance on the trial of an action as a party and witness, is unauthorized, and should be set aside on motion.—Letherby v. Shaver, 73 Mich. 500, 41 N. W. 677.

[h] (Mo. 1893) Rev. St. 1889, § 6570, which provides that "the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last," applies to section 6148, which requires the service of a summons, issued by justice of the peace, at least 10 days before the day of appearance.—Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.

[i] (Neb. 1894) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 911, which provides that a justice's summons must be served "at least three days before the time of appearance," a summons served on the 26th and returnable on the 29th day of the same month is sufficient.—White v. German Ins. Co., 15 Neb. 660, 20 N. W. 30.

[j] (Neb. 1887) A summons was issued by a justice of the peace, and delivered to the sheriff of the county for service, who returned the same, with the manner of service indorsed thereon as follows: "August 23, 1884. Received this writ, and on the twenty-third day of August, 1884, I served the same on the within-named defendant, H. J. Palmer, by leaving a copy of the within summons with George Palmer, and by him, the said George Palmer, in my presence, at the time of said service, delivered the same, being a true copy of the within summons, with all the indorsements thereon, certified by me to be a true copy, to said H. J. Palmer,"—properly signed by the officer. Held to be a compliance with the requirements of Civ. Code, § 911, providing for the service of summons "by delivering a copy to the defendant, or leaving the same at his usual place of residence," and that the service gave jurisdiction.—Palmer v. Belcher, 21 Neb. 58, 31 N. W. 262.

[k] (Neb. 1891) In an action in justice's court on a joint demand against three defendants, plaintiff, who has been able to obtain service on only two of them while the action was pending in justice's court, may serve the third during the pendency of an appeal in the district court.—Houston v. Pepperl, 32 Neb. 828, 49 N. W. 803.

[l] (Neb. 1892) A summons issued by a justice court must be served at least three days before the time set for trial, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 911, or there is no legal service.—Leake v. Gallogly, 34 Neb. 857, 52 N. W. 824.

[m] (Neb. 1893) Under Code, § 1024, declaring that the summons in an action of forcible detainer shall be served three days before the trial, a summons in such action issued and served three days prior to the day appointed for trial, including the day of service, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.—Messick v. Wigent, 37 Neb. 692, 56 N. W. 493.

[n] (N. J. 1831) Where summons in a justice's action is required by law to be made five days before the return day thereof, a service on the 26th of April of a summons returnable on May 1st following is sufficient.—Day v. Hall, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 203.

[o] (N. Y. 1862) Where a constable, in serving a summons issued by a justice, who had two offices, stated to the defendant that it was returnable at the office other than that stated in the summons, the process was not duly served, and the justice acquired no jurisdiction over defendant's person.—Waring v. McKinley, 62 Barb. 612.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) A certificate of the constable that he served the summons and complaint on defendant at W., "by delivering to him a copy thereof," does not show a sufficient compliance with Laws 1881, c. 414, § 1, which requires service of summons and complaint on defendant "by delivering to and leaving with him, personally, true copies thereof." The copies must be left with the defendant.—McMullin v. Mackey, 53 Hun, 638, 6 N. Y. Supp. 885.

[q] (N. C. 1871) A summons in a civil action before a justice of the peace is not required to be executed by leaving a copy with the defendant.—Kirkland v. Hogan, 65 N. C. 144.

[r] (Or. 1871) Under a statute requiring the copy of the complaint served on defendant to be certified by the plaintiff, his agent, or attorney, or by the county clerk, if the action is before a justice of the peace, a copy certified by the justice of the peace is sufficiently certified to authorize its service with the summons.—Marrooney v. McKay, 3 Or. 372.

[s] (Or. 1887) A copy of the complaint, certified by the justice before whom the cause was pending or by the plaintiff, must be served on the defendant.—Belfils v. Flint, 15 Or. 158, 14 Pac. 295.

[t] (Pa. 1854) The return, "Copy served personally on defendant," is defective, not being a compliance with the statutory requirement that service shall be by producing the original summons to defendant and informing him of the contents, or by leaving a copy at his dwelling house in the presence of a member of his family.—Lenore v. Ingram, 1 Phila. 519.

[u] (Pa. 1873) Service of summons by reading the contents thereof personally to the party to be served is a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.—French v. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co., 1 Leg. Chron. 66.

[v] (Pa. 1895) A justice of the peace will, on certiorari, be held not to have had jurisdiction; the record showing less than five days' service of summons, and not showing that defendant was a nonresident of the county, so as to make four days' service sufficient.—Overshire v. Cook (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 164.

[w] (Vt. 1843) If a writ, returnable before a justice of the peace, is put into the hands of an officer for service more than 60 days before the return day therein named, it is his duty, under the statute, to omit making any service thereof until within 60 days before the return day.—Nelson v. Denison, 17 Vt. 73.

[x] (Vt. 1890) R. L. Vt. § 1402, provides that where an action is brought against a nonresident defendant he may be notified of its pendency by delivery to him at any place without the state "of copies of the process and pleading, and of an order for such delivery stating the time and place when and where he is required to appear, all under the hand of the clerk of the court or of a judge or justice thereof." Section 1403 provides for the mode of delivery, and section 1404 provides that thereafter the action may proceed, and the judgment shall bind property within the state as if defendant had been served therein. Held, that these sections are applicable to actions before a justice of the peace.—Hogle v. Mott, 62 Vt. 255, 20 Atl. 276, 22 Am. St. Rep. 106.

§ 259. Authority or capacity to serve.

Authority of coroner where sheriff is party to action, see "Sheriffs and Constables," III.

Of constable when sheriff is party to action, see "Sheriffs and Constables," III.

[a] (Ark. 1881) Any officer authorized to serve process may serve a justice's summons.—McCabe v. Payne, 37 Ark. 450.

[b] (Colo. 1896) Under Mills' Ann. St. § 2794, providing that a justice may appoint a special constable to serve papers in any particular case by written indorsement under seal of the justice on the back of the process which the person is deputed to serve, an appointment by the clerk of a justice without indorsement on the process is invalid, and confers no authority to serve process.—Hamill v. Ferrier, 8 Colo. App. 266, 45 Pac. 522.

[c] (Conn. 1786) The certificate of a justice, addressing a writ to an indifferent person, because no proper officer could be had without expense and inconvenience, is conclusive, and the court cannot inquire into its truth.—Lawrence v. Kingman, Kirby, 6.

[d] (Conn. 1826) Under the laws relating to the service of a writ by an indifferent person, the certificate of the justice must show that the oath was administered in the words prescribed by the statute.—Case v. Humphrey, 6 Conn. 130.

[e] (Conn. 1826) The certificate of the justice on a writ brought by A. against B. recited: "Personally appeared C., and made solemn oath that he verily believed the plaintiff to be in danger of losing the within-described debt, unless an indifferent person be deputed for the immediate service of this writ." Held, that under the statute relating to the service of writs by indifferent persons, requiring that the person taking the oath shall be the plaintiff or his attorney, the certificate was insufficient.—Case v. Humphrey, 6 Conn. 130.

[f] (Ga. 1894) Under Act Oct. 17, 1885, the sheriff can serve a summons in a suit before a justice of the peace.—Early County v. Powell, 94 Ga. 680, 20 S. E. 10.

[g] (Ill. 1838) Rev. Laws, p. 399, § 51 (Gale's St. p. 412, § 51), providing that the appointment of a constable pro tem. by a justice of the peace to execute process must be made by indorsement on the back of the process, a constable pro tem. cannot be appointed to serve a summons or other personal notice in a civil suit.—Gordon v. Knapp, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 488.

[h] (Ill. 1885) A justice of the peace cannot appoint a constable pro tem. to serve a summons or other personal notice in a civil suit; and the justice will not acquire jurisdiction of defendant's person by the service of such summons by the constable.—Hill v. Blackwelder, 113 Ill. 283.

[i] (La. 1894) Under Code Proc. art. 1077, any constable of the parish can serve the citation issued by a justice of the peace.—State ex rel. Police Jury of St. Martin Parish v. Dupre, 46 La. Ann. 117, 14 South. 907.

[j] (Me. 1850) The constable of a town may serve a justice's writ on any person within that town, though such person may be an inhabitant of another town.—Blanchard v. Day, 31 Me. 494.

[k] (Mich. 1878) In indorsing on a summons a deputation of authority to serve it, the justice need not certify that the person authorized is of age and not interested in the suit. It is not presumed that he selects an incompetent person.—Buel v. Duke, 38 Mich. 167.

[l] (Mich. 1885) The competent person, empowered by How. Ann. St. § 6827, to serve a justice's summons, must appear to have been personally designated by the justice, and must be selected on sufficient inquiry to determine his competency.—Moore v. Rasch, 57 Mich. 54, 23 N. W. 456.

[m] (Mich. 1886) The justice should indorse the appointment of a private person to serve a summons on it, as directed by How. Ann. St. § 7074, and he acquires no jurisdiction of a defendant served by a person whose authority is not so indorsed.—Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 Mich. 72, 27 N. W. 859.

[n] (Mich. 1886) Where a private person to whom a justice of the peace gives a summons for service makes an affidavit that he is not "directly interested" in the action, he is not clearly shown to be disinterested, as the inference arising from his language is that he is indirectly interested, and disqualified to serve the summons under the statute.—Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 Mich. 72, 27 N. W. 859.

[o] (Mich. 1890) Under How. Ann. St. § 7074, providing that a justice may on the request of a party, by authority indorsed on the process, empower a proper person of lawful age, and not a party or interested, to execute it, the request of the party and the fitness of the appointee must appear on the indorsement.—Gadsby v. Stimer, 79 Mich. 280, 44 N. W. 606.

[p] (Mo. 1895) Rev. St. § 6927, providing that citations shall be placed in the hands of the constable of the town in which the suit is pending, are directory merely, and service by the constable of another township is valid.—Bick v. Wilkerson, 62 Mo. App. 31, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 727.

[pp] (Neb. 1881) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094, which provides that a justice may, in writing on the process, specially deputize any suitable person to serve process, authority in the following words indorsed on the process is sufficient: "The State of Nebraska, to Job Hathaway, of Said County, Specially Deputized to Serve These Papers—Greeting."—Haskins v. Citizens' Bank, 12 Neb. 39, 10 N. W. 466.

[q] (Neb. 1882) A justice of the peace is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 882, which provides that a "court or judge, for good cause, may appoint a person to serve a particular process or order," and service of process by a person appointed by a justice is invalid.—Republican Val. R. Co. v. Sayre, 13 Neb. 280, 13 N. W. 404.

[qq] (Neb. 1891) Under Code, § 1094, providing that at the request of a party, and on being satisfied that it is expedient, a justice may depute a discreet person to serve a summons, and that "such deputation must be in writing on the process," the appointment need not show that the justice was requested to make it, nor that he was satisfied that it was expedient to do so, and it is sufficient to address the summons to the appointee as "special constable."—Morse v. Carpenter, 31 Neb. 224, 47 N. W. 853.

[r] (N. J. 1837) The marshal of the city of Perth Amboy is not authorized to serve process from the court for the trial of small causes.—Dunham v. Solomon, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 50.

[rr] (N. Y. 1806) Under 1 Laws, p. 500, § 15, being an act for the more speedy recovery of debts to the value of $25, a constable of a county may serve writs issuing from a justice's court in any part of the county.—Mills v. Kennedy, 1 Johns. 502.

[s] (N. Y. 1823) A summons in a justice's court may be served by the plaintiff himself, either where he is himself a constable or specially deputed for the purpose.—Tuttle v. Hunt, 2 Cow. 436.

[ss] (N. Y. 1829) A plaintiff who is a constable may serve a summons issued by a justice.—Putnam v. Man, 3 Wend. 202, 20 Am. Dec. 686.

[t] (N. Y. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3156, providing that the justice may authorize any proper person of full age, not a party to the action, to serve the summons, service by plaintiff under an authorization by the justice is void.—Warring v. Keeler, 11 Misc. Rep. 451, 33 N. Y. Supp. 415, 24 Civ. Proc. R. 427.

[tt] (N. C. 1884) A justice of the peace has no authority to depute a special officer to serve process in a civil action.—McKee v. Angel, 90 N. C. 60.

[u] (N. C. 1896) Code, § 645, provides that a justice may, "in extraordinary cases," appoint any one not a party to execute his mandate. Held, that the decision of the justice as to when such cases arise is conclusive.—State v. Wynne, 118 N. C. 1206, 24 S. E. 216.

[uu] (Or. 1886) There is no legal service by a constable's deputy, except the record shows that he was acting under a regular appointment for the purpose.—Prickett v. Cleek, 13 Or. 415, 11 Pac. 49.

[v] (Or. 1894) Under Hill's Ann. Laws, § 2173, providing for the appointment of persons to serve processes in justices' courts whenever they would otherwise not be served for want of an officer, one appointed by indorsement on the summons reciting that "the constable of said district being unable to act herein, and it appearing that the within process will not be served for want of an officer, I hereby appoint W. to make service," and signed by the justice, is sufficiently authorized.—North Pac. Cycle Co. v. Thomas, 26 Or. 381, 38 Pac. 307, 46 Am. St. Rep. 636.

[vv] (Pa. 1894) A special deputation to serve a justice's process must show that it was made by the constable of the proper county, or the record must identify his official character.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Cook (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 257, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 434.

[w] (Tenn. 1850) A deputation indorsed on a legal process by a justice of the peace, authorizing a person to execute a legal process, must express the full name of such person, or it will be void for uncertainty, and will confer no authority on any person.—Allison v. Hampton, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 71.

[ww] (Vt. 1834) An appointment by a justice of the peace to serve process is a judicial act, and cannot be done by proxy.—Ex parte Kellogg, 6 Vt. 509.

[x] (Vt. 1837) A person regularly authorized to serve a writ by a justice of the peace may serve the same in any county to the officers of which it may by law be directed, though it is not in fact directed to such officers.—Clark v. Washburn, 9 Vt. 302.

[xx] (Vt. 1839) A justice of the peace signed a blank writ, and a deputation on the back of it, in blank, which deputation was afterwards filled up by a third person, without the direction or knowledge of such justice, and the person thus deputized made service of the writ by attaching property. Held, that such deputation was void, and that the person thus deputized was a trespasser.—Ross v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 265, 36 Am. Dec. 342.

[y] (Vt. 1849) If a justice's writ be directed in the body of it to an indifferent person named in the form of a deputation in a county court writ, stating the reason of such direction to be the want of a proper officer seasonably to be had, the person so named will not be authorized to serve such writ.—Edgerton v. Barrett, 21 Vt. 196.

[yy] (Vt. 1856) The authority of a special officer, appointed at the discretion of the justice to serve a writ under the statute, cannot be extended beyond the expiration of the time of service without the concurrence of the magistrate.—Carr v. Tyler, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 783.

[z] (Vt. 1859) A citation signed by the justice of the peace of one county, directed to any sheriff in the state, notifying defendant in a suit pending in another county to appear at the taking of a deposition out of the state, may be served on the defendant in his own county by the sheriff of the county whence the citation issued.—Parker v. Meader, 32 Vt. 300.

[zz] (Wis. 1857) Under Rev. St. c. 88, § 80, any "credible evidence," other than the plaintiff's affidavit, is sufficient to authorize the justice to order service by one not an officer.—Betts v. Stevens, 6 Wis. 398.

§ 260. Leaving copy at residence.

[a] (Ga. 1895) A justice's court acquires jurisdiction of defendant on service of the summons by leaving a copy thereof at defendant's residence, though he was temporarily absent.—Moye v. Walker, 96 Ga. 769, 22 S. E. 276.

[b] (Pa. 1879) The service of summons in justice court by leaving a copy at the defendant's house with a member of the family is insufficient.—Smith v. Moone, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 165.

[c] (Wis. 1856) The service of summons by leaving a copy at the usual place of abode of the defendant with one of his family of suitable age and discretion is sufficient to give a justice jurisdiction.—Frederick v. Clark, 5 Wis. 191.

§ 261. Publication or other notice.

[a] (Cal. 1863) The summons in an action before a justice having been returned not served, because defendant could not be found, that official may, on affidavit that defendant is concealing himself in order to avoid process, issue a new summons and order notice by publication.—Seaver v. Fitzgerald, 23 Cal. 85.

[b] (Mo. 1878) The courts cannot supply the omission of the statute to provide for an order of publication against a nonresident defendant in a mechanic's lien proceeding before a justice of the peace.—Bieswaenger v. Werner, 5 Mo. App. 582.

[c] (Mo. 1892) A finding by a justice of the peace that defendant has absconded from his usual place of abode, and cannot be found in the county, is not sufficient to sustain an order of publication, since it does not appear therefrom that he could not be summoned, under Rev. St. § 6148, by leaving a copy of the summons at his usual place of abode with a member of his family.—Byrd v. Steele, 49 Mo. App. 419.

[d] (Nev. 1869) An order for issuing a summons from a justice's court, and an order for serving it by publication, cannot be combined. The order for publication presupposes the existence of a summons. Unless one has previously been issued, such order is premature.—Little v. Currie, 5 Nev. 90.

[e] (Tex. 1888) Rev. St. art. 1572, provides that all rules governing the service of citations issued out of the district courts, except when otherwise provided, shall govern also the justices' courts so far as applicable; article 1577 fixes appearance day after publication of process from justice's court; article 1617 also recognizes the validity of a judgment rendered by a justice against a defendant cited by publication; and article 152 provides that justices may issue attachments where defendant is not a resident of the state. Held, under these statutes, that process from justices' courts may be served by publication under the rules governing district courts.—Davis v. Robinson, 70 Tex. 394, 7 S. W. 749.

[f] (Tex. 1896) Act Aug. 13, 1870, authorizing service by publication in suits before justices of the peace, was not affected by the repeal of the printing act, in November, 1871.—Hambel v. Davis, 89 Tex. 256, 34 S. W. 439, 59 Am. St. Rep. 46, affirming judgment (Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 251.

§ 262. Return and proof of service.

[a] (Cal. 1858) The officer's return on the summons is evidence of the service.—Denmark v. Liening, 10 Cal. 93.

[b] (Cal. 1860) A recital in the docket of a justice that the summons was "returned duly served" is, upon the question of the sufficiency of the service, of no value as against the return of the officer.—Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 296.

[c] (Ill. 1881) Where a constable's return shows service of process in a suit before a justice of the peace, the justice has no authority to issue sci. fa. on the ground that one of the defendants has not been served.—Leitch v. Colson, 8 Ill. App. 458.

[d] (Kan. 1878) In an action to recover possession of real property, the plaintiff's title was founded upon a sheriff's deed made in pursuance of an execution sale founded on a transcript of a justice's judgment, rendered on default against the then owner of the land in controversy on faith of a constable's return of service of summons, which showed service by leaving a certified copy at the residence of defendant. Held, that to permit the defendant to impeach the deed, judgment, and constable's return, by showing that the return was false, as defendant was not at the time a resident of Kansas, but in the Indian Territory, was correct.—Mastin v. Gray, 19 Kan. 458, 27 Am. Rep. 149.

[e] (Mich. 1879) The return of a justice's summons certified that he had "personally served the within summons on the within-named defendant, by reading the same and by giving a copy, on the 5th day of August, 1874." Held prima facie sufficient to give jurisdiction.—Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196.

[f] (Mich. 1886) Where the affidavit of service of summons in justice's court does not show that the affidavit of the amount claimed to be due was served with the process, such affidavit is not prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, under How. Ann. St. § 7525.—Gordon v. Sibley, 59 Mich. 250, 26 N. W. 485.

[g] (Mich. 1893) A defendant in a summons issued by a justice may appear on the return day, and by affidavit dispute the return of the officer, and show that the summons was served on him more than 12 days before the return day.—Lane v. Jones, 94 Mich. 540, 54 N. W. 283.

[h] (Minn. 1892) In an action to set aside a justice's judgment, rendered by default on the constable's certificate of service of the summons, the return of the officer may be impeached.—Knutson v. Davies, 51 Minn. 363, 53 N. W. 646.

[i,j] (Miss. 1884) Where the return to a summons is equivocal as to which of two defendants is served, the justice may decide whether the service was personal or not.—Fleming v. Nunn, 61 Miss. 603.

[k] (Miss. 1893) A sheriff's deed, after sale on an execution issued on a justice's judgment, should not be canceled on the ground that the judgment debtor was not served in the action in which the judgment was rendered, where the return shows personal service, the officer making it testifies that service was made as returned, and the justice testifies that on return day such debtor told him he had no defense to the action, and to enter judgment, and where the only evidence that it was not served is given by such debtor.—Quarles v. Hiern, 70 Miss. 891, 14 South. 23.

[l] (Mo. 1843) The return of a constable on a writ is only prima facie evidence of the facts therein contained.—Perryman v. State, to Use of Relfe, 8 Mo. 208.

[m] (Neb. 1890) Where a summons issued by a justice, and made returnable at an hour named, does not specify that standard time is relied upon, it will be presumed that common time was intended.—Searles v. Averhoff, 28 Neb. 668, 44 N. W. 872.

[n] (N. J.) A justice cannot proceed in a cause, in the absence of the defendant, until the summons is duly returned according to law.—(1806) Layton v. Cooper, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 62; (1830) Rape v. Titus, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 314.

[o] (N. Y. 1829) The return of a justice's summons served by the plaintiff, who is a constable, cannot be impeached in an action of trespass for an arrest on execution upon the judgment rendered on the return of such summons. If the return be false, the remedy is by action for a false return against the constable.—Putnam v. Man, 3 Wend. 202, 20 Am. Dec. 686.

[p] (N. Y. 1846) The certificate of a justice of the peace, on certiorari, that he delivered the summons in the suit to a constable on a certain day, does not show that he had legal evidence before him that the suit was commenced on that day. Such delivery is no part of his official duty, and he cannot take notice thereof without evidence.—Cornell v. Moulton, 3 Denio, 12.

[q] (N. Y. 1853) Where a summons from a justice was actually served on the defendant's son, in defendant's absence, the constable's return of service on the person may be contradicted on appeal.—Fitch v. Devlin, 15 Barb. 47.

[r] (N. Y. 1854) A constable's return of service on a summons cannot be collaterally attacked in another action for defeating the judgment recovered under it.—New York & E. R. Co. v. Purdy, 18 Barb. 574.

[s] (N. Y. 1856) The return of the constable in a suit before the justice's court is not traversable. If it is false, the remedy is by an action for a false return.—Perry v. Tynen, 22 Barb. 137.

[t] (N. Y. 1859) The justice cannot of his own knowledge certify as to the day when the summons was issued, but the fact must be proved by competent evidence.—McGraw v. Walker, 2 Hilt. 404.

[u] (N. Y. 1868) A person deputed by a justice to serve a summons must make a return in writing in the same manner that a constable is required to do, in order to give the justice jurisdiction.—Jackson v. Sherwood, 50 Barb. 356.

[v] (N. Y. 1871) A constable's oral evidence of the service of a summons is admissible before a justice as a basis for "proceedings to recover possession of land" (2 Rev. St. p. 514, § 32); and this is so although he may have made a written return by affidavit.—Robinson v. McManus, 4 Lans. 380.

[w] (N. Y. 1889) On the return day named in the summons, defendant appeared specially, and moved to dismiss on the ground that service was not had on him personally, and offered to prove the fact. Held, that it was error to reject the evidence on the ground that the constable's return, showing personal service, was conclusive.—Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. McLaughlin, 54 Hun, 639, 8 N. Y. Supp. 95.

[x] (Pa. 1864) In estimating the five days for the return of the summons before a justice of the peace, the day of the date is to be excluded.—Ferris v. Zeidler, 5 Phila. 529.

[xx] (Pa. 1872) In computing the time for the return day of the summons before a justice, the day on which it is issued will be excluded, and the day on which it is returnable will be included.—Brenner v. Dombach, 3 Lanc. Bar, No. 40, p. 2.

[y] (Pa. 1873) A return by a constable of the service of summons on an agent of the railroad company will be held conclusive that the person served was such an agent as the law allows services to be made upon, and indefinite expressions, such as "said to be," or "who acknowledged himself to be," will be regarded as surplusage.—French v. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co., 1 Leg. Chron. 66.

[yy] (Pa. 1893) Where a magistrate's summons showed a return, "Served by copy," and there was nothing to show that service of the copy was not made in the manner prescribed by law, the presumption is that the service was so made, though the docket shows service by leaving the copy at the defendant's place of business.—Sweeney v. Girolo, 154 Pa. 609, 26 Atl. 600, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. 404.

[z] (R. I. 1889) An original writ in a justice's court, which is returnable at 10 o'clock, must be returned not later than 11 to give the court jurisdiction over the defendant; and neither a previous agreement of defendant's counsel to waive the time, nor a custom to enter delayed writs and continue them, can give the court jurisdiction if the writ is not returned within the time above stated.—Brown v. Carroll, 16 R. I. 604, 18 Atl. 283.

[zz] (Tenn. 1873) A constable's return under oath that he executed a summons on both defendants, supported by the justice's indorsement of judgment thereon and issuance of execution, is not impeached by the mere denial of one of the defendants that he had been served.—Myers v. Hammond, 65 Tenn. (6 Baxt.) 61.

§ 263. —— Form and requisites.

[a] (Iowa, 1859) A return in an action before a justice, "Served the within by reading," is defective, in not showing that it was read to defendant.—Bain v. Galyear, 10 Iowa, 585.

[b] (Kan. 1873) It is not necessary that a special constable, who has been legally appointed and qualified under section 172 of the justice's act, should verify his return to a writ which he has served by oath or affidavit.—Winsor v. Cole, 10 Kan. 620; Winsor v. Goddard, Id. 625.

[c] (Mich. 1848) The return to a summons in these words, "Served the within by reading personally," the statute requiring it to be served by reading it to defendant and delivering him a copy, is bad, and does not give the justice jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.—Campau v. Fairbanks, 1 Mich. (Man.) 151.

[d] (Mich. 1856) A return on a justice's writ of "Personally served true copies of the within by reading," is sufficient.—Shaw v. Moser, 8 Mich. 71.

[e] (Minn. 1896) A return of service of summons issued by a justice of the peace, by leaving a copy of the same at defendant's usual place of abode, need not state that defendant could not be found.—Vaule v. Miller, 64 Minn. 485, 67 N. W. 540.

[f] (Minn. 1896) The return of service of summons in justice's court need not state the name of the person with whom the copy was left at defendant's residence.—Vaule v. Miller, 64 Minn. 485, 67 N. W. 540.

[g] (Minn. 1896) A return of service of summons issued by a justice upon defendant, by leaving a copy thereof at defendant's "last usual place of abode," under Gen. St. 1894, § 4967, is not invalidated by its omission to use the word "last."—Vaule v. Miller, 64 Minn. 485, 67 N. W. 540.

[h, i] (Mo. 1851) The return of a constable on a warrant against a steamboat, showing that he executed it by going on board the boat and reading the same to the clerk, and by finding the sheriff in charge of her, is sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction, under the statute.—The Eureka v. Noel, 14 Mo. 513; Parkinson v. The Robert Fulton, 15 Mo. 258.

[j] (Mo. 1870) The return of a constable on an order of publication issued in an attachment proceeding before a justice, showing that the same was executed by "posting in four public places," etc., but not that it was posted 20 days before the day when defendant was obliged to appear, as required by Wag. St. p. 196, § 77, gives the justice no jurisdiction over the defendant.—McCloon v. Beattie, 46 Mo. 391.

[k] (N. Y. 1823) The return of a summons in a justice's court, "Personally served," and stating the time of such service, is sufficient.—Legg v. Stillman, 2 Cow. 418; Tuttle v. Hunt, Id. 436.

[l] (N. Y. 1842) The return to a summons served by a constable should state the time, as well as the manner, of service.—Bromley v. Smith, 2 Hill, 517.

[m] (N. Y. 1849) To give a justice jurisdiction, there must be a return showing personal service of process, and an entry on the justice's docket. "Sept. 1, sums. 2 pers., by S. B. Ward const. 11, pltff. appears," furnishes no evidence of such personal service.—Manning v. Johnson, 7 Barb. 457.

[n] (N. Y. 1850) Where, in a suit before a justice, a constable returns a summons "Served by copy" only, the return will not be held, when collaterally before the court, to be so far defective as to amount to a jurisdictional defect.—Foster v. Hazen, 12 Barb. 547.

[o] (N. Y. 1851) An officer is not required to state in his return to a justice's process what in particular he did to constitute the service he returns, but it will be presumed he did all the law requires.—Van Kirk v. Wilds, 11 Barb. 520.

[p] (N. Y. 1852) Where a summons is issued by a justice of the peace, a return showing proper service on one defendant is sufficient, without negative additions explaining how the summons was served, or why it was not served, on the others.—Fogg v. Child, 13 Barb. 246.

[q] (N. Y. 1857) A constable brought a summons to the justice who issued it, and stated that he had made personal service of it on defendant, and asked the justice to write his return on it; and the justice, in the presence of the constable, wrote a return, but no name was signed. Held, under 2 Rev. St. p. 228, § 16, providing that the constable serving summons shall return thereon in writing the time and manner in which he executed the same and sign his name thereto, that the return was invalid.—Reno v. Pinder, 24 Barb. 423, judgment reversed (1859) 20 N. Y. 298.

[r] (N. Y. 1863) Where a summons is directed to any constable of the proper county, a return thereon, indorsed that the same was personally served by A. B., constable, is sufficient. This is clearly to the effect that the summons was served by a constable of that county, and the justice is bound to recognize it, without further proof. The constable being a public officer, acting under oath, the return itself affords presumptive evidence of the fact that the person certifying the service was a constable of the county.—Potter v. Whittaker, 27 How. Prac. 10.

[s] (N. Y. 1875) The return of a copy of a justice's court summons: "Served. Copy left the ninth day of February, 1869,"—there being no statement that the defendant could not be found, was not sufficient to show a legal service, or to authorize the justice to proceed in the action, in the absence of the defendant.—Sperry v. Reynolds, 65 N. Y. 179.

[t] (N. Y. 1891) A certificate of a constable that the written summons and complaint were personally served on defendant at a specified time and place, by delivery to him of copies thereof, is not a sufficient compliance with Laws 1881, c. 414, § 1, which requires service of summons in a justice's court to be served on defendant by "delivery to and leaving with him personally true copies thereof"; the certificates being defective in not stating that the constable left with defendant the copies of the complaint and summons delivered by the constable to defendant.—Syracuse Moulding Co. v. Squires, 61 Hun, 48, 15 N. Y. Supp. 321, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 58, reversing (1890) 19 Civ. Proc. R. 241, 13 N. Y. Supp. 547, and following McMullin v. Mackey (1889) 53 Hun, 638, 6 N. Y. Supp. 885.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) A constable's return of a summons in a justice's court, which shows that it was served in the same town as that in which the venue was laid in the summons, but does not state that either party was a resident of the county in which the action was brought, sufficiently shows jurisdiction in the justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2869, subd. 3, which provides that an action against a nonresident of the county may be brought before a justice of the town in which he (defendant) is at the time of the commencement of the action.—Syracuse Moulding Co. v. Squires, 61 Hun, 48, 15 N. Y. Supp. 321, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 58.

[uu] (Or. 1887) Where the return on a summons in forcible entry and detainer does not show that a copy of the complaint, certified as required by statute, was served on the defendant, the service is insufficient to warrant a judgment by default. Whether the statute has been complied with is to be determined by the officer's return.—Belfils v. Flint, 15 Or. 158, 14 Pac. 295.

[v] (Pa. 1872) The return of the service of summons in an action before a justice must show clearly and accurately the manner of the service.—City of Philadelphia v. Cathcart, 6 Leg. Gaz. 1.

[vv] (Pa. 1873) A return of a justice's summons, "Served by serving a copy of original summons on defendant," is not sufficient, as the return must show the manner of the service.—City of Philadelphia v. Cathcart, 31 Leg. Int. 4.

[w] (Pa. 1874) To hold nonresident defendants by service of a justice's summons on an alleged agent, the return of the officer must show that he complied with the act by serving the summons at the usual place of business or residence of such agent.—Yeich v. Peterson, 2 Leg. Chron. 269.

[ww] (Pa. 1879) Where the return of a justice's summons appears on the record to have been simply acknowledged by the officer serving it, and not to have been made on oath or affirmation, the return is defective, and judgment rendered thereon is invalid.—Starch v. Snyder, 1 Leg. Rec. 172.

[x] (Pa. 1880) A return to a justice's summons, "Served personally on the within named party," is bad; and where the defendant does not appear, and judgment is rendered against him by default, the proceedings will be set aside.—Commonwealth v. Savery, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 179.

[xx] (Pa. 1882) The provisions of Act 1810, § 6, requiring return of service of a justice's summons to be on oath or affirmation, apply to a proceeding against a constable for not returning an execution under section 12 of the same act.—Adler v. Patrick, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 465.

[y] (Pa. 1887) The return of an officer serving a summons from the justice court upon an agent of a corporation should state the name of the agent.—Singer v. Singer Mfg. Co., 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 578.

[yy] (S. C. 1877) The return of a constable on a summons in an action in a trial justice's court, showing service by leaving a copy at the defendant's "most notorious place of residence," he being absent at the time, is proof of a sufficient service.—Henneman v. Thomson, 8 S. C. (8 Rich.) 115.

[z] (S. C. 1880) Where the record of a case decided by a trial justice showed that the following indorsement had been made on the original summons: "Served in person by Calvin Josey, May 7, 1877. Distance, eighteen miles for each." Held, that it failed to show that the defendant had been served with process.—State v. Cohen, 13 S. C. 198.

[zz] (Wis. 1857) The return of a person serving a summons in place of an officer under the appointment of a justice need not be verified by affidavit.—Betts v. Stevens, 6 Wis. 398.

3. DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS, AND AMENDMENTS.

DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS, WAIVER, AND CURE, § 264.
AMENDMENT OR ALTERATION, § 265.

§ 264. Defects and objections, waiver, and cure.

Appearance as waiving defects in process, see post, §§ 273, 274.

Collateral attack on judgment for defects in process, see post, § 411.

[a] (Ark. 1881) A justice's summons, erroneously directed to the coroner for service, is not void, but voidable.—McCabe v. Payne, 37 Ark. 450.

[b] (Ark. 1886) Failure to make proof of publication in the form prescribed by law of a warning order to appear before a justice of the peace cannot be taken advantage of in a collateral proceeding.—Webster v. Daniel, 47 Ark. 131, 14 S. W. 550.

[c] (Ind. 1847) In a suit before a justice of the peace, the summons was returnable on the 6th of June, and was served on the 4th of that month. Defendant moved for a dismissal of the suit, on the ground of insufficient service, and, this being overruled, moved for and obtained a continuance. Held, that by moving for and obtaining said continuance, defendant waived the objection as to the service of the summons.—Thayer v. Dove, 8 Blackf. 567.

[d] (Ind. 1859) Under Code 1852, making it the duty of a justice of the peace before whom a suit is brought, where there is a want of sufficient service which is not waived by consent, to continue the cause, though, on such service, judgment by default cannot be rendered against a party till the statutory time of notice has expired, still it operates to inform him of the pendency of the suit, and he is bound to take notice of the subsequent action of the court therein.—Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co. v. Shannon, 13 Ind. 171.

[e] (Ind. 1864) Where, in a suit brought in a justice's court, the defendant makes a special appearance, and moves that the case be dismissed, on the ground of insufficient service, and the justice overrules the motion, but continues the cause for 28 days, and the defendant is then defaulted, he is not entitled, on appeal to the circuit court and renewal of his motion, to have it granted; the continuance giving him sufficient notice.—Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Talbert, 23 Ind. 438.

[f] (Iowa, 1854) Where a notice of action in a justice court does not satisfy the requirements of Code 1851, §§ 2272–2274, prescribing the requisite of notices in such actions, the justice acquires no jurisdiction.—Milbourn v. Fouts, 4 G. Greene, 346.

[g] (Iowa, 1855) By answering without objection before a justice, defects in the service of the notice are waived.—Houston v. Walcott, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 86.

[h] (Kan. 1890) Where a summons is issued by a justice of the peace, and served by a constable, by leaving a true copy, with all the indorsements thereon, at the usual place of residence of the defendant, the failure of the officer to make a certificate that such copy is a true copy of the original summons, renders such service voidable only, and not void.—Friend v. Green, 43 Kan. 167, 23 Pac. 98.

[i] (Mich. 1878) After a defendant has pleaded to the merits, he cannot move for a dismissal of the case because the constable so amends his return as to show the service to have been insufficient.—Slattery v. Hilliker, 39 Mich. 573.

[j] (Mich. 1890) Where the officer serving a summons is unable to find defendant, and fails to leave copies at defendant's last place of residence, as required by How. Ann. St. §§ 6827, 6841, respectively, or to return that there was no such last place of residence in the county, the justice before whom the action is brought does not acquire jurisdiction.—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344, 45 N. W. 982.

[k] (Mich. 1894) Any objection in a justice court to the sufficiency of the declaration constitutes a general demurrer, and waives defects in the return of the officer to the summons.—Stevens v. Harris, 99 Mich. 230, 58 N. W. 230.

[l] (Minn. 1884) In replevin before a justice of the peace, defendant, by answering without objecting to defects in the process waives such objections.—McKee v. Metraw, 31 Minn. 429, 18 N. W. 148.

[m] (N. H. 1853) In debt on a judgment, exception cannot be taken because the writ in the original action was not signed by the justice.—Nichols v. Smith, 26 N. H. (6 Post.) 298.

[n] (N. Y. 1823) Though the process in a suit before a justice of the peace under the $25 act be for $25 only, and the declaration recites a larger sum, the variance is immaterial.—Dennison v. Collins, 1 Cow. 111.

[o] (N. Y. 1844) Where the summons was against L. and V., but was not served on V., and the declaration was against L. alone, who pleaded the general issue, such plea amounted to a waiver of the irregularity.—Leggett v. Raymond, 6 Hill, 639.

[p] (N. Y. 1852) A defect in the form of a justice's summons cannot be objected to by the defendant, after having pleaded and gone to trial on the merits.—Bray v. Andreas, 1 E. D. Smith, 387.

[q] (N. Y. 1857) Where the return of a summons issued by a justice of the peace was invalid, the justice acquired no jurisdiction.—Reno v. Pinder, 24 Barb. 423, judgment reversed (1859) 20 N. Y. 298.

[r] (N. Y. 1857) The objection that a short summons has been issued where a long one was the only proper process is not waived by pleading to the merits after objection has been made and overruled.—Belden v. New York & H. R. R. Co., 15 How. Prac. 17.

[s] (N. Y. 1858) An objection that a nonresident could sue only by short summons on giving security for costs is waived, if not taken before judgment, where there was an appearance by defendant.—Haulenbeck v. Gillies, 2 Hilt. 238.

[t] (N. Y. 1859) Nonimprisonment Act (Laws 1831, c. 300) § 33, prescribes a short summons as the only process by which a nonresident can be sued in a justice's court, and provides that otherwise the justice shall have no jurisdiction. Held that, where the process did not comply with the statute, the defect of jurisdiction was not waived by defendant's failure to appear and object to the form of process.—Willius v. Wheeler, 28 Barb. 669, 8 Abb. Prac. 116, 17 How. Prac. 93.

[tt] (N. Y. 1862) Where process has been defectively served, the defendant cannot come into court and by plea or answer set up such defect or want of service to defeat the action, but may by affidavit show the error and ask a dismissal of the proceedings; and, if the justice disregards his objection, he may, on appeal from the judgment, have a review of the question and obtain the relief denied him.—Waring v. McKinley, 62 Barb. 612.

[u] (N. Y. 1892) The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 2877, that in actions before a justice of the peace the summons must be returnable at a time therein specified, not less than 6 nor more than 12 days after the date when issued, is not jurisdictional, and a defendant, in order to avail himself of any irregularity of such kind, must appear before the justice and there make objection.—Lindsay v. Tansley, 63 Hun, 635, 18 N. Y. Supp. 317.

[uu] (N. C. 1888) Where a justice's summons to answer a complaint for the detention of a mule does not specify its value, the defect is not cured by an affidavit stating the value to be about the amount to which the justice's jurisdiction is limited.—Leathers v. Morris, 101 N. C. 184, 7 S. E. 783.

[v] (N. C. 1893) Though a summons issued by one justice of the peace cannot be made returnable before another justice, except as is specially provided by statute in certain cases, where defendant proceeds to trial without objection, the justice before whom it is made returnable acquires jurisdiction.—Cherry v. Lilly, 113 N. C. 26, 18 S. E. 76.

[vv] (Pa. 1861) Where a nonresident has been sued before a justice of the peace with a long summons, instead of a short summons, as required by Act July 12, 1842, § 26, he is not estopped by acceptance of service from setting up want of jurisdiction in the justice in case no appearance has been made.—Fulmer v. Kinney, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 426.

[w] (Pa. 1888) A nonresident defendant, having been sued before a justice with a long summons, instead of a short summons, as required by Act April 6, 1842, § 26, is not estopped by acceptance of service from setting up want of jurisdiction in the justice in case no appearance has been made.—Fulmer v. Kinney, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 426; Myers v. Stauffer, Id. 657.

[ww] (S. C. 1888) The failure of a trial justice to sign the original summons is cured by the written acceptance of a copy of the summons.—Benson v. Carrier, 28 S. C. 119, 5 S. E. 272.

[x] (Tex. 1884) An answer to the merits in justice court is a waiver of, and cures, whatever defects there may have been in the citation or in its service.—Fulton v. Thomas, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 243.

[xx] (Vt. 1845) In trespass on a freehold before a justice of the peace, the writ will abate, if made returnable in the town where the land lies, if neither of the parties resides in that town.—June v. Conant, 17 Vt. 656.

[y] (Vt. 1847) If an attorney make a writ, and indorse his name on it as attorney for the plaintiff, and also sign the writ as justice of the peace, and, for want of a proper officer seasonably to be had, direct the writ to an indifferent person, by whom it is served, the process will abate.—Ingraham v. Leland, 19 Vt. 304.

[yy] (Vt. 1847) If the attorney who makes the writ signs it as justice of the peace, and takes a recognizance for costs, the process is abatable.—Ingraham v. Leland, 19 Vt. 304.

[z] (Vt. 1848) An objection, in an action commenced before a justice of the peace, that the writ was not made returnable in the town in which one of the parties resides, is matter of abatement, which, if not pleaded at the first appearance before the justice, is waived.—University of Vermont v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52.

[zz] (W. Va. 1887) If the summons in a case before a justice states a legal cause of action, and is in other respects sufficient, the justice ought not to quash it because it states two or more causes of action.—Fouse v. Vandervort, 30 W. Va. 327, 4 S. E. 298.

§ 265. Amendment or alteration.

Amendment on appeal, see post, § 681.

[a] (Ga. 1855) The officer may amend his return on a justice's court summons after judgment.—Freeman v. Carhart, 17 Ga. 348.

[b] (Ga. 1877) The fact that the summons in an action of account in the justice's or the county court does not have annexed to it a copy of the account sued on is not ground for dismissal, since the summons is amendable in that particular.—Woods v. Johnson, 58 Ga. 138.

[c] (Ga. 1886) Where a summons from a justice's court, which by Code, § 4139, is required to be addressed to a constable, and to command defendant to appear at the place of trial, is addressed to defendant, whose name does not appear on its face, but is elsewhere on the paper, the defects therein are amendable.—Telford v. Coggins, 76 Ga. 683.

[d] (Ill. 1875) Under Gross' St. 1872, p. 238, § 38, authorizing a justice of the peace to amend the summons so that it will conform to the names of the parties, a request for an amendment need not be made in writing.—Wadhams v. Hotchkiss, 80 Ill. 437.

[e] (Mass. 1854) A writ, made on the 26th of April, 1853, but bearing date of the 26th of May, 1853, returnable before a justice of the peace "on the 7th day of May next," and entered on the 7th of May, 1853, may be amended, by leave of the justice, after the appearance of the defendant, by substituting the true date.—McIniffe v. Wheelock, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 600.

[f] (Mass. 1862) A justice of the peace may allow an amendment of a writ returnable before him, before trial, reducing the ad damnum to a sum which will bring the case within his jurisdiction, if he has jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter.—Hart v. Waitt, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 532.

[g] (Mass. 1870) A justice of the peace may fix the day when a writ shall be returned before himself, by altering the return day of the writ in the hands of the officer before service, without violation of a prohibition (Gen. St. c. 120, § 53) against being "concerned in the institution" of a suit before himself.—Lapham v. Locke, 103 Mass. 555.

[h] (Mich. 1872) Under Comp. Laws, § 421, prohibiting any sheriff from drawing or filling up any writ, a sheriff's alteration of the teste and return day of a justice's summons, though by the justice's authority, renders the writ void.—Garrison v. Hoyt, 25 Mich. 509.

[i] (Mich. 1885) After judgment in a justice's court, service of notice of motion to amend the return to the writ, made on a person not specially authorized by defendant to be his attorney or agent for such judgment, does not give the justice jurisdiction of the motion.—Clark v. McGregor, 55 Mich. 412, 21 N. W. 866.

[j] (Mich. 1890) A judgment of a justice of the peace, offered in evidence in the circuit court, cannot be amended at that time by the justice, then in court, by indorsing on the summons, which was not served by an officer, that it was served by "any competent person," as required by How. Ann. St. § 6827.—King v. Bates, 80 Mich. 367, 45 N. W. 147, 20 Am. St. Rep. 518.

[k] (Mo. 1893) A town marshal, appointed by a justice as a special constable to serve a writ, cannot amend his return as special constable, to show that he acted as town marshal.—Mitchell v. Shaw, 53 Mo. App. 652.

[l] (Mo. 1895) A constable can amend a return so as to make it conform to the facts, with the permission of the justice in whose court the records remain.—Cassidy Bros. Commission Co. v. Estep, 63 Mo. App. 540, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 506.

[m] (N. J. 1880) An omission in a summons to describe a justice of the peace as of the county for which he is elected may be amended under section 112 of the small cause act.—Drake v. Berry, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 60.

[n] (N. Y. 1883) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 424, § 1, providing that the court in which any action shall be pending shall have power to amend any process, pleading, or proceeding in such action, either in form or substance, for the furtherance of justice, at any time before judgment rendered therein, a summons in a justice's court at the suit of several plaintiffs may be amended, after the return of the same, by changing the Christian name of one of the plaintiffs.—Brace v. Benson, 10 Wend. 213.

[o] (N. Y. 1847) A justice of the peace is authorized to amend the date and return of a summons, after it has been served.—Arnold v. Maltby, 4 Denio, 496.

[p] (N. Y. 1856) A justice has authority to allow the constable to amend his return; and this power is not lost by the defendant, after an unsuccessful objection to the jurisdiction, refusing to appear.—Perry v. Tynen, 22 Barb. 137.

[q, r] (N. Y. 1856) Code, § 173, allowing amendments to a constable's return, as well after as before judgment, is in addition to 2 Rev. St. p. 429, § 1, allowing amendments to be made at any time before judgment, and both remain in force.—Perry v. Tynen, 22 Barb. 137.

[s] (N. Y. 1864) A justice of the peace cannot amend a summons issued out of his court, by correcting the name of the defendant therein, after service of the summons, and when the defendant has not appeared.—Hoffman v. Fish, 18 Abb. Prac. 76.

[t] (N. Y. 1865) A justice of the peace has power to amend a summons, by correcting the year named in it, after the parties have appeared in the cause, where no objection is taken to the summons, and no motion is made to quash the proceedings on account of the error.—Bradbury v. Van Nostrand, 45 Barb. 194.

[u] (N. Y. 1880) Where a justice certified that he issued and delivered a summons on the 23d day of January, and the constable in his return certified that he served it on the 3d day of January, on affidavit that the constable inadvertently omitted the figure "2," the justice could amend the return before or after judgment.—Snyder v. Schram, 59 How. Prac. 404.

[v] (N. Y. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. § 723, which provides that, in pursuance of justice, a court may, at any stage of the action, amend any process by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, does not authorize the court to correct a mistake as to defendant's name in the summons, unless it has in some way obtained jurisdiction of his person; and where a summons issues from justice's court against defendant by a wrong name, and he does not appear, the judgment against him is void, though before its rendition the summons was so amended as to give his true name.—McGill v. Weil (Co. Ct.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 246, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 43.

[w] (N. C. 1886) The justice of the peace has power to make such amendments to the summons as will show the action to be within the jurisdiction of the court where it originated.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Barrett, 95 N. C. 36.

[x] (N. C. 1893) Where the original summons in an action before a justice to recover personalty fails to state the value, the justice may allow an amendment, under Code, § 840, rule 9, or section 908, giving him power to amend any warrant, process, pleading, or proceeding, either in form or substance, or under section 273, permitting an amendment inserting other allegations material to the case.—Cox v. Grisham, 113 N. C. 279, 18 S. E. 212.

[y] (Pa. 1891) Defendant testified that a material interlineation in a summons was made after service; the justice of the peace who tried the case testified to the contrary; and the constable was unable to say whether it was so made or not, but stated that the words in dispute were in the execution. The execution showed on its face that the constable was mistaken. Held, that the interlineation must be presumed to have been made before service.—Fitzgerald v. Campbell (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 396.

[yy] (Pa. 1892) Where a summons was served on the treasurer of a corporation, but in the return he is described as clerk, and the justice, on being informed of the fact, substitutes the word "treasurer" for "clerk," it is not such an irregularity as to call for reversing the judgment.—Albert Lewis Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Ruggles (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 34.

[z] (Vt. 1847) The county court has no power to permit the magistrate who signed the original writ to amend the direction, after the case has been entered in court, by inserting therein the statute reasons for making a special authorization to serve; and the affidavit of the magistrate that he omitted the requisite matter by mistake can have no effect.—Dolbear v. Hancock, 19 Vt. 388.

[zz] (Wis. 1865) In a justice's court, as in a court of record, the sheriff may be permitted, either before or after judgment, to amend his return to the summons according to the facts.—Bacon v. Bassett, 19 Wis. 45.

§ 266. What constitutes appearance in general.

Appearance by attorney as appearance of party, see post, §§ 277, 278.

—— in attachment suit, see post, § 289.

[a] (Del. 1842) A defendant, in an action before a justice of the peace, asked a postponement, and by letter put in a plea of the general issue, but declined appearing in person. Held, that this was an appearance, so as to authorize a judgment or hearing.—Davis v. Rees, 3 Har. 490.

[b] (Kan. 1894) An appearance by defendant after judgment in justice court by motion to set aside such judgment as void for want of service is not a general appearance.—Shaw v. Rowland, 32 Kan. 154, 4 Pac. 146.

[c] (Kan. 1894) An appearance before a justice to contest a summons and the service, and to dismiss the action, is not a general appearance.—Downing v. W. J. Gow & Bros. Mortg. Inv. Co., 53 Kan. 246, 36 Pac. 335.

[d] (Mich. 1892) A written request by plaintiff, presented to a justice of the peace at the time the writ was returnable, to continue the case, constitutes an appearance on his part, and gives the justice jurisdiction to act.—Wagner v. Kellogg, 92 Mich. 616, 52 N. W. 1017.

[e] (Mo. 1883) Where, in an action brought before a justice, neither party was a resident of the county, defendant's taking out subpœnas for witnesses and moving for security for costs, preliminary to a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, does not constitute an appearance sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the justice, even admitting that it could be conferred by consent.—Smith v. Simpson, 80 Mo. 634.

[f] (Neb. 1895) A motion by defendant in a justice court for a retaxation of costs constitutes a general appearance.—Dryfus v. Moline Milburn & Stoddard Co., 43 Neb. 233, 61 N. W. 599.

[g] (N. Y. 1870) Where a short summons is issued from a justice under the act of 1831, and returned not personally served, and the defendant appears in person to object to the sufficiency of the affidavit, such appearance is not a general appearance, and does not confer jurisdiction.—Stevens v. Benton, 39 How. Prac. 13.

[h] (N. Y. 1895) Defendant in civil action, who is brought before justice under warrant of arrest, does not voluntarily appear in action.—Ramsay v. Robinson, 86 Hun, 511, 33 N. Y. Supp. 910.

[i] (Wash. 1889) Code, § 1755, provides that the parties to an action in a justice's court, shall be entitled to one hour in which to appear, after the time mentioned in the notice for appearance. Section 72 provides that "a defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him." Held, that a defendant must, in person or by attorney, give notice of his appearance within an hour of the time set for trial, and a mere corporal presence of defendant or his agent at the place of trial, within the hour, is not sufficient.—McCoy v. Bell, 1 Wash. St. 504, 20 Pac. 595.

§ 267. Operation and effect in general.

Appearance before justice taking cause on change of venue, see ante, § 240.

—— in circuit court after removal from justice, see ante, § 244 [w].

[a] (U. S. 1860) An appearance by an agent of the owner and a defense of the suit by him will not give to the justice jurisdiction of a claim against a vessel, where the verified complaint required by statute, setting out the plaintiff's demand in all particulars, is not complied with.—The G. H. Montague, Fed. Cas. No. 5,377 [4 Blatchf. 461].

[b] (U. S. 1880) Where plaintiff's affidavit of value of chattels sought to be recovered in a justice's court was an essential prerequisite to the attaching of jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the failure to make the affidavit was not waived by defendant's appearing and not taking the objection.—Dailey v. Doe (D. C.) 3 Fed. 903.

[c, d] (Ark.) Where a defendant has appeared before a justice of the peace, he cannot, on appeal after a trial upon the merits, claim that the justice had not jurisdiction of his person.—(1867) Sykes v. Laferry, 25 Ark. 99; (1887) Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Donahoe, 49 Ark. 318, 5 S. W. 342.

[e] (Ind. 1865) Where the justice before whom a cause was tried had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, and the parties appeared and submitted without objection to the jurisdiction over their persons, an objection to the jurisdiction will not be heard on appeal.—Vanschoiack v. Farrow, 25 Ind. 310.

[f, g] (Ind. 1885) Where a person appears before a justice, and goes to trial without pleading to the jurisdiction, he waives all question as to jurisdiction over his person, and no such question can be raised by motion to dismiss.—Day v. Henry, 104 Ind. 324, 4 N. E. 44.

[h] (Mich. 1880) A general appearance before a justice of the peace by defendant in attachment cannot be considered a submission to the jurisdiction, when taken in connection with defendant's motion to dismiss the writ for want of proper service.—Michels v. Stork, 44 Mich. 2, 5 N. W. 1034.

[i] (Mich.) An appearance by attorney before a justice of the peace for the sole purpose of presenting an objection for all the defendants will not authorize the justice to receive evidence to prove the guilt of the objecting defendant with the others of an alleged joint conversion, and to award judgment against her.—(1880) McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129, 6 N. W. 210; (1881) Monroe v. Heintzman, 46 Mich. 12, 8 N. W. 571.

[j] (Mich. 1894) Any objection in a justice court to the sufficiency of the declaration constitutes a general demurrer, and gives the court jurisdiction.—Stevens v. Harris, 99 Mich. 230, 58 N. W. 230.

[k] (Minn. 1881) The term of office of a justice of the peace before whom an action had been commenced by summons expired before the return day of the summons. On the return day the parties appeared before the successor of the justice who issued the summons to whom the docket had been delivered, as required by law, and filed a complaint and answers, and the cause was then adjourned on defendant's motion. Held, that defendant consented to the jurisdiction of the new justice, within Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 10, providing that "actions may be instituted before a justice of the peace, either by the voluntary appearance and agreement of the parties or by the usual process."—Anderson v. Hanson, 28 Minn. 400, 10 N. W. 429.

[l, m] (Minn. 1886) The special appearance of a defendant in an action before a justice of the peace for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the justice over his person, and his presence in court when the case is tried, cannot constitute a submission to the jurisdiction.—Higgins v. Beveridge, 35 Minn. 285, 28 N. W. 506.

[n, o] (Mo. 1859) When a justice has jurisdiction over the subject-matter, the appearance of the defendant and his consent to a continuance are a waiver of any objection to the jurisdiction of the person.—Bohn v. Devlin, 28 Mo. 319.

[p] (Neb. 1892) Defendant, by appearing before a justice and moving to set aside his default, submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court and waived all objections to the jurisdiction over his person.—Leake v. Gallogly, 34 Neb. 857, 52 N. W. 824.

[q] (Neb. 1895) A motion by defendant in a justice court for a retaxation of costs, being a general appearance, waives objections to jurisdiction over him.—Dryfus v. Moline, Milburn & Stoddard Co., 43 Neb. 233, 61 N. W. 599.

[r] (N. Y. 1811) The appearance of the defendant, and going to trial before a justice, will not give him jurisdiction, where there is none in law.—Low v. Rice, 8 Johns. 409.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) Though a justice has no jurisdiction of a suit against a foreign corporation, such corporation may confer jurisdiction by appearing and answering without objecting to the want of jurisdiction.—Paulding v. Hudson Mfg. Co., 3 Code Rep. 223.

[t] (N. Y. 1859) Where proceedings were begun before one justice, and adjourned to his private office outside of his district, at which place by consent of parties, the justice being absent, the parties submitted the case on the pleadings to another justice, it not appearing by the return that the first justice was absent from or unable to attend at his usual place of holding court, the latter did not acquire jurisdiction by appearance to try the case at the adjourned time and place, as the absence of the first amounted to a discontinuance.—Reed v. Warth, 2 Hilt. 281.

[u] (N. Y. 1869) Laws 1831, c. 300, §§ 37, 38, relating to attachments, provides that, if the attachment shall be returned personally served on defendant, the justice shall on the return day proceed to hear, etc., and that if, at the return day, it appear by the return that property was attached, and a copy of the inventory and attachment was not personally served, and defendant shall not appear, plaintiff may take out a summons against defendant, and if such summons be returned that defendant cannot be found after diligent inquiry, or that the same has been personally served on defendant, in either case the justice shall proceed to hear, etc., as upon a summons returned personally served. Held that, where defendant does not on return of summons, appear specially and object to the irregularity of the attachment proceedings, and claim that jurisdiction has not been obtained, but appears generally and voluntarily joins issue in the action on the merits, he confers jurisdiction, if it has not been previously acquired.—Stevens v. Benton, 2 Lans. 156.

[v] (Ohio, 1876) A justice of the peace, pending a civil action before him, resigned, and transferred his docket, papers, etc., to the nearest justice of the township. The parties to the action appeared before the latter justice and agreed on a day for the trial. The defendant also demanded a jury, which was accordingly awarded him. Held a waiver of all objection to the jurisdiction of the justice.—Pittsburg, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Fleming, 30 Ohio St. 480.

[w] (Ohio, 1878) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, defendant, instead of objecting to the court's jurisdiction before appearance, appears and makes such objection, and also pleads payment and the general issue, he waives the objection as to jurisdiction and submits thereto.—Miller v. Creighton, 7 Ohio Dec. 602, 4 Wkly. Law Bul. 139.

[x] (Utah, 1896) If a defendant appears in justice court in obedience to the summons, and consents to proceed with the trial, he waives any objection he may have based on the justice's want of jurisdiction over his person.—Kuhn v. Mount, 13 Utah, 108, 44 Pac. 1036.

[y] (Wash. 1890) Defendant appeared before a justice, and asked for a continuance for one day, which was granted, and on the next day he appeared specially and objected to the jurisdiction for certain irregularities. Held, that his appearance had not conferred jurisdiction.—Nelson v. Campbell, 1 Wash. St. 261, 24 Pac. 539.

§ 268. Waiver of defects in general.

In garnishment proceeding, see post, § 297 [y].

[a] (Ariz. 1894) Illegality in the justice's proceedings is not waived by special appearance to object to the jurisdiction, nor by answer and defense after objection overruled.—Dial v. Olsen, 36 Pac. 175.

[b] (Del. 1845) Though a justice of the peace can render judgment only on a day to which the case stands adjourned, objection cannot be taken if the parties appeared and went to trial on another day.—Lynch's Ex'r v. Hill, 4 Har. 312.

[c] (Ill. 1864) A motion to dismiss a suit commenced before a justice of the peace for obstructing a public highway, for the want of a complaint in writing, will not be granted, where the defendant has previously appeared and obtained a continuance of the cause.—Clifford v. Town of Eagle, 35 Ill. 444.

[d] (Ind. 1861) In replevin before a justice, any defects in the affidavits are cured by an appearance, and going to trial on the merits without objection made.—Smith v. Emerson, 16 Ind. 355.

[e] (Ind. 1891) Where a judgment rendered on default in a justice's court was set aside on motion of defendant, and on the day set for the new trial plaintiff, by her attorneys, was present and agreed to a continuance, she is deemed to have waived any objections to the order setting aside the default.—State v. Martin, 3 Ind. App. 20, 29 N. E. 164.

[f] (Iowa, 1873) Error in refusal of a justice of the peace to dismiss an action for want of prosecution is waived by defendant's subsequent appearance and motion for change of venue.—Rahn v. Greer, 37 Iowa, 627.

[g] (Kan. 1887) Where a justice of the peace made an order granting a new trial after the expiration of the five days allowed by law for such order, and plaintiff acquiesced in the decision, and submitted his cause and person to the justice's jurisdiction, and also to that of the district court, he was precluded from objecting to the jurisdiction of the justice granting the order.—Scott v. Kreamer, 37 Kan. 753, 16 Pac. 123.

[h] (Mich. 1881) Where a justice, becoming ill, directs that a suit, begun before him, be tried before another justice having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the parties, by appearing and trying the case on its merits without objection, waive all questions of regularity, and the judgment is binding.—Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 338, 9 N. W. 440.

[i] (Minn. 1874) The failure of a justice to enter in his docket a statement of plaintiff's demand and defendant's set-off, where the pleadings are in writing, is a mere irregularity, which is waived by defendant's voluntary appearance, joinder in pleading, and going to trial on the merits.—Steinhart v. Pitcher, 20 Minn. 102 (Gil. 86).

[j] (Mo. 1883) The requirement that, on change of venue from a justice of the peace, the papers must be sent to the nearest justice, not being jurisdictional, is waived by an appearance to the merits before the justice to whom the papers are sent.—Voigt v. Avery, 14 Mo. App. 48.

[k] (Mo. 1890) After a nonsuit on a trial before a justice of the peace, the justice, by consent of the parties, set aside the nonsuit, and the case was again tried by him, the parties voluntarily appearing at such trial. Held, that the judgment rendered by the justice thereon was valid, though a justice has no power to set aside a nonsuit or other judgment or grant a new trial.—State v. Boettger, 39 Mo. App. 684.

[l] (Mo. 1890) Where one of the defendants personally appeared at the trial, and another personally entered his appearance at the date of the trial, they could not complain that the justice's docket failed to show a continuance from a return day to the day of actual return five days later.—Building & Planing Mill Co. v. Huber, 42 Mo. App. 432.

[m] (Mo. 1890) A justice of the peace having no authority to set aside a judgment not rendered by default, appearance at the new trial will not confer jurisdiction.—Leith v. Shingleton, 42 Mo. App. 449.,

[n] (Neb. 1889) Judgment by default was rendered by a justice against defendant, after appearance and adjournment, which judgment was, on motion, set aside under the provisions of Civ. Code, § 1001. Defendant thereupon filed a motion for a change of venue, which was granted, the cause being sent to another justice, where both parties appeared, and on the demand of the plaintiff a jury trial was had on the merits. Held that, by the appearance and trial before the second justice, the plaintiff waived whatever error was committed by the first justice in setting aside the judgment and granting a new trial.—Dawson v. Welsh, 25 Neb. 626, 41 N. W. 549.

[o] (N. Y. 1823) Where a cause has been discontinued by reason of the justice's nonattendance at the adjourned day, the parties may confer jurisdiction by appearing and going to trial on another day agreed on.—Stoddard v. Holmes, 1 Cow. 245.

[p] (N. Y. 1848) In a justice's court, where defendant pleaded puis darrein continuance an agreement to submit to arbitration the matters in controversy, the fact that defendant appeared on the trial after the plea was overruled by the justice will not be taken as a waiver by defendant of the discontinuance of the suit.—Ressequie v. Brownson, 4 Barb. 541.

[q] (N. Y. 1856) A justice who had adjourned a case until 11 o'clock of a certain day, thinking that the hour of adjournment was 10 o'clock, by mistake gave judgment against the defendant, who having subsequently appeared, the default was taken off, and the case was tried on its merits. Held that, if there was any irregularity in these proceedings, it was waived by the action of the defendant, and the judgment was affirmed.—Scranton v. Levy, 1 Hilt. 261, 4 Abb. Prac. 21.

[r] (Ohio, 1894) Where, in replevin, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of defendant, and the latter appears, and gives a redelivery bond, and proceeds to trial on the merits, the justice is not deprived of jurisdiction because the affidavit filed by plaintiff does not contain certain allegations required by statute.—Gaiser v. Heim, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 120.

[s] (Pa. 1842) Irregularities are waived by appearance and confession of judgment.—Quay v. Kuckner, 3 Pa. Law J. 307.

[t] (Pa. 1844) Though the affidavit made and bonds executed by the plaintiff under Act July 12, 1842, § 27, in order to secure an attachment, are defective, the defendant waives the irregularity by appearing and confessing judgment.—Quay v. Kuckner, 2 Clark, 79.

[u] (Pa. 1868) Defendant's appearance at the hearing before the justice in a qui tam action waives the want of an information.—Adams v. Commonwealth, 1 Woodw. Dec. 417.

[v] (Tex. 1857) Where, in an action on a note, the justice issued a distress warrant, no bond being given nor affidavit made until after such issue, and defendant appeared and made no objection, but by agreement of parties the matter was submitted to arbitrators, and on their award in plaintiff's favor execution issued, defendant could not maintain trespass against the justice for the improper issuance of the distress, having waived the right by his appearance and submission.—Mabry v. Little, 19 Tex. 337.

[w] (Tex. 1870) Appearing and defending on a new trial without objection is a waiver of any irregularity in the proceedings of the justice granting it.—McHam v. Gentry, 33 Tex. 441.

[x] (Wis. 1860) Complaint before a justice for seaman's wages was signed, "H. T.," and the jurat was added: "Subscribed and sworn to before me, this," etc. "J. H. H., Just. of Peace." Held, that any defect in this verification, if it were defective, was cured by the appearance of the master, and his going to trial on the merits, without objecting to the defect.—Anderson v. Morris, 12 Wis. 689.

§ 269. Waiver of objections to jurisdiction over amount involved.

[a] (Iowa, 1886) A justice of the peace does not gain jurisdiction of an action, in which the notice claims a greater sum than he has jurisdiction of, by the defendant appearing and demurring to the notice on the ground that the justice has no jurisdiction, nor by the plaintiff filing his petition, after such appearance, for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court.—Hynds v. Fay, 70 Iowa, 433, 30 N. W. 683.

[b] (Pa. 1890) Where an attachment is issued by a justice of the peace for an amount in excess of his jurisdiction, but defendant appears and makes a defense on the merits, the rest of the proceedings will be allowed to stand, though the attachment will be quashed.—Fair v. Hamlin (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 8.

[c] (Tex. 1857) When the holder of a promissory note for a greater sum than $100, in order to sue in a justice's court, relinquished the excess of the note above that sum, and the defendant appeared and made no objection, defendant could not maintain trespass against the justice for want of jurisdiction, having waived the right by his appearance and submission.—Mabry v. Little, 19 Tex. 337.

§ 270. Waiver of disqualification of justice.

[a] (N. Y. 1816) A justice of the peace who keeps a tavern being disqualified from trying a cause, appearance and consent to trial before him cannot confer jurisdiction.—Clayton v. Per Dun, 13 Johns. 218.

[b] (Vt. 1836) Where a justice of the peace, interested as bail for the prosecution, continues a cause, and the parties appear at the time and place to which the cause is continued, take a trial on the merits, and interpose no objection on account of the improper continuance, they cannot afterwards move to dismiss for that reason; the irregularity being waived.—Howe v. Hosford, 8 Vt. 220.

[c] (Vt. 1851) If, after a suit has been once continued by the justice of the peace before whom the writ is made returnable, it be again continued, in the absence of the justice, by another justice of the peace, who is related to the plaintiff within the fourth degree of consanguinity, yet if the defendant subsequently appear in the suit, and suffer a judgment to be rendered against him by consent, and appeal therefrom to the county court, it will be a waiver by him of the irregularity in the previous proceedings.—Austin v. Smith, 23 Vt. 704.

[a] (Colo. 1882) By appearance one may waive his right to be sued in a justice's court of the township of his residence, if the justice before whom the case is brought has jurisdiction of the subject-matter.—Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Roberts, 6 Colo. 333.

[b] (Ind. 1891) A defendant, who appears and defends an action before a justice of the peace, without first raising any question as to jurisdiction, cannot object, on appeal, that the complaint does not affirmatively show that the action was brought in the proper township.—Buck v. Young, 1 Ind. App. 558, 27 N. E. 1106.

[c] (Iowa, 1849) Under Laws 1847, p. 90, § 6, limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to suits in which citizens of the county are defendants, nonresident defendants, by appearing and going to trial, do not waive the jurisdictional objection.—Chapman v. Morgan, 2 G. Greene, 374.

[d] (Iowa, 1873) After appearing, and moving for and obtaining a change of venue to another justice, it is too late for defendant to object to the jurisdiction on the ground that suit was commenced against him in another county than his residence.—Post v. Brownell, 36 Iowa, 497.

[e] (Iowa, 1876) In an action before a justice of the peace against a citizen of another county, jurisdiction is not conferred by the appearance of the defendant; and, even after such appearance, a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction should be sustained.—Boyer v. Moore, 42 Iowa, 544.

[f] (Mass. 1863) A defendant, who has voluntarily appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace before whom an action against him has been brought, cannot afterwards, when the case has been brought by appeal to the superior court, object to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the writ was served upon him, and that he lived, in another county than that in which it was returnable.—Cahoon v. Harlow, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 151.

[g] (Miss. 1892) Under Const. 1869, art. 6, § 23, providing that "a competent number of justices of the peace * * * shall be chosen in each county by the qualified electors thereof, by districts," a provision of the town charter making the mayor ex officio justice of the peace for the whole district of which the town is a part is void as to that part of the district outside of the town, and the appearance of defendant before such justice of the peace is not a waiver of his right to raise the question in the circuit court of the jurisdiction of the justice, within Code 1880, § 2354, providing that "appeals to the circuit court shall be tried anew," unless it appears on appeal "that the suit was brought before a justice of the peace not having jurisdiction," when the suit shall be dismissed.—Heggie v. Stone, 70 Miss. 39, 12 South. 253.

[h] (N. Y. 1848) Under 2 Rev. Laws, p. 379, § 103 peremptorily requiring an action in a justice's court to be dismissed where neither party resides within the justice's district, appearing and going to trial does not confer jurisdiction.—Cornell v. Smith, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 290.

[i] (Ohio, 1876) Where, in an action before the magistrate of a township, the defendants appear and file an affidavit for a continuance, such appearance waives the objection to the magistrate's jurisdiction of the persons of defendants that they are both residents of another township, and such objection cannot be made on the expiration of the continuance.—Mack v. Stephens, 7 Ohio Dec. 92, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 104.

[j] (Tex. 1884) A plea to be sued in the county of residence comes too late when the cause has been continued by consent, since the parties by appearing gave the court jurisdiction.—McDonald v. Blount, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 344.

§ 272. Waiver of process or notice.

In attachment suit, see post, § 289 [g].

[a] (Ark. 1839) Where one of several defendants in a justice's court is not served with process, but appears, and joins in a writ of error, he must be regarded as duly served.—Woolford v. Howell, 2 Ark. (2 Pike) 1.

[b] (Ark. 1852) In a suit before a justice of the peace, where there is no valid service on the defendant, if he appears on the return day, obtains a continuance, and on judgment against him appeals, he becomes a party to the cause.—Jester v. Hopper, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 43.

[c] (Ga. 1887) Under Code, § 3335, providing that appearance and pleading waive service, appearance in a justice's court, and pleading in writing to the merits, will not waive service, if want of service be likewise pleaded, since matters in abatement and in bar may be pleaded in the same answer.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Pitts, 79 Ga. 532, 4 S. E. 921.

[d] (Ill. 1873) Where the record of a case tried before a justice of the peace shows that a summons was issued and returned served, but not the manner of the service, and that the defendants appeared and went to trial, the appearance will give the justice jurisdiction, whether the summons was served or not.—Fink v. Disbrow, 69 Ill. 76.

[e] (Ill. 1873) A justice of the peace may proceed with the case as though the defendant had appeared in obedience to a summons duly issued and served, where a defendant appears in the justice's court and voluntarily submits to its jurisdiction without the issuance and service of summons.—Bliss v. Harris, 70 Ill. 343.

[f] (Ill. 1876) A voluntary appearance before a justice dispenses with process.—Hohmann v. Eiterman, 83 Ill. 92.

[g] (Ill. 1878) Where no summons is served in an action before a justice, the appearance of defendant by his attorney and taking an appeal to the circuit court supersedes the necessity of the summons.—Reynolds v. Town of Foster, 89 Ill. 259.

[h] (Ill. 1894) One who becomes defendant to a pending replevin suit, and voluntarily appears, waives the filing of an affidavit as to him, and the issue of a writ and service thereof.—Udell v. Slocum, 56 Ill. App. 216.

[i] (Kan. 1894) A special appearance before a justice to contest a summons and the service, and to dismiss the action, is not a waiver of service.—Downing v. W. J. Gow & Bros. Mortgage Inv. Co., 53 Kan. 246, 36 Pac. 335.

[j] (Mo. 1831) Where a legal notice has not been given, the court will not presume such notice from the fact that the party entitled to such notice comes into court and moves to dismiss the cause; but if the party to whom notice should have been given proceeds in the cause by pleading to the merits, or by doing any other act to admit notice, the court will presume such notice.—Bonney v. Baldwin, 3 Mo. 49.

[k] (N. Y. 1842) Where a defendant in a justice's court waives objections to the jurisdiction, and appears, the court has jurisdiction of his person, though there be no process to bring in the defendant.—Malone v. Clark, 2 Hill, 657.

[l] (N. Y. 1850) The appearance of a defendant before a justice, by attorney, on the return of an attachment, supersedes the necessity of a summons, and gives the justice jurisdiction of the cause.—Conway v. Hitchins, 9 Barb. 378.

[m] (Wis. 1853) An appearance, plea, and submission of a cause to a justice of the peace waive any want of service.—Heeron v. Beckwith, 1 Wis. 17.

§ 273. Waiver of defects in process or notice.

Appearance on appeal as waiver of defects in process, see post, §§ 596–598.
In attachment suit, see post, § 289 [t].

[a] Failure to indorse the amount of plaintiff's claim on the summons issued by the justice of the peace is waived by general appearance.
—(Ind. 1839) Swift v. Woods, 5 Blackf. 97;
(Iowa, 1849) Hedinger v. Silsbee, 2 G. Greene, 363.

[b] (Del. 1858) Though it is error for a justice to issue a summons returnable forthwith on the representation of plaintiff that he believed he would lose the benefit of the process by delay, without his oath thereto or without the justice being otherwise satisfied of its truth, the defect is waived and cured by defendant's appearance and going to trial without excepting to it.—Bishop v. Carpenter, 1 Houst. 526.

[c] (Ill. 1864) If a capias is improperly issued, instead of a summons, but the defendant is not arrested, and voluntarily appears, it answers the same purpose as a summons, and there is no ground for quashing the writ.—Ewbanks v. Town of Ashley, 36 Ill. 177.

[d] (Ill. 1873) Defendant's appearance was sufficient to invest the justice with jurisdiction to render judgment against him for the amount claimed by plaintiff in an action in which defendant was brought before the justice on a capias, without its appearing that an affidavit was filed sufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ, and in which he voluntarily confessed that he was indebted to plaintiff in the sum demanded, and that it was due and unpaid, without making any objection to the manner of bringing him into court.—Bliss v. Harris, 70 Ill. 343.

[e] (Ill. 1883) The failure of a justice's summons, issued to one whose land is sought to be taken for a public highway, to run in the name of the people, as required by law, is waived by his appearance at the trial without objection.—McManus v. McDonough, 107 Ill. 95.

[f] (Ind. 1844) Where defendant appeared to an action before a justice of the peace without objecting to the process, he cannot object to it on appeal in the circuit court.—Vermilya v. Davis, 7 Blackf. 158.

[g] (Ind. 1845) Defendant, by appearing to a suit in a justice's court and pleading in bar, waives all objection to the form of the process.—Dudley v. Fisher, 7 Blackf. 553.

[h] (Ind. 1861) In replevin before a justice, any defects in the manner of bringing defendants into court are cured by appearance and going to trial on the merits without objection.—Smith v. Emerson, 16 Ind. 355.

[i] (Ind. 1883) Where defendant appears in an action before a justice and procures a continuance, he cannot move, on appeal in the circuit court, to set aside the summons for insufficiency.—Sargent v. Flaid, 90 Ind. 501.

[j] (Miss. 1885) Where a writ issued by a justice of the peace of one district, and made returnable to "a justice's court to be held at" a place in another district, omitted the name of the justice before whom it was to be returned, held, that defect was waived by the appearance of the parties before a justice at the place named.—Armitage v. Rector, 62 Miss. 600.

[k] (Mo. 1858) Where a writ is made returnable before a justice of the peace in less time than that fixed by law, the defect is not waived by an appearance for a motion to dismiss.—Williams v. Bower, 26 Mo. 601.

[l] (Mo. 1873) Under Wag. St. p. 813, art. 2, § 4, providing that "suits may be instituted before a justice either by voluntary appearance or by process," the defendant's voluntary appearance is a waiver of all defects of process.—Griffin v. Van Meter, 53 Mo. 430.

[m] (Mo. 1875) Where a party appears so far as to consent to a continuance, he waives any insufficiency of summons and brings himself within the jurisdiction of the court.—Peters v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co., 59 Mo. 406.

[n] (Nev. 1865) An objection to a summons in a suit before a justice of the peace, that it had no revenue stamp, is too late after the defendant has appeared and answered.—Armstrong v. Paul, 1 Nev. 134.

[o] (N. J. 1848) Any irregularity in issuing a warrant is waived by the appearance of defendant before the justice and entering into recognizance, without objection.—Foulkes v. Young, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 438.

[p] (N. J. 1880) An omission in a summons to describe a justice as of the county for which he is elected may be cured by appearance and proceeding without objection.—Drake v. Berry, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 60.

[q] (N. J. 1889) In an action against a tenant for removal, formal defects in a summons are waived by an appearance, adjournment on application of the tenant, subsequent trial, and examination of witnesses, before objection is made.—Palmer v. Sanders, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 408, 17 Atl. 1084.

[r] (N. Y. 1804) Defects in a warrant issued by a justice of the peace are cured by the party appearing and pleading the general issue.—Day v. Wilber, 2 Caines, 134.

[s] (N. Y. 1850) Defects in the process are waived by an appearance and answer without objection, in an action in a justice's court.—Heilner v. Barras, 3 Code Rep. 17.

[t] (N. Y. 1850) Though the service and return of a summons containing no statement of the cause of action gives the justice no jurisdiction, if defendant appears and pleads, the defect is waived and cannot be urged on appeal.—Hogan v. Baker, 2 E. D. Smith, 22.

[tt] (N. Y. 1852) A justice, having no jurisdiction of the cause by virtue of the summons issued, may, by the defendant's appearance and plea, acquire jurisdiction of the person.—Andrews v. Thorp, 1 E. D. Smith, 615.

[u] (N. Y. 1863) A summons to a nonresident, in the form of that to a resident of the county, is an irregularity, under the statute, which declares that in such case the justice shall have no jurisdiction, but not a nullity; and the defendant, appearing and pleading, without objection to the form of summons, waives the irregularity, and cannot afterwards object to a judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction.—Clapp v. Graves, 26 N. Y. 418.

[uu] (Pa.) Where defendant appears in response to a summons from the alderman, made returnable after too long a time, the appearance cures the irregularity.—(1808) Stroup v. McClure, 4 Yeates, 523; (1885) McGinley v. McDonough, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 202.

[v] (Pa. 1851) Though the commencement of an action for the arrest of defendant on a capias for his simple breach of contract is illegal, the appearance of defendant waives the irregularity.—Shannon v. Madden, 1 Phila. 254.

[vv] (Pa. 1868) Defendant's appearance at the hearing before a justice in a qui tam action waives defects in the summons.—Adams v. Commonwealth, 1 Woodw. Dec. 417.

[w] (Pa. 1869) Proceedings were begun under Landlord and Tenant Act Dec. 14, 1863, § 1 (P. L. 1864, p. 1125), to recover certain leased premises; the justice issuing an ordinary summons in debt without reference to any complaint made. The defendant came to the office at the time of the hearing, but would not remain to make any defense or hear testimony. Held not such an appearance as waived the irregularity of the summons.—Givens v. Miller, 62 Pa. (12 P. F. Smith) 133.

[ww] (Pa. 1887) The appearance of the defendant cures any irregularity in the summons.—Tuttle v. Sheridan, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 1.

[x] (Pa. 1888) Though a short summons was issued, in place of a long summons, in an action before a justice of the peace, a defense to the merits is a waiver of the objections to the regularity of the summons.—Myers v. Stauffer, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 657.

[xx] (S. C. 1888) Where a summons is made returnable in less than the time required by law, the defect is waived by appearance before the justice without objection and a defense to the action.—Benson v. Carrier, 28 S. C. 119, 5 S. E. 272.

[y] (S. C. 1896) Though a justice's summons requires defendant to appear within less than the time provided by Code, § 88, subd. 16, as amended by Act Dec. 22, 1891, defendant, by appearing before judgment, and answering and demurring to the merits, waives his right to question the jurisdiction of the justice because of such defect.—Rosamond v. Earle, 46 S. C. 9, 24 S. E. 44.

[yy] (W. Va. 1891) In order to take advantage of any defect in the summons in a justice's court, defendant must appear for that purpose only, and must so state in submitting the motion to quash; and a general appearance, whether to move a continuance or for any other purpose, will be regarded as a waiver of all defects in the writ.—Layne v. Ohio River R. Co., 35 W. Va. 438, 14 S. E. 123.

[z] (W. Va. 1891) If, in a justice's court, defendant appears and submits two motions simultaneously, one for a continuance and one to quash the return on the writ, and at a subsequent day, to which the case has been continued, he appears, and, without requiring the justice to act upon his motion to quash, files an informal plea in bar and proceeds to trial, he will be deemed to have waived his objection to the writ.—Layne v. Ohio River R. Co., 35 W. Va. 438, 14 S. E. 123.

[zz] (Wis. 1875) Defendant having appeared before the justice, pleaded to the merits, and gone to trial, and having afterwards appealed and litigated the cause on the merits in the circuit court, all defects in the process were waived, and the court had jurisdiction to try and determine the controversy.—Fairfield v. Madison Mfg. Co., 38 Wis. 346.

§ 274. Waiver of defects in service or return of process.

In attachment suit, see post, § 289 [m, x, y].

[a] (Colo. 1888) Where, after a special appearance by a railroad company in response to a summons served on a station agent, it appears generally, and moves for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case, it thereby waives any objections to the service, and becomes subject to the jurisdiction of the justice.—Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 11 Colo. 545, 19 Pac. 542.

[b] (Ill. 1878) An appearance before a justice and the taking of an appeal to the circuit court waives any defect in the service of process.—Reynolds v. Town of Foster, 89 Ill. 257.

[c] (Iowa, 1862) A defendant cannot, after he has by his own appearance or that of his attorney recognized the validity of service of notice on his agent, object to the jurisdiction of the court.—Baker v. Kerr, 13 Iowa, 884.

[d] (Iowa, 1878) Under Code 1873, §§ 2626, 3516, appearance by attorney before a justice to object to the jurisdiction precludes objection to the sufficiency of the service of summons.—Church v. Crossman, 49 Iowa, 444.

[e] (Kan. 1884) An appearance by defendant, after judgment in justice's court, by motion to set aside such judgment as void for want of service, does not waive defects of service.—Shaw v. Rowland, 32 Kan. 154, 4 Pac. 146.

[f] (Mass. 1861) A defendant is deemed to have waived a defect in the service of a summons from a justice's court where, after he had been defaulted, he appeared generally for the purpose of objecting to the taxation of costs in the justice court, and appealed from the taxation made by the clerk, and, on its affirmance by the court, entered a general appeal from the judgment. Hence he cannot thereafter, on appeal, for the first time raise the objection that the service of the summons was defective.—Briggs v. Humphrey, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 371.

[g] (Mich. 1882) A justice does not lose jurisdiction of a proceeding to recover possession of land merely because the constable does not make return to the summons until an hour after the time fixed, if the parties are present and remain in attendance without objection.—Olson v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 85, 13 N. W. 369.

[h] (Mich. 1895) Irregularities relating to the sufficiency of the service and return of summons in an action before a justice are cured where the parties appear and adjourn the case by consent, without pleading.—Waldron v. Palmer, 104 Mich. 556, 62 N. W. 731.

[i] (Minn. 1872) The summons in a justice's court was returned "served by leaving a copy," etc., instead of "by reading the same to defendant," as prescribed by statute. Held, that defendant, by appearing and neglecting to object to such service, waived the defect, though such appearance was special, and for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the justice upon other grounds.—Tyrrell v. Jones, 18 Minn. 312 (Gil. 281).

[j] (Minn. 1874) The service of summons in an action by the city marshal, as well as the failure to enter on the docket the official return, are mere irregularities, which are waived by the voluntary appearance of the defendant, joining in the pleadings, and going to trial on the merits.—Steinhart v. Pitcher, 20 Minn. 102 (Gil. 86).

[k] (Mo. 1883) By appearing generally before a justice and moving to set aside a judgment by default, defendant waives any defect in the service of the summons.—Gant v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 79 Mo. 502; Fitterling v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 79 Mo. 504.

[l] (Mo. 1883) Defendant, by appearing before a justice and introducing evidence after the denial of his special motion to dismiss the suit, waives defective service and confers jurisdiction of his person on the court.—Fitterling v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 79 Mo. 504.

[m] (Mo. 1886) An appearance has the effect of waiving defects in service of summons, etc. Such appearance may take place a number of times before the cause is finally submitted for trial.—Smith v. Wineland, 21 Mo. App. 387.

[n] (N. Y. 1803) In summary proceeding before a justice to dispossess tenants for nonpayment of rent, an irregularity in the service of process is cured by defendants' general appearance on the return day.—Grafton v. Brigham, 70 Hun, 131, 24 N. Y. Supp. 54.

[o] (Ohio, 1876) In a civil action before a justice of the peace, the defendant, who had not been legally served, filed with the justice before the trial a bill of particulars of his set-off in the action. Held a voluntary appearance, conferring upon the justice jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.—Godfred v. Godfred, 30 Ohio St. 53.

[p] (Ohio, 1880) The judgment debtor cannot allege want of jurisdiction of a justice over his person where he appears and causes an undertaking for stay of execution to be approved; his action being a waiver of any defect in the service of the summons in the action.—Shafer v. Hockheimer, 36 Ohio St. 215.

[q] (Pa. 1883) One who appears before a justice, and goes to trial without objection, waives all questions relating to the return of summons and the time of service.—Weidenhamer v. Bertle, 103 Pa. 448.

[r] (W. Va. 1891) In order to take advantage of any defect in the return of process in a justice's court, defendant must appear specially for that purpose, and a general appearance, whether to move a continuance or for any other purpose, will be regarded as a waiver of defects in the return.—Layne v. Ohio River R. Co., 35 W. Va. 438, 14 S. E. 123.

[s] (Wis. 1853) Where defendant appeared before a justice on the return day of the writ and pleaded to the action, witnesses were sworn on the issue, and the cause submitted to the justice, who rendered judgment, from which an appeal was taken, it is too late to move in the county court to dismiss for defective service; the appearance, plea, and submission being a waiver to all objections to the service, and giving the court jurisdiction of the person.—Heeron v. Beckwith, 1 Wis. 17.

[t] (Wis. 1875) Defendant having appeared before the justice, pleaded to the merits, and gone to trial, and having afterwards appealed and litigated the cause on the merits in the circuit court, all defects in the service of process were waived.—Fairfield v. Madison Mfg. Co., 38 Wis. 346.

§ 275. Waiver of irregular adjournments.

[a] (Me. 1840) If a case is illegally continued, an appearance by the defendant at the time and place for the purpose of protesting against such continuance is no waiver of the illegality.—Martin v. Fales, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 23, 36 Am. Dec. 693.

[b] (Minn. 1874) The failure of the justice who tried the cause to enter the place of an adjournment in his docket, as also the irregular entry of an adjournment, are mere irregularities, which are waived, by the voluntary appearance of the defendant, joining in the pleadings, and going to trial on the merits.—Steinhart v. Pitcher, 20 Minn. 102 (Gil. 86).

[c] (Minn. 1894) An appearance and proceeding with a trial at the time to which the trial is adjourned by the justice is a waiver of any error in making the adjournment.—Mead v. Sanders, 57 Minn. 108, 58 N. W. 683.

[d] (N. J. 1793) The appearance of the parties on the summons is a regular commencement of the suit, attaching it to the justice, and obviates the necessity of entering regular continuances, where everything is done fairly and with notice.—Darlings v. Corey, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 200.

[e] (N. J. 1807) Where the justice erroneously continued a cause more than 15 days from the return of summons, the fact that defendant appeared on the last day of the adjournment was not material, when he took no part in the trial.—White v. Lippincot, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 266.

[f] (N. J. 1808) Where the justice erroneously adjourned a case for more than 15 days from the return of summons, and at the meeting of the parties on the last adjournment they mutually agreed to a rule of reference and proceeded to judgment, the error was waived.—Chance v. Chambers, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 884.

[g] (N. J. 1819) An adjournment by a justice of a suit at his own convenience for a time longer than 15 days from the return of the summons is cured by the parties appearing and going to trial.—Hillman v. Hayden, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 575.

[h] (N. Y. 1799) Where, after an adjournment in a justice court for a time longer than authorized by law, defendant appears and examines witnesses, he waives the irregularity.—Palmer v. Green, 1 Johns. Cas. 101.

[i] (N. Y.) If a party appear and go to trial on the merits, it is a waiver of any objection to an adjournment irregularly granted.—(1811) Dunham v. Heyden, 7 Johns. 381; (1812) Willoughby v. Carleton, 9 Johns. 136.

[j] (N. Y. 1842) It a justice improperly adjourn a cause, and the parties appear on the day of adjournment, they waive the irregularity.—Tifft v. Culver, 3 Hill, 180.

[k] (N. Y. 1854) The defendant appeared on the 18th of May, and requested a further adjournment, and, before his motion had been decided, objected to any proceedings being had in the cause, as the prior adjournment had not been made in court, nor when the justice was present. Held, that this appearance did not cure the irregularity of the adjournment, but was a waiver of it, on condition that a further adjournment should be had, and, the condition not being granted, that it did not become an absolute waiver, nor binding upon the defendant.—Weeks v. Lyon, 18 Barb. 530.

[l] (N. Y. 1891) Where defendant's objection to an adjournment was made in due time, but has been overruled, he does not waive the objection by subsequently appearing and defending on the merits.—Hannaman v. Muckle (Co. Ct.) 15 N. Y. Supp. 961, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 296.

[m] (N. Y. 1894) Where defendant in a justice court objected to a second adjournment on the ground that the court had no authority to grant it, and the return shows that, on the adjourned day, "parties appeared and answered. Defendant offered the objections, in writing, his counsel made to the adjournment, and went away,"—the objection is not waived, as the return shows that defendant's appearance was only for the purpose of filing the objections.—Crisp v. Rice, 83 Hun, 465, 31 N. Y. Supp. 908.

[n] (Vt. 1877) The record showed that, after a suit had been continued by a justice, other than the one before whom the suit was pending, for a period exceeding 30 days, the defendant and trustee appeared, the defendant pleaded that "he did not owe the plaintiff," a jury trial was had upon the merits, a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, judgment was rendered thereon against the defendant, and the trustee was discharged. Held, that this was a waiver of the irregularity of granting a continuance for more than 30 days, and was such a submission to the jurisdiction of the justice as cured the irregularity.—Bryant v. Pember, 43 Vt. 599.

§ 276. Withdrawal, striking out, and failure to appear.

Failure to appear as ground for dismissal, see post, § 350.

[a] (U. S. 1822) Nonappearance of the plaintiff or his empowered agent in a suit on a specialty before a justice of the peace is no ground for reversing judgment in his favor.—Taylor v. Hogan, Fed. Cas. No. 13,794a [Hemp. 16].

[b] (Mich. 1883) If a justice, whether properly or not, has, at the request of an attorney, erased his docket entry of the appearance of such attorney for defendant, he ought not to proceed in the case without notice to the defendant, or the attorney who had assumed to appear for him.—McKenzie v. King, 51 Mich. 461, 16 N. W. 813.

[c] (N. Y. 1878) Defendant's failure to appear in a justice's court is not an admission of plaintiff's claim.—Blair v. Bartlett, 75 N. Y. 150, 31 Am. Rep. 455.

[d] (Or. 1869) Withdrawing defendant's appearance does not oust a justice of jurisdiction over his person, though it was acquired by his appearance.—White v. Thompson, 3 Or. 115.

§ 277. Representation by attorney or third person.

[a] (Iowa, 1873) Appearance by defendant's attorney for the purpose of cross-examining plaintiff's witnesses, where the case was retained by the justice of the peace after a change of venue had been ordered, will have the effect of a full appearance, though the attorney disclaimed appearing for defendant.—Rahn v. Greer, 37 Iowa, 627.

[b] (Kan. 1888) Where an attorney for defendants, assuming to make an appearance specially, asks a continuance because defendants themselves are absent, which is refused, and he leaves the court, and trial is proceeded with, defendants are "absent" under Comp. Laws, 1879, c. 81, § 114, notwithstanding the action of their attorney.—Covart v. Haskins, 39 Kan. 571, 18 Pac. 522.

[c] (N. J. 1808) On a trial of a cause before a justice of the peace, it is within the justice's discretion to admit an unlicensed attorney to appear for one of the parties.—McWhorter v. Bloom, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 134.

[d] (N. J. 1810) The appearance of his attorney is equivalent to the appearance of the party in an action before a justice.—Morgan v. Eldridge, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 658.

[e] (N. J. 1833) Defendant's son appeared with a power of attorney, filed a plea, and secured an adjournment. On the day for trial the son again appeared and offered to make defense. Held that, having recognized the son's authority, it was error for the justice, without assigning any cause, to refuse to hear the defense.—Bowlsby v. Johnston, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 349.

[f] (N. J. 1833) It is a matter of sound discretion with a justice whether to permit a defendant to appear by an attorney in fact or not.—Bowlsby v. Johnston, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 349.

[g] (N. Y. 1810) If the parties appeared by attorney before a justice of the peace, it was error, though it were by mutual consent.—Smith v. Goodrich, 5 Johns. 358.

[h] (N. Y. 1847) Under the act creating justices' courts, and providing for appearance therein of a party in person or "attorney," the latter word includes any one to whom a party may delegate his appearance.—Hughes v. Mulvey, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 92.

[i] (N. Y. 1850) Judiciary Act, § 52, which forbids a partner or clerk of a judge to practice before him "as an attorney, solicitor, or counsel," is not applicable to justice's court.—Fox v. Jackson, 8 Barb. 355.

[j] (N. Y. 1851) Where a person commenced a suit before a justice in the name of another, pretending to be the assignee of a claim in favor of the latter against the defendant, and appeared as attorney for the nominal plaintiff on the trial, falsely swearing his authority to do so, and on an appeal by the defendant retained an attorney to appear for the respondent and afterwards to defend a writ of error, the nominal plaintiff was not bound by the acts of the attorney until he had notice of the suit.—Allen v. Stone, 10 Barb. 547.

[k] (N. Y. 1854) A justice is authorized to proceed with a trial where an individual appears as attorney for the defendant, makes oath that he is authorized to appear to answer to the suit, asks for no adjournment, but procures a subpœna for witnesses for the defendant, and proceeds to trial, and makes no objection to the proceedings.—Armstrong v. Craig, 18 Barb. 387.

[l] (N. Y. 1856) In an action in a justice's court concerning the property of a married woman, the justice may appoint a next friend.—Walker v. Swayzee, 3 Abb. Prac. 136.

[m] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 2886, provides that "a party to an action before a justice of the peace, who is of full age, may appear and prosecute or defend the same in person or by attorney, at his election." Section 2889 provides that "any person other than the constable who served the summons or the venire, or the law partner or clerk of the justice, may be the attorney for a party to an action before a justice of the peace." Held, that an adult defendant to an action before a justice of the peace could appear by a minor, as his attorney in fact; there being no attorneys at law in justices' courts.—Peck v. Hayes (Co. Ct.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 836, 14 Civ. Proc. R. 110.

§ 278. —— Authority.

[a] (Mich. 1875) Under Comp. Laws 1871, § 5305, the person appearing as plaintiff's attorney in justice's court must prove his authority, where defendant does not appear.—Scofield v. Cahoon, 31 Mich. 206.

[b] (Mich. 1875) Comp. Laws 1871, § 5479, forbidding the reversal of a judgment "merely for the omission or misrecital of an oath," does not cure the failure of plaintiff's attorney to prove his authority in justice court, where defendant did not appear.—Scofield v. Cahoon, 31 Mich. 206.

[c] (Mich. 1882) It is ground for reversing a justice's judgment, rendered in the absence of both parties, that plaintiff's attorney did not prove his authority.—Woodbridge v. Robinson, 49 Mich. 228, 13 N. W. 527.

[d] (Mich. 1883) Under Comp. Laws, § 5305, providing that authority to appear in a justice court as attorney for a party shall be proved where requested by the opposite party, such authority cannot be shown by letter from a third person requesting his appearance for the party, it nowhere else appearing that the person had authority to make the request.—Blood v. Westbrook, 50 Mich. 443, 15 N. W. 544.

[e] (Mich. 1885) No one is standing attorney for a party to a justice's judgment, and as such entitled to receive service of notices in relation thereto, without special authorization.—Clark v. McGregor, 55 Mich. 412, 21 N. W. 866.

[f] (Mich. 1887) Under How. Ann. St. § 6846, which requires a justice to continue the cause for at least 30 days from the return day, when an attachment is not personally served, and the defendant does not appear, it is of no importance in what way the plaintiff appeared on the return day; and, when the docket shows that on the adjourned day plaintiff appeared in person, the judgment for plaintiff then rendered cannot be objected to on the ground that the attorney who appeared for plaintiff on both days did not prove his authority, as required by section 6870.—Churchill v. Goldsmith, 64 Mich. 250, 31 N. W. 187.

[g] (Mich. 1893) An allegation of error, that an attorney did not sufficiently prove his authority in writing to appear for plaintiff, cannot be sustained, where the return of the justice shows that the attorney "not only proved his authority to appear orally, but produced, when sworn in said cause, other documentary proof."—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13, 56 N. W. 1042.

[h] (N. Y. 1809) Under St. 31st Sess. c. 204 (since repealed), prohibiting a party from appearing by attorney in a justice's court, except the party be sick or absent from the county, the knowledge of the justice of such sickness or absence is not sufficient to allow an appearance by attorney. There must be proof of the fact.—Rosekrans v. Van Antwerp, 4 Johns. 228.

[i] (N. Y. 1817) If an attorney is called on to produce his power to appear in a justice's court, the execution of it must be duly proved.—Timmerman v. Morrison, 14 Johns. 369.

[j] (N. Y. 1823) A parol authority is sufficient to authorize an attorney to appear for a party before a justice.—Gaul v. Groat, 1 Cow. 113; Tullock v. Cunningham, Id. 256; Pixley v. Butts, 2 Cow. 421.

[k] (N. Y. 1823) The power of attorney to appear for either party in a justice's court may be proved by the attorney himself.—Tullock v. Cunningham, 1 Cow. 256.

[l, m] (N. Y. 1823) A justice has no right to decide, from his own knowledge, that an attorney has authority to appear, without any evidence.—Beaver v. Van Every, 2 Cow. 429.

[n] (N. Y. 1836) A justice of the peace is not bound to require proof of the authority of a person who claims to appear as attorney for one of the parties to a cause prosecuted before him, if the opposite party does not object, since 2 Rev. St. p. 233, § 45, requires proof to be taken unless the authority is admitted, and a failure to object must be regarded as an admission.—Ackerman v. Finch, 15 Wend. 652.

[o] (N. Y. 1842) Where an attorney, on the return of a summons before a justice, appeared for plaintiff and testified that the action was on a note left with him for collection, this is sufficient evidence of his right to appear as plaintiff's attorney.—McMinn v. Richtmyer, 3 Hill, 236.

[p] (N. Y. 1843) A justice of the peace cannot allow one to appear as attorney, on information received by the justice out of court as to the attorney's authority.—Fanning v. Trowbridge, 5 Hill, 428.

[q] (N. Y. 1847) The office of attorney, in the professional sense of the term, is not known in justices' courts; and an appearance for a defendant by one claiming to be his attorney, without proof of his authority, does not restore the jurisdiction of such a court, where it has been lost by an unauthorized adjournment.—Bailey v. Delaplaine, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 11.

[r] (N. Y. 1848) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, a person appeared at the joining of issue in behalf of one of the parties, without objection and without any evidence of his authority, but the party himself appeared at the time of the issue, this was sufficient evidence that the issue was joined by his authority.—Underhill v. Taylor, 2 Barb. 348.

[s] (N. Y. 1852) Where letters were directed by the attorney to the client in relation to the subject-matter of the suit, and several answers were received from the client in due course of mail, all in the same handwriting and dated at the client's residence, which letters contained a general authority to the attorney to take such steps, legal or otherwise, as he might deem advisable for the recovery of a debt, it was sufficient to authorize the attorney to appear for the client in justice court.—Bush v. Miller, 13 Barb. 481.

[t] (N. Y. 1854) An attorney who assumes to appear for a party in a justice's court must prove his authority, if required to do so by the adverse party.—Hirshfield v. Landman, 3 E. D. Smith, 208.

[u] (N. Y. 1854) Where an attorney, in an action before a justice, on evidence of his authority being demanded, testified that he received authority from plaintiff's brother, who had exhibited to him written authority from the plaintiff himself, and no objection was made to the admission of such evidence, without the production and proof of the execution of the writing, it was sufficient to establish the attorney's authority.—Hirshfield v. Landman, 3 E. D. Smith, 208.

[v] (N. Y. 1855) Where an attorney declared, on oath, his authority to appear for plaintiffs, who were overseers of the poor, in an action before a justice for a penalty, and the defendant appeared and defended, his authority was held sufficient.—Andrews v. Harrington, 19 Barb. 343.

[w] (N. Y. 1870) Where a person acting as an attorney assumes to appear for a defendant in a justice's court, at the joining of issue and on the adjourned day, without authority in fact, and is not sworn or questioned as to his authority to appear, either by the justice or the plaintiff, there is no appearance by the defendant which concludes him. Such appearance, however, concludes the plaintiff.—Miller v. Larmon, 38 How. Prac. 417.

[ww] (N. Y. 1872) The statute (2 Rev. St. 233, § 45) providing for the appearance of the defendant in an action in a justice's court makes no distinction between the proof required to be made of authority to appear in the case of a summons personally served and of one served by leaving a copy only. In either case such authority is admitted, where the opposite party appears and joins issue without objection to the absence of proof of it.—Sperry v. Reynolds, 5 Lans. 407, reversed (1875) 65 N. Y. 179.

[x] (N. Y. 1874) Where a person appears for defendant without authority, and plaintiff appears in person, defendant can take no advantage of the unauthorized appearance.—Roberts v. Burrell, 3 Thomp. & C. 30.

[xx] (N. Y. 1875) Where a summons issuing from a justice of the peace is served by copy, an appearance by another person in behalf of the party served is not such presumptive evidence of his authority to appear as to give the justice jurisdiction over the cause.—Sperry v. Reynolds, 65 N. Y. 179, reversing (1872) 5 Lans. 407.

[y] (N. Y. 1886) A justice has a right to enter judgment on the supposition that an attorney who appeared on the return day and consented to an adjournment on defendant's behalf was duly authorized to appear; plaintiff not having questioned the authority.—Rickey v. Christie, 40 Hun, 278.

[yy] (N. Y. 1888) Where a person appears in a justice court as the attorney of a corporation in an action on account, and there was present at the time of such appearance the manager of the corporation's store, who was sworn and testified as a witness, the authority of the attorney was sufficiently established, though he did not swear to the fact of his authority.—Crown Point Iron Co. v. Fitzgerald, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 427.
